It's not an easy matter to keep track of UN's complicated affairs as news about it appears from day to day in the press, and yet the best minds of the day agree that the future welfare and happiness of all of us seems to hang largely on success or failure of the UN.

Nobody wants another war, and the UN is the international agency which has the main job of promoting peace in a world now torn by suspicion, jealousy and hate.

CIO In At Start

That's why it is so important for CIO'ers and workers all over to know just how the UN is set up, how it functions, and what it is trying to do. The CIO has been an active supporter of the United Nations ever since its formation.

When the United Nations Conference on International Organization opened in San Francisco in April 1945 to draw up the UN charter, CIO representatives were there to take part in the proceedings.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray was a labor consultant to the U. S. delegation, and Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey served as his associate consultant.

Preceding the conference, Murray had called upon all CIO unions to observe April 1945 as "United Nations Month" by seeking to stimulate interest in UN and by informing members of the issues at stake.

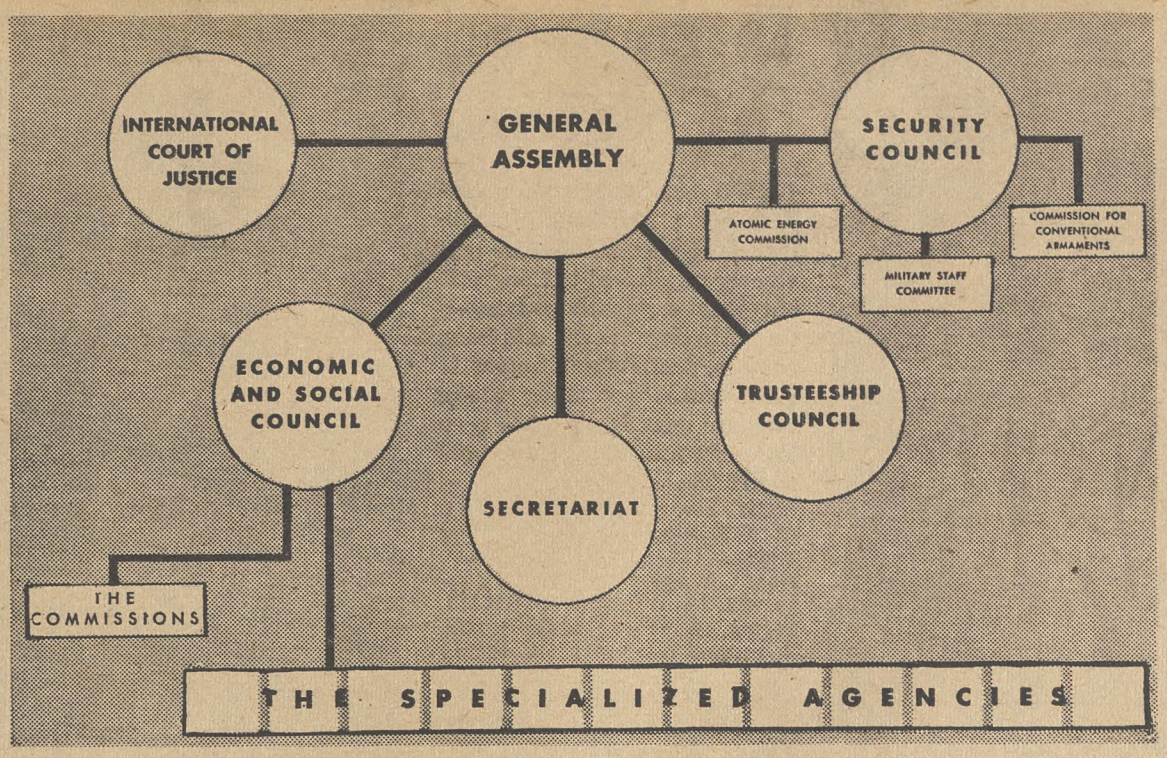
Although labor was not successful in obtaining direct representation on UN, it was given consultative status on the Social and Economic Council along with a number of other economic groups.

Later as UN organization developed, CIO representatives served in official capacity on some of UN's specialized agencies, and various CIO organizations cooperated in the activities of these agencies.

At present, Natl. CIO Research Dir. Stanley Ruttenberg is a member of the U. S. National Commission for UNESCO (United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization), which is working to promote international understanding of the problems of world peace. He succeeded former Research Dir. Kermit Eby on the Commission.

Councils' Dir. John Brophy serves as an adviser representing the CIO on the ITO (International Trade Organization) which is seeking adoption of a charter setting up a system for the cooperative solution of world trade problems. Brophy attended the ITO conference held in Havana in 1948 when the draft of the charter was drawn up.

The National CIO Community Services Committee, headed by Chairman Irving Abramson and directed by Leo Perlis, cooperated with United Nations Appeal for Children in the collection of funds for the International Emergency Fund. The fund gives direct aid and coordinates services for the child victims of the war.



Organization of United Nations

Agency's Purpose

The agencies report to the UN's Economic and Social Council which recommends to the General Assembly or to the members of the United Nations ways of improving the people's welfare, by promoting employment, safeguarding health, raising standards of living, spreading culture and education and protecting human rights and freedom.

Another project of the Economic and Social Council in which CIO representatives participated was the Conference on Freedom of Information, set up to lay the foundation for an international convenant on freedom of the press.

Milton Murray, then president of the CIO Newspaper Guild, was a consultant at preliminary meetings held at Lake Success, and Harry Martin, his successor as president of the Guild was a member of the U. S. delegation to the conference at Geneva in 1948.

The CIO's Intl. Woodworkers of America has a special interest in the UN Food and Agriculture Organization created to encourage greater production from farms, forests, and fisheries. IWA Vice-Pres. Al Hartung attended a conference of the FAO in Prague in 1947 as an adviser to the U. S. delegation.

Six Agencies Are the Heart of Fight Against War

TO HELP CIO'ERS get straight in their minds the set-up of the United Nations and its specialized agencies, we are giving here an outline of the more important UN bodies, and a brief description of their functions.

The information is taken from a new booklet prepared by the UN Department of Public Information, in consultation with a UN-UNESCO seminar on teaching about the United Nations, held in New York during the summer of 1948.

The booklet, called "How People Work Together," presents in compact form, with the aid of photographs and diagrams, an overall picture of how the United Nations and its specialized agencies are organized, how they work and what they are doing.

Copies of the booklet, in various languages, are being sent to educational authorties throughout the world as part of a general plan to have the booklet reprinted in many countries, so that people of as many nations as possible may become familiar with the aims of UN and understand how it affects their own lives.

UN's Set-Up

The work of the United Nations is carried out by six major groups:

1. General Assembly—"Town Meeting of the Nations." This is composed of representatives from all member states who come together at least once a year to discuss world affairs. At present 59 members states belong to UN. Newest member is Israel, admitted last week.

The assembly makes recommendations to member or other groups on such affairs as maintaining peace, regulating armaments, developing international law, improving economic and social conditions, health, education, and safeguarding human rights and freedoms.

2. Security Council—"Police authority of the world." The Council consists of representatives from 11 nations, five permanent members—China, France, Russia, Britain, United States—and six non-permanent members elected by the General Assembly.

The Council, to maintain or restore international peace, investigates disputes, or situations that might cause friction and lead to disputes; recommends methods of settlement;acts to stop aggressors, and makes plans for regulation of armaments and possible disarmament.

3. Economic and Social Council—Works "to promote the welfare and improve living conditions of all peoples."

Eighteen members elected by the General Assembly serve on this Council, which meets at least twice a year and has 12 commissions to assist in its work. Council studies economic, social, cultural, health, and related matters and makes recommendations to the General Assembly or to the UN Members.

About 70 agencies, including the CIO, have been granted consultative status on the Council.

For example, the Council's Commission on Human Rights drew up a Declaration which was adopted by the General Assembly. Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt was a member of this commission.

A Commission on the Status of Women made inquiries from member governments concerning the political rights of women in their countries. The Council itself has approved the principle that men and women receive equal pay for equal work and recommended the principle to UN Members.

4. Trusteeship Council—Looks after non-self-governing territories.

Ten territories, all former League of Nations mandates, have so far been placed under UN trusteeship system set up by the Council is given the responsiblilty of operating the international trustreeship system set up by the UN charter. It investigates conditions and examines petitions from people in trust territories.

There are abount 200 million peoples in "colonial" or "dependent" areas, mostly in Africa, Southeast Asia, the Pacific and the Caribbean.

5. International Court of Justice—Decides legal disputes referred to it by nations.

The first case referred to the International Court, sitting at the Hague, was the Corfu Channel dispute between the United Kingdom and Albania. The Court gives advisory opinions if requested by organs of the United Nations or its agencies.

6. Secretariat—A working force of men and women of many nations who serve the UN and its various divisions.

Secretary-General Trygve Lie, appointed by the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council, at present heads the Secretariat. He is the chief administrative UN officer and has some 3600 men and women from about 60 countries working under his direction at UN headquarters at Lake Success, N. Y., at the European Office in Geneva, in 12 information centers around the world, and with commissions visiting various areas for special investigations.

Other Agencies

In addition to its six major divisions, the UN has a number of specialized agencies, each an independent organization with its own charter and funds, set up for special work by conferences of delegates from many nations.

Best known of the specialized agencies perhaps is UNESCO (United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization), which has its main offices in Paris. UNESCO's charter states its purposes are to advance "through the educational and scientific and cultural relations of the peoples of the world, the objective of international peace and of the common welfare of mankind . . ."

Other specialized agencies are:

International Labor Organization (ILO)—to improve labor conditions and promote economic and social stability. Main office in Geneva.

Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO)—to work toward increasing production and use of resources such as food, timber. Main offices in Washington.

Intl. Bank for Reconstruction & Development—Lends money to nations to promote international flow of capital for productive purposes and assist in reconstruction and development of nations' economic facilities.

World Health Organization (WHO)—Works to coordinate international health activities and make health knowledge available through promotion of research, technical assistance, control of epidemics, and other measures.

International Refugee Organization (IRO)—Provides temporary care for eligible displaced persons and refugees, and finds them new homes.

International Trade Organization (ITO)—has drawn up a charter aimed to promote world trade by reducing trade restrictions and barriers of all kinds. The charter is now up for consideration and ratification by the governments of various countries. At present it is before the U. S. Congress which has not yet ratified it.

CIO Aide Appointed To Michigan Post

Tom Downs, Michigan CIO legislative representative, has been appointed by Gov. G. Mennen Williams to the Michigan Unemployment Compensation Commission.

The appointment was approved by the State Senate which previously turned down two Williams' choices to MUCC posts. There were only 22 Senators on the floor when the vote on Downs was taken. It was unanimous. Of the 10 absentees, 7 were Democrats.

"The appointment of Downs carries out the requirement of the law that the commission be balanced as between labor and management," Williams said. "Downs' experience as a member of the Employment Security Advisory Council will enable him to fit very quickly into the work of the commission."

Downs, 32, is a graduate of the University of Michigan law school. A Navy veteran, he was on the State CIO Council staff.

"He has charge of our whispering campaign."

Irate Business Man Writes Letter To 'Wrong' Senator

A BUSINESS man who thinks the CIO is the root of all evil, picked the wrong Senator to whom to tell his sad, sad story.

The businessman wrote to liberal Sen. Harley Kilgore that:

- If Taft-Hartley were repealed, "many business men will be just about ready to quit and throw in the sponge."
- "We all know that the CIO and other communistic influences have caused inflation . . . It should be a felony for a group of people to band themselves together and attempt to ruin their employer's business if he does not give in to their unreasonable wage demands."
- It is hoped that you will work and vote (1) against repeal of Taft-Hartley law; (2) against rent and price controls; (3) against FEPC; (4) against socialized medicine; (5) against higher taxes; (6) against supporting foreign countries . . . (7) against subsidies to farmers; (8) against all CIO backed legislation . . . with kind personal regards . . ."

TO ALL OF which Sen. Kilgore replied:

"I must say that I do not share your pessimistic view of what will happen to the country after the Taft-Hartley Act is repealed. Frankly I think this law has been a failure.

"It has replaced collective bargaining with collective litigation. I believe Congress should repeal it and pass a law that will be fair to both labor and management."

The West Virginia Senator added:

"I know many of the leaders of the CIO, and I would say there is no more honorable patriotic group in this country.

"They have been damned by many groups, largely because they have led the struggle to spread the fruits of our democratic society to all segments of our people."

Strike Danger 'A Lot Of Bull'

The Atomic Energy Commission has adopted a new labor policy as outlined in a Presidential committee report on labor relations in the atom industry.

William H. Davis, former head of the War Labor Board, headed the committee which studied the atomic labor problem and urged establishment of a three-man panel to mediate disputes at atom installations. President Truman has named Davis to head such a panel and the AEC is seeking agreement from its contractors and unions to work under the new setup.

Describing labor problems in the industry, Davis told the Joint Congressional Committee on Atomic Energy that the devil couldn't have made a better mess if he'd arranged things at Oak Ridge.

He referred to talk about this country being endangered by strikes as "a lot of bull." "This country," he said, "can stand a lot of interruption of production. There's little revolutionary feeling in this country inside the labor movement or out of it."

Labor, Davis said, has given up its traditional position at Oak Ridge by agreeinng to such a proposal which amounts to compulsory arbitration. Industry won't go that far. The former WLB head agreed with Rep. Henry M. Jackson (D. Wash.) that labor is at a disadvantage because it can't strike. He admitted that employers have labor over a barrel at atomic installations and labelled management's statement that it would be "fair" as "unrealistic."

Health Bills Introduced In Congress

NEW health legislation carrying the same health insurance features as bills previously introduced in Congress, but with expanded provisions for bringing more hospitals, doctors, dentists and nurses to rural and other areas where they are most needed, has been introduced in the Senate and the House.

Sponsors of the health legislation in the House (H. R. 4312 and H. R. 4313) are Reps. Dingell (D., Mich.), and Biemiller (D., Wis.)

Hearings were held last week before Senate subcommittees on various sections of the legislation, which was introduced following President Truman's special health message to Congress in April.

Hearings on other provisions of the bill were scheduled to begin May 16, before the Murray subcommittee of the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee.

THE BILL proposes to meet the needs of the American people for more and better medical care by providing:

1. Funds for increasing the enrollment in medical, nursing and dental schools; for expanding the facilities of these schools, and for scholarships to deserving students.
2. Establishment of research institutes for the study of diseases that take a heavy toll of life, such as poliomeylitis, diabetes arthritis, multiple sclerosis, cerebral palsy and epilepsy.
3. Additional funds for the construction of hospitals, health centers, clinics, etc., under the Hospital Survey and Construction Act.
4. Special funds ($35 million) to aid rural and other shortage areas in getting needed hospital and other medical facilities.
5. Increased funds for the extension of state and local public health services.
6. Additional funds to carry on maternal and child health care and for services for crippled children.
7. Establishment of a national program of health insurance enabling everyone to pay for needed health and medical care. This section of the new bill contains the same provisions as were included in the previous bill (S. 5) introduced earlier in the 81st Congress.

Ill Time In Ill.

The Green "gravy train" scandal—which involved the siphoning out of state funds to newspaper editors and others supporting the political machine of former Gov. Dwight Green—is growing bigger by the week.

Earlier the Chicago Daily News and the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, exposed the fact that 33 editors and publishers of papers in Illinois had secretly been paid nearly $500,000 during the Green regime.

The two papers have now found that at least $1,500,000 was plucked from the state treasury to pay hundreds of political supporters, including the editors.

TWU Walkout Is Averted By Reinstatement Of Two

IN WHAT THE CIO Transport Workers termed a "100% union victory," the Third Avenue Bus Co. in New York City last week agreed to reinstate two men with full back pay, thus averting a scheduled walkout.

Settlement came the day before the strike deadline. The immediate source of irritation had been the company's discharge of two bus drivers on the Kingsbridge lines in the Bronx. The drivers were charged by the company with a slowdown. TWU denied the existence of any slowdown on the bus lines.

The issue had grown out of a union charge of an "inhuman speedup" on the lines. Improvement of the bus schedules within 30 days had been ordered by the city's Public Service Commission, but the company had failed to comply, claiming that the drivers were engaging in a slowdown and that it was awaiting delivery of 25 new buses.

Though it previously refused to discuss revision of the schedules with the union, the company finally agreed to work out an agreement, with the assistance, if necessary, of a representative of the city's Division of Labor Relations.

PJNW Criticizes Czech Trade Pact

A SHARP criticism of the State Department for its attitude toward the proposed ending of reciprocal trade arrangements with Soviet-dominated Czechoslovakia has been issued by the CIO Playthings, Jewelry & Novelty Workers.

The Union has been waging a campaign specifically against Czech jewelry and toy imports, which it claims are harming American industry.

In a letter to Willis C. Armstrong, adviser in the State Department's Division of Commercial Policy, PJNW Pres. Anthony Esposito, castigated Armstrong's comments on the situation, for seeming "to evade completely the genuine moral issue which we have raised, and to take cover behind legalisms."

Of all our institutions," Esposito wrote, "the State Department can least afford to miss seeing the woods for the trees." Esposito referred to a letter written by Armstrong, which discussed the matter of Czechoslovakian imports.

The Union had scored as inconsistent the policy of continuing to allow favorable trade agreements to Czechoslovakia, despite the fact that its government was seized by the Communists in February, 1948.

Senate Halts Action To Deport Alex Bail

The Senate has approved and sent to the White House a bill permitting Secy.-Treas. Alex Bail of the CIO Playthings, Jewelry and Novelty Workers to remain in this country.

He had been ordered deported because of communist activities, but, according to evidence given the Justice Dept., he was expelled from the party in 1929, along with his wife, for opposing the party leadership. A native of Russia, Bail entered this country in 1900 and joined the communist party in 1919.

A House Un-American Activities subcommittee said Bail has been actively combatting efforts to penetrate and subvert the American Labor Party.

Carey Argues For Planning:

'Risk-Taking Subordinated to Pay-off'

By JAMES B. CAREY

BASIC INDUSTRY capacity is seriously inadequate. It will become more inadequate. The shortage is increasing and may soon reach alarming proportions.

National requirements for goods and services, and for the capacity with which to produce them, increase year after year if we continue to provide full employment for labor and continue to improve the standard of living. Adequacy of industry capacity must be gauged against these requirements.

Steel is our most critical industry. It now has a rated capacity of 96 million tons a year. This is only slightly greater than in 1945. By 1953 steel capacity will be increased to about 99 million tons, if present expansion schedules are carried out.

How much steel capacity will the country need to fulfill the requirements of a full-employed economy? The answer depends to some extent upon how large a part steel will have in the total national output.

It is estimated that steel capacity was 12 million tons short of demand in 1948. If steel were merely to hold its 1948 position in the total output of goods and services, the industry should have a capacity of 113 to 118 million tons by 1954. It appears likely to fall short of that requirement by some 14 to 19 million tons.

More Steel Needed

We may need more steel than this. If the industry were to regain the relative position it held in national output in the 1920's, it should have a capacity of 125 to 133 million tons by 1954. It appears likely to fall short of this by some 25 to 30 million tons.

On the basis of many estimates, it is reasonable to say that by 1954 the industry's scheduled expansion is likely to fail by 20 million tons to provide the capacity which we should have in order to assure full employment and full production.

This is a serious matter. We cannot get along if we are short of steel. Steel affects everything we do. Scarcity of steel, the auto workers say, is one reason why textile mills are closing and textile workers are being laid off.

The 5,300,000 cars and trucks produced in 1948 could just as well have been 6,500,000, if steel had been available. This production would have used more textiles in cars and would have given auto workers more purchasing power for buying clothes and house furnishings. Textile workers would have had more work.

This is only one example of how a basic scarcity begets other scarcities.

Bottleneck

Aluminum is a basic bottleneck. Copper, lead and zinc, and manganese and chromite for steel making, are all basic bottlenecks. Finding adequate supplies of these materials depends on exploration and on means for stimulating imports. Government and industry share this responsibility.

Domestic supplies are so clearly inadequate and the need for imports so clear, I assume that here is one opportunity to square our status as a creditor nation with a willingness to buy from other nations.

Inadequate capacity is a new issue to confront our generation. It was a top public issue during the expansion period which got under way after the Civil War. Then we came to a period when over-expansion of capital facilities was believed to be a national problem. Now we are again concerned with inadequate plant and equipment in many basic industries.

There are two reasons for this. One is that we have acquired a new knowledge of the facts of our national economic life, and have built upon these facts a new national policy—the policy of the Employment Act of 1946.

Comprehensive measures of national output of goods and services have made us realize that economic stability cannot be achieved by standing still, but only by moving ahead.

In order to maintain full employment, we shall have to expand national output somewhere between 3 and 4 percent a year. This is no small increase. It amounts to 40 percent in 10 years and it amounts to 100 percent in 20 years.

Plans Lacking

Since we see no plans on the part of basic industries to increase capacity in any such proportions, we are rightly concerned about the effect this will have upon our intention to maintain full employment and to step up the standard of living year after year.

The other reason for our concern is the policy of caution which prevails in many of our basic industries. Big business is playing it safe. It makes its estimates for the future on the low side. It seems to be running out of the willingness to assume risk—a function which was once considered the prime contribution of business to our economy.

The three graces of our capitalistic system are its foresight, or planning; its courage, or risk-taking; and its patience, or willingness to make investments which can pay off only over a period of time.

Today these three graces—Foresight, Courage and Patience—seem to be in bad repute in their own high temple: "Foresight, or planning, is deplored. Planning is socialism! Business spokesmen tell us that competition, not planning, determines the course of business. The free marketplace determines all things, and all that the well-groomed monopoly can do is to look sharp, feel sharp, be sharp—and listen to the scores as they come in. No, indeed, business doesn't plan. The government mustn't be permitted to plan either."

So nobody plans.

Courage, or risk-taking, fares no better. McGraw-Hill's recent survey of the investment outlook for American business came up with the startling fact that 3 out of 4 corporations expect the money they put into new equipment to pay off in 5 years. A third of them expect it to pay off in 3 years. Eight out of 10 of them expect investment in buildings to pay off in 15 years.

In other words, risk-taking has been subordinated to the pay-off, which, you will agree, leaves both Courage and Patience in fairly bad shape.

Put these prevailing policies together and they come to the idea that it is safer to keep capacity on the short side in order to keep prices and profits on the high side. Of course big business doesn't plan a shortage of capacity—since planning is socialism—it just happens to come out that way.

A Challenge

Denial by business leaders of a public responsibility to plan, and the way in which they subordinate risk-taking to the pay-off, present a grave challenge to the future of our private enterprise economy.

It threatens to defeat the national policy of full production and employment. It threatens us with chronic under-employment, or, worse, with a major depression.

CIO does not accept the formula of despair which describes prosperity years as abnormal and looks upon full employment as an over-indulgence which must be followed by depression and unemployment.

We do not accept the judgment of big business when it confuses temporary conditions of market demand with long-range national requirements, especially when that demand has been artificially curtailed by prices which it has rigged.

We believe that full employment can and must be maintained every year, and that to do this we shall have to increase output year after year by providing employment for a growing labor force, and by increasing the output of each worker through improved plant and equipment.

We believe that the government will have to play an important part in the advance planning and financing of the necessary capital investment, because private enterprise has not yet demonstrated that it fully accepts the policy of maintaining full employment and production, or that it is prepared to do what is necessary to make good on that policy.

Full Employment Requires Expansion

How to preserve full employment, now and in the future?

In his State of the Union Message, Pres. Truman talked of the need for expanding output in some basic industries—in order to make more goods available to the public at lower prices. That suggestion has received strong support from CIO and its affiliated unions.

Anthony W. Smith, CIO assistant director of industrial union councils, was one of the initiators of a National Emergency Conference on Resources, which brought together a large number of people interested in every phase of this country's natural and industrial resources.

At the conference Smith discussed some of the problems of the nation's river valley resources. Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey spoke on the question of full employment and full production. Excerpts of Sec.-Treas. Carey's speech are printed here.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

"1. Reduce daily hours of work to 10 or less.

"2. Pass effective Mechanics Lien Acts.

"3. Make public lands free to settlers.

"4. Establish inalienable homestead rights so that a minimum of real property, personal clothing, furniture and utensils will be free from seizure of debts.

"5. Abolish poll tax payment as a condition for exercising the right to vote.

"6. Create a Federal Labor Department and labor departments in each state.

"7. Destroy both black and white slavery (involuntary servitude).

One hundred and one years ago representatives of all Boston labor unions meeting in Faneuil Hall voiced American labor's demands and program in a resolution embodying the eight points above. They were widely berated as visionary.

Let's see how visionary. Supported and fought for by the unions, the nation soon witnessed the beginnings of the 10-hour day and, now, with the 8-hour day a matter of law, we are "visionaries" when we speak of the 30-hour week.

We all know the stories of the Homestead Act granting, to anyone who would settle upon and develop it, free land in many of the states and territories.

In most states, judgments for debt cannot be obtained against persons having less than a stated amount of possessions.

Nearly every state today has its Labor Department, as does the Federal Government.

How Far We've Gone

Let's look again at the eight points. 101 years since their passage, we have still to abolish poll tax payments in a wide area of our country. Black and white slavery is illegal but we are continuously uncovering wilfull acts of peonage and other forms of involuntary servitude in the turpentine producing industry and other places. Our Civil Service employes are still woefully underpaid.

Undaunted by the tremendous progress which has been made in this country, mainly through the efforts of labor and unions, the forces of reaction not only still resist the demands which remain a part of our program, but constantly attack the gains already won. The very thing which made Labor's victories possible will bring about the complete realization of our extended program. With every advance in union organization, with every membership increase, another of Labor's "visionary" dreams became reality. To achieve them all, to protect them all, we must continue with tireless vigor to organize millions more into our ranks. That is the answer. That is our task.

Allentown Victories

Employes of both the Simone Textile Co. and the Raxon Fabrics Co. voted to be represented by this CIO union.

Reg. Dir. Michael Livoda, Colorado, reports an election victory for the CIO Brewery Workers among the employes of the Pueblo Flour Mill, Pueblo.

Secy.-Treas. John C. Lawson of the CIO Stone Workers reports that the employes of the Vermont Structural Slate Co., Fairhaven, Vermont, voted to be represented by that union. Lawson also reports that the employes of the Allegheny Products Co., Everett, Pa., voted overwhelmingly for a union shop in an election conducted by the NLRB.

Following the splendid vote for affiliation with CIO by the membership of the Communications Workers of America, a charter has been granted to that organization. A joint committee from the Telephone Workers Organizing Committee and the CWA has started conferences on amalgamation of these two groups. There are many details which require attention and many problems that, with determination to weld all telephone workers together now they are in the CIO, will be overcome. Telephone workers are firmly resolved to destroy all opposition to their goal of unity whether it be from the corporations they work for or from any other source. We will roll our union on.

"When the judge found out I was strikebreaking, he gave me time and a half!"

"This pair was designed for non-union men who didn't know whether they were coming or going!"

CIO Board Schedule Is Heavy

Pres. Murray, Sec.-Treas. James Carey and the organization's vice-presidents were to be in session on Monday, May 16. The executive board meetings were scheduled for this Tuesday and Wednesday.

A meeting of the board scheduled for late January was postponed because of the illness at that time of Pres. Murray.

While no formal agenda has been made public, it was anticipated that the board would hear reports on the legislative situation in Washington, and in particular on the long campaign to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act.

It was also expected that the Board would be asked to act on severance of CIO membership from the World Federation of Trade Unions. CIO representatives resigned from the executive bureau of the WFTU several months ago. During the interim period, CIO has remained technically a member of that organization.

Meetings to establish a new non-Communist international labor group are scheduled to be held in Switzerland June 25-26, at which CIO will be presented.

T-H Rules Out Pre-T-H Pact

The NLRB has decided that a maintenance of membership clause in a contract signed before Taft-Hartley became effective became illegal after August 1, 1948, even though the contract has not yet expired.

At the same time the board used used its finding that the clause is illegal as an excuse for ordering a representation election at the plant during the life of the contract.

The present contract, which includes the maintenance of membership clause was signed August 1, 1947. A similar provision is in effect in the union's agreements with the basic steel industry. The board ruled it could be in effect only one year after that date, and hence is now illegal. It then ordered an election, requested by the Intl. Association of Machinists. The Steelworkers, having refused to sign the T-H affidavits, cannot appear on the ballot.

Affidavit Signers

The NLRB now has on file nearly 94,000 current affidavits of noncommunism filed by union officers under the Taft-Hartley law it was announced last week. Of the national and international unions in compliance with the oath section of the law, the NLRB said, 96 are AFL unions, 31 are CIO and 52 are unaffiliated.

Ford Rejects Strike Mediation

SOME 65,000 FORD employes at the company's Willow Run and River Rouge plants had entered their second week on strike —when the CIO News went to press—against what they charge is a company speedup.

While the company repeatedly rejected offers of mediation and stood firm by its denial of the charges, other sections of the Ford empire were being closed down for lack of materials.

The UAW strikers were promised full financial support of the international union. UAW Intl. Pres. Walter Reuther participated in the negotiations, held almost daily since the strike's beginning.

Two CIO Electrical Workers locals, meanwhile, were likewise engaged in strikes.

Settlement of a week-long UE strike at the Philco plant in Philadelphia came after the company agreed to accept whatever wage boost pattern is set by the industry. Two additional paid holidays and Blue Cross hospitalization, offered before the strike, were also included in the agreement.

At Elizabeth, N. J., the Singer Sewing Machine Co., was struck for the first time in its 76-year history. Chief complaint of the strikers is a speedup. On May 2 the company had broken off negotiations on union demands for a cut in the work week, wage boosts, a pension plan and an end to the "standards system." The standard system, says the union, has increased the work load three and four-fold.

Hazard Taken From Fluorescent Lights

Major fluorescent light manufacturers have agreed to stop using beryllium phosphor in these light tubes, it has been announced by the U. S. Public Health Service.

The Service made public an agreement by the manufacturers that they will stop using beryllium phosphor after June 30 of this year. But the backlog of tubes now in use and stockpiled for sale mean the danger from the chemical will last for some time, the PHS warned.

Danger from tubes using the chemical comes only when they are broken. Cuts from glass containing the substance have been found slow to heal and likely to swell. In addition, dust from inside boken tubes is harmful to the lungs. The government agency said tubes should be disposed of where the cut and dust danger is at a minimum.

CIO Aide Wins Post At Newark

A TOP OFFICIAL of the New Jersey CIO has been elected a city commissioner in Newark, 18th largest city in the U. S.

The commissioner-elect is Stephen J. Moran, executive secretary of the State CIO and state PAC director. He is a member of the CIO Steelworkers.

Moran was elected as part of a three-man slate, which included former Mayor Meyer C. Ellenstein, who finished first in the race for the five seats, and Ralph J. Villani, who came in second. Moran finished fifth.

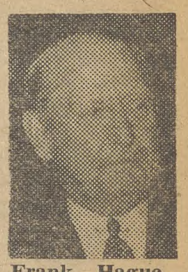
STEPHEN J. MORAN
Elected in Newark

Also elected were incumbent John B. Keenan, third, and Leo P. Carlin, president of Local 478, AFL Teamsters, fourth.

Ousted in the election, which was considered an upset, were Mayor Vincent J. Murphy, secretary of the State AFL, and Commissioner John Brady.

PAC, which was extremely active in the campaign for Ellenstein, Villani and Moran, noted that 70% of the eligible voters cast their ballots and that 26,000 more persons registered than in the last municipal election.

IN NEARBY Jersey City, the voters struck what appeared to be a blow for clean government when they ousted the machine of Mayor Frank Hague, which had controlled the city —and at times the state—for 32 years.



Frank Hague

Hague, who once declared "I am the Law," had a major clash with CIO organizers in 1937. Twenty of them were arrested under an ordinance which prohibited distribution of handbills without a permit. The courts later declared the ordinance unconstitutional.

At about the same time, Socialist Norman Thomas was splattered with eggs—reportedly thrown by Hague supporters, when he attempted to speak in Jersey City's Journal Square.

The Hague machine, headed ostensibly for the past two years by his nephew, Frank Hague Eggers, fell before a coalition headed by John V. Kenny, former Hague follower.

Vol. XII | WASHINGTON, D. C., MAY 23, 1949 | 82 | No. 20

THESE CIO EXECUTIVE officers and vice presidents met in Washington last week preceding a heated Executive Board meeting at which left-wing elements were denounced repeatedly. The officers are (l. to r.) Emil Rieve, Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, O. A. Knight, Pres. Philip Murray, Walter P. Reuther, Allan S. Haywood, Albert Fitzgerald and Frank Rosenblum. Vice Presidents Joseph Curran, L. S. Buckmaster and John Green were not present when the picture was taken.

NLRB To Denham: We'reBoss

IN A LONG awaited decision, the NLRB this week said that it is the boss—not General Counsel Robert N. Denham.

The Taft-Hartley law gives the general counsel full authority to to issue or refuse to issue unfair labor practice complaints against unions and employers. In keeping with T-H logic, the law requires him to move against unions in certain types of cases. But a large area of discretion was left to Denham in the handling of cases brought by both workers and employers.

Denham has construed this to mean that the board must accept every case, no matter how remote from interstate commerce, that he decides he wants to play around with. In one of the two cases decided this week he had maintained that his authority "precludes the board from refusing to assert jurisdiction."

But, replied the board, altho Denham has the power to start an action against a union or an employer it has a right to decide, when the case has worked its way thru T-H procedures to the NLRB proper, whether to take jurisdiction or not.

"He is to investigate and prosecute, but the board is to judge," said the five officials, in the most stinging rebuke Denham has received to date.

"Separation of functions was evidently intended to bar judges from being prosecutors; surely Congress was not seeking, by the same provision to convert prosecutors into judges," the board remarked. "It is clear that the General Counsel alone was to exercise discretion as to the issuance of complaints, but it is equally clear that his judgment was not to control the board at the decisional stage of any proceeding."

Over Denham's strenuous opposition the board refused to take jurisdiction in two small cases that he was pushing—one brought against an employer by an AFL federal local, and one brought against the Retail Clerks Int'l Association—AFL by a photographers' supply store.

CIO Hails FDR Jr.'s Victory

American labor won a stalwart friend in the Congress when young Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., last week galloped over the gasping remains of New York's Tammany machine to a smashing victory in a special Congressional election.

The victory was immediately hailed by the CIO Executive Board, then meeting in Washington.

"I am authorized by the unanimous vote of the Executive Board of the CIO in session to convey to you our heartiest and sincere congratulations on the magnificent victory which resulted in your election to the 81st Congress. You may rest assured of our continued support in the achievement of the aspirations and ideals that we jointly support."

With the help of the CIO unions, their PAC organizations and the Liberal Party, Roosevelt won by almost 2-to-1 the seat in New York's 20th Congressional District, left vacant by the death of Democratic Rep. Sol Bloom.

Snubbed by the regular Democratic party organization, Roosevelt entered the race as an independent and as the Liberal Party candidate. Tammany chose instead Municipal Court Justice Benjamin Shalleck. Also in the race were Republican William H. McIntyre, who came in third, and American Labor Party nominee, Dr. Annette Rubinstein. The latter said she was the heir to FDR's policies, not his son.

REASON TO BE PROUD: Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt congratulates her son, Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., who won a seat in the 20th New York District by defeating three candidates.

Young FDR campaigned on a 100% "Fair Deal" platform; repeal of Taft-Hartley, civil rights measures, housing legislation, higher minimum wage and improved social security.

"CIO-PAC and those CIO unions following official CIO policy did a great job in helping us to beat the reactionaries and corruptionists.

"I am proud to have been the symbol of the vindication of the fair deal program and the liberal labor alliance. You know my conviction that a strong unhampered trade union movement is essential to the progress of a democratic America."

More Pay Or Slump, Board Says

"PRODUCTION and employment are now being cut back because the mass of the American people do not have sufficient income to buy our products at prices which industry insists on charging," the CIO Executive Board declared. Text follows:

Reports of an all-time 1948 corporate profit record of $20 billion after taxes and even higher earnings by many companies in the first quarter of 1949, coincide with reports of falling sales, lower production and increasing unemployment.

Fair and equitable profits are an essential stimulant to production. But they can become so high that they drain off consumer income and destroy the mass purchasing power on which full employment and maximum production depend.

Since 1945, CIO has warned of the disastrous effect of the rising share of our national income going to profits while the share of wages and salaries has been falling. Unlimited price increases and profit taking have led to the inevitable weakening of consumer purchasing power, lower sales, falling production, and rising unemployment which result directly from them.

PRODUCTION and employment are now being cut back because the mass of American people do not have sufficient income to buy our products at the prices which industry insists upon charging. As long as there were large amounts of accumulated savings being spent by millions of consumers together with vast expenditures by business and government, purchases at these high prices continued to take place, producing the high levels of profits. But the savings of lower and middle income families have now been heavily drawn on; one-quarter of our families had already exhausted their last liquid assets by the beginning of 1943. The average savings of skilled and semiskilled workers fell from $400 to $250 between 1947 and 1948, while those of unskilled workers dropped from $50 to zero. With real consumer incomes falling during the postwar years, with savings dwindling and business investment no longer able to fill the gap, industry is finding itself without enough customers to maintain full employment and maximum production.

IF A serious depression is to be avoided we must build consumer purchasing power to meet the requirements of our expanding capacity to produce rather than cut production down to the falling levels of demand. Plant shutdowns and increased unemployment only add to the vicious downward cycle of reduced purchasing power and further unemployment; they feed upon themselves. Already consumer income for the first three months of 1949 is lagging almost $3 billion below the annual rate for the similar period of 1948.

It is imperative that every effort be made now to distribute national income so that the mass of American consumers can absorb our rising potential production. Price reductions and wage increases are essential to achieve that end. Business must forego its self-defeating objective of amassing exorbitant profits

Reuther Threatens To End Ford Talks

AS THE strike by 65,000 CIO Auto Workers at two giant Ford plants moved into its third week, UAW Pres. Walter Reuther threatened to break off talks unless the company agreed to combine contract talks with the strike controversy talks.

The Ford contract is subject to a wage reopening at this time. Reuther suggested the talks begin May 23. Earlier the company had insisted that talks begin not before June 1—and then not unless the strike had been concluded.

To one UAW proposal the company finally bowed last week. Ford Vice-Pres. John Bugas forwarded an invitation to the U. S. Mediation & Conciliation service to attend the negotiations. The Service had hesitated to enter the dispute, since Ford announced it "preferred to be left alone." The union had urged that a U. S. Conciliator sit in on the talks, "so that he will be in a position to report the facts in the dispute to the government and the public and to make it clear which party is responsible for failure to make progress towards a settlement."

The union said it had already shown Arthur Viat, regional representative of the U. S. Service, two documents demonstrating Ford's "conflicting policies" on the question of speedup.

The first document was a statement of company policy, set forth at a Supervisory Conference on Oct. 26, 1945. The other was a letter to manufacturing supervisors and labor relations staff dated March 5, 1948.

In the first, the company stated: "The standard amount of work that an operator should do in one hour on any particular job should not vary from month to month or year to year, if the methods of operation remain the same."

In the later letter, the instructions read: "The Company has the right to set any line speed it desires as long as (a) the all-day output does not require more than 100% of anyone, and (b) when a faster speed is necessary at times, no one is required to work too far above 100% nor for too long at a stretch.

"We want to make sure no supervisor is hesitant to enforce our rights in this respect."

The union charges that a speedup was introduced in the B Building and Lincoln plants. The entire local 600, however, voted to go on strike.

IS FORD UNHAPPY?: Yes, no or maybe yes. But your employes, members of Local 600, CIO Auto Workers, are happy on the picketline. They have their impromptu hill billy band to keep up their spirits while waiting to do their turn on the picketline. The workers say they are striking because of the speedup at the Ford River Rouge Plant.

Rail Union Wins 7c, 40-Hr. Week

AFTER 11 months of negotiations, the United Railroad Workers of America, affiliated with the CIO Shipbuilding Workers, have won a seven-cent hourly increase plus a 40-hour week for 44,000 nonoperating employes of the Pennsylvania Railroad System.

IUMSWA Pres. John Green estimated that the 40-hour week at 48 hours' pay would in itself equal a 20% pay increase. He said it would create one new job for every four that now exists on the system.

The gains, which include 73 changes in the work rules, were made without government mediation. The wage boost is retroactive to Oct. 1, 1948. Other contract provisions become effective Sept. 1, 1949.

Leftists Warned:

Follow CIO Policy Or Quit Board

DECISIONS of far-reaching significance were made by the CIO Executive Board last week in a move to unify all of CIO behind its national policies.

These were the major actions taken by the board, which was having its first meeting since the Portland convention last November.

1. Adopted, after vigorous debate, a policy resolution which stated that:

"All members of the board who are unwilling to enforce the constitution and carry out the instructions of the conventions, and, between conventions, the decisions of the board, are called upon to resign.

"All unions affiliated with CIO who are represented in this board by members unwilling to (do the above) are called upon to insist upon the resignation of such representatives and to nominate successor representatives who are willing and will comply."

2. Sharply rebuked the Mine, Mill Union for what was called an "unspeakable campaign" of "vilification, calumny, slander against and disloyalty to Philip Murray, president of CIO, against the CIO itself and against the Steelworkers, of which Murray is also president." This resulted from an incident in Bessemer, Ala.

The board also urged the Steelworkers to issue charters to five Bessemer, Ala., iron ore locals which have voted to leave Mine, Mill for local industrial unions and which have asked that they be given Steel charters.

3. Ordered the Farm Equipment Union to merge with the Auto Workers or face possible revocation of their charter at the CIO convention this fall.

4. Voted to withdraw from the World Federation of Trade Unions and authorized joining a new democratic world labor group.

5. Indorsed the Atlantic Pact as an aid for peace.

6. Formally approved granting of a charter to the Communications Workers of America and pledged full support to the union in its fight against withdrawal of recognition by the various phone companies.

7. The board, after the left wing was soundly rebuked by General Counsel Arthur Goldberg for spreading misleading stories on CIO's labor bill position, approved a resolution reiterating CIO's support of the Thomas-Lesinski Bill.

8. The CIO's legislative program of 1948 was reiterated.

9. "Extremely critical unemployment" was named as the "continuing major responsibility of all CIO unions."

10. "It is imperative," the board said, "that every effort be made now to distribute national income so that the mass of consumers can absorb our rising potential production."

11. A board economic policy resolution was approved.

12. The drive of the CIO Transport Workers for greater safety measures in airliners won the board's support.

13. The Board urged Congress to grant statehood to Alaska and Hawaii.

14. Urged extension of the Tennessee Valley Authority principle to "other major river valleys and regions of America." To extend the work of CIO's Missouri River Valley Committee along these lines, the Board enlarged the committee and changed its name to the Regional Development & Conservation Committee.

These resolutions are not necessarily numbered in the order of their importance. On issues involving the left and right, the vote in opposition to CIO policy varied from nine to eleven votes.

Ohio Boosts Compensation For Jobless

THE KEY BILL in the Ohio CIO Council's Legislative program—unemployment compensation—is over its last legislative hurdle and on its way to the governor for signature.

Tremendous pressure from employer groups failed to sidetrack the bill, which emerged from the battle with some scratches but still in good shape.

To the Ohio CIO it is one of the best unemployment compensation measures to ever come from the Ohio Legislature.

Briefly, it ups compensation from a $21-a-week maximum to a possible maximum of $30; increases benefit weeks from 22 to 26, cuts the waiting period from two weeks to one and removes many of the disqualification cesspools in the law.

Labor was badly battered in what seemed to be the key round of the FEPC legislative battle, but then roared back to take the next round and is now a slight favorite in the betting odds.

IN THE SENATE, FEPC opponents succeeded in passing a weak "Education-Only" bill, despite platform commitments of both parties to pass an enforceable bill. A coalition of 13 Republicans and four Democrats did the job on FEPC.

When the bill went back to the lower house for concurrence in the Senate "Amendment"—which actually struck out every line of the bill and substituted the education provisions—the House refused to concur after a slam-bang, hour-long session.

Non-concurrence means the bill goes to a joint conference committee, which is expected to write a much stronger measure.

Public housing is over the first barrier, having passed the House of Representatives by an easy margin. Ohio is the only state in the union to bar public housing as the result of Ohio Supreme Court decisions.

The measures now awaiting Senate action are enabling acts which would eliminate the court's objections and take Ohio out of the orphan class in public housing. Fairly easy going is predicted in the Senate, since the measure is bi-partisan. Despite its bi-partisan label, all of the House opposition came from the Republican side of the aisle.

Resolution On Loyalty To CIO

THE CIO Executive Board has called for the resignation of those Board members who "are unwilling to enforce the CIO constitution and carry out the instructions of the CIO conventions, and between conventions, the decisions of this Executive Board."

The full resolution reads:

The constitution of the Congress of Industrial Organizations charges the members of this Executive Board with the solemn obligation to "enforce the constitution and carry out the instructions of the conventions."

These provisions of the CIO constitution are not empty words, void of content and meaning. They do not constitute rules against the violation of which this Executive Board has no redress. In fact, the constitution vests this Executive Board with "the power to adopt such rules, not inconsistent with the Constitution, as it may deem necessary to carry out its duties and powers."

These are the provisions of the statutory law of CIO solemnly agreed to and repeatedly ratified by ten Constitutional Conventions participated in by all of the affiliates of CIO which are represented on and by this Executive Board.

Certain utterances and actions taken by members of this Executive Board have made it necessary to reiterate these plain constitutional provisions and to direct them to the attention of these members of the Executive Board and of the International Unions which they represent on this Board.

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED

1. This Executive Board reiterates its solemn obligation to enforce the constitution of the CIO and to carry out the instructions of CIO conventions arrived at after democratic debate and full discussion.

2. All members of the CIO Executive Board who are unwilling to enforce the CIO constitution and carry out the instructions of the CIO conventions, and between conventions, the decisions of this Executive Board, are called upon to resign as members of this Executive Board.

3. All International Unions affiliated with the CIO who are represented in this Executive Board by members unwilling to enforce the CIO constitution and carry out the instructions of CIO conventions, and between conventions, decisions of this Executive Board, are called upon to insist upon the resignation of such representatives on this Executive Board and to nominate successor representatives on this Executive Board who are willing and who will comply with their constitutional obligation to enforce the CIO constitution and carry out the instructions of CIO conventions, and between conventions, decisions of this Executive Board.

UNESCO Praises Indiana Bias Law

Indiana's new law barring racial and religious discrimination in public schools, college and universities, was given a plug on UNESCO's World Review, weekly radio program about education, science and culture.

"In effect, the state has outlawed all schools exclusively organized for one race, color or religion and discriminating against others," states the program released May 21.

"The new law, which went into effect several weeks ago, is well-armed for enforcement. In some cases schools must reorganize within one year to comply with its provisions.

"This anti-discrimination step was the result of a campaign by the State Council for Civil and Human Rights (which the CIO was instrumental in forming) and the Indiana branch of NAACP.

Industry Unites Against Raises

SIGNS ARE mounting that the giants of industry have entered into a behind-the-scene combination to resist any wage increases.

In a front-page story, the paper declared that "the big boys have come closer to organizing a united front against wage raises than at any time since the strike wave of 1946."

The significance of that statement is that just prior to the 1946 outburst of strikes, representatives of some of the largest corporations held a secret meeting in New York City as which plans were laid for joint stand by industry against wage increases. Details later leaked out in print.

TWUA Rug Workers Set Strike Date

DELEGATES representing local unions of the CIO Textile Workers in three major carpet and rug companies met at New York City last week to plan for a strike scheduled to start May 31.

Delegates at the meeting represented units of the Alexander Smith & Sons Carpet Co., Yonkers, N. Y.; Bigelow-Sanford Carpet Co., Amsterdam, N. Y. and Thompsonville, Conn.; and Karaghuesian Carpet Co., Freehold and Roselle Park, N. J. These three firms have 16,000 employes.

Joint negotiations with the three other companies have broken off. A number of smaller concerns would also be affected by a strike, Rubenstein added.

MEETINGS of local union executive boards and of the general membership will be held later this week in all carpet centers to vote formal strike authorization, Rubenstein said. Today's meeting recommended such action, and according to Rubenstein, compliance is a foregone conclusion. The Yonkers local has already voted to strike.

Rubenstein said management's best offer after three months of negotiations was to continue the present agreement unchanged. The union is seeking a 15c an hour general increase, establishment of a pension trust fund, a third week's vacation for workers with 10 years' service, and a survey of the existing company-paid insurance program.

"We are not impressed by management's argument that prices have recently been reduced," Rubenstein said. "The reductions have been small and scattered compared to the price increases of last year. The companies did not consult us about these increases, which are wholly unwarranted; they cannot now try to make us a party to their policies.

"Last year was the most profitable in the whole history of the carpet and rug industry. Returns on net worth ran as high as 50%, and in no case lower than 28.6%."

SCAB TURNED AWAY: The car in the foreground was driven by a scab who tried to enter the plant of the SKF Ball Bearing Co., Philadelphia, where the CIO Steelworkers have been on strike since May 16. Note the varied expressions on the strikers' faces.

Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers was soundly rebuked for tactics used in an election campaign. Farm Equipment Workers was placed in a position of facing loss of its charter unless it merges with the Auto Workers.

The Board ruled that individual union affiliation with the WFTU, from which the CIO itself withdrew, would be considered violation of CIO policy.

These actions provided the nation's press with something of a field day. The papers pointed out in many different ways that the CIO leadership had given the "left wing" a sound beating.

Few, if any, of the publications, however, indicated that sound trade union principles were involved in the Board's action.

These principles revolve around the following questions:

1. Should a Board member who violates general CIO policy be permitted to remain on the Board?

2. Does an individual union—under its autonomy rights—enjoy the privilege of going directly opposite to policies democratically determined by CIO convention action?

These are questions which, undoubtedly, will have to be answered at the CIO's next convention.

TROUBLE STARTED AFTER WAR'S END

The united front which the CIO presented to the world during the war began cracking not long after the conflict ended. To be more specific, the first crack appeared when the Communist Party line began changing.

The split widened considerably when the CIO, in January of last year, indorsed the Marshall Plan and opposed the third political party.

At the CIO convention in Portland last November Communists and their fellow travelers were told to keep their nose out of CIO affairs. They, of course, didn't do so.

Shortly after the convention, Communist Party newspapers opened a concerted campaign of vilification against CIO Pres. Murray and other "right-wing" leaders of the CIO.

As time passed this campaign became dirtier and dirtier. And not long ago the newspapers of some of the CIO unions joined in.

An attempt was made by these newspapers to hold Murray responsible for the campaign tactics for which Mine, Mill was rebuked by the Board.

And the campaign just recently has centered on the false contention that Murray and those who agree with him had "sold the CIO down the river" on Taft-Hartley repeal.

Some of the stories in the union papers so closely resembled those in the Communist Daily Worker that one might have thought they were written by the same person.

PROBLEM IS ONE FOR MEMBERSHIP

The problems created by the split in the CIO ranks have become increasingly serious. They are problems which can be solved and must be solved if the CIO is to make real progress in the future.

They are problems with which the entire CIO membership should become completely familiar and with which the membership should deal decisively.

As the situation stands today, a small but extremely noisy minority is following a strange, twisting line which is miles away from CIO policy—policy enunciated by democratic convention action.

Farmers, Unionists Too Far Apart

People In Rural Areas Get Too Little Information About Labor

By ALLAN L. SWIM

GET A group of workers together in almost any industrial plant and you'll find a surprisingly large portion of them lived on farms or in small agricultural communities at one time or another.

In a farm group of equal size you'll find few—if any—who ever worked in an industrial plant.

That's because the nation's "migration" for many years has been from the land to the factory.

As a result, many trade unionists have a good understanding and appreciation of farm problems.

There is not an equal understanding and appreciation of industrial workers' problems among farmers.

This is unfortunate. And the situation should be corrected.

I LIVED ON A farm for six years, in a small town for 17. For seven years I was connected with a "country" daily newspaper as reporter, editor and publisher. I edited a farm journal for about a year.

During all that time all of the accurate information about unionism that I obtained could have been parked unnoticed behind my left ear.

I considered that trade unions were rather strange, boss-ridden outfits which leaned a little too strongly toward gangsterism and I had the cockeyed notion that there was a closer economic connection between farmers and business than between farmers and labor.

These things are mentioned here because my brand of thinking in those days was the rule and not the exception among news men in rural America.

There has been considerable improvement since then, but almost none of the small dailies, weeklies, and farm journals today attempt to provide their readers with accurate information about the labor movement.

The unions could and should do something about this situation.

LABOR UNION strength formerly was confined almost entirely to our cities, but this is no longer true.

Several CIO unions—such as Amalgamated Clothing, Textile, Wood and the newly affiliated telephone group—have members in many small towns and villages.

In the industrially expanding South many unionists live on farms and work in towns not far away.

The expansion of the labor movement into the predominantly rural areas has brought about an improvement in farm-labor relations.

But the improvement hasn't been great enough. There is still too much misunderstanding, too much suspicion.

AMERICAN trade unionists and their families make up about one-third of our country's total population.

The farmer is among the first to feel the effects of industrial unemployment or wage reductions in the manufacturing industries.

Agricultural prices are tied more closely to the earnings of labor than to the profits of the big corporations.

Labor in recent years has supported progressive farm legislation and has made a fight to obtain better schools for rural America.

Yes, the industrial worker has an important story to tell the farmer—but today, it's not being told often or well.

Shouldn't we in the CIO do something about it?

Faith Reaffirmed In Legislative Program

THE CIO Executive Board reiterated its faith in the 13-point legislative program which it adopted last August and which the CIO Convention last November reaffirmed.

The board resolution pointed out that the people in the 1948 national elections responded favorably to the program which included.

Repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act, anti-inflation legislation, comprehensive housing program, civil rights measures, improvement of the Fair Labor Standards Act, strengthened Social Security Program, adequate national health insurance, Federal aid to education, increased benefits for veterans, additional Valley Authorities similar to TVA, farm program geared to a full economy, extension of Reciprocal Trade Agreement authority, and strengthening of the U. S. Department of Labor.

The board resolved that:

(1) The CIO calls upon Congress to keep faith with the people of the nation by enacting with all possible speed legislation to carry out the Fair Deal Program so clearly endorsed by the voters in the 1948 elections.

(2) The CIO calls upon its affiliated organizations, its entire membership, and all liberal forces in the nation to join in a concerted campaign of communications to Congressmen, and personal conferences with them at home, to urgently insist that the Fair Deal Program be enacted into law as quickly as possible.

(3) It is unthinkable that the 81st Congress will adjourn or recess without passing legislation which substantially provides for the Fair Deal Program. The CIO calls upon Congress to remain in session until this is done.

"You fool! When I said to give me a light, I meant only the flashlight."

Clark Urged To Take 'Dead' Group Off 'List'

Atty. Gen. Tom Clark has been urged to remove the long defunct North American Committee to Aid Spanish Democracy from his recently issued list of 36 alleged subervise organizations.

Dir. Roger N. Baldwin of the American Civil Liberties Union and Executive Sec. James Loeb, Jr., of Americans for Democratic Action, who both had served on the executive board of the North American committee, personally protested to Clark. They said that the listing was a "direct affront to thousands of Americans opposed to all forms of totalitarianism."

The protest recalled that the committee, co-chaired by Bishop Francis J. McConnell and the late Dr. Walter B. Cannon of Harvard University, was a broad national group created to aid the legitimate republican government of Spain during the war of 1936-39.

Study U. S. Methods

Six groups of Norwegian technicians are scheduled to visit the United States to study American methods of steel making, pulp and paper production, manganese production and mining. They are here under ECA's plan for providing technical assistant to countries participating in the European Recovery Program.

Four of the study projects—two on steel making, one on manganese production and one on mining methods are scheduled to start this month. The other two, one on steel making and one on pulp and paper production, are scheduled for later in the summer.

Many Didn't Know Just What Was Happening

BACK in the early days of the CIO a small city industrial union council faced what appeared to be a serious problem.

The officers and members were connected with an organization which said there must be no discrimination because of race, color, creed or national background.

They lived in a Southern city which had rather rigid segregation laws.

And a number of them hadn't yet fully accepted the idea that people with black skins and people with white skins could really work together in peace and harmony.

A GROUP OF council leaders decided they would tackle the problem head-on, but without a lot of fanfare.

One of the segregation laws said that meeting places must have separate entrances for whites and Negroes. The council group selected a hall that had only one entrance.

The police didn't take any action.

The law also called for separate toilet facilities for the two races. The council, however, "couldn't afford" to provide them.

The law didn't swoop down.

The leaders breathed a little easier.

TRADITION CALLED for a division of the races whenever it was necessary for them to meet in the same building. The Negroes always sat at the back of the room.

The council provided a division but it was merely an aisle leading from the front to the back of the room.

During the first few meetings Negro delegates sat on one side of the aisle and white delegates on the other.

Then one night a couple of white delegates sat down in the "Negro section." At the next few meetings others joined them.

Eventually there were no "race sections" left.

AT FIRST THE president had difficulty getting Negroes to take part in floor discussions. He solved this problem by calling on them—by individual name—to give their opinions on issues as they arose.

A group of the Negroes got together and solved what might have been a real problem. They suggested that the council's top officer be a white man or woman "because present conditions make it impossible for a colored person, regardless of ability, to deal effectively with the general public."

Other official posts were divided about evenly between the two races, but more by chance than by design.

Committee appointments were handled in about the same manner, with more attention given to ability than to color.

NOBODY MADE any speeches about the manner in which delegates should comport themselves. Nobody made a point of the seating arrangement.

Many of the delegates either didn't realize exactly what was going on, or—if they did—didn't think too much about it.

The process was slow because prejudice runs deep, but council officers figured they were "over the hump" when, during the war a Negro proposed that all Negroes be removed from a committee selected to call on the local transit company and try to work out a better method of loading segregated buses at war plants.

"I know the prejudices of the company," said the Negro delegate, "and I know an all-white committee can do a better job. What we need in this case is results—not representation on a committee." A.L.S.

STRAIGHTEN UP AND FLY RIGHT!

TWUA Airs Washington Scene

A NOTEWORTHY attempt to bring an interpretation of the troubled Washington scene to workers in small industrial towns and cities has been launched by the CIO Textile Workers, in the form of a weekly radio program.

John Edelman, the TWUA's Washington representative, a well-known authority on labor and social legislation who has worked in the Nation's Capital for more than 20 years, is the commentator. The programs are transcribed and sent out for broadcast under the sponsorship of the union's locals and councils. At present, 17 local stations in the East and South have presented Edelman's radio commentary, "Report from Washington."

"Everyday citizens around the country are puzzled about what goes on here in the Congress and why so many contradictory things seem to happen. Most of you wonder where Congress thinks it is heading, and just who is running the show here.

"Well, as I go around the Capitol these days, seeing people who are supposed to be in the know, including members of Congress, government officials and newspaper correspondents, I ask the sort of questions you ask me when I see you on speaking trips on weekends.

"The funny thing is, however, that I don't get answers. What I get is questions. The very people I think should be telling me ask me what I hear. There is at this moment a peculiar kind of uncertainty among key figures in the Congress and a great deal of confusion among the rank and file Representatives and many of the Senators.

"THERE IS definitely a marked uneasiness among Republicans and Democrats about the fiasco on the repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act in the House. Some of the very men who are gloating in public about the fact that the T-H law is still on the books, are privately very worried over the whole business.

"Despite their bluster, these men really can't make up their minds whether they scored a victory. They now wonder whether what they did may add up to a defeat. Although November 1950 is still many months away, one would think from the conversations that these off-year congressional elections were right around the corner.

"President Truman told the country plainly he isn't giving up on his fight to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act.

"Tom Stokes, Washington columnist, insists that the Republicans have hurt themselves politically by their would-be smart maneuver in trying to use the Southerners as catspaws in the fight to cripple labor unions . . .

"Some of the newly elected members of Congress who ran on an all-out repeal of the Taft-Hartley platform are saying they cannot face their constituents in 1950 unless some compromise measure is pushed through this Congress.

"On the other hand, we have both in and out of Congress those who say that the essential thing is to make a clear record in this Congress as between the straight-out liberal and reactionary position so that incumbent members who haven't gone along with the Truman program just won't have any alibis and excuses in the 1950 elections.

"THOSE WHO take this position have, in effect, reconciled themselves to getting nothing of any consequence in the 81st Congress . . .

"One thing that will definitely make a difference at this junction is what the Senators and Congressmen hear from back home. If labor people just throw their hands up and say that nothing can be done with this Congress, it is only too obvious that matters will remain pretty much as they are.

"The fact is that some members of Congress can still be swung one way or the other. If you rank and filers demonstrate that you are still determined, and just won't give up, you can be fairly sure that the picture here will again change."

11th Week

The series of radio news commentaries by John Edelman, Washington representative of the CIO Textile Workers, is now in its 11th week.

Transcriptions of his weekly "Report from Washington" are being broadcast over a number of local stations in Southern and Eastern towns under the sponsorship of the union's locals and joint boards.

In Rhode Island the State CIO Council sponsors it weekly on a state-wide basis. Local stations in Virginia, North Carolina, and Pennsylvania are among the 17 that have carried it to date. For further information, write to John Edelman, Textile Workers Union, Earle Bldg., Washington 4, D. C.

Mine, Mill Smear Of Murray Carried Even To His Faith

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

PERHAPS never in the history of the Congress of Industrial Organizations has a minor incident been blown into such major proportions as was done in Bessemer, Ala., in the last few weeks.

The incident was this: an official of the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers, called a rank and file worker a filthy name. The rank and file worker hit him—hard.

Ordinarily, when a man calls another man a filthy name, he accepts the consequences. But, not Maurice Travis, secretary-treasurer, or the Mine, Mill union itself.

Goaded on by Graham Dolan, educational director of the union, and by Communist cells everywhere, some members and officers of the union—and a lot of fellow travellers—launched a telegraphic assault on CIO Pres. Philip Murray.

Murray was given the works. He was called a Klansman, a Brown-Shirt, a Hitlerite, a Fascist, un-Christian, anti-Negro, anti-union, a dictator, a leader of goon squads—even his religious affiliation was attacked.

JOHN CLARK, president of Mine-Mill, without checking with Murray for his side of the story, joined in the attack. So did Reid Robinson, vice president of that union. So did some others in other left-wing unions, particularly in Harry Bridges' Longshore Union and the Office & Professional Workers, where James Durkin has the title of president.

Reporter

Arthur Riordan, a newspaperman for 22 years, spent four days in the Bessemer, Ala., area investigating the facts upon which the accompanying story is based.

So enraged was the CIO Executive Board that it took the almost unprecedented action of passing a resolution (which appears in an adjoining column) soundly rebuking Mine-Mill. The vote was 38 to 11.

These board members from unions with about 10% of CIO's membership voted against the resolution:

Harry Bridges, Longshoremen; Hugh Bryson, Marine Cooks; John Clark, Mine, Mill; James Durkin, Office; Julius Emspak, Electrical; Abram Flaxer, Public Workers; Ben Gold, Fur; Donald Henderson, Food, Tobacco; J. F. Jurich, Fishermen; Grant W. Oakes, Farm Equipment, and Joseph Selly, American Communications (not to be confused with the Communications Workers of America, new CIO affiliate.)

Albert Fitzgerald, CIO vice president who is also president of the Electrical Workers, abstained from voting. Every affiliate of the CIO was present except the Marine Engineers, whose representative was unable to attend.

THE BESSEMER incident grew out of a long period of rebellion within the Mine, Mill locals in that area.

The workers, who said they were disgusted with the pro-Communist tactics of their international union and beleaguered with lack of servicing, failure to handle grievances and arbitrations and slipshod negotiating, had been trying for some years to get another haven in CIO.

Pres. Murray over and over again urged them to stay within the Mine, Mill Union and attempt to clean up the situation.

But, last year, local unionists said, the burden became too great. The Bessemer people said they found that left-wingers were too deeply intrenched in the union's top leadership to be displaced. They reported they were heartsick over the type of propaganda Dolan was sending out, paid for in part by their dues.

One of the locals bolted briefly to the AFL. District 50 of the Mine Workers was attempting to get the others. Since these were good union members, CIO finally issued local industrial union charters to them.

This partly satisfied the workers, but their real goal was to become members of the Steelworkers, just like their brother iron ore workers in Minnesota and Michigan.

THE LIUs, Mine, Mill and the employer (Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad Co., U. S. Steel subsidiary) signed an agreement to hold a representation election, to be conducted by the American Arbitration Association.

Both sides carried on vigorous campaigns. Murray assigned Nick Zonarich, one of his most respected aides, to help out. Rube Farr, Steelworkers, District director; Carey Haigler, Operation Dixie chief for Alabama, and John Playfair, state CIO president, were all active.

The LIU campaign was carried on in a CIO fashion. The workers were all urged to vote, no matter which side they favored. Equality of treatment was pledged (about half of the workers are Negroes).

But, the Mine, Mill campaign was the complete opposite. Here are just a few of the tactics used:

A. Negro workers were told that the Steelworkers did not take Negroes in their membership:

B. If a Negro pointed out that one of his friends belonged to the Steelworkers in another local, they would tell him that the member had a substandard membership;

C. Workers were told that Philip Murray and the Steelworkers were controlled by the Pope of Rome and took orders only from him;

D. Mine, mill claimed that the Steelworkers would bring the Ku Klux Klan into the area after they won the election;

E. Workers were told that under Taft-Hartley, if they changed they would lose their vacations, their union, they could not have a contract for a full year and thus, progression steps and all other benefits; and

F. The Smelter Workers Union took advantage of the confusion created by the choice between their union, the CIO industrial unions and neither. They told the workers that the organizers lied when they said that the Red Mountain people would eventually be in the Steel Union.

A KKK parade, a week before the election, was made by Dolan to appear to have been sponsored by CIO. There was absolutely no connection.

ALL THOSE falsehoods obviously caused confusion among the workers. So did terrorism, exerted by Mine, Mill officials, among the Negroes. Some who showed a tendency towards the LIUs and the Steelworkers were warned that they might feel violence. They were warned to keep away from LIU meetings—or else.

So, came the night of April 20, when both sides were scheduled to broadcast final appeals from Bessemer radio station WJLD. The programs followed each other.

First, George Elliott, young leader of the Ishkooda local, gave the LIU story. When he finished, he went out into the waiting room and Mine, Mill, with Robinson as its chief spokesman, went on the air.

Travis also went into the waiting room. Approaching Elliott, he asked, condescendingly: "That the first time you've been on the air, kid?"

Elliott replied: "That's none your business."

Travis then called Elliott a "po sicle," a word which has a filt meaning in the Red Mountain c range.

Elliott had ignored previous jib but this was too much. He hit Tra spontaneously two or three tim knocking him through a gate and o a desk into a corner. Dolan and Char Wilson, Mine, Mill district direc and vice president, stood by, with attempting to come to the aid of th comrade.

Zonarich, who was in the st tion's second studio listening Mine, Mill's broadcast, rush through two doors and grabbed liott, telling him to stop. He a took a chair from the hands

Board Actions

After the CIO Executive Board heard the Bessemer story it did two things:

1. Passed a resolution sharply censuring the Mine, Mill union for its slanderous attack on Philip Murray, the CIO and the Steelworkers.
2. Passed a resolution advising the Steelworkers to issue charters to the five Bessemer locals.

Resolution Mine, M

The following resolution was passed by the CIO Executive Board:

WHEREAS, (1) The constitution of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, unanimously adopted, declares that the CIO opposes "All those who would violate American emphasis o respect for human dignity, all those who would use power t exploit the people in the interest of alien loyalties"; and

(2) The CIO Constitution further states that "racial per secution, intolerance, selfishness, and greed have no place i the human family"; and

(3) The International Union of Mine, Mill and Smelte Workers, disregarding its duties as an affiliate of the CIO, ha been carrying on a campaign of vilification, calumny, slande against and disloyalty to Philip Murray, President of the CIO against the CIO itself, and against the United Steelworkers o America, CIO, of which Mr. Murray is also President; and

(4) This unspeakable campaign follows vicious actions o the International Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers i the Red Mountain section near Bessemer, Alabama, in which that union deliberately and with malice aforethought attempte by every tactic possible to split the white and Negro workers using the Communist weapon of fear, intolerance, racial hatred threats and other methods which have no place in the decen ranks of trade unionism; and

(5) The International Union of Mine, Mill and Smelte Workers attempted to blow a minor incident, involving two men

Board's Actio

WHEREAS: The CIO Executive Board, meeting on Saturday, November 27, 1948, adopted, in accordance with decision of the Tenth Constitutional Convention of the CIO, the following resolution [ordering the Farm Equipment Workers to merge with the United Auto Workers within 60 days].

WHEREAS: The CIO Special Committee appointed by President Philip Murray to lend its good offices to the effectuation of the merger met in Chicago on January 7, 1949, and was defied by officers of the FE-CIO who asserted, "Your Committee carries absolutely no status with our organization," refus to discuss the directive of t CIO Executive Board a walked out of the meeting.

into a major international episode and use that incident to spread false accusations against Mr. Murray, the USA and the CIO, when the union knew full well that one of its officers had brought on the incident, during which he was struck, by insulting the integrity and manhood of a rank and file iron ore worker who serves as an unpaid local president and who is not on the payroll of CIO, USA or of any union.

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED:

(1) That the Executive Board of the CIO, assembled in the City of Washington, D. C., on the 17th day of May, 1949, hereby strongly condemns the actions of the International Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers and censure its officers and employes who have attempted to besmirch the names of Philip Murray, of the CIO and of the USA; and

(2) That the Executive Board denounces the use of racial prejudice, threats and intimidation by the International Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers in the Bessemer area; and

(3) That the Executive Board assures the white and Negro ore workers of the Bessemer area that the activities of the International Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers in that region are not those of real CIO people and pledges the full support of CIO in bringing decent wages and working conditions to all workers, regardless of race, creed, color or national origin; and pointed by President Murray recommends that the CIO Executive Board take such further action as it may deem appropriate in the circumstances to promote the consolidation of all CIO members in the agricultural implement industry in a unified collective bargaining agency.

WHEREAS: The report of the Special Committee demonstrates conclusively that the leadership of the FE-CIO continues to block every effort of the CIO to resolve this jurisdictional dispute, has defied National CIO policy and has served notice that it will not comply with the directive of the National Executive Board.

NOW THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED: That the National Executive Board, on this 18th day of May, 1949, reaffirms the award of jurisdiction in the agricultural implement industry to the International Union, United Automobile, Aircraft and Agricultural Implement Workers of America, CIO, and does now recommend to the coming CIO Constitutional Convention, October 1949, that the charter of the Farm Equipment and Metal Workers Union be revoked.

another LIU member, who was threatening Wilson.

Dolan was in the room all the time and must have seen all this. Yet, he sent out a press release saying Travis had been attacked by a goon gang, led by Zonarich and Robert Christofferson, Haigler's publicity director.

Christofferson is about 5 feet, 4 inches, weighs 140 pounds and has a severe case of diabetes.

Travis was taken to a hospital, where it was found that he had an injured eye. Dolan immediately sent out a release saying that Travis had lost the sight of one eye and perhaps might lose the other. He quoted unidentified doctors as his authority.

Bessemer doctors last week told the CIO they had never said that Travis had lost the sight of one eye, or that he might lose the sight of either one.

This lie, spread by Dolan and the Daily Worker, was used as the excuse for scores of telegrams sent Murray at the instigation of Mine, Mill and other unions. These libelous wires began pouring into Murray's Pittsburgh and Washington offices within eight hours after the incident.

These messages came, not from Bessemer, Ala., or from the State of Alabama. They came from Hawaii, Canada, California, etc. Izvestia, published in Russia, screamed in rage. The Daily Worker brooded.

Murray was called nearly every possible libelous name that could be sent over Western Union's wires. There were demands that he fire Zonarich summarily, that he expel Zonarich and Christofferson forever from CIO membership.

Murray did not rush into the public prints. He ordered a complete investigation of the charges. The result was just as he had expected: the Mine, Mill story was the Big Lie.

It was broadcast by Arthur Geath, radio commentator sponsored by the Electrical Workers.

Dolan, who used to work for the Chicago Tribune, talked out of both sides of his mouth, his "eye witness" stories changed with each issue of the Union, official organ of Mine, Mill.

Elliott, in a sworn statement to the police, says he and he alone hit Travis.

Mine, Mill had Elliott arrested on a charge of "intent to kill" and also filed a $100,000 suit against Elliott, seven other individuals and the Steelworkers.

As this is written doctors say Travis has an excellent chance of recovery. He has been released from the hospital.

Board Directs FE To Join UAW or Face Loss of Charter

A BLUNT order to the Farm Equipment & Metal Workers' Union to merge its 30,000 members into the United Auto Workers, or face loss of its charter at the next CIO convention, was voted by the CIO Executive Board.

By a 34-9 vote, the Board followed up the directive it had issued at its last meeting, in Portland, Ore., for formation of a single union in the farm equipment field.

The new action "reaffirmed" the earlier decision, and recommended to the next CIO convention that revocation of the charter be voted if the merger is not completed by that time.

Before acting, the Board heard a fact-finding report by a three-man committee named by Pres. Murray last November to seek agreement for a merger. Pres. Walter Reuther and other leaders of the UAW-CIO have welcomed such an amalgamation, but the proposal was vetoed by a special convention of the FE.

The three-man committee—Pres. Emil Rieve, Textile, Pres. Jacob Potofsky, Amalgamated, and Pres. Joseph Curran, Maritime Union—sought to discuss the matter with the FE in Chicago last January.

But, after Pres. Grant Oakes had read a formal statement, FE representatives left the meeting, and no further negotiations were held. The committee described Oakes' statement as a "complete distortion" of the CIO Board's action and of the committee's functions.

THE CIO BOARD'S new order to FE charged that union with conducting a "campaign of vilification, slander, misrepresentation, distortion and other anti-union, anti-democratic activities in a consistent plan designed to defame and to injure the CIO . . ."

Presented as evidence to the board were copies of the FE's paper, leaflets issued in NLRB election campaigns and speeches by union officers.

In a number of these elections, the UAW-CIO won bargaining rights from the FE by large majorities—but only after receiving bitter propaganda charges of a type more usually expected from employer or anti-union organizations.

In addition, leaders of the UAW-CIO charge that FE negotiators signed a hasty sub-standard contract with Intl. Harvester which has acted as a barrier to effective wage negotiations by the UAW-CIO with other firms in the industry. The agreement, which brought about no wage improvements, was signed the day a 60-day contract-opening period had started.

SEVEN recommendations and conclusions were contained in the report of the three-man CIO committee:

A. "The exercise of jurisdiction in the farm implement industry by both the FE and UAW has led to rivalry, conflict and waste, thereby impairing the welfare of the workers in this field and the strength of the organizations involved.

The Industry

The farm equipment industry —in which CIO is seeking to unify all workers within the ranks of the Auto Workers—is dominated by a few big companies.

Intl. Harvester, John Deere, J. I. Case, Allis-Chalmers, Oliver, Massey-Harris, Minneapolis-Moline and B. F. Avery are the big producers. In addition, there are numerous feeder and parts plants.

UAW-CIO has an estimated 115,000 farm equipment workers in its ranks.

FE, which CIO has ordered to merge with UAW, has less than 30,000. A few years ago, the union had about 73,000 dues-paying members.

B. "Because of the close relationship between the automobile industry and the farm implement industry, the workers of both these industries should belong to one labor organization to adequately protect their interests and extend the complete benefits of organization and collective bargaining to them.

C. "Since the greatest number of automobile workers are already organized in the UAW, and the UAW has the largest membership among the farm implement workers, exclusive jurisdiction in the farm implement field should be exercised by the UAW.

D. "The UAW has many farm implement workers as members and its organization is patterned to the needs of these workers. In experience, militancy, democratic structure and numerical and financial strength, it is well equipped to effectively serve and capably represent the workers in the farm implement field.

E. "The action of the CIO Executive Board in 1945 and again in 1948, calling upon the FE to amalgamate with the UAW upon terms and conditions which would fully protect the interests of the membership of the FE, is completely warranted and supported by the facts revealed by the investigation of your Committee and this action should be reiterated by the Executive Board.

F. "This Committee recommends that the CIO Executive Board once again direct the FE to amalgamate with the UAW forthwith, and that the CIO Executive Board resolve and proclaim that the interests of the workers in the farm implement field can best be served if they join the UAW and that it fully supports the UAW in organizing these workers in its ranks, and that the Executive Board take such further action as it may deem appropriate in the circumstances to promote the consolidation of all CIO members in the agricultural implement industry within a unified collective bargaining agency.

G. "This Committee further recommends that the CIO Executive Board censure the officers and Executive Board members of the FE for their contumacious and unprincipled conduct and stubborn refusal to attempt to work out a solution of a situation which causes substantial injury to the workers they represent."

THE CIO BOARD'S move to seek unification of the unions in the farm implement industry is the latest in a long series of actions extending back over a period of several years. The original locals of the Farm Equipment Union were organized by the Steel Workers Organizing Committee in the mid-thirties.

They, together with other locals, were set up in a separate organizing committee, in part through the insistence of a vice-president of the auto union, who was later rebuked by his board and defeated for re-election.

In 1945, the matter came before the Jurisdictional Committee of CIO. That committee—no longer in existence—conducted full hearings, and its chairman, Ship Union Pres. John Green, submitted a recommendation to the Executive Board for merger of FE and the auto union.

"Unfortunately," the three-man CIO investigating committee reported, "the FE Executive Board rejected the action of the CIO Executive Board and instructed its officers not to meet for the purpose of effecting amalgamation."

A referendum on the question was closely connected with the union's program for higher wages, shorter hours and a guaranteed annual wage. "Needless to say," the CIO committee commented, the FE referendum supported the union's leaders.

In 1947, the committee recalled, "a merger agreement was reached by representatives of both organizations, subject to a referendum vote of the UAW locals and the approval of the FE locals . . .

"Although favoring unity, the President of the UAW and a minority of the members of the UAW Executive Board opposed the proposed merger," the committee report pointed out, because they felt that the technical forms of the merger arranged were contrary to the UAW constitution and the principles of industrial unionism.

"The UAW referendum vote rejected the merger proposal. Later, UAW Pres. Walter Reuther offered to attempt to arrive at a satisfactory merger proposal with the FE on the basis of the terms under which the Aluminum Workers of America came into the United Steelworkers, but no response to this offer was ever received from the FE."

FE'S ATTITUDE toward CIO's effort to achieve unity among farm equipment workers was voiced in the words of Pres. Grant Oakes at the Chicago hearing of the CIO committee.

"So that there shall be no misunderstanding from the outset," Oakes told the three CIO investigating officers, "your committee carries absolutely no status with our organization." He sought to describe the CIO's effort to achieve merger as a "union-wrecking vendetta."

Later, at the FE convention in Cedar Rapids in March, there were speeches sharply critical of CIO policies, and efforts ot compare the activities of leading CIO officers with the doings of Hitler's Nazi bosses.

CIO Leaves WFTU, Hopes To Form New World Body

THE CIO LAST week bade a formal—if not reluctant—good-bye to the Communist-dominated World Federation of Trade Unions.

In announcing its disaffiliation from the WFTU, the CIO Board made clear that the decision affects every CIO union. The Board said:

"It shall be contrary to CIO policy for any affiliate, officer or executive board member of the CIO to have organizational relationship to the WFTU or any of its agencies."

At the same time, the Board cleared the tracks for CIO participation in the formation of a new democratic international labor body.

A preliminary meeting has been scheduled for Switzerland June 25-26, at which representatives from many non-Communist labor movements will make plans for creation of the new group. A larger organizing convention may be held later this year.

Both CIO and AFL, as well as the British Trades Union Congress and other large democratic union organizations, will be represented in the new international group.

CIO Delegation

Michael Ross, CIO's director of international affairs, left for Europe last weekend to work out further plans for the June 25 meeting. CIO Secy.-Treas. James Carey and Councils Director John Brophy will leave in June to represent CIO at the session, along with Elmer Cope, CIO's European representative.

Decision to break with the WFTU stemmed from a resolution adopted by the CIO's Portland convention and from recommendations of a CIO delegation which conferred with European union leaders in Paris last January.

At that time, CIO Secy.-Treas. Carey—together with leaders of the British and Dutch unions—walked out of the WFTU executive bureau, in protest over its failure to adhere to its original trade union policy.

Preparations

In recent months, conferences by CIO leaders with officials of both the AFL and the British Trades Union Congress have helped smooth the way for formation of the new international labor federation.

On April 28 a CIO conference with AFL leaders brought forth a "friendly discussion" and agreement on a number of points.

The two U. S. groups agreed that each organization would be represented at congresses of the new international group by delegations based on the size of their "recognized membership." On executive bodies and committees, both AFL and CIO will be represented, and if the organization has vice-presidents, each American union group will name one person to such a post.

It was also agreed that CIO and AFL delegates to meetings of the new international labor organizations will seek to consult beforehand "in an effort to reach a common policy."

Expected to Join

Unions from many small European nations are expected to join the new organization. A conference last month in Brussels, Belgium, brought together labor spokesmen from Belgium, Luxembourg, Denmark, Sweden, Norway and Switzerland.

They voiced hope that the international trade secretariats—composed of unions in each industry, and maintaining central offices for the exchange of labor and industrial information and policy—will work out arrangements to affiliate with the new international organization.

The disintegration of the World Federation of Trade Unions was reviewed in detail in a lengthy report to the Executive Board.

It recalled that American workers have always been opposed to communism, but the "monumental problems" confronting the world during the war against the Axis called for "every possible effort to find solutions."

Formed in 1945

Thus, in 1942, the CIO convention called for steps toward international labor cooperation with the British and Soviet unions, and those of other nations. Arising out of discussions in the next couple of years, the World Federation of Trade Unions was formed in October 1945 with a constitution and program which won wide support.

But, the report described developments within the next year, in which Communist-led unions and the secretary-general, Louis Saillant, sought to commit the WFTU to a course of political, rather than trade-union, action in the international field.

Thus, in June 1946, Saillant recommended a blockade of Franco Spain by unions, presumably in the form of commitments from WFTU affiliates, to carry on political strikes. The CIO objected vigorously, pointing out that only its own unions can vote for strikes, and that no prior commitments for this type of embargo against Spain had been authorized by CIO or the British or Soviet labor unions.

Marshall Plan Fought

The report also emphasized that the WFTU's initial resolution called for economic reconstruction in Europe. Early post-war measures by the U. S. government to help the peoples of Europe received no criticism from the WFTU, but after the Cominform declared its ideological warfare on the Marshall Plan, the WFTU's official bulletin was filled with propaganda against U. S. aid.

At a November 1947 meeting of the WFTU executive, Communist representatives from Italy and the USSR, and Sec.-Gen. Saillant, voted against even permitting CIO Sec.-Treas. Carey from presenting CIO's position in support of the Marshall Plan before the meeting. A majority vote prevented the matter from being added to the agenda of the meeting.

During the following months, in early 1948, the WFTU's information bulletin was filled with articles opposing the Marshall Plan, and vilifying those union leaders in Europe and America who supported the program for European economic aid.

The bulletin, for instance, carried what the CIO report described as a "weird indictment" by the Bulgarian unions, in which Carey and other democratic union leaders were described as "agents of American imperialism . . . recruited to the service of Wall Street. . . ."

At Rome, in May 1948, the CIO and the British warned the WFTU that continuation of these practices of using the organization to attack its affiliates would lead only to the break-up of the world labor group. After lengthy conferences, reforms in the conduct of the WFTU were agreed on by a committee representing six leading union centers.

The CIO report noted that "even while the Rome agreement was being negotiated, the free democratic trade union groups realized that it would only succeed if it was carried out in the spirit as well as in the letter. It turned out that it was not adhered to at all."

Compromise Rejected

In September 1948, the international trade secretariats—to whom the Russian unions had voiced considerable hostility two years earlier—made a final decision not to enter the WFTU. That decision left the organization lacking an essential phase of the activity of an international organization.

In January 1949, the British—supported by the CIO—recommended that in view of the difficulty in getting agreement on any subject between the Communist and non-Communist unions, the WFTU be placed in "mothballs" for a period of a year, with its funds entrusted to trustees. It was hoped that this compromise might pave the way for re-establishment of the WFTU in the future, at a period when political difficulties were less aggravated.

But that compromise was rejected—and the CIO, the British and the Dutch left the WFTU executive bureau.

Church O.K.'s Closed Shop

WHERE THE closed or the union shop is agreed to by management and labor, it should be supported by church members, the Federal Council of Churches decided last week.

The action was taken by the 40-member executive board of the Council, which represents 27 Protestant and Eastern Orthodox denominations. The council's statement said:

"Where either the closed or the union shop emerges with proper safeguards, we believe the agreement . . . should be approved and supported by church people."

The council also took an indirect slap at T-H which bars the closed shop and requires a majority of all the employes—not just those voting—for NLRB sanction of the union shop. The council said:

"We believe that compulsory union membership should neither be required nor forbidden by law. The decision should be left to agreement by management and labor . . ."

Murray Praises War Orphan Aid

A campaign of the Fraternal Order of Eagles to provide health and educational aid to more than a thousand children of its members who died in World War II has been commended by CIO Pres. Philip Murray as being "in the best tradition of American democracy."

Board Hits Bell On CWA Move

THE CIO Executive Board lashed at the Bell Telephone companies and the Western Electric for adopting a policy of refusing to recognize the Communication Workers of America since it became a CIO affiliate.

The board's resolution recognized the fact that the policy was dictated by the firm controlling the Bell companies and WE, the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., described as "the world's largest monopoly." The resolution said:

"The executive board of the CIO pledges full moral and financial support to the workers in their battle to preserve their union from the onslaughts of this bitter anti-union attack; and

"Be it further resolved, that all affiliates of the CIO be urged to take similar action."

CWA Pres. Joseph A. Beirne was seated as a member of the CIO Executive Board.

DESPITE THE fact that CWA members had voted to affiliate by a two to one majority, the AT&T affiliates were using that as an excuse for withdrawing recognition even where contracts were still in effect.

According to CWA headquarters, the companies were in most cases filing petitions for NLRB elections to determine that whether the employes still wanted to be represented by CWA since it had become a CIO affiliate.

All CWA division and international counsel were called to a conference at Washington early last week.

As a result of that conference and deliberation by CWA's executive board the following resolution was adopted:

"In the handling of the recognition problem which has been created by the telephone companies, it shall be the policy of the union to permit divisions to engage in court action; to use the NLRB processes; to sign new payroll deduction cards. Each division shall first consult with headquarters office in its case

"Decisions respecting the method to be used shall be made by the officers of the union after consultation with the general counsel and the division officers."

HARDY HANDSHAKE: Pres. John J. Moran (r.) of the American Union of Telephone Workers, first telephone union to affiliate with the CIO, welcomes Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the Communication Workers of American, who last week attended a meeting of the CIO Executive Board for the first time. The CWA, which voted to affiliate with the CIO, was issued a CIO charter several days ago.

Camp for War Orphans

An international holiday camp for war orphans will be organized in Europe next August by the Intl. Federation of Children's Communities with the aid of UNESCO. Exact location of the camp has not yet been decided. It will accommodate 50 war victims 12 to 17 years old, from 16 countries.

All-Time High For Co-ops

Consumers cooperatives reached an all-time high in both membership and business in 1947, according to a recent bulletin issued by the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics.

The combined business of the retail distributive cooperatives exceeded a billion dollars and that of the local service associations was over 25½ millions, the bulletin stated.

A larger number of consumers' cooperative associations than ever before were in the million-dollar class in 1947, latest year for which statistics have been compiled.

Altogether, 10 associations of urban or rural-urban membership had a volume of business exceeding a million dollars, and 10 had 3,000 members or more.

Maryland Group Votes To Join New Union

The Maryland Federation of Telephone Workers membership has voted to authorize delegates to attend the amalgamation convention of the CWA and Telephone Workers Organizing Committee and to affiliate with the new national CIO union for telephone workers. The vote was 1032 to 592. The convention will be held in Chicago in June.

This is the first poll taken on the question by a union unaffiliated with either CWA or TWOC since the completion of the CWA referendum on CIO affiliation. Ohio Federation of Telephone Workers—which likewise does not belong either to CWA or TWOC—is also voting on whether it shall take identical action.

Board OK's This Economic Report:

'Increasing Government Action' May Be Necessary

"IF LARGE-SCALE unemployment is to be avoided, some new strength must be found on the demand side of our economy. A better distribution of income and spending is called for."

Thus the Committee on Full Employment reported to the CIO Executive Board last week.

Members of the Committee are CIO Pres. Murray, chairman; Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers, administrative chairman; Pres. Walter Reuther of the Auto Workers; Pres. Albert Fitzgerald of the Electrical Workers and Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers. The report continued:

"Over the past three years larger and larger shares of income have been going to the property groups of the population while the position of wage and salary earners has deteriorated.

"Primarily, as we shall see, this points to the need for strengthening the position of the wage and salary group. But to the extent that private adjustments are insufficient in underwriting a high enough level of demand to sustain full employment and expanding levels of production, it may be necessary to rely upon increasing government action."

Unemployment Rises

"Unemployment" is a word that keeps cropping up in the report as it increasingly does in our economy even though newspapers and magazines have been inclined either not to mention it or to gloss over it.

The report sums up the attitude of the press by quoting from the U. S. News of February 25, which stated:

"Unemployment has already risen substantially. It is expected in 1950 to reach or exceed a four million level. That still would not be a major problem." (The last sentence in bold face type is underscored in the report, which commented:)

"'Technically' four million or even more unemployed might not be a 'major problem' or not even 'a recession'—for businessmen.

"For the American people it would be a defeat. When the Congress passed the Employment Act of 1946 it certainly did not envisage four million unemployed, over 6% of the labor force, as either healthy or normal.

"Even more to the point is the indisputable fact that unemployment feeds upon itself. An unemployed worker means one less producer, and a less effective consumer. Moreover, the spotty, pocket nature of unemployment at the present time is much like the situation in the late 1920's. At that time unemployment first began to manifest itself in such soft industries as textiles.

Warning Signals

"These soft spots, we believe, bespeak fundamental, underlying distortions in the economy. They are warning signs calling for corrective measures.

"In 1948 the nation was able to achieve full (or nearly full) employment and a high level of production. Many economic problems remained unsolved last year, but at least these two were largely overcome. Now, it is proposed that since demand is down we also cut supply.

"One business organ put it succinctly, 'Industry is clearly thinking in terms of slightly lower 1949 production.' (Business Week, February 26, 1949.) Keep in mind that we have a growing labor force. Link this with rising productivity and 'slightly lower production' and you get a pattern of growing and serious unemployment.

"We cannot look to business or business planning for a continuation of full employment, full production. Business as usual in 1949 adds up to lower production and more unemployment. All this at a time when our system is on trial in the eyes of a great part of the world."

Like unemployment the U. S. News keeps bobbing up in the report because it reflects the thinking of U. S. business. The report quoted the News:

"Urgent needs and wants have been filled. People no longer feel that they have to have refrigerators, stoves, household appliances, clothing, even automobiles, so they are not rushing to buy. That leads to lagging sales, lagging orders, cutbacks in production." The report continued:

"Any real familiarity with the American workers and farmers and their needs immediately attests to the absurdity of this notion. Their needs remain virtually limitless, but their wherewithal to fill these needs has been whittled away by the grinding inflation. Three years and more of inflation has sapped the buying power of these segments of the population."

The report took exception to "the business view that the pricing system is sufficiently fluid and elastic to keep our economy operating at a high level of employment and production . . ."

"Consumer prices on the average are still more than 27% over the June 1946 level when OPA was scuttled, according to the latest release of the U. S. Department of Labor. Indeed, the consumer price level, or as it is more commonly called, the cost of living index, is still more than 2% higher than it was in March 1948.

"Anyone who even suggested in March of 1948 that we were no longer in the grip of tremendously inflated prices would have been laughed out of court. Yet, such is the suggestion in some quarters today. Living costs, which are still 68% above the January 1941 level, by no stretch of the imagination can be termed anything but inflationary.

"In the industrial price field, the experience of the '30's seems to be headed for a repeat performance. The rigid price policies of the iron and steel leaders during the last depression, for example, resulted in a 76% production drop from 1929 to 1932, while iron and steel prices fell only 16%.

"During the same period employment in this industry fell 71%. In other industries, too, the effects of rigid price policies were clearly manifest and they resulted in severe drops in production and employment.

"So affluent a corporation as General Motors on the heels of an approximately $450 million net profit in 1948 and a record-breaking profit in the first quarter of 1949 on top of 1948, recently announced some very slight token shaving of refrigerator prices but, at the same time, cut refrigerator production schedules and dropped thousands of workers from its payroll in Dayton, Ohio, the home of the great Frigidaire plant.

"General Motors has also made a token cut of around 1% in the price of its $2,000 automobiles.

"By 1948, percentage-wise the employes' share of national income was back at its 1941 level of 62%, having fallen from 68% in 1945.

"Since 1945, these major property segments (farm income, unincorporated business and professional income, and corporate profits) have increased their share of national income from 27% in 1945 to 33% in 1948. Dollar-wise the gain was from $49.5 billion to $75.6 billion.

Profits Rising

"Of particular concern for any labor group is the economic status and progress of the corporate sector of the economy, for it is here that the overwhelming share of the CIO membership is employed. Here, too, through its bargaining power labor can move to effect some needed action toward the necessary redistribution of income.

"Preliminary reports on corporate profits for the first three months of 1949 show that in spite of a drop in employment, and consumer income, as a group major American corporations actually improved their earnings over a like period in 1948.

"A survey of the financial reports for the first quarter of 1949 of 500 corporations (scattered in manufacturing, mining, trade, and services) made by the National City Bank, disclosed that profits after taxes were up 6.5% as compared to the first quarter of 1948.

"A Wall Street Journal survey of some 489 major firms in the first quarter of 1949 showed a gain of 7.2% over the like period in 1948.

"As the economic system grows and expands it must be geared to sustaining a high volume of sales. This can be done if industry operates on the basis of low unit profits. Indeed the 'genius' of the American system of enterprise, when it works well, has been just this—large volume, low unit profits, but high gross and net profits resulting from the high volume of sales.

"Instead of passing along their savings in the form of lower prices, over the past few years, businessmen have actually raised their prices. The result has been that margins were widened—purchasing power and savings were drained off from the lower and middle income groups—and profits piled up in spectacular fashion."

Workers Worse Off Than In 1944

The Full Employment Committee took up the matter of the weekly paychecks of manufacturing workers which it said "are one of the recognized barometers of mass purchasing power in our economy." This is how workers are faring:

Money And Real Wages Of Manufacturing Workers

Period	Money Wages	Real Wages (1941—100)	Index of Real Weekly Wages (1941—100)
1941	$29.58	$29.58	100
1942	36.65	33.11	112
1943	43.14	36.71	124
1944	46.08	38.63	131
June 1945	46.32	37.81	127
Dec. 1945	41.21	33.37	113
June 1946	43.31	34.18	115
Dec. 1946	46.96	32.23	109
1947	49.25	32.55	110
1948	53.12	32.45	110
Jan. 1949	54.41	33.48	113
Feb. 1949	54.25	33.78	114
March 1949	53.27	33.06	112

"As this table shows, the American factory worker had not quite regained the purchasing power he lost after V-J Day by June 1946. At that point he had climbed back part of the distance but the junking of effective price controls in the summer of 1946 completed the wage earners' rout. After two more rounds of wage increases he still stands below even his June 1946 position. He has 15% less purchasing power than in 1944."

Immediate Steps To Halt Unemployment Urged

A SIX-POINT, long range program and an eight-point plan of immediate action to halt increasing unemployment were recommended in a resolution on economic policy adopted by the CIO Executive Board last week.

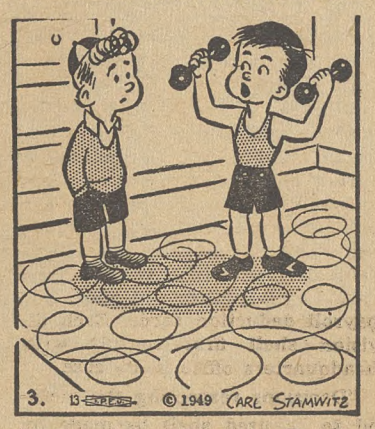
The long-range program called for immediate wage increases, low prices and high production, increasing of industrial capacity, a federal housing program, enactment of Agriculture Secy. Brannan's farm program, development of an extensive public works program.

The eight points of the immediate plan are: Upping the amount and the duration of the unemployment compensation, extension of the social security program, federal supplements to unemployment compensation, increasing the minimum wage level to $1 an hour, a progressive tax system, based on ability to pay, strategically located public works, Federal loans to industries and small businesses. Partial text of the resolution follows:

The nation is once again face to face with serious economic decisions. While levels of government expenditures may stave off a serious break in our economy for another year, production and employment are already being substantially reduced in certain consumer goods industries, and even our basic industries are showing signs of a decline.

Unemployment is now almost 50% greater than a year ago. Consumer income dropped by almost $3 billion in the first quarter of 1949. Purchasing power is on the wane.

Already real wages of workers in manufacturing fell 10% from 1945 to 1948 while the share of wages and salaries of the total national income was going down from 68% to 62% in the same period. At the same time personal savings in bonds and in banks, 60% of which were already owned by 10% of our families by 1945, became even more highly concentrated while the savings of millions of low and middle income families were dwindling away.



"If I could only join Dad's union, I'd get the strength of millions of men!"

There is a great need for more consumer income and purchasing power in the hands of the mass of American people if a serious depression is to be avoided. This requires redistribution of our present income. Too large a share is going to profits and a smaller, decreasing share is going to the wage and salary earners. By increasing the workers' share of an ever enlarging national income, corporations would still be able to make a fair and equitable profit. A lower unit profit on a larger volume output is a basic need of our economy today.

Employment and production cut-backs in certain consumer durable and non-durable industries may be prevented from becoming more serious by continued high levels of government expenditures.

If government expenditures were to be reduced, production and employment cut-backs would take place in almost every segment of our economy because of underlying maldistributions which can only be corrected by the long range objective of the trade union movement to improve living standards by the redistribution of our total income.

While this long range objective is being pursued, we are confronted by immediate unemployment problems in certain industries as well as the long range problem of developing a full employment and full production economy.

Mass. Official To House Unit:

Same Arguments Used Against State FEPC

By GLORIA CAPLAN

A MAN has a right to earn a living and support his family, the CIO said last week. And that right, it said, is so basic that it must be protected by law, the same as a man's property is protected by law.

Representing the CIO, Pres. Willard Townsend of the CIO Transport Service Employes, told a sub-committee of the House Labor committee why the CIO so vigorously supports a Fair Employment Practices bill.

"The statute books," Townsend said, "are replete with laws that protect the property rights of great corporations; we believe that the right to a job on the part of a worker, at his highest skill, is a most valuable property right and therefore should be protected by law."

What Townsend—and a steady parade of other witnesses for the past 10 days—urged was that a worker be protected in employment from discrimination because of his color, religion or nationality.

THE CIO for the past eight years has urged passage of a bill like the one Townsend favored. Every CIO convention since 1941 had passed a resolution urging it; the CIO fought for it in Cincinnati, Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Philadelphia and Cleveland—all of which now have FEPC ordinances. The CIO had been in the successful struggle for state FEPCs in New York, Massachusetts, New Jersey, Connecticut, Wisconsin, Washington, Oregon, New Mexico and Rhode Island and Indiana.

Furthermore, the CIO, said Townsend, had done much to remove and lessen discrimination wherever it had contracts, but a union's power is limited. Since it cannot control the hiring, the union's protection begins only after a worker has passed the hiring gate.

As proof of the workability of such legislation, commissioners of two state FEPC programs took the stand.

Two of the five commissioners of the New York State Committee Against Discrimination, along with their general counsel, appeared first. The New York law was the first passed and has since served as the model for nine other state laws, and for the federal bills now under Congressional scrutiny.

The commission's experience during its four years in operation, was therefore of top interest to the committee.

Commissioner E. W. Edwards told committee members that the commission has been able to settle every complaint filed with it—without the necessity of a public hearing or of resorting to the courts. In the department stores, the telephone company, in factories and in the white collar field, jobs have opened up for qualified minority group members where they were consistently barred before.

THE NEW YORK commissioners emphasized that their success—all of it without force—was largely due to the existence of enforcement provisions in the law. As Senator Paul Douglas (D. Ill.) had told the committee earlier: "The mere fact that there is a switch in the closet has helped accomplish the law's objectives."

Another state commissioner—Elwood McKenney, of the Massachusetts FEPC— had similar experiences to relate. He said the same arguments against the measure were used in Massachusetts before that bill's passage as are now being used against the national bill. He then enumerated and refuted the leading ones:

FEPC legislation would drive business out of the state.

McKenney: "The 1948 report of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, however, speaks for itself. Because this report said that, during the third year that the Fair Employment Practice Law had been in effect, 136 new business organizations had been established and further than that, 58 existing firms had begun new capital construction to cost $300 million."

McKenney: "It has never been thought in Massachusetts . . . that a fair employment practice act is aimed at anything but the unfair practices of employers in refusing employment or promotion . . . because of the race, religion or origin of individuals . . .

COMPELLING testimony was also offered by Clarence Mitchell, labor secretary of the Natl. Association for the Advancement of Colored People, who pointed out discriminatory hiring practices in such national concerns as the telephone company; Sears Roebuck; Schlitz, Blatz, Pabst and Miller Brewing companies; General Motors in Georgia and Dupont and Ford factories in Richmond, Va.

For a time the hearings became a forum for the accusations of a left-wing CIO union against a right-wing CIO union.

Into the midst of a heavy schedule of witnesses, sub-committee chairman Adam C. Powell (D. N. Y.) made room for the unannounced testimony of four Mine-Mill & Smelter Workers from Bessemer, Ala.

Mine-Mill Intl. Rep. Frank Allen charged that a "new union" was set up at the Tennessee Coal, Iron & Railroad Co. specifically for the purpose of furthering racial discrimination.

The "new union" as committee members and informed reporters in the room knew, was the CIO Steelworkers, to whom five former Mine-Mill locals at Bessemer, Ala., recently switched, with the approval of the CIO Executive Board.

(Earlier Mine-Mill Rank-and-filer Eugene Calhoun had testified that TCI discriminatory practices began 16 years ago with the emergence of the Mine-Mill union at the mines. This obviously was not the impression the union had intended to leave with the committee. Allen, a more adroit speaker, then seized the ball from him, and carried it the rest of the way himself.)

Whereas Calhoun, in both his written and oral statements had stated that TCI's discriminatory hiring policy was of many years' standing. Allen charged that discriminatory hiring began only a year before a recent representation election, which involved five CIO Local Industrial Unions and Mine-Mill.

After Allen made his charges, Committee Member Thomas Burke (D. O.) said: "If that kind of allegation is going to be made here, I think the other union should be given an opportunity to reply."

The following day Townsend appeared to present CIO's testimony on FEPC, and in passing briefly answered the charges made by the Mine-Mill representative.

Townsend had been sent to Alabama by Philip Murray to investigate the inter-union dispute. He said the CIO executive Board had already dismissed as unfounded the charges made against the Steelworkers by Mine-Mill, and read into the record the resolution of censure against Mine-Mill adopted by the Board the day before.

But Rep. Powell refused to let the issue lie with Townsend's refutation of the charges. Mine-Mill Intl. Vice Pres. Reid Robinson repeated the charges against Murray's union, termed CIO Assistant Counsel Tom Harris "a liar," and charged that there was "if not outright collusion—very close cooperation" between the company and the Steelworkers.

Over Harris's objections, Powell ruled that the two unions might use the entire afternoon session of the hearing on May 25 to air the feud further.

Said Harris: "I don't think this is an appropriate forum. The CIO Board spent all of one day discussing the issue, and determined by a vote of 37 to 11 that the story Robinson is telling you is untrue."

FOR FEPC: In four years of operation, the anti-discrimination law of New York State has worked, a House sub-committee on FEPC was told. (Above) Relating their experiences in administering the N. Y. laws, General Counsel Henry Spitz and Commissioners E. W. Edwards and Nicholas H. Pinto of the N. Y. State Committee Against Discrimination say a federal law is needed. AMA Tries 'Art' For Propaganda

IF YOU should happen to see hanging on the wall of your physician's office next time you visit him, a picture of a doctor sitting beside a sick child, take a good look at it.

It's a large color reproduction of a well-known painting by Fildes called "The Doctor" and if it has printed under it the words, "Keep Politics Out of This Picture!" you are looking at an example of one of the American Medical Association's latest propaganda stunts to fight national health insurance.

The AMA has levied an assessment of $25 each on all its members to build a $3½ million fund to oppose the comprehensive system of health legislation now before Congress.

Reproductions of this painting "soon will go up in doctors' offices all over America as one of the first steps in dramatizing our case to the American people," according to the AMA's plan, and will "make doctors campaigners in their own behalf."

The procedure of the drive was presented by Clem Whitaker and Leone Baxter, directors of the AMA's campaign, at a recent national conference of State Medical Societies held in Chicago, and was reprinted by the Dallas (Tex.) Medical Journal under the title "What Will We Do With the Doctor's $25?"

(It's doubtful that the AMA intended its medical societies publicize the procedure in quite this way, for it completely spills the beans.)

AS THE PLAN of procedure revealed at the Chicago conference shows, much more subtle methods of putting across anti-national health insurance propaganda were contemplated.

"It is vital," states this plan, "that much of this flow of words should reach the people through normal newspaper and magazine channels, rather than through direct publicity releases.

"We intend to work with the great newspapers and the national magazines to get them to do special jobs, with real reader interest, and that work already is well started . . .

Another phase of the AMA drive to make physicians take an active part in the fight against national health insurance shows what AMA really means by "Keep Politics out of this picture."

"We need to locate the personal physician of every Congressman and every U. S. Senator (the County Society secretary probably should take on that job) and have him send a personal letter to his patient, the Congressman, telling him of the danger of socialized medicine and asking for his help in defeating any compulsory health insurance program which may be submitted.

"We will provide form letters, but the Society secretary should help the doctor, if necessary, in re-writing and personalizing the letter in each instance."

"We are confident that working together," declares the AMA plan in conclusion, that "the fight against government - controlled medicine can be won—and that when it is over, medicine will have pointed the way for the whole nation, at a time when the nation might easily travel either road—toward a controlled economy or toward a free economy."

Syndicates' Copy May Be Labelled 'Hot'

CIO NEWSPAPER Guild pickets in New York City have been walking for a week now in front of the New York Times Building, where Bell Syndicate and its affiliates have their offices, in the first syndicate strike in Guild history.

The strike has broad implications, for the Guild is finding effective means for making it tough for a syndicate that refuses to bargain. It has notified all columnists and cartoonists, feature writers and puzzle makers that their copy will be considered "hot" if they continue to file with the struck syndicates.

The Guild is offering, further, to handle the syndication of any copy where the columnists or cartoonists have individual contracts with publishers. The men who handled the syndication are out on the streets, have all the information and know-how needed and Guild headquarters has the facilities for duplicating and mailing.

This formula follows the pattern of a striking newspaper staff getting out their own publication to compete with a scab-operated, struck newspaper.

Several of the syndicated writers and cartoonists have indicated that they will take advantage of the Guild's offer, and one columnist is establishing his own duplicating and mailing department so his copy need not be handled by Bell strikebreakers

IN ADDITION to Bell, its affiliates, North American Newspaper Alliance, Consolidated Features and Associated Newspapers, are affected by the strike.

The syndicates have a combined staff of 51 eligible for Guild membership, and the 49 Guildsmen are out to a man. Main issues are union security, job security (including reinstatement of Unit Chairman Eddie Mahar who was fired for "incompetence" on the day he received a merit increase), job classifications, wages and severance pay.

Among the columnists and features handled by Bell and its affiliates are Drew Pearson, Billy Rose, Emily Post, Robert S. Allen, Thornton W. Burgess (Peter Rabbit), Henry Evans, Jeff Hayes and Doris Fleeson.

THE WORLD'S largest news gathering organization — the Associated Press—may soon be under a nationwide contract with the CIO Newspaper Guild—if the Guild achieves its number 1 goal for 1949.

The Guild has filed a petition for a nationwide NLRB election among the 1,450 eligible AP employes.

When the Guild's organizing drive began, it was bargaining agent at 35 AP bureaus. Since then it has secured majorities in 20 additional bureaus, and about 12 others are reported near a majority.

The election will be the largest ever participated in by the Guild.

In Bakersfield, Calif., at the same time, 25 editorial employes of the Press went on strike for a wage increase. The walkout began shortly after the Guild won recognition at the Press.

Wood Union Gets 2 Key Pacts

CIO Woodworkers in the northwest lumber territory have halted the possibility of a wage-cutting move by employers with the conclusion of a new agreement with two key lumber operators' associations.

Negotiations with seven associations in Oregon, Washington and California began last February. The three-month deadlock was broken last week when the Lumbermen's Industrial Relations Committee at Portland and the Pine Industrial Relations Committee at Klamath Falls, Oregon, granted a number of contract improvements, including an increase in the night shift differential.

The agreement still has to receive the approval of the membership, which is expected to abide by the recommendation of the negotiating committee. Its acceptance is expected to set the pattern for settlement with the remaining five associations in the northwest pine and fir industry. Some 40,000 workers would be affected by the agreements.

UNDER THE proposed settlement, overtime pay for work performed on holidays is extended to all employes—watchmen, firemen—who work on those days. Maintenance workers and watchmen who formerly were also excluded from receiving night differential pay will now receive the premium pay, which was boosted from 3c to 4c.

Announcing the settlement, union committee members pointed out that the lumber operators had practically priced themselves out of the market "in a greedy race for profits," and that with the leveling off of prices, "it is not beyond the realm of possibility that the operators will attempt to actually provoke strike action in the industry for the express purpose of curtailing production sufficiently to bolster prices."

The negotiators, who were confronted during wage talks with layoffs in the industry and employers' arguments that demand had fallen off, said the industry had once before forced a strike situation in order to curtail production and keep prices up—"and we must guard against its happening again," they said.

Contracts with the 800 operators, expected to be affected ultimately by the agreement, expired April 1. The union's original demands were for a wage increase, health and welfare plan, a six-hour day, holidays with pay and increased night shift differentials.

IWA Pres. J. E. Fadling said: "We have succeeded in convincing the employers that all night shift workers should be paid the extra compensation, regardless of whether or not they are actually what the employer chooses to call 'production' workers.

"The same thing applies to the holiday pay provisions. Thousands of our members have been discriminated against because Christmas, Labor Day, the Fourth of July or some other named holidays happen to fall upon a regularly scheduled work-day."

"I wondered what that anti-labor bird was cackling about!"

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

This is a story about a bell. And it's a story about the desire for workers to see the sunlight.

The sun-up to sun-down work-day was once the common thing. The fight in those times was for the 10-hour day. And in May, 1831, 117 years ago this week, labor for the first time in history won the shorter work-day for a large group of workers.

Eighteen hundred members of the Shipwrights and Caulkers Union, employed by five shipyards located side by side along the East River, New York City, caused a large bell to be erected at a city market near the yards. All ship workers took the union oath to start and work only as directed by the "union" bell.

Then, on the day selected, the bosses in the five shipyards became more and more worried as the sun climbed higher and higher in the sky and no workers appeared. Was this another strike to be broken as they had smashed an earlier strike for the 10-hour day just a few years before?

At 6 a. m. their question was answered. The "union" bell, under the hand of Mate McCoy, elected as bell ringer because he could tell time and owned a chronometer, loudly rang out. Workmen poured into the shipyards. At 8 a. m. the bell rang them off for breakfast, and rang them back at 9. At 1 and 2 p. m. the bell rang the dinner hour. At 6 p. m. the bell rang again and the excited workers ended their day, the first time they had ever finished work in broad daylight.

The employers met many times during the next few weeks and debated a lockout. But orders were heavy and customers demanded that delivery dates be kept. No action was taken.

What of the workers? Exactly one year later, in April 1832, they erected a newer, bigger "union" bell and the remaining 13 shipyards in New York Harbor were given the same shock by the workers. This time the owners struck back, but, after a three-day lockout, agreed with the workers to abide by the work hours signaled by the "union" bell.

That victory was the first in the long and bitter battle for the 10-hour day.

Regional Director Delmond Garst, St. Louis, reports that the United State Workers, CIO, won an election at the Charleston, Ill., plant of the Brown Shoe Company. The workers voted 400 to 59 for the CIO. USWA Regional Director credits Don Easton, Shoeworkers Union organizer, with this victory.

SHOE WINS IN ILLINOIS

Regional Director Loren Houser, Indianapolis, reports that the American Newspaper Guild, CIO, has won an election at the Indianapolis Star by a vote of 118 to 41. Opposing the CIO was a company union. This paper was organized by William Farson of the ANG.

Ed Walsh, Organization Director of the CIO United Transport Service Employes, reports that the employes of Jacksonville Box Company, Jacksonville, Fla., have voted in an NLRB election to be represented by that union.

Thomas J. Gallagher, director of organization for the Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers, reports an election victory at the American Electro Metal Company, Yonkers, N. Y.

The march forward in telephone continues. By an overwhelming vote of 1,032 to 592, the Maryland Federation of Telephone Workers (Plant) has voted to affiliate with the national union for telephone workers within CIO to be formed at the amalgamation conventions of TWOC and CWA next month in Chicago. This is the first of the remaining unaffiliated unions to take a position since the completion of the CWA referendum. Others will follow. Organizing campaigns in other important areas will be mapped out by the telephone workers, supported by CIO, and carried on to the advantage and growth of the new union.

BRAZEN ACT BY A. T. & T.

True to form, and was to be expected, AT&T, the world's greatest corporation, has announced cancellation of most of its contracts with the CWA—a brazen denial of the rights of those workers to maintain collective bargaining relations with their employer. This is the reaction of a self-styled public servant to a democratic expression of the will of its employes.

CIO is determined to see this thing through and will support these telephone workers in all their efforts to win fair treatment from this ruthless protected monopoly. The CIO Executive Board has taken action to support the workers' inalienable rights for self-determination.

Though these telephone employes have chosen to affiliate with CIO, they are still the same people and desire to honor their contracts. Contracts to the company are apparently just scraps of paper when they concern the workers who serve the public but not when it comes to demanding payment of bills presented to the public and to demanding rate raises from the public.

Pa. CIO Urged To Continue Fighting Spirit

SOME 1200 delegates to the 12th Annual Convention of the Pennsylvania CIO Council spent three intensive days blueprinting an accelerated political action and legislative drive for 1949-50.

There was to be no election of officers,—officers are named biennially—there was virtual unanimity on all resolutions, a handful of left-wingers registering opposition at times.

Among the guest speakers were John A. Phillips, the Council's former president, and Democratic State Sen. Samuel Neff.

Phillips urged the affiliated locals to continue their progress along organizational, political and legislative lines. Neff lashed out at the Republican-controlled Pennsylvania legislature, which he charged with ignoring the working man and devoting its attention solely to the "special interests." He said the state's Republicans had failed to deliver on their campaign pledges.

Most heated discussion of the three days centered around the Atlantic Pact, which several said was "not for defense, but for war." However, when Council Pres. Harry Boyer asked for a rising vote, only a scattered few remained seated in opposition to the Pact.

Other resolutions passed by the delegates:

Urged CIO's disaffiliation from the World Federation of Trade Unions; approved an intensified political action campaign; urged passage of state and federal FEPC laws; condemned attempts to "throttle housing" and called for a public housing program; condemned Pennsylvania's "Tax-anything" law; endorsed 30-hour week without reduction in pay, and sought improved workmen's compensation and unemployment compensation laws.

Nassau-Suffolk Council Changed

The Nassau-Suffolk County (N. Y.) CIO Council has been reorganized.

The council adopted a new constitution and elected officers, all of whom have long been identified as strong supporters of CIO policy.

The meeting of all CIO unions in the two Counties was convened in the CIO offices, Jamaica, N. Y., by Irving Abramson, Natl. CIO Representative for the Eastern Area. Abramson said that the old council "did not effectively prosecute CIO policy."

New officers are: Pres., Charles Kerrigan, Auto Workers; Vice-Pres., Joseph Fitzgerald, United Electrical Workers; Secy., Jack Maltz, Retail, Wholesale and Department Stores Union; Treas., Alexander Coleman, Transport Workers. Abramson immediately installed the officers.

This is the third CIO Council reorganized by Abramson in six months because they have not effectively carried out CIO policy. The other two were the Hudson County (N. J.) Council and the Newark (N. J.) Council.

CIO Holds Fast on T-H Repeal

THE CIO Executive Board last week renewed its demand for passage of the Thomas-Lesinski bill to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act.

"It is unthinkable that this Congress will adjourn or recess without repealing this repudiated law," the Board resolution declared.

In a resolution that closely paralleled the letter sent last week by General Counsel Arthur Goldberg to leaders of the Senate and House Labor Committees, the CIO reaffirmed its opposition to compromise of any fundamental issues involved in Taft-Hartley repeal.

It sharply criticized the Taft amendments as a cover-up which would leave essential features of the Taft-Hartley Act on the book, while removing Taft's name from an unpopular law during an election year.

The resolution "definitely and unequivocally" labelled as "completely unacceptable" any amendment to the Thomas-Lesinski bill providing for injunctions in national emergency or other labor disputes.

It hailed defeat of the Wood Bill, noted the big increase in votes cast against the Taft-Hartley Act—a rise from 83 votes in 1947 to 212 in 1949.

"It is obvious that constructive labor-management relations cannot long be continued in the highly uncertain and demonstrably unsatisfactory status imposed by the Taft-Hartley Act," the Board said.

"The CIO believes that the Senate and House, in the national interest, must afford legislative relief from the present intolerable situation. Repeal is needed now."

MORE PAY SOUGHT: Harry Leet, legislative chairman of the Government Workers Union, affiliate of the CIO Marine and Shipbuilding Union, testified in behalf of S. 1518, a measure to raise the pay of Federal workers. He appeared before a subcommittee of the Senate Civil Service Committee. Seated behind Leet are, l. to r.: Morton Liftin, national co-chairman of the union, Exec. Secy., Mary Pinkard and Felice Darkow of Local 1013, a Washington, D. C., local of the union. Seated at the extreme right is William Mirengoff, GWU co-chairman.

No Mincing Words

TEXT OF the conclusion of the Executive Board's resolution on T-H repeal follows:

We hereby resolve:

(1) We reiterate our firm support for the Thomas-Lesinski Bill.

(2) We believe that this bill can and should be passed without crippling amendments. We believe that the use of injunctions is neither effective as a means of bringing about labor-management peace nor sound as an instrument of public policy in a democratic society. In stating our position on the Thomas-Lesinski Bill, which we continue to support, the CIO is not maintaining an unrealistic attitude of utopian perfectionism. We are mindful that in the legislative process there is room for alteration in any bill—particularly one dealing with so complex a problem as labor relations. But we stand solidly against any changes which would impose the use of injunction—to break strikes—against which there can be no disagreement among men and women who seek to develop stability and accord in labor-management relations or which would impinge on other basic principles.

(3) We demand that the Congress of the United States move ahead, in line with the clear desires of the people, to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act. We look forward to final votes on this issue in the Senate and in the House. We call upon Congress to enact the Thomas-Lesinski Bill.

(4) Ample time remains at this session of Congress for decisive action to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act. When the people of this country voted against the record of the 80th Congress, they called for action in 1949.

It is unthinkable that this Congress will adjourn or recess without repealing this repudiated law.

Atlanta, Klan's Home, Bars Mask Wearing

Wearing of masks has been banned by the Atlanta, Ga., city council home of the Ku Klux Klan, by a vote of 17-0. A person wearing a mask in public, except on festive occasions such as Halloween, may be fined $200 and sentenced to 30 days in jail.

Councilman Archie Lindsey said that prior to the meeting, a piece of plywood shaped like a Klan hood bearing the initials K.K.K. and a cross had been placed on his doorstep. He also said that he had received an anonymous telephone warning, "for your sake and safety, the Klan must not be unmasked."

Guild Leader, Dies

Pres. Ed McQuade of the San Francisco-Oakland Newspaper Guild, CIO, died April 24, ten days after surgery revealed that he had brain cancer.

McQuade, who a veteran newspaperman employed on the San Francisco Chronicle, first served as SFONG president in 1941.

Mundt Bill Could Hit Unions

CIO LAST WEEK told Congress it would be a dangerous mistake to pass the Mundt or Ferguson bills, claimed by their sponsors as a method of halting the growth of communism in the United States.

The bills (S. 1194 and S. 1196) are 1949 versions of last year's Mundt-Nixon bill, which was passed by the House but stalled in the Senate after the Attorney-General and numerous constitutional lawyers criticized it severely.

Appearing at hearings before the Senate Judiciary sub-committee, Thomas Harris, assistant CIO counsel, charged that the bills "would substantially curtail civil rights guaranteed to every American."

"Liberty is indivisible and repression contagious," Harris told the Senators. "Unless the civil rights of Communists are protected, those of others will not be."

"Indeed, the language of these very bills is so broad that they could be used to imperil the existence of all labor unions."

HARRIS TOLD the Senators that existing laws are adequate to meet any threat to national security, and he voiced confidence that the Communists will never be a real threat to America so long as the country "cherishes its democratic tradition and provides its people with the opportunity to make a decent livelihood."

In providing for registration of membership or other penalties for "communist political organizations" or "communist front organizations," Harris said the Congress is unconstitutionally seeking to regulate thoughts and opinion, rather than actions or conduct.

The language of the bills, he said, "is vague, oppressive and unconstitutional" and would do harm to all sorts of liberal organizations and trade unions. To illustrate the "broad sweep" of the bill, Harris predicted that the directors of the United States Steel Corp. could be indicted and sent to jail under provisions of the Mundt-Ferguson proposals.

If the company, Harris said, were to turn down a reasonable wage demand from the CIO steel union—a wage demand based on the workers' need to maintain decent living standards, the law might come into play.

"CERTAINLY IT could be said that the rejection of such a request would 'substantially facilitate' the establishment of a Communist regime in this country by depriving the workers of a decent standard of living, and creating hostility between labor and capital.

"The directors of the U. S. Steel Corp. could thus be indicted and sent to jail under this provision for rejecting the union's demand.

"Perhaps it will be thought that the union should welcome this sort of aid from the federal government, but I can assure you that it does not.

"For, you see, the union could just as well be convicted under the bill for putting forward any demand which might tend to create industrial strife and thus aid the Communist party."

Gunman Maims Victor Reuther

REUTHER ATTACKED: Policemen and hospital attendants remove Victor Reuther from Receiving Hospital, where he was taken after he had been badly wounded in his home when a would-be shot-gun assassin fired through his window. Last year, his brother, Walter Reuther, president of the CIO Auto Workers, was shot in the arm in a similar attack. Victor Reuther was taken to Henry Ford Hospital, where his right eye was removed. He also has serious injuries of the face, neck and collar bone. Doctors say his condition is satisfactory and that he will have full vision in the other eye. More details on Page 3.

Big Steel Hints It Will Resist Union Demands

WITH "BIG Steel" profits running at the highest rate in history, the giant U. S. Steel Corp. and the CIO Steelworkers will begin negotiations on the union's contract demands on June 15.

That the mammoth corporation will resist any wage rise, and pension and insurance plans was indicated in a letter received by Steelworkers Pres. Philip Murray from C. R. Cox, president of Carnegie-Illinois Steep Corp., a U. S. Steel subsidiary.

The corporation president said he regretted "that the union has exercised its right to open the agreements on these subjects in light of the downward trend in cost-of-living and present uncertainties in the general business situation." The U. S. Bureau of Labor, however, reports the cost-of-living in April was .2% above the level a year ago.

The union's contract with the basic steel producers expires in 1950, but is subject to a reopening on wages and insurance before July 16. If no agreement is reached by that date, the contract permits the union to strike.

Cox's Reply

In reply to Murray's letter requesting discussion of pensions, which the U. S. Supreme Court ruled a mandatory subject for bargaining, Cox said, "Without commenting upon the construction which you place on the U. S. Supreme Court decision in the case cited by you, we consider that your letter on pensions has no present relevance to our negotiations."

He left the way open for such discussion, however, by adding that "We are, of course, willing to discuss our position with you when we meet."

The history of the union's current demands for an insurance program—providing life, accident, health, medical and hospital benefits—dates back to 1947, when a joint union-company committee was established to study such plans. When, during the 1948 negotiations, the union proposed a program, which would have cost the company an estimated 8.6c an hour per worker, management offered instead a program which would have cost it one-fourth as much and would have been equally financed by the worker.

This proposal was rejected by the union. The agreement to extend the contract to 1950, accordingly, permitted a reopening on insurance as well as wages.

Big Steel Pattern

When Murray sits down with the Big Steel representatives, negotiations on 835 steel contracts in both basic and fabricating steel plants will be more or less waiting in abeyance. As a rule, U. S. Steel sets the pattern, which is then adopted in the main by the rest of the industry. In those instances—mostly fabricating plants—where the contract expires in July, the union will seek a union shop and other contract changes.

Meanwhile, the two other members of the CIO's "Big Three" were tooling up for their annual wage talks with management.

AUTO: With the Ford empire closed down by a strike of 65,000 CIO Auto Workers protesting a speedup, the date for wage reopening talks still remained unsettled.

Negotiations could have begun as early as May 15, but Ford has so far refused to talk wages until the strike is settled.

The two parties appeared to be somewhat closer at week's end toward ultimate settlement of the speedup issue. The UAW agreed to the company's offer to arbitrate the question, but just what should be arbitrated was another problem.

The union suggested the question to be submitted to the arbiter read: "Does the company under the contract have the right to require an employe to work at a rate of speed in excess of 100% of established standards of production and to require a worker to make up production losses resulting from factors over which the worker has no control?"

ELECTRICAL: General Electric and Westinghouse have both been notified by the CIO Electrical Workers of the union's desire to begin discussions of wages, pensions, insurance programs and a cut in the work week.

Both corporations, the union noted, reaped their highest net profits last year. General Electric's profit rate so far this year is even higher, the union said.

When negotiations begin, UE will seek a $500 annual wage increase, pension improvements, health programs and a shortened work week without a cut in pay. This last demand is prompted by the widespread layoffs in the electrical industry. A reduction in hours would permit the work to be spread among more employes.

GLASS: Agreements covering some 18,000 CIO Glass Workers were signed with the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. and the Libbey-Owens-Ford Co.

The wage issue was left to a reopening on Aug. 1. If no wage agreement is reached, the issue will be settled by arbitration. The union is also seeking a pension plan.

TEXTILE: Faced with widespread layoffs and production curtailment, the CIO Textile Workers' woolen and worsted policy committee has advised its locals not to seek wage increases on the Aug. 1 contract reopening date.

John Chupka, committee director, said the recommendation is advisory, not binding on the locals.

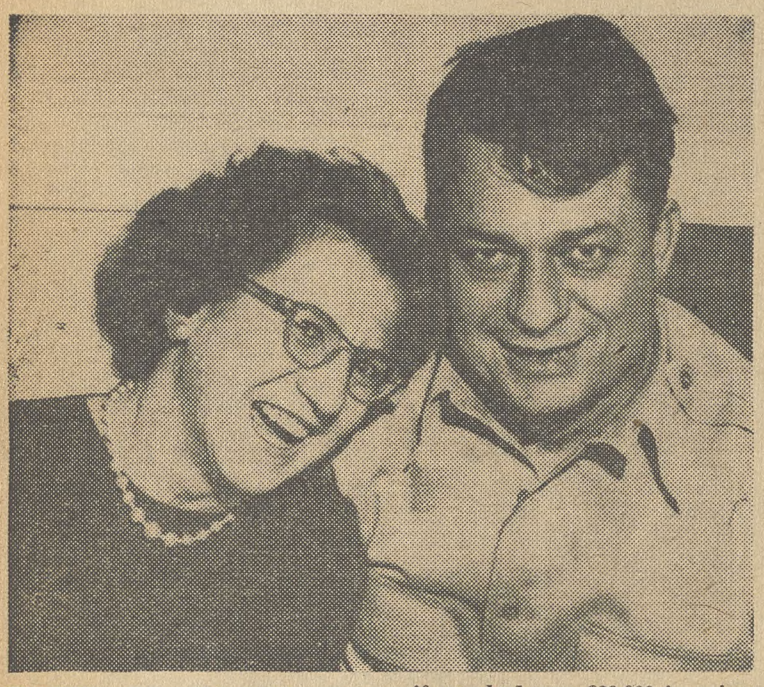
Earlier this year an arbitrator set the "no increase" pattern in the industry by refusing the union's demand for a raise for 23,000 employes of the American Woolen Co.

MARITIME: Atlantic & Gulf Coast ship employers presented CIO Maritime Union Pres. Joseph Curran with a long list of counter-proposals in negotiations which began last week.

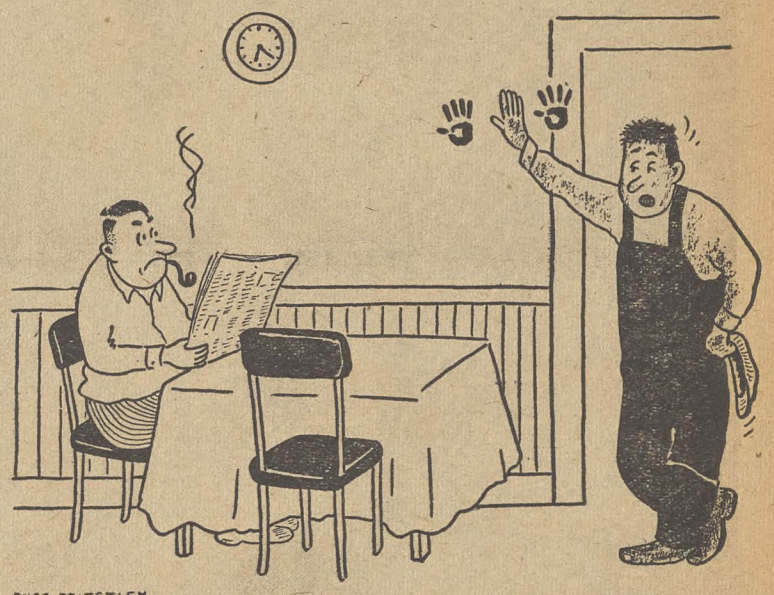
The union is asking a 15% rise in base pay and overtime rates, a 44-hour week, a permanent impartial chairman to arbitrate grievances, and elimination of certain inequities. Curran said the union was making every effort to complete talks before the contract expires June 15.

CIO Conclave City To Be Cleveland

The eleventh constitutional convention of the CIO will be held at Cleveland, Ohio, beginning Oct. 31, it was announced by CIO Pres. Philip Murray during the recent meeting of the Executive Board.



YOU'D BE HAPPY, TOO if you had won $29,000 in prizes in a radio quiz show as did Julius Zurwell, Methuen, Mass, shown above with his wife, Bertha. Both are members of Local 227, CIO Textile Workers Union. Zurwell, who has been working only part time, won the prizes by correctly identifying the mystery voice on the CBS program "Sing It Again" as that of World War I hero, Sgt. Alvin C. York.



RUSS PRIESTLEY

"No, thanks Mike, if I sit down I'll only dirty up your place."

Federal Jury Indicts Harry Bridges on Perjury Charge

PRES. HARRY BRIDGES of the CIO longshoremen's union was indicted last week by a federal grand jury on charges of conspiracy and perjury in connection with his years-long effort to avoid deportation and get American citizenship.

Indicted at the same time were Vice-Pres. J. R. Robertson of the union and Henry Schmidt, a union official now in Hawaii directing a strike on the islands.

The indictments charge that Bridges, Robertson and Schmidt, during a period from June 23 to Oct. 1, 1945, "engaged in a conspiracy to defraud the United States by impairing, obstructing and defeating the proper administration of the naturalization laws."

The indictment also charged that Bridges and the two union officials testified "fraudulently" at federal hearings when they denied that Bridges had ever been a member of the Communist party. All three "well knew," the indictment said, that he was a member of the Communist party from 1933 to Sept. 17, 1945, the day he gained American citizenship.

The perjury charge was based on Bridges' reply of "No" when asked by Judge Thomas Foley at the citizenship hearing whether he was or had ever belonged to the Communist party.

Conviction of Bridges on the criminal charges of perjury and conspiracy could lead to maximum penalties of seven years in jail and fines of $15,000. The government has also filed a suit in equity court to deprive Bridges of the American citizenship he gained in 1945 after years of legal battles. Presumably, outcome of this suit would depend on the verdict in the criminal prosecution.

THE INTL. Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union charged that the case was "designed to put us out of business" and accused the government of placing Bridges in "triple jeopardy" after he had been cleared in two previous cases.

Bridges was in New York, where he had gone after the CIO Executive Board meeting, when the indictment was handed down by the San Francisco grand jury.

ILWU officials called the indictment "a monumental case of political spite . . . a political frame-up."

"It is no accident that two years ago, when our union began to become sharply critical of the Truman Administration, the gumshoes of the Immigration Service began looking for something to hang on for a new case," they said.

"As a union, we recognize that this new case, as were the previous cases, is designed as an attempt to put us out of business and to prevent our members from receiving decent wages, working conditions and security."

BRIDGES, 49 years old, came to the U. S. from his native Australia in 1920. He worked for a number of years as a seaman and longshoreman, and in 1934 and 1935 rose to leadership of rank-and-file longshoremen fighting the dictatorial practices of the AFL longshore union on the west coast.

That movement, after winning several victories, left the AFL and formed the Intl. Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union, which affiliated with the CIO in 1937.

DEPORTATION proceedings were instituted against Bridges by the Immigration Bureau—at that time a section of the Labor Dept.—in 1938. It was charged that he was either a member of, or affiliated with, an organization advocating violent overthrow of the government.

After 10 weeks of hearings, Dean James Landis of Harvard Law School—named as a special hearing officer—cleared Bridges of such membership or affiliation, and the finding was sustained by Sec. of Labor Frances Perkins.

In 1941, with the Immigration Bureau switched to the Justice Dept., Atty. Gen. Robert Jackson—now a Supreme Court Justice—ordered new hearings. Charles Sears, a retired New York State judge, presided at the 2½-month hearing, and ordered Bridges deported on grounds of affiliation with the Communist party.

An Immigrations Appeals Board reversed the Sears findings, but the Board's decision was in turn rejected by Atty.-Gen. Francis Biddle. The case then went into the courts, and on June 18, 1945, the U. S. Supreme Court ruled there had been no evidence to prove Bridges' membership or affiliation with the Communist party.

The new indictments charge in effect that Bridges was a Communist at the time he sought and obtained his citizenship, and that he is still a member of the Communist party.

In the post-war period, Bridges and other leaders of the longshore union have been increasingly in disagreement with national CIO policies, and in recent months have voiced some sharp criticism of CIO leaders.

The longshore leader and the union's recent convention criticized the European Recovery Program and the North Atlantic Pact, voiced distaste for CIO's handling of Taft-Hartley repeal legislative problems. The union and Bridges also differed with CIO during last year's election campaign, in which they supported the campaign of Henry Wallace.

FBI Probe Of Reuther Shooting Ordered

FOLLOWING an appeal by CIO, the U. S. Senate, acting on a motion by Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D., Minn.), has voted unanimously to direct the Federal Bureau of Investigation to probe the shooting of Victor Reuther, educational director of the CIO Auto Workers.

Victor Reuther

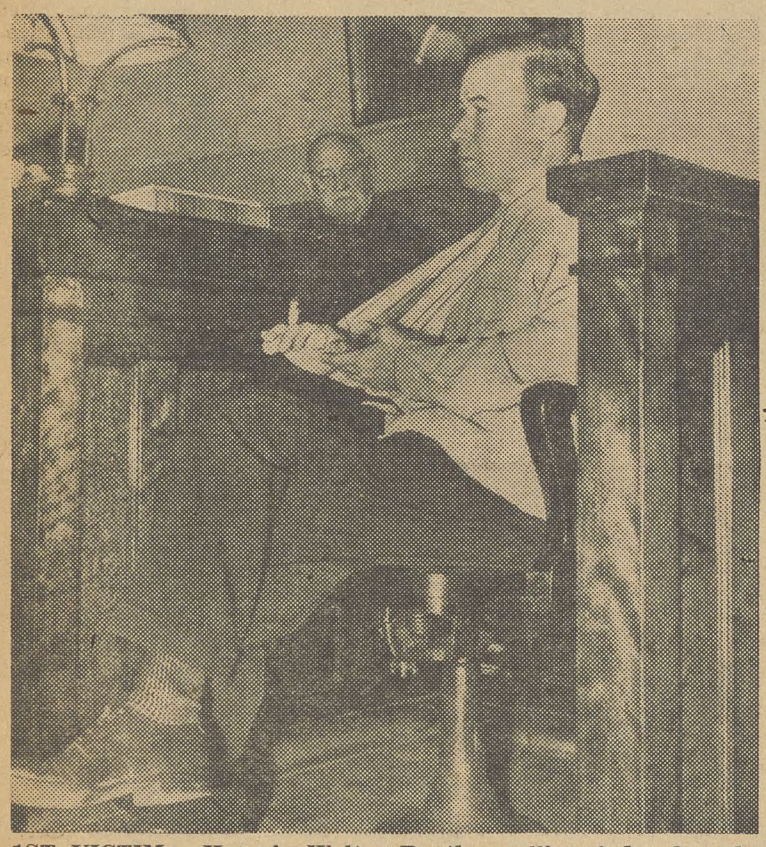
Victor Reuther, brother of Walter Reuther, president of the union, was seriously injured when a would-be assassin fired a double-barrel shot gun through the window of his Detroit home and struck the victim in the eye, face, neck and shoulder. Mrs. Sophie Reuther, who was sitting chatting with her husband, was uninjured. Their three children were asleep upstairs.

Walter Reuther was victim of a similar attack more than a year ago and is still carrying his right arm in a sling. He is under doctor's orders to flex and unflex his hand constantly, using a rubber sponge.

Doctors have already removed Victor Reuther's eye. They believe his face will be scarred somewhat. There are also pieces of shot in his neck and his collar bone was shattered. One of his few lucky breaks was that no shot entered his lung.

WALTER REUTHER blamed the shooting, and his own, on these possibilities: Communists, Fascists, diehard elements in management or crackpots.

Roy Reuther, third of the Reuther brothers active in UAW, has been placed under heavy guard by Michigan authorities. A fourth brother, Ted, is in another industry.



1ST VICTIM: Here is Walter Reuther telling judge how he was shot last year. Note the sling. Walter Reuther now has a brace on his arm and must constantly flex and unflex his fingers over a rubber sponge.

Detroit police have failed to solve the mystery of the Walter Reuther shooting, though one suspect is being held. A suspect was held in the Victor Reuther case because he had been heard several hours before the attack mumbling in a bar something about "Reuther shooting." He denied guilt.

The Communist Party of Michigan denied it had anything to do with either shooting and blamed them on enemies of labor. The Reuthers are active anti-Communists.

Police—and now the FBI—have two main clues on which to work. They found a shotgun outside the house—on which there were no fingerprints—and discovered an abandoned jalopy near the house.

CIO PRES. Philip Murray, shocked by the second attack on the Reuthers, sent the following message to Victor Reuther:

"Please accept my own personal best wishes, and those of all CIO members, for a speedy and successful recovery from the dastardly attempt on your life.

"I pledge you the full support of the CIO in seeking to apprehend and convict the cowardly perpetrators of this vicious criminal action. I am today calling upon Attorney General Tom Clark to order the FBI to investigate both the attack upon you and upon Walter more than a year ago.

"The circumstances of this and the previous attack convince me that the resources of the federal agency should be utilized to track down this hideous wave of premeditated violence against officials of the United Automobile Workers.

"You may feel sure that our organization and I personally will lend all possible assistance."

The wire to Clark:

"For the second time in little more than a year, officials of the CIO Auto Workers have been shot in their homes by persons unknown.

"The circumstances in both cases convince me that the full resources of the Dept. of Justice and the FBI should be utilized to apprehend the criminals and bring them to justice."

Humphrey, a personal friend of the Reuthers, introduced the Senate motion and received the active support of both Michigan Senators, Arthur H. Vandenberg and Homer Ferguson (both R.).

Thomas-Lesinski Action Soon?

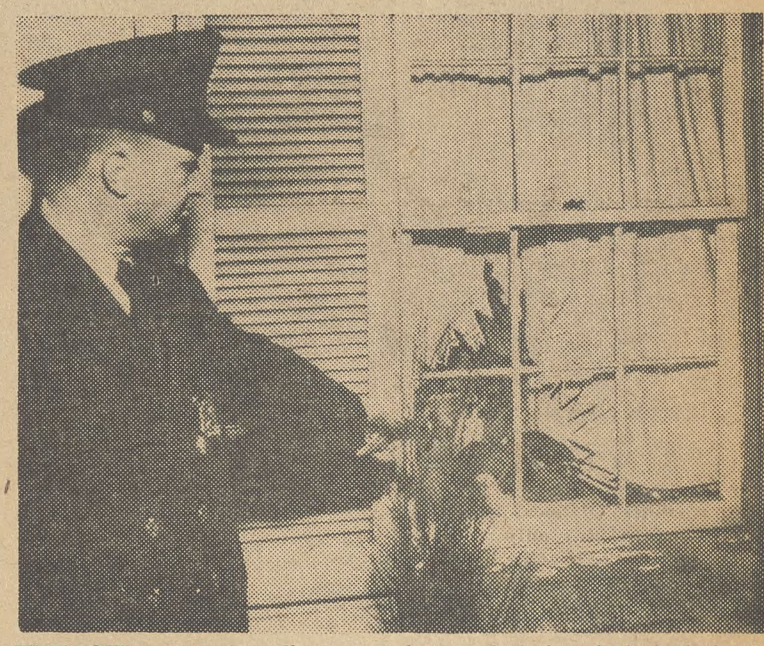
Senate Democratic Leader Scott Lucas (Ill.) last week said the timetable of the Senate may be rearranged so that the Thomas-Lesinski Bill may go to the floor within a couple weeks.

The reason: The illness of Sen. Walter George (D., Ga.) may cause postponement of reciprocal trade legislation.

No Segregation

Rep. Adam Clayton Powell, (D., N. Y.), has announced that his wife, concert pianist Hazel Scott, was the first Negro in the history of Maryland to play the Maryland Theatre in Baltimore and the audience was entirely unsegregated.

The concert took place last Wednesday evening. Powell said: "The City of Baltimore and the management of the Maryland Theatre are to be complimented on this great forward step, not because it is my wife but because it is just downright good Americanism."



WINDOW: Detroit policeman points at hole in window through which Victor Reuther was shot.

Buckmaster Ousted by Rubber Workers' Board

THE GENERAL executive board of the CIO Rubber Workers has ousted L. S. Buckmaster as president of the union.

The board, on a 7 to 5 vote with two absentions, accused Buckmaster of "malfeasance in office." The accusations grew out of an incident at a meeting of Local 136, Pottstown, Pa., in which Buckmaster says he was roughed up.

Buckmaster

Buckmaster, president of the union since 1945, denied the charges, saying:

"If my removal from the president of our union was only an action against me as an individual, it would be of little consequence. Under that sort of condition, I would step aside gracefully. The welfare of the union is what matters.

"It is apparent already that the action of the power-hungry politicians who swung the ax on me are extending their purge to all others who stand with me for decent trade-union policies. Our people are not accustomed to such treatment and I know that they will deeply resent it.

"The mock trial which was given me means nothing for the reason that the decision of the bare majority of the Board not only totally disregarded the facts adduced through testimony but also disregarded or misconstrued several provisions of our International Constitution.

"At least three members of the Board who were directly involved in the case by the sworn and unrefuted testimony of witnesses were permitted to serve on the 'jury.' This is in direct conflict with one constitutional provision which states '... but no member of the general executive board who is involved in the case shall be eligible to serve on the trial board.'

"The hypocritical protestations of these usurpers that they want to be fair and considerate to everyone will fool neither our union members or the public as a whole."

H. R. Lloyd, vice president, automatically succeeded to the presidency under the union's constitution. The board chose one of its members, Southern Dir. F. M. Dickenson, Memphis, Tenn., as vice president to succeed Lloyd. The new president issued this statement (in part):

"I CANNOT express too deeply my regret that our board has been compelled to take the action of removing our former president.

"We shall vigorously fight for the program adopted by our union's policy committee, calling for 25c an hour wage increases, company-financed pensions and improved health and welfare services.

"Employers and Communists may attempt to take advantage of this situation. I warn both groups that we will not tolerate any interference by them in the affairs of our union."

Lloyd

He also wired CIO Pres. Philip Murray:

"Change of administration means no change in loyalty to national CIO under your great leadership. As you know, our union's board unanimously adopted the CIO Portland convention decisions as the policy of our union. The dispute in our union arose from purely internal issues. We guarantee former President Buckmaster complete protection in his constitutional rights under Rubber Workers' constitution."

BUCKMASTER, a vice president of CIO, was formerly president of Local 7, Firestone, Akron. He intends to appeal the ouster to the union convention at Toronto in September. The union's board held hearings on the Pottstown case for a month in Philadelphia.

Lloyd is a member of the CIO executive board. At the recent CIO board meeting both he and Buckmaster voted with Murray against a left wing bloc.

The board held Buckmaster guilty on these charges:

"That he 'conspired with' certain individuals to deprive local union officers of their 'rights';

"That he was responsible for a riot at a meeting of Local 336 in Pottstown last March;

"That his conduct 'was part of a general plan to deprive the local union of its rights and democratic privileges within the international union'; and

"That such conduct constituted 'malfeasance in office.'"

'UNIONIZED BUST'

We have a hunch you're going to hear a lot about "flexibility" and "rigidity" from business and industry.

The idea is that they must have lots of flexibility to cope with a depression and that unions cause rigidity.

The magazine Business Week puts it this way:

"Anything which impairs flexibility in a depression is dangerous. Rigidities—which in the economists' jargon means factors which stiffen the oil in the gears of business—are the big menace to recovery. And a union makes rigidities like a wind makes waves."

Flexibility? H-m-m-m-m. Now let's see. Flexibility to cut wages. Flexibility to ignore seniority. Flexibility to forget about other worker protections written into contracts.

Sure. That's what Business Week is talking about. It's an interesting theory, perhaps, but let's go back and see what happened the last time.

Labor wasn't strongly organized in the lush 1920's and was in no position to put a firm brake on some of the practices which sent the nation down the skids to depression.

Exercising great "flexibility," many industries and business houses began cutting wages at the first sign of hard times. Then they cut employment.

Consumer purchasing power really took a nosedive. One day the nation awoke and found it was not only flexible; it was economically limp!

And it wasn't the kind of flexibility to which Business Week referred that brought us out of the depression.

Why, then, assume that more of the same would be helpful next time—and why assume there must be a next time?

What we need is some prevention and not so much talk about cure.

IT WAS ONLY 12 YEARS AGO

This is the 12th anniversary of the Memorial Day Massacre at Chicago—the inexcusable, bloody affair in which 10 persons lost their lives because policemen substituted brutality for common sense.

The Massacre occurred during the Steelworkers' drive for recognition and it focused worldwide attention on the union-fighting tactics of Big Business.

Many persons have been brutally beaten and a number have been killed since Memorial Day of 1937 because of union activities. But, for the most part, emphasis has been shifting away from use of the gun and the club.

Union-fighting is now a complicated, legalistic art—thanks to Congress and a number of state legislatures.

The Taft-Hartley Act was designed to place stringent curbs on the legitimate activities of trade unions and to give employers an unfair advantage in management-labor relations. A number of state laws fall into the same category.

It is well to remember these things on Memorial Day of 1949—and to give full recognition to what has happened.

And it's a good day on which to make a contribution to PAC—the agency through which the CIO can fight effectively those who seek to harm labor through legislation.

Yes, The Chips Are Down Now!

CIO Right Wing Completely Fed Up With Commie Sniping And Meddling

By ALLAN L. SWIM

PHILIP MURRAY stepped up to a microphone at the CIO convention in Atlantic City in 1946 and read a Declaration of Policy which concluded with these words:

". . . we, the delegates to the eighth constitutional convention of the Congress of Industrial Organizations resent and reject efforts of the Communist party or other political parties and their adherents to interfere in the affairs of the CIO. This convention serves notice that it will not tolerate such interference."

Only two delegates voted in opposition to the Declaration—and these two later asked that their vote be changed so it would have unanimous indorsement.

And before the convention ended, some of the delegates were violating the statement of policy they had indorsed!

TWO WEEKS ago Philip Murray submitted to the CIO Executive Board a resolution which contained the following:

"This Executive Board reiterates its solemn obligation to enforce the constitution of the CIO and carry out the instructions of CIO conventions arrived at after democratic debate and full discussion.

"All members of the CIO Executive Board unwilling to enforce the CIO constitution and carry out the instructions of the CIO conventions, and, between conventions, the decisions of the CIO Executive Board, are called on to resign as members of this Executive Board."

Six Board members voted against the resolution, but none of them accepted the invitation to resign.

Murray told a press conference following the Board meeting that the 1949 CIO convention would be asked to act in the cases of Board members who flounted the constitution and convention instructions.

THE COMMUNIST Party itself and a small group of its followers in the CIO ridiculed the 1946 Declaration of Policy—and they're taking the same view toward the resolution adopted by the Executive Board two weeks ago.

And, furthermore, they're engaged in a concerted campaign of character assassination against right-wing CIO leaders and are conducting a drive to split the CIO wide open.

It's the old party line policy of rule or ruin. They've found they can't rule the CIO, so . . .

Watch for one of the dirtiest, nastiest, "down in the gutter" smear campaigns the Commies have ever conducted in this country.

Chief target, of course, will be Philip Murray, but plenty of dirt will be thrown into the face of the entire right wing.

WHAT'S GOING ON, anyway? Why all the fuss and furor? Why are the Commies after Murray? Why are certain union leaders in the CIO defying CIO policy?

The answers are not difficult to find.

Communists the world over are conducting a campaign designed to discredit the foreign policies of the U. S. and the democratic, right-wing union leaders who support them.

Murray is one of their chief targets because of his outspoken support of U. S. policies and because of his determination to free the CIO completely of the influence of men and women whose No. 1 allegiance is to a foreign power.

And they know that Murray means business—that he is prepared to take drastic measures if necessary.

MAKE NO MISTAKE about it; the chips are down and the entire CIO membership should know exactly what's happening.

The heads of a small group of CIO unions have been thumbing their noses at the CIO leadership and CIO policies. At Board meetings there are usually nine to 11 members (whose unions represent about 10% of the CIO membership) who vote as a party line bloc on matters dealing with foreign policy.

The "bloc boys" frequently denounce U. S. policy but never criticize the Soviet Union. They were all for "unity" when it served their purposes—but now they claim that "autonomy" gives them the right to ignore CIO decisions.

As Murray said recently, "a matter of Communism is involved."

All of which means that the Cleveland, O., convention of the CIO, which opens Oct. 31, will be historic, to say the least.

Britain Reported Solving Housing Shortage

How Great Britain is solving its housing shortage is told in excerpts from this article written by Allan Flanders for the British Information Service. Flanders recently returned to England from a six-month visit to the United States where he studied labor unions

ONE OF THE finest tributes which has been paid to the success of Britain's postwar housing program was made by the United States delegate to the Economic Commission for Europe, meeting at Geneva, Switzerland. He said:

"If everybody in Europe were building houses as fast and economically as the British we would not need a housing committee."

The measure of the achievement is recorded in the official figures. By the end of 1948 about 3,250,000 people had been found new homes. Apart from requisitioned houses, 425,720 permanent and 157,161 temporary (pre-fabricated) houses had been built. In addition, 775,000 war-damaged houses had been repaired.

Such figures, however, record the material rather than the social achievement. The most important feature of Britain's postwar housing program has been the fact that it has been directed by the one criterion of need. Houses have not been built for the well-off people merely because they could afford them, but for those who urgently required better accommodation; furthermore, the new houses are being let at rents which the average family can afford to pay.

How has this been accomplished? In the first place the limited resources, in terms of manpower and building materials, have been placed primarily at the disposal of Local Authorities for their own housing programs.

The actual building is, of course, done by private firms under contract, but the programing of the local authorities has covered four-fifths of the new permanent houses erected since 1945. All these houses are let at rents ranging from 12 to 18 shillings ($2.40-$3.60) a week, rents which are made possible by the payment of a subsidy by the United Kingdom Government to the Local Authorities.

APART FROM the work they perform for Local Authorities, Britain's private house builders are permitted to build one house out of every five erected.

Licenses, however, are issued not to the builder but to the prospective owner, who must provide proof that he needs the house and intends to occupy it. Even then, both the size and price are strictly controlled. Speculative building is thus entirely ruled out in this postwar housing program.

It is the wage-earning section of Britain's population which has derived the greatest benefit from this policy of control—and additional priority is also given to local authorities who build houses for agricultural workers, miners, and key workers in industries operating for the export drive.

This is designed to assist recruitment to these industries. But it is not the policy of the United Kingdom Government to relate public housing only to the lower-income groups. Personal need and not income, is the main criterion; and as the program expands, houses will be built in different sizes, and housing estates will be developed for all sections of the community.

He Yearned To Be An Organizer, But --

HE WAS a cocky little guy with big, horn-rimmed glasses—and after you talked with him a few minutes you learned he was from Brooklyn.

He spoke of the Dodgers as if he owned half the team, and he spoke of union organizing as if he were a veteran at the work

Actually, he was in his late teens or early twenties and had never carried a union card in his life. But he knew what he wanted to do—and he wanted to do it in a hurry.

He wanted to be a CIO organizer and he wanted the entire South unionized in a hurry.

And he was going to be right in there pitching, if he could.

THE YOUNG man told his story to a veteran organizer, a man who has been in the union movement for years.

"Did you ever do any hard work?" asked the veteran. "Any dirty, nasty work in a plant?"

"Well, er, no. I never have," replied the youth.

"Ever carry a union card?"

"No I never . . ."

"Did your old man belong to a union?"

"No, he was a professional man."

"What makes you think you'd make a good organizer?"

"I just know I would. I believe in the right things."

"Maybe you do—but do you understand the problems, the language of the men and women who work in industrial plants."

The young man admitted he didn't.

"If you think you'd like to get in the union movement, then get yourself a job in a plant—get your hands dirty."

A FEW DAYS later the youth got a job in a small, unorganized industrial plant—a job that soon put callouses on his hands.

But he still wanted to get into the labor movement and he decided he'd make a start by organizing the plant where he worked.

He started talking unionism to those close to him and later to anybody who would listen. He sought advice from time to time from organizers.

After many weeks of hard work he told a CIO official that "the situation is ripe, so give me some help."

He was given help and a majority of the workers in the plant were soon signed up. An election was held and a CIO union was chosen as the bargaining agent of the workers.

SOON AFTER the union was established, the young man went to see the veteran organizer who had advised him to get a job in an industrial plant.

He said the experience he had gained had been extremely valuable, that he had learned a lot and that he had changed his mind about some things.

"I'm more sold on the labor movement now than I ever was before—and now I know a little bit about it.

"I've learned that I wasn't cut out to be an organizer. I'm going to college and get a good education and then, maybe, I can find a job in the publicity or education department of some union.

"And I can promise you that I'll get a job during each vacation season in some good CIO plant—the kind of a job that will get my hands dirty.

"I didn't know dirt could be so clean."

'ROUND and 'ROUND BUT --

Rep. Dingell Urges Probe Of AMA Lobby

THE AMERICAN Medical Association is conducting "one of the most cold-blooded lobbying operations in American history," Rep. John Dingell (D., Mich.) told a House subcommittee recently.

He made this statement during an attack on the AMA's "tremendous, multi-million dollar campaign of propaganda and misrepresentation" against the National Health Insurance bill.

Dingell and Rep. Andrew Biemiller (D., Wis.) have introduced bills in the House proposing a national health program including a nation-wide system of health insurance.

Testifying at hearings on the national health bill before a subcommittee of the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, Rep. Dingell charged that the AMA lobby is trying to make members of Congress think "that there is a grass-roots revolt against the President's health program."

Evidence confirming his charges, Dingell told the Committee, came from the AMA's own campaign plan outlining techniques to be used to fight health insurance.

THIS SHOWS, he said, "that the doctors of this country are being asked to take advantage of their special, confidential relationship with their patients—including particularly members of Congress — to lobby against what President Truman and many members of Congress feel is a health program in the interest of the nation."

Dingell denied that national health insurance was "socialized medicine," as it has been dubbed by the AMA. He told the committee that he wanted to make it perfectly clear that he is just as opposed to socialized medicine as he is "to the strangling effect of commercial mdeicine."

Both, he said, "are corrosive and detrimental to the peoples' welfare."

'Oxcart Financing'

Acting Federal Security Administrator J. Donald Kingsley in a statement filed with the House Interstate Commerce Subcommittee said that "our basic problem is not medicine, but the economics of medicine, the oxcart ways in which we finance our medical services."

"There is little use training many more doctors or building many more hospitals without at the same time providing means through which the people can pay to use them," he said. "In the same way, wealthier communities have many more facilities than poorer communities and rural areas where the need is greater."

Declaring that in its "educational campaign," the AMA had taken pains to present only one side of the issue to the public, Dingell pointed out that "no medical journal has ever presented to the doctors a fair article by an advocate of the President's health plan—quite contrary to the record of British and Canadian doctors."

In line with this policy, Dingell said, the AMA plan warns doctors "against engaging in debates, because they make a forum for the opposition. Obviously this is an issue on which the propaganda machine does not want both sides presented."

DINGELL TOLD the committee that he wished to make a distinction between the docotrs and "organized medicine—as represented by the hard core now in control of the AMA and many of the local medical societies.

"Organized medicine is controlled by political doctors. A study has shown that the House of Delegates of the AMA is composed chiefly of specialists and high-salaried urban physicians who are in no way representative of the bulk of hard-working doctors in the U. S.

"These political doctors are of a different character. They are engaging today in tactics which I am sure most doctors do not approve, and about which I am sure many doctors are deeply ashamed.

"The most dangerous part of this situation is that the political doctors are in complete control of the machinery of organized medicine. They are dictating its policies, and are using pressure as well as direct disciplinary action to enforce their will on the practicing physicians of this country."

DINGELL CITED the case of a doctor on the faculty of the Louisiana State University who dared to protest against the $25 assessment the AMA levied on each of its 140,000 members. This doctor's appointment as special consultant in pediatrics to the Arkansas State Board of Health was later cancelled because he had signed a document opposing the AMA's arbitrary assessment, Dingell declared.

Warning that the AMA's "vast propaganda machine" creates "a dangerous situation in a democracy," Dingell said that it was important for the committee to be fully aware of the extent of the pressure being exerted by "a close-knit group of political doctors."

He urged that Congress make a thorough investigation of the AMA's lobbying activities to find out "how many millions of dollars are being thrown into this special-interest fight by organized medicine."

Just Like Here:

British CP Smears Right Wing, Fights Liberal Government

AMERICA isn't the only country that has a Daily Worker. There's one in England, a much better written and edited Daily Worker.

Like its carbon copy in America (about the 10th carbon copy, incidentally) the London Worker is busy these days helping the Tories attack right-wing labor leaders and a liberal government.

The London Worker has outlined the plan of campaign, in clear, precise language that can't be misconstrued. It wants to get rid of the Labour Government, even if that means the return of Churchill.

It's easy to recall that last fall the Commies in America were working as hard as possible to get votes for Henry A. Wallace's wild-eyed Progressive party although that might have meant that Thomas E. Dewey—and not Truman—would be President of these United States.

The result didn't please the Commies, but you can bet your last ruble that they are mighty pleased that their work in Congressional districts took just enough votes away from Democrats so that the Dixiegop coalition can hold a narrow margin on most issues.

"In the present period the offensive of Anglo-American imperialism is unable to hold back the growth of the forces of democracy and peace," the London Worker says.

"This is seen in the enormous advances of the Soviet since the war, the development in Eastern Europe, the historic character of the victories in China and the resistance in Spain, Greece and South-East Asia.

"Yet American pressure for the economic, political and military integration of Western Europe, by the Marshall Plan and other means, is increasing, and with the result that the policy as a whole intensifies the imperialist conflicts and contradictions."

The Communist party in this country declares it has no connection with Moscow. Yet, the same line appears in every Communist party in the world. Though Russia apparently has little regard for the American party, since it always finds about the change in line a little late, the comrades here climb on the bandwagon with as alert a "ja" as Hitler ever got.

What are we gonna do about this? asks the London Worker.

"The imperialists can only proceed with their plans because the British Labour Government has tied the country hand and foot in a war alliance with United States imperialism," the paper says.

"And the Government (British), striving desperately to shore up the old imperialist basis, can only do so with U. S. assistance.

"This is the root of the Government plan to lower real wages and speed up the workers. Instead of the prospect of continued full employment and steady recovery from austerity standards, the actual position is one of increasing economic difficulties which can lead only to rapidly deteriorating standards and an eventual slump."

That could have come directly from the mouth of Winston Churchill.

Just as in America, where the CP is openly attacking the CIO with every possible type of weapon, the British party is hitting at the Trades Union Congress, which is the English labor federation.

"Monopoly capitalism's policy, as carried out by the Labour Government and the TUC general council, is directed toward a general economic offensive, already started, against the wages, hours and conditions of the working class, to lessen costs for the cut-throat export competition and the rearmament program.

Another parallel. In America, the carbon-copy Worker is busy accusing the CIO Steelworkers, the Auto Workers and other right-wing unions of "selling out" on fourth round wage drives, Taft-Hartley, etc.

That sounds like Commies here trying to link right-wing CIO unions and officers with the FBI—Federal Bureau of Investigation. But, we hasten to say, FBI in England means Federation of British Industries, somewhat similar to the Natl. Association of Manufacturers or the Chamber of Commerce.

Still, the Commies have accused Pres. Philip Murray and other right-wing leaders of being in and C. of C.

Right Wing 'Rule-or-Ruin' Imperils CIO Wage Fight

Smelter Unionists Reject CIO Board's Censure

More Groups Quit WFTU

UNIONS IN A number of small countries have followed the lead of the CIO, British and Dutch labor organizations in pulling out of the Communist-led World Federation of Trade Unions.

Cutting of formal ties with the WFTU has been announced by the Danish Labor Federation, the New Zealand Federation of Labor, and Histadruth, the Jewish labor organization in Israel.

Histadruth, meeting for its seventh annual conference, heard a plea by Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion that the organization in general follow the new state's efforts of maintaining a neutral position in the east-west political split.

Mapai, the party which polled the highest number of votes in the first Israel election, is represented at the Histadruth confab by a majority of the 501 delegates, and the Prime Minister's suggestion was expected to be approved.

Thus Histadruth will leave the WFTU but for the present at least is not expected to participate in the new international labor organization in which the CIO, AFL, British TCU and other groups are now in process of forming.

Present at the Histadruth convention was Louis Hollander, vice-president of the CIO Clothing Workers and head of the New York State CIO Council.

Members of the Communist Party—and that party itself, for that matter—make a noisy show of how much they favor minority groups.

Last week, that myth was blown to bits by the president of the Rabbinical Council of America, who declared that "a systematic attempt is being carried on to suppress the religious, social and cultural life of the Jewish people in Poland, Rumania, Hungary and other countries under Soviet domination."

He declared:

"It is ironical indeed that the forces of the Soviet ERS: Berlin Communists (left) g West Berlin railway work- ight) prepare to intervene. The Russians tried to break the strike, which was over such issues as pay in West German marks (which are far more valuable than the Russian Zone marks), rehiring of men fired for political reasons, better working conditions, and other things.

Carey Hits Red Strike-Breaking

STRIKEBREAKING activities of German Communists and Soviet officials in the Berlin transportation dispute came in for some caustic comment last week from CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey.

At the same time, Carey said he thought that protests from Vassili Kuznetsov, head of the Soviet trade unions, and from Louis Saillant, secretary of the World Federation of Trade Unions, were "strangely lacking in the Berlin dispute."

Kuznetsov, said Carey, "is giving no aid to the strikers, and neither is he denouncing the strikebreakers who are as usual engaged in promoting a lower standard of living of the Soviet governmental forces which are aiding the strikebreakers."

The Berlin strike—based mainly on workers' demands that they be paid in western marks rather than the much less valuable Soviet eastern zone marks—clearly involves the "real wages of the workers," the CIO official pointed out.

"Every worker in the world knows that the amount stamped on a piece of money is not the main factor; the food, clothing, shelter and other necessities which the pay envelope will buy are the important things.

"The record seems clear that the Communists in Berlin, backed by German Soviet satellite police from the eastern zone, and even Red Army officers, have been trying to break the strike.

"The pattern is an old and familiar one. We have seen it take place in this country under the leadership of Pearl Bergoff and other notorious strikebreakers backed by corporation private police forces . . . We have a term for such activities in the United States. We call it 'scabbing.'

"And so, once again, we have an example of the reactionary character of Communism, which, like so many free enterprise corporations in the so-called capitalistic countries, give lip service to the welfare of the workers and the betterment of a living standard, and then engage in strike-breaking to belie everything they have said."

Note that this refers to British armed forces, British armaments and British atom bombs—it does not mean Russia, of course.

3. "Friendship with the Soviet Union and Peoples' Democracies; independence for all colonial peoples.

"Independence" like that accorded to the so-called Peoples' "Democracies" (Czecho-Slovakia, Poland, etc.)?

4. "Close trading relations with the Soviet Union Peoples' Democracies and liberated colonial peoples; and not one-sided economic dependence on the U. S.

5. "Bring the nationalized industries under effective democratic control; extend trade union and cooperative participation in economic control.

6. "Raise wages and social standards, including old age benefit and social benefits.

7. "Cut prices and limit profits; shift the burden of taxation to the rich.

8. "Extend the social services, health and education provisions; speed up the housing program, build 400,000 houses a year.

9. "Full democratic rights for the voting class (ed. note: Like in the Peoples' Democracies?) and the banning of Fascism."

Obviously, some of those things have merit. But, the working class in Britain and the U. S. and elsewhere has found that the party is long on promises and short on doing anything about them.

Now, what's to be done about the British right wing? The London Worker has a glib answer.

"Attempts to depict the rank and file of the Labour Party, the Labour councillors, and Labour MP's as one reactionary mass are rank defeatism and sectarianism.

"The rising mass movement will have important repercussions throughout every section of Labour movement, will sharpen the political differentiations within it, will bring new fighting leaders to the fore and eventually lay the basis for isolating it and defeating right-wing leaders and policies.

Just like in CIO: the left wing wants to toss out the right wing in CIO—or wreck CIO.

Anti-Semitism

Union that have saved these people from the clutches of the Nazi murderers should now compel them to die a spiritual death.

"If there is no room for Judaism and for Jewish culture in these countries, let the authorities remove the iron bars, which have been used even more rigorously of late, and permit all of those wishing to go to emigrate to Israel.

"If the Soviet countries expect a more amicable relationship to be reestablished between East and West, they will have to make amends for this injustice and inhumanity."

A few weeks ago, Newsweek carried some cartoons from Russian papers which had an anti-Semitic slant.

Mine, Mill Continues Calumny

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

UNION, the official organ of the Mine, Mill Union, last week continued to spread the Big Lie about the Bessemer, Ala., case.

The May 23 issue of Union had gone to press too early to report the regrettable news that the eye of Maurice Travis, Mine, Mill secretary-treasurer, had been removed.

But, Union still continued to spread the type of slander and calumny that followed the incident in which Travis was struck by a CIO member after the Mine, Mill officer called that member a vile name.

1. It charged that Travis had been attacked "by a goon squad of 15 men."

Actually, there were only a total of eight Steelworkers and other CIO members in the radio station where Travis was hit. Some of them were not even in the room. And, George Elliott, who struck Travis, says that no one else participated.

2. Union said that a "Hitlerian 'Reichstag fire' atmosphere (was) engendered by the CIO Executive Board majority."

3. Union said "our message to the rank and file of CIO is a call to action—action to save the American labor movement from suicide and destruction."

Who's committing suicide?

4. Union said the CIO Executive Board meeting was "called at the demand of Mine, Mill" following the Bessemer incident.

That is plain untruth. The board meeting had been set before the incident. In fact, John Clark, Mine, Mill president, sent in a wire demanding a special meeting and was told that the meeting had been set for May 17 and 18 and that no special meeting need be called.

5. Unoin said that a rank and file group of Mine, Mill members went to Washington to sit in on the executive board meeting as spectators, but that they were denied admittance.

That is misleading. The executive board room has a seating capacity of 70—so if the 70 Mine, Mill members had been admitted, there would have been no room for the 52 board members. And, besides, everyone other than board members and a few CIO staff members were asked to leave the executive session.

6. Union said Pres. Clark had to make a fight for permission to bring in a few members and that it was "finally agreed to let Vice Pres. Reid Robinson, Mine, Mill Board Member Charles Wilson and Marion Reynolds," of Bessemer, to speak.

This is not the truth. Murray readily agreed to a request from Clark that he produce witnesses, suggesting that three from each side appear. Clark chose his own witnesses.

Utah CIO Requests New Metal Union

DELEGATES to the 13th annual convention of the Utah CIO Council, meeting shortly before the CIO's national executive board held its recent conference in Washington, D. C., urged the parent board to set up a new union for nonferrous metal workers.

The recommendation was contained in a resolution, which noted that "communist-controlled leadership" of the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers "has driven thousands of members" from the union, most of whom, it said, have found temporary havens in other Internationals.

The CIO Executive Board censured the Mine union and its officers for conducting a smear campaign against CIO Pres. Murray, the CIO and the Steelworkers. An attack on Mine, Mill Secy.-Preas. Maurice Travis by an officer of a Local Industrial Union at Beesemer, Ala., was the springboard used to the launch the campaign, witnesses told the board. Witnesses also reported that Travis made insulting remarks to his assailant.

The fact, said the Utah resolution, that "this once great international union is being led down a one-way street to certain destruction is having a weakening effect and is jeopardizing the entire CIO movement in Utah and elsewhere."

(A spokesman for the Council told the CIO News that the Mine-Mill union now has only four locals left in Utah. Sixteen, he said, are now in the Progressive Metalworkers Council, affiliated with the CIO Shipbuilding Workers. An additional three locals have seceded from Mine-Mill and are still independent, though being courted by both the AFL and the Mine Workers' District 50.)

AMONG the 120 delegates to the convention, there were no representatives of Mine-Mill. The union's largest local in the state had withdrawn from the Council shortly before the convention.

The Council's constitution was amended to bar communists, fascists, Ku Klux Klan members or those who would overthrow the U. S. Government from holding positions of responsibility in the council or any of its affiliated locals. The amendment also permits the immediate expulsion from the Council of any local that fails to follow Natl. CIO policy.

In their report to the convention, the Council's executive board paid special tribute to CIO members in the state who had participated in the PAC campaign last year, and, "joining with the forces of agriculture and other liberal forces," had achieved "a victory for the people of America."

In addition to voicing pride in its Congressional delegation election last year, the report noted that the state legislature had passed "most of the legislation pledged by the Democratic Party and indorsed by labor."

Among the legislative gains, the report pointed out, were broad improvements in the workmen's compensation, occupational disease and unemployment compensation laws.

THE REPORT singled out Sen. Elbert Thomas (D. Utah) for special praise as chairman of the Senate Labor and Education Committee. Later the convention lauded the Senator in a resolution.

Backing up the pleas of Council Pres. Clarence L, Palmer and George Roberts, regional PAC director, for an intensified PAC drive, the convention adopted a resolution urging every CIO member in the state to register to vote and to contribute a dollar to PAC.

Palmer was nominated without opposition for a fourth two-year term as president, along with candidates for the 10 vice presidencies. Approximately 12,000 members in affiliated CIO locals will vote by referendum.

Lobbying Probe Gets House O.K.

THE HOUSE, without a dissenting vote, has approved a resolution for an investigation of lobbyists and lobbying.

Introduced by Rep. Frank Buchanan (D., P.), the resolution would set up a joint committee of seven members each from the Senate and House to conduct the inquiry. The Senate is expected to give its "OK" also.

House Republicans, in floor speeches, delivered all sorts of warnings against letting the probe develop into a "witch hunt" of business representatives, but they went along with the resolution because it was expanded to include "lobbying" by officials of government agencies, as well.

An inkling into how big the lobby business has become was given by House Majority Leader McCormack (D., Mass.).

The Lobby Regulation Act has been on the books for over two years and McCormack declared that "according to the records there have been about $40,000,000 paid in for some activities of this kind, and only $9,000,000 per year have gone for salaries."

"It might be interesting to know where the other money went," he said.

Rep. Adolph Sabath (D. Ill.) dean of the House, charged that some of the lobbyists have drawn as much as $150,000 a year.

"In many instances these lobbyists obtain their money by fraud and misrepresentation, because I know of many of them, and I know they cannot deliver anybody," Sabath said.

He contended a lot of abuses have developed, and declared the probe should elicit facts that will enable Congress to put "teeth" in the law to 'eliminate these abuses."

Franco Loan Is Refused

The U. S. Export-Import Bank has refused to give a loan to Franco's fascist Spain, despite the fact that Franco's banker had enlisted support for the loan, part of which would have been used to buy U. S. surplus cotton, from cotton states Senators. Another blow to Franco last week came when the United Nation's general assembly refused to void its ban on diplomatic dealings with him.

ADA asked Secy. of State Dean Acheson to resist any deals that would "pay tribute to Fascists" or to "those Americans who would put their selfish economic interests above a successful democratic foreign policy."

ADA disclosed that Francisco Moreno, head of the Hispano-Americano Bank of Madrid and a close friend of Franco, met on Capitol Hill with the Senators and commercial representatives to work out plans for the loan, which would be obtained from the Export-Import Bank and would be used to buy cotton here.

Declaring that an informal bipartisan committee of members of Congress had already approached the Export-Import Bank to urge approval of the loan following the conference, ADA pointed out that the loan would have to have State Department approval.

3 Kluxers Unmasked By Georgia Mayor

MAYOR JAMES PETERSON of Soperton, Ga., tangled both physically and legally with the Ku Klux Klan last week.

He not only ripped the hoods from three Ku Kluxers but he also had them arrseted on disorderly practice charges. All this happened in the home state of the hooded organization. The mayor's story follows:

After he received a call from several women who were frightened by robed men, he found two Klansmen near his home. When they refused to tell him what they were doing, he stripped them of their masks.

One of them, Malcalm Brandy, a mechanic, struck Peterson, knocking off his glasses. The mayor called a policeman who took the two men to jail. The mayor and the officer then cruised around in a car, and found three more Kluxers.

PETERSON unmasked and the policeman arrested one of them, but the other two fled when the officer fired a shot into the air.

Cries of anguish arose from the Klan's Grand Dragon, Samuel Green, who said that Peterson "is in violation of their civil rights as if I went into his office and jerked his hat off."

Commented the St. Louis Post-Dispatch:

"It has long been evident that

Mayor James Peterson

Green isn't very clear on what civil rights there are. The right of the accused to know the charge against him, his right of habeas corpus, his right to testify in his own behalf and to summon witnesses to testify for him, his right to trial by a jury of his equals, all these rights escape Green, whose Ku Kluxism would replace them with lynch 'law.'

"The anonymous bullying of one weak individual by a mob is not a civil right, it is an act of cowardice. And from what the incident tells of plucky Mayor Peterson, if Grand Dragon Green goes into his office he'd best go unmasked, and maybe bareheaded."

Asks N. J. Action

The New Jersey State CIO has called on Gov. Driscoll to summon a "social security" special session of the State Legislature to act on six "extremely vital measures."

Carl Holderman, state CIO president, also urged Driscoll to do his "utmost to have the 'caucus rule' eliminated in the State Senate.

"This unwritten, un-American device strangles the democratic processes and makes impossible the enactment of legislature supported by the vast majority of the people."

Govt. Reports Prices Rise, Wages Fall

PRICES—Retail and wholesale prices are again rising steadily. The consumers' price index of the Bureau of Labor Statistics on April 15 was at a point 0.2% higher than a year ago, and rose for the second successive month. More recent primary market prices indicate a continued rise to the end of May.

WAGES—Average weekly earnings for manufacturing workers went down from $53.63 in March to $52.62 in mid-April. This was mainly accounted for by the shorter work week. Averaging 38.3 hours per week in mid-April, the work week was at a post-war low. Hourly wages stayed about the same, except for a 2c an hour drop in the average pay in the miscellaneous non-durable goods industries.

EMPLOYMENT—The number of people employed in non-agricultural establishments in mid-April was just about the same as in mid-March, the first time in three months that there wasn't a decline in employment.

However, when the facts for manufacturing industries are listed alone, it is clear that there had been a drop of 330,000 in the number of people employed during the one month from mid-March to mid-April. This was balanced by the rise in public construction and private home-building, and retail jobs.

The recent meeting of the CIO Executive Board approved a report by the Full Employment Committee headed by CIO Pres. Murray which placed the number of unemployed "around 4,800,000."

End-of-April figures, just made public, show that the number of persons who had applied for or were receiving unemployment compensation was lower than earlier that month.

Edward L. Keenan, acting director of the Bureau of Employment Security, said late last week that total job placements reported for April by local employment offices numbered 560,338 compared with 452,191 in March.

"Job placements in agriculture and non-agricultural work during the first four months of this year aggregated 1,751,617 as compared with 1,827,771 in January, February, March and April last year," Keenan said.

"Agricultural placements over this period were higher than during the first four months of last year, totaling 477,771, as compared with approximately 239,000 last year. Non-agricultural placements during the first four months in 1949 were moderately lower than last year, totaling 1,273,846. Last year's non-agricultural placements for the corresponding period were 1,588,783."

80 Complete Course

Eighty members of the CIO Clothing Workers recently received certificates from the New York State School of Industrial and Labor Relations, Cornell Univ., at ceremonies held at the Amalgamated Hall, Rochester, N. Y. They had completed work in four extention classes.

TYPICAL: This parade in Dalton, Ga., was typical of scenes in many textile towns throughout the United States as the CIO Textile Workers Union celebrated its tenth anniversary recently. In that Georgia city, near the Tennessee border, the city authorities and the merchants joined the union in helping to make the festivities community-wide.

INTERVIEW: Part of the Dalton celebration included sidewalk interviews which offered plenty opportunity to recount the achievements of the Textile Workers during the past 10 years. During the week-long celebration radio advertisers extended greeting to the union.

Many Cities Help TWUA Mark 10th Year

The CIO Textile Workers Union celebrated its tenth anniversary during the week of May 8 in many textile mill towns throughout the United States, particularly in New England and the South where most of the industry is located.

Climax of the week was a radio dramatization "From Where We Come," presented over the ABC network by a cast that included professional actors like Melvin Douglas and Aline MacMahon and such persons as Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, Sen. Frank Graham (D., N. C.) Gov. Chester Bowles (D., Conn.) and TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve.

To tell the story of the celebrations in all the textile towns and cities would take more space than the CIO News has available.

So let's take a trip to Dalton, Ga., (1940 population 10,448 but it has grown considerably since then). At Dalton Mayor Carlton McCamy got TWUA's anniversary observance off to a good start by announcing:

"The Mayor and Council do hereby proclaim the week of May 8-14, 1949, as TWUA-CIO Tenth Anniversary Week and call upon all citizens to join in the public events which have been planned to observe this happy occasion."

THE merchants, press and radio joined in the celebration. Banners proclaiming the event were stretched across the street by city employes. Merchants greeted the TWUA over the local radio station and through ads in the town's newspaper.

A joint committee representing all the TWUA locals donated a set of books dealing with labor subjects to both Dalton High School and the City Library.

Stores conducted prize contests to find the oldest man and woman still working in the textile industry, another to locate the man and woman still at work with the greatest number of years service in textile mills. The "old timers" entered a "Guess Who" contest to identify those who appeared on a display of old photographs of mill workers.

A highlight of the celebration was the parade in which the members of the various TWUA locals of the area participated.

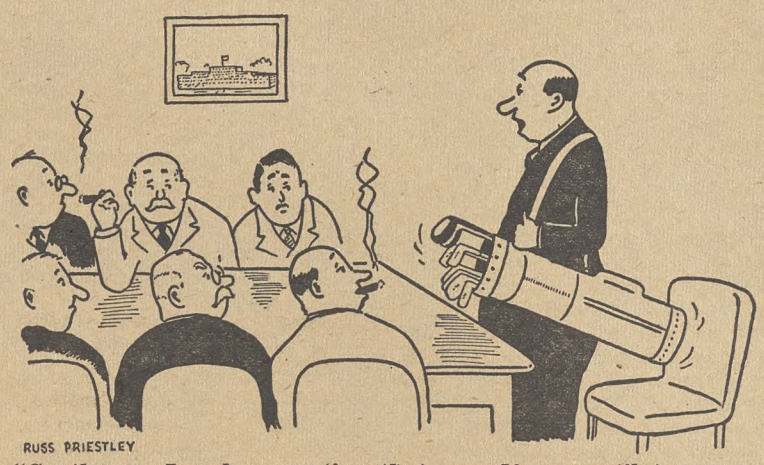
Suggestions for the celebration were furnished by the union's national Education and Publicity Dept., which also issued a 16-page anniversary edition of Textile Labor, TWUA's paper, in rotogravure and arranged the ABC broadcast.

The textile union is integrated into the life of the community in Dalton as in many other towns and cities. It has long been established in the Georgia city, where its oldest branch is Local 134 at the plant of the American Thread Co. Other old locals are 135 at Crown Mill and Local 992 represents the employes at the mills of Whitfield Spinning Co. and Dalton Cotton Products.



"Gentlemen, I make a motion that we adjourn until tomorrow morning."

Meat Union OKs Brannan Farm Plan

GENERAL approval of the Administration's farm price-support program was voiced at Congressional hearings by a spokesman for the CIO's Packing-house Workers.

The union told the House Agriculture Committee that it likes the plan outlined by Sec. of Agriculture Charles Brannan for "direct production payments to livestock farmers."

The plan would provide a workable means of supporting the incomes of livestock producers at least at minimum levels, the union said. In addition, it would "tend toward letting meat prices fall to a level which low-income consumers can afford."

The testimony, prepared by UPWA Pres. Ralph Helstein, was presented to the Committee by Lyle Cooper, the union's research director.

Helstein said that livestock slaughter, and individual meat consumption, have fallen during the two years. Consumption of meat, he predicted, is "now headed for the low levels of the thirties."

Drops in the price of meat to the consumers were brought about because millions of families of workers had been "priced out of the market" in the two years after the end of OPA, and because these families are now being forced to cut their meat purchases because of unemployment or part-time work.

He said that between June 1946 — when OPA was killed — and early 1949, the price margin between what consumers pay and what farmers receive, had jumped from 20 to 36 cents—an 80% boost which smacks of monopolistic price fixing by the 'packing trust'."

Two CIO Members To Latin-America

Two members of the CIO's Latin-American Affairs Committee will leave next month for a tour of Mexico, Central and South America.

Ernest Schwarz, executive secretary of the Committee, and Committee Member Martin Kyne, who is executive secretary of the Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Workers, have been appointed by CIO Pres. Murray to make the trip and turn in a report on conditions in Latin-America as they affect labor.

The tour is in line with the CIO's policy calling for "closer cooperation among the organized labor movements of the Western Hemisphere," through direct consultation between the CIO and the various trade union centers in Latin-America.

Schwarz and Kyne plan to visit unions and survey conditions in Mexico, Guatemala, Venezuela, Colombia, Equador, Peru, Bolivia, Chile, Argentina, Uruguay, Brazil, Puerto Rico, Haiti and Cuba.

Faith In Future

"A Chicago menswear firm, explaining why it was expending its show room and office space, wrote, 'We have great confidence in the future. Men will always wear pants,'" said Frank Hanley in the Chalk Talk column he does for Advance, publication of the CIO Clothing Workers.

LISTENING: These two Congressmen are listening intently while CIO Steelworkers' Secy-Treas. David J. McDonald testified before the House FEPC Sub-Committee concerning the situation at Bessemer, Ala. The two Congressmen are (right) Rep. Adam Clayton Powell (D., N. Y.), chairman of the sub-committee, and Rep. Thomas H. Burke (D., O.), a member of the sub-committee and also of the CIO. They, along with three other members of the sub-committee, have been hearing both proponents and opponents of FEPC.

McDonald Calls Robinson 'Devoid Of Principle'

By GLORIA CAPLAN

"A MAN devoid of principle and destitute of honor" was how Vice President Reid Robinson of the CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers was characterized before a House Labor sub-committee.

The description was applied by David J. McDonald, secretary-treasurer of the CIO Steelworkers, as he appeared before the sub-committee to answer charges against his union previously hurled by the Smelter Workers official.

Before the sub-committee, Robinson had accused the Steelworkers of collaborating with the Tennessee Coal, Iron & Railroad Co. in Bessemer, Ala., to set up a lily white, company union of iron ore miners.

The "vicious falsehoods" had been uttered, McDonald said, by a man "devoid of principle and destitute of honor."

He said the charges had been made "by a fellow who went to an employer and tried to get $5000 from the employer."

McDONALD THEN read to the sub-committee from a 1945 report of four MMSW executive board members who had investigated the incident to which he referred. The board members reported that "all evidence indicates that Robinson was attempting a shake-down and soliciting a bribe."

The report described the incident as follows:

The MMSW president told Pack he was in desperate need of $5000. He said he needed the sum because his brother, he alleged, had absconded with $7000 of the union's funds. Robinson said he had covered up $2000 of the shortage from his personal funds, and by shifting $5000 in the president's revolving fund, had covered the rest.

Robinson told Pack he was scheduled to leave for Paris and needed the $5000 at once to cover the shortage in the revolving fund lest other officers discover the loss after he left.

When Pack suggested Robinson seek a bank loan, which Pack might guarantee, Robinson replied his earnings were too small, and he probably could never repay it.

IN THE report, the board members urged Robinson to resign. When the issue came before the full board, however, the motion to request the resignation was defeated by a 5-5 tie vote.

That, reiterated McDonald, was the sort of person who had come before the Congressional sub-committee to make charges against the CIO Steelworkers.

The charges had already been repudiated by the CIO Executive Board which severely castigated MMSW for attempting to "besmirch the names of Philip Murray, of the CIO and of the USA.

Over the objections of Tom Harris, CIO assistant counsel, and Willard Townsend, Transport Service Employes president, sub-committee Chairman Adam Clayton Powell (D., N.Y.) set aside a full afternoon of the FEPC hearings for the inter-union controversy.

But when the afternoon of the scheduled debate arrived, no representative of MMSW appeared. Reason for the absence was never explained to the committee.

McDONALD THEN took the stand to tell the committee that his union always has been and is now "unconditionally opposed to any type of discriminatory hiring practice by this or any other employer."

He went on to relate the history of the Alabama iron ore miners' dissatisfaction with their union, the MMSW. For at least two or three years, he said, the Steelworkers' district office in Birmingham was repeatedly petitioned by representative groups of the TCI workers seeking to shift their affiliation from MMSW to the Steelworkers.

In the closing months of the MMSW contract with TCI, groups of iron ore miners repeatedly said they would not work again under a MMSW contract, McDonald testified. One of the locals had already withdrawn and was attempting to affiliate with another union, having been denied membership by the Steelworkers.

IT WAS NOT until after the five locals voted to secede from MMSW that the MMSW officials began to inject the race issue, McDonald said. The CIO, fearful that the locals would affiliate outside CIO, granted local industrial union charters after the locals voted for secession. The Steelworkers then agreed, he said, to charter the locals if they voted in a formal election for the LIUs.

To discourage membership in the local industrial unions, MMSW used "the most scurrilous lies and accusations against CIO, united Steelworkers and officials of both," McDonald said.

Derogatory references to Pres. Murray's religion were coupled with charges that the Steelworkers were Ku-Klux-Klan-dominated, McDonald continued. It was also charged that the Steelworkers did not admit Negroes into membership. As a result, said McDonald, the MMSW campaign resulted in dividing temporarily the white and Negro groups. That division is now disappearing, he asserted.

THE STEELWORKERS, McDonald stressed, receive into membership all eligible employes "without regard to race or creed." There are no "Class B" members of the union, he added.

The Steelworkers secretary-treasurer said his organization strongly endorsed the FEPC bill being studied by the sub-committee. "I will venture to say," he continued, "that the CIO, under Mr. Murray's leadership, has done as much to advance both the economic and the political rights of Negroes as has any other organization in the history of this country."

LEST WE FORGET MEMORIAL DAY, 1937

It was on Memorial Day twelve years ago (it now has become known as Memorial Day Massacre); the place, South Chicago Plant of the Republic Steel Company. Motion pictures taken of the incident were described by the St. Louis Post Dispatch:

"A vivid close-up shows the head of the parade being halted by a group of 150 policemen. The flag-bearers are in front. Behind them the placards are massed. They bear such devices as, "Come on Out—Help Win the Strike," Republic vs. The People, and the CIO." The leader of the strikers is arguing earnestly with a police officer who appears to be in command.

"Suddenly, without apparent warning, there was a terrific roar of pistol shots and the men in the front ranks of the marchers go down like grass before a scythe, as many as a dozen in one heap.

"The police then charged the marchers with riot sticks flying. Tear gas grenades are seen sailing into the mist of the marchers and clouds of gas rise over them. The crowd is in flight. The only discernible case of resistance is that of a marcher with a placard on a stick, which he uses in an attempt to fend off a charging policeman. He is successful for only an instant, then he goes down under a shower of blows.

"The ground is strewn with dead and wounded, some isolated individuals are caught, and with business-like precision groups of policemen close in. In several instances from two to four policemen are seen beating one man. One strikes him across the face, using his club as he would a baseball bat. Another crashes it down on top of his head, and still another is whipping him across the back. Then one gives the fallen man a final smash on the head before moving on to the next job.

"Ten men died, seven shot in the back and three in the side; none were hit in the front. Thirty other persons, including one woman and three minors, received gunshot wounds. More than sixty marchers were hurt seriously and required hospital care.

"A Senate sub-committee on civil liberties found that the Memorial Day attack was unprovoked, that the marchers were within the law, that no attempt had been made to aid the wounded, and the subsequent investigation by the Chicago city authorities was farcial and prejudiced."

We shall not forget that Memorial Day and those who gave their lives for their movement so that men can enjoy the rights brought to them by industrial unionism through the CIO.

We will hold the torch they gave to us with their lives, and rededicate ourselves to carry on, bringing to our people the freedom from economic want, and insecurity, and giving them a happy life.

STEEL UNION WINS POLL

Frank Bonacci, Regional Director for Utah, reports the Steelworkers won an election conducted by the Utah Labor Relations Board among the employes of the Structural Steel and Forge Co. of Salt Lake City by a 2 to 1 vote.

The CIO Auto Worker won an election among the employes of the Cribben and Sexton Co., Chicago, Ill. The UAW received 92% of the votes. UAW Intl. Rep. Charles Chiakulas was in charge.

Reg. Dir. James Leary, Kansas City, Mo., reports that the CIO Textile Workers defeated the AFL in an NLRB election among employes of the Percy Kent Bag Co., North Kansas City, Mo., by a vote of 114 to 58. The campaign was conducted by the officers of TWUA Local 393, assisted by TWUA Rep. Pat Quinn and Howard Berge, Business Representative for the Textile Workers Joint Board.

Leary also reports that the CIO Lithographers won an election among the employes of Henry Wurst, Inc., North Kansas City, Mo. John Davis, president of Lithographers, Local 25, was in charge.

CIO Field Rep. John McGivern, Pittsburgh, Pa., reports that the CIO Utility Workers Union won an election among employes of the Meter Department of the West Penn Power Co.

Secy.-Treas. John C. Lawson, of the CIO Stone Workers, reports the winning of two union shop elections in McDermott, Ohio. Employes of the Taylor Stone Co. voted 96 to 3 for the union shop while employes of Waller Brothers voted 99 to 9 for the union shop. USAPW Dist. Dir. Lewis R. Lowry was in charge.

House Puts Back Some ECA Cuts

THE HOUSE last week wiped out in part a damaging 15% cut in funds for the European Recovery Program which a Dixiegop coalition had squeezed through the House Appropriations Committee.

The committee's action amounting to a $629 million bite out of the $4,198,000,000 asked by Pres Truman for the year beginning July 1, was bitterly criticized by the President, by the CIO and by other groups supporting an effective economic program for post-war Europe.

The House counteracted the work of the Dixiegops on the committee, however, by permitting ECA to use the funds in 10½ months, instead of in a full 12-month year. Thus the average weekly spending of ECA will remain about the same as requested by the President.

Nathan Cowan, CIO legislative director, wired Democratic and GOP leaders of the House before the vote urging restitution of the $629 million.

He said the 15% slash — defended by foes of the recovery program as an "economy" move—would menace "effective, constructive" activity for ERP. CIO officials know from personal experience, he added, that "not only the European economy but the morale of democratic working people will be severly shaken if the committee majority's short-sighted action is confirmed by Congress."

As passed, by the House, the Economic Cooperation Administration gets about $3.5 billion for the next year. Earlier Congress had authorized expenditures up to $5.5 billion for a 15-month period.

Unions Unite To Aid Pro-Labor Paper

CHARLES A. Crowder, publisher of the bi-weekly Flora, Ill., Sentinel, was still fighting last week for the right to treat labor news fairly in his columns.

A week's stay granted by a county court temporarily held off the effort of a group of business men to wipe out Crowder's paper.

After failing to crush the paper by an attempted advertising boycott, the business men—mostly oil operators and distributors—secretly bought up a chattel mortage on the paper's presses and equipment. Then they started foreclosure procedures and served notice they would have the presses seized so as to strangle the paper. They also prepared to foreclose on a mortgage covering the Sentinel's building.

They embarked on this attack after Crowder resisted demands that he stop publishing organized labor's side in local disputes

So far, Crowder has received no backing from the newspapers of Illinois in his "freedom of the press" battle, but unions here—AFL, CIO and Railroad Brotherhoods—have united in a "Clay County Labor Group" to rally aid for the publisher.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY: Among the many persons who dropped into CIO Pres. Philip Murray's office in Pittsburgh May 25 to wish him a happy birthday was this group of outstanding Negro Leaders from the Pittsburgh District. They were high in their praise of Murray and the CIO for the forthright position taken against discrimination. Murray celebrated his 63rd birthday by working at the office. Left to right: Boyd Wilson, Steelworkers representative; Richard F. Jones, assistant district attorney, and member of Pittsburgh Housing Authority; Robert Williams, city magistrate, and Democratic chairman of the 5th Ward; Mrs. Daisy Lampkins, vice-president of the Pittsburgh Courier, and former national field secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People; Murray; Paul F. Jones, attorney for Owl Cab Co., and former Workmen's Compensation Referee; Thomas E. Barton, assistant city solicitor, and president of the Pittsburgh Urban League.

By TOM MOORE McBRIDE

AS MIGHT have been expected, the members of the labor press of New York City—almost to a man—turned out rave notices on the groundbreaking motion picture on Negro-white relations, "Home of the Brave."

But—as also might have been expected—there were some highly vocal dissenting opinions. These were the publications which waited until The Daily Worker established the party line on the picture before they came up with any opinions.

Offhand, one would suspect that a film on racial prejudice—on the problem of a Negro facing discrimination in the armed forces—would meet with some approval by the Communists. But the Worker reviewer found that "this film can be . . . dangerous."

But that wasn't enough for the party. There rose in righteous wrath one Lance Jeffers to rebut this lukewarm condemnation of the picture. He found that its "only purpose is to reinforce the oppression of the Negro people," in a ¾-page diatribe—as much space as the original review.

TO FIND OUT whence cometh the spleen, it is necessary to take a look at the theme of the picture.

It was made by Stanley Kramer, who also produced "The Champion," which recently received reviewers' kudos. There was no advance notice about it to anyone. It was made behind locked doors and there wasn't a press agent on the lot.

The action revolves around five soldiers who are sent out on a reconnaissance mission on a Jap-held island in the Pacific. One of them is a Negro; one is his old school friend; one is a decent sort of sergeant; another is a youthful major, anxious to prove himself. And the man who sets the plot revolving is a neurotic corporal who suffers from the compulsion to have someone to sneer at and patronize. The Negro, of course, is his meat.

The events on the island lead to the psychosomatic paralysis of the Negro and the rest of the film deals with the efforts of an Army psychiatrist to heal his mind so his body can be healed. It doesn't sound exciting, told in outline, but with the flashbacks to establish the pattern it is.

WHY, THEN, one might ask, does the Daily Worker attack it so viciously, when one of the principal tenets of the party is racial equality. And the answer comes in the party's opposition to anything Freudian — to psychoanalysis, to psychotherapy and even to psychosomatic medicine. Such soul searchings as there produce, the Marxists believe, deemphasize the class struggle and leave the subject much too concerned with self.

What's more, an understanding of one's own conflicts and those of others do little to inflame minority groups to action against the majorities.

All of this is somewhat epemeral in a discussion of the merits of a great motion picture that every man in the labor movement should see and should promote. But it points up one truism: all of the exploitation of minorities doesn't come from the extreme right; that exploitation is, in turn, exploited by the extreme left—the people who don't want to see a solution of racial problems.

AT&T Bid For Poll Is Refused

MAMMOTH American Telephone & Telegraph Co. has received at least an initial defeat in its efforts to force each CIO Communications Workers of America local to undergo an NLRB election.

Bell System affiliates from coast-to-coast withdrew recognition from CWA after it entered the CIO. The switch to CIO followed a membership referendum in which the results were 2-to-1 for affiliation.

The NLRB's regional director in Detroit, Mich., turned down Michigan Bell's request for representation elections among CWA employes.

The regional director ruled that no question of representation existed and that current contracts with CWA constitute a bar to an election.

The company may appeal to the full NLRB.

The regional director's decision, CWA Pres. Joseph Beirne predicted, would be applied in the other 33 cases filed by the company.

Annapolis To Graduate 1st Negro

THERE WERE three developments in race relations over last weekend, two good and one bad from the standpoint of more harmonious living in the United States. They were:

1. Midshipman Wesley Brown, Washington, D. C., will be the first negro ever to graduate from the U. S. Military Academy at Annapolis, Md., From 1972 to 1937 five Negroes failed to do what he will do June 30—leave the academy as an ensign after entering as a plebe.

He told reporters that most of midshipmen spoke to him and were friendly and that the faculty members treated him impartially.

2. The 89th General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States (South) will get a report from its Church relations committee which states:

"Since Uncle Sam protects Negroes and other minority groups from brown shirts and black shirts abroad, why shouldn't he likewise protect them from white sheets and others at home, who threaten their civil liberties . . .

"We cannot fairly dismiss the whole question of federal legislation by saying such laws do more harm than good. This view is not borne out by the facts."

3. A special committee of the Florida legislature that is probing Communist activities among the faculties of the state university system was prepared to ask:

"Have you ever taught or expressed yourself as being against any of the provisions of the race segregation laws of the state of Florida?"

When Negro leaders protested, the committee agreed to drop out the phrase "or expressed yourself as being . . ."

Assistant attorney general James Toney said that the question whether a professor ever spoke in the classroom against segregation was "certainly justified."

Scheme To Weed Out Trial Examiners Exposed

By HENRY FLEISHER

A BIG-BUSINESS effort to weed out large numbers of government trial examiners who aren't 100% "safe" for corporations views and policies, is getting critical looks from Fair Deal Congressmen.

It is expected that some liberal Congressmen and Senators may shortly demand an official probe of what they consider an underhanded effort to "pack" U. S. agencies with trial examiners who can be expected to side with big corporations against the public.

The development first came to light when an "advisory committee" of the U. S. Civil Service Commission disqualified—and thereby ordered the dismissal—of 54 out of 217 trial examiners employed by 14 federal government agencies.

The trial examiners act as "judges" at hearings conducted by many U. S. administrative agencies. They submit intermediate reports, after which final arguments are conducted before the heads of the various agencies.

One of the largest groups of trial examiners is employed by the Natl. Labor Relations Board. The Interstate Commerce Commission, the Federal Trade Commission and the Federal Power Commission—all set up to protect the public and regulate corporation practices—employ numerous trial examiners.

Jobs Threatened

Many of these men face loss of their jobs next month—unless the recommendations of the Civil Service Commission's "advisory committee" are quickly overridden.

The three active members of that committee were all past presidents of the highly conservative American Bar Association.

All of them come from powerful lay firms serving some of the country's largest, most reactionary comporations.

Their recommendations, based on secret testimony from unknown sources, ordered sweeping purges of the trial examiners in agencies in which many of these corporations are directly affected.

These are the men whom the Civil Service Commission called upon to decide the merits and qualifications of impartial trial examiners:

1. Carl McFarland. He is a special counsel for the Natl. Association of Manufacturers and has worked for the NAM in its case to defy the lobby registration law.

McFarland has represented numerous corporations involved in cases before the Natl. Labor Relations Board for violation of the old Wagner Act.

2. Willis Smith. He is a member of the law firm of Smith, Leach and Anderson of Raleigh, N. C. That firm is counsel for the powerful Southern Railway, which has a direct interest in the policies and decisions of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The ICC is continuously holding hearings at which trial examiners preside.

Smith has also acted as counsel for the Armour meat packing firm, whose NLRB cases can be counted by the score.

3 Joseph W. Henderson. He is a partner in the firm of Rawle & Henderson of Philadelphia, and serves as counsel and director of the National City Bank of Philadelphia. That bank is closely tied, through its top executives, with the Reading Co.—a holding company for railroads and coal mines, which also has a strong interest in ICC policies.

This advisory committee to the Civil Service Commission is charged by students of administrative law with setting peculior standards for trial examiners.

At the Interstate Commerce Commission, it disqualified examiners with long and respected records of service.

Out of 10 ICC examiners found "disqualified" by this committee, some had served the government for nearly 40 years.

At the Natl. Labor Relations Board, of a dozen trial examiners ordered disqualified by the committee, all but one had served the NLRB since long before passage of the Taft-Hartley Act. Many of them have written hearing reports which have helped forestall efforts by NLRB General Counsel Robert Denham to stretch the anti-labor provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act.

In recent weeks, the "advisory Committee" has apparently come to realize that it overstepped itself.

Ten of the 12 NLRB trial examiners have been told—with a variety of alibis—that a "terrible mistake" has been made. In some cases, they have been told that their disqualification resulted from "clerical errors," from "mistaken identities," etc.

Effective Protests

However, attorneys for the examiners are skeptical of these alibis. For they have been arguing the cases with the "advisory committee" and the three corporation lawyers vigorously defended their actions—until the heat raised by the examiners' protests to the Civil Service Commission and to members of Congress began to take effect.

Although the disqualification orders in the case of these men have been rescinded, there is no certainty that the examiners will regain their job security.

The advisory committee has assumed power to "grade" the examiners. It would be possible to give them low passing grades, just above the disqualification level—grades so low they would bar these trial examiners from receiving important assignments from their agencies.

Meanwhile the "advisory committee" has set up informal groups for various regions of the country.

These local groups are also dominated by corporation lawyers. They have submitted recommendations of men deemed qualified for trial examiners' jobs—and these men, favored by the corporation lawyers, have been placed high on the list for new jobs.

Unless a stop is put to this practice of weeding out fair-minded trial examiners and filling the rolls with people favorable to the corporation viewpoint, many kinds of liberal legislation will be thwarted or sabotaged for years to come.

And it will probably lead to strong demands for a complete probe of how the corporation lawyers moved in, at the invitation of the Civil Service Commission, to mete out their kind of justice to one of the most important groups of U. S. public servants.

Grange Backs Social Security For Farmers and Helpers

THE NATIONAL Grange—one of the country's largest farm groups—has indorsed plans to extend social security coverage to both farm operators and farm workers.

Lloyd Halvorson, Grange official, said the organization's study of bills now in Congress to extend old age and suvivors protection has convinced it that such a move would be "quite feasible."

But Halvorson said, in the course of a recent CIO-sponsored "America United" broadcast on NBC:

"The Grange has indorsed the idea of this type of social security for farmers for several years. The only question has been that of administrative feasibility.

"Our study of the proposed method of extending social security to farmers has now convinced us that it would be quite feasible from the farmer's standpoint and quite easy for a farmer to file his social security tax returns.

"About all a farmer would have to do for his own coverage would be to send in a few figures from his income tax statement, and for the hired man a stamp plan has been worked out involving really no records at all."

PAUL SIFTON, UAW-CIO legislative representative on the same radio program, hailed the Grange's new position as "great news."

Sifton pointed out that the CIO has given strong support to HR 2893, which would bring in 20 million new people under the old age and survivors insurance program, and double security benefits.

"We want an economy and a society freed from fear of poverty and want, when workers are too old to work and too young to die, or during unemployment or disability," he said.

"Just as industry plans for depreciation, obsolescence and accidents, we say the people in industry should protect themselves, through their elected government, against the same hazards."

HR 2893 is now being studied by the House Ways & Means Committee. Hearings were held several weeks earlier this year.

Defects Cited In Pricing Bill

A DEMAND for removal of loopholes in a bill governing the pricing policies of many big industries, was sent to members of the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee by CIO Legislative Director Nathan Cowan.

Cowan charged that S. 1008, introduced by Sen. Myers (D., Pa.), would legalize "injurious and monopolistic price discriminations" unless tightening amendments are written.

He said the bill would in effect "repeal a Supreme Court decision which held the cement industry engaged in a basing point conspiracy to fix prices." Under the basing point system, corporations determine the price of their product at one or more basing points, and fix their prices in line with prices at these locations.

Cowan urged Sen. Myers, sponsor of the bill, to change its language to conform with its original anti-monopoly intent. As it stands now, he said, "it invites subterfuge and evasion by monopolistic combines"—and the consumer will suffer.

May Not Kill Union With Kindness

A SOUTHERN textile company which tried to kill a union with kindnes has been told by the U. S. Supreme Court to mend its ways.

The court's unanimous decision said that during collective bargaining negotiations, a company cannot legally put into effect a wage increase without first consulting the union.

The decision came down in a case involving the CIO Textile Workers Union, which had filed unfair labor practice charges against the Crompton-Highland Mills at Griffin, Georgia.

In December, 1945, the TWUA had explained to the Labor Board, the union asked for wage increases for mill employes. The company, after hearing the union's demands, counter-offered with increases of from 1c to 1½c an hour. The union turned it down.

TWELVE DAYS later the company granted its employes increases of from 2c to 6c an hour, without discussing the raise with the union.

The NLRB ruled that the action was "manifestly inconsistent with the principle of collective bargaining," but the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals threw out the NLRB decision. The Supreme Court action had the effect of upholding the Board's order to the company that it "cease and desist" from refusing to bargain with the CIO textile union.

The Court said it would not necessarily object to a unilateral wage grant by an employer if the offer had been made during the course of collective bargaining and had either been rejected or not acted upon by the union.

But in the Crompton-Highland case, the court said, "we hold that the Board's order to cease and desist is justified under the circumstances of this case, to the extent that the order requires the employer to cease and desist from refusing to bargain collectively..."

So, 3½ years after the event, the employer has been reprimanded.

Here's What Happen To The TWUA Local

1945. Union organized the plant.

April-August, 1946. Local struck over contract issue but did not win an agreement. During the strike the company obtained an injunction which resulted in the arrest of 26 strikers. One of them spent three months on a Georgia chain gang and the other 25 were given shorter jail sentences.

1949. Despite all this, the local continues to exist.

TWUA Reg. Dir. Kenneth Douty said last week that as a result of the Supreme Court decision, the company at last will have to bargain with the union.

3-Man Unit To Settle Ford Issue

THE CIO Auto Workers last week wound up a 24-day strike over the speedup issue at Ford, immediately took another deep breath and embarked on contract negotiations.

Among the workers returning to their posts were the 28 men the company had fired in connection with the strike. The union won reinstatement for all of them.

The question of the company's right to speed up the assembly line to make up for production losses incurred through no fault of the workers will be decided by a three-man arbitration board. The union will select one member; the company another.

If the third member, to be chosen by these two, is not agreed on by June 7, Dr. Harry Shulman, the permanent umpire under the Ford contract, will automatically serve as third member.

THE QUESTION to be submitted to the arbiters will read:

"Does the company under the contract, on the basis of health and safety or otherwise, have the right to require an employe to perform his work assignment on any unit in less time than the company's time study shows for his assignment, provided the employe is not assigned more than 480 minutes of work as measured by the time study in an eight-hour shift?"

Ford also agreed not to increase the normal amount of work because of absenteeism, and to keep the assembly line at a constant speed, spacing units to provide an even flow of work.

THE TWO sides have already begun preliminary talks on the union's 1949 proposals under the contract's reopening clause. A $100 a month pension plan, a medical care plan and a wage increase are the union's goals.

Meanwhile, in South Bend, Ind., about 7500 of the union's members were still out on the pavement in a six-week strike at Bendix Aviation Corp.

As in the Ford walkout, the Bendix dispute concerned union charges of a speedup. The union's offer to end the strike on the basis of the Ford settlement formula was turned down by Bendix.

Reinstatement of 47 workers fired by Bendix because of an alleged slowdown also is being demanded by the local.

END FORD STRIKE: Members of the Ford Local 600, CIO Auto Workers, are shown here voting to approve the agreement negotiated by their leaders and the Ford Motor Co. to end their 24-day strike. The settlement also was approved by UAW members at the Lincoln and Mercury plants of Ford Motor Co.

Berlin Rail Strikers Ask For U. S. Support

BERLIN'S striking railway workers have turned down overwhelmingly an unsatisfactory compromise on their demands for wages and union recognition by Soviet authorities.

Meanwhile the union has forwarded appeals for "understanding and material support" to labor in the United States and other democratic nations.

A referendum on a "compromise" offer put forth by the Soviet-controlled Berlin railway management brought nearly 13,000 votes against, to only some 300 for acceptance of the offer. The offer was worked out by the management and Communist-led unions which have only a small proportion of the workers in their ranks.

The strike, conducted by the Independent Workers Organization (UGO), demanded that railway workers in Berlin be paid in Western marks, rather than in the far less valuable currency of the Soviet-occupied Eastern zone.

The appeal for support came to CIO from Scharnowski and Bracht of the striking Berlin union.

"Our independent railroad union is faithful to trade union strike methods and democratic objectives, although it is met by the railroad management with arms," the message said.

"Our fight is no nationalist struggle but a hunger action against unjust exploitation and oppression of trade union rights—a struggle for freedom."

THE GERMAN union leaders said that during the last week in May the strike was almost 100% effective, and that the "use of strikebreakers from the Eastern sector of Berlin and the Eastern zone of Germany was unsuccessful, since only forced labor was at the disposal of the railway administration.

"These people had been threatened with political persecution by Communist and Soviet occupation authorities.

"Prisoners from concentration camps and other oppressed persons were forced to work as strikebreakers," the German union officials told the CIO. "Hundreds of deserters report daily to the strikers."

The UGO union charged that the railway administration "ordered armed railroad guards and Eastern zone police to protect the strikers, who came from the ranks of the Communist union and youth organizations, and from the Communist-dominated Socialist Unity Party.

Some 12,000 railway workers have been paid in the inferior Eastern marks, "contrary to legal currency regulations," the strike leaders declared. "Converted into Western marks, the railroaders' monthly income was thus about only 40% of the monthly unemployment compensation payments in the Western sector of the city."

The union also struck to win reinstatement of about 1000 workers fired for joining the anti-Communist UGO union.

Jim Crow Blamed In Bunche's Refusal To Take Job

Washington's rigorous Jim Crow was a major factor in keeping the State Dept. from obtaining the services of Ralph Bunche, leading United Nations official, the New York Herald Tribune reported last week.

Bunche, who won world-wide praise for mediating the Israel-Egypt military dispute for the UN, was recently offered the post of Assistant Secretary of State for Middle Eastern Affairs. He would have been the first Negro to hold so high a position in the Federal government.

Bunche turned down the job, citing both a lower salary than he now receives from the United Nations, and "many other reasons."

Carl Levin, Herald Tribune Washington correspondent, said that behind the refusal to work in the Capital was Bunche's bitter experience with discrimination in Washington. He lived there for 18 years, both as a student and as a professor at Howard University.

The Herald Tribune recalled that last March Bunche was invited to appear as principal speaker at a dinner of the Middle East Institute, an organization composed of scholars and professional people interested in Eastern Mediterranean affairs.

The Wardman Park Hotel, where the dinner was scheduled to be held, sent back an advance deposit when the management learned a Negro—one of the country's most prominent citizens—was to be present.

But, the paper reported, the Wardman Park management made the announcement by 'phone and refused to put its reasons on paper.

Senate Takes Up Labor Law This Week

THE SENATE Democratic leadership has decided to put Taft-Hartley repeal legislation ahead of the Atlantic Pact.

It is expected that the Thomas-Lesinski Bill, already approved by the Senate Labor Committee, will hit the floor in a few days.

The decision was revealed by Senate Majority Leader Scott W. Lucas (D., Ill.) in a letter to CIO Pres. Philip Murray. The latter had written Lucas listing several legislative matters on which he thought Congress should take action at once. House Majority Leader John McCormack (D., Mass.) sent a similar letter.

The floor debate should begin this week, as soon as the deficiency bill is completed. It is expected that the Taft amendments will be offered as soon as the Thomas-Lesinski debate starts.

LUCAS' LETTER, after telling Murray of the decision on Thomas-Lesinski (S249), said in part:

"You speak of wage-hour legislation. That is still in committee, but I am hopeful that it will soon be reported and acted upon by the Senate. It is on our program for this session, and it will be covered before the session ends.

"The comprehensive housing and slum-clearance bill has been passed. The federal aid to education bill has been passed. The school health bill has been passed. All await action in the House.

"You raise the question of social security expansion and renovation. Social security legislation must originate in the House, and this has not yet reached the Senate.

"I believe you are thoroughly familiar with our effort early in the session to amend the Senate rules to obtain a mechanism for closing debate on civil rights legislation, in order to bring it to a vote.

"Since that time, no civil rights bill has been reported to the Senate calendar. But you may be assured that the leadership has lost none of its determination to try again to obtain action on the civil rights program.

"Many of the supporters of the President's proposals do not feel that the rule which was adopted by the Senate at the close of the recent filibuster will be effective in obtaining action on this legislation, but we intend to make every effort to accomplish our objective in spite of that rule.

"Your enumeration of legislation did not include measures necessary to the success of our foreign policy, but I am certain you are just as interested as I am in those measures."

(Pres. Murray confined his requests to domestic matters. The CIO is an active supporter of ECA, and the Atlantic Pact.)

LUCAS CONTINUED: "In addition to the above, the Senate has passed the Rent Control Bill, designed to give fair treatment to millions of tenants and landlords. We have passed the Reorganization Bill and the Armed Services Unification Bill, two far-reaching bills which will make our government more efficient and save hundreds of millions of dollars.

"We have also passed an act to extend export controls, various defense bills, five appropriation bills and quite a few other bills regarded as essential for operation of the government.

"I am just as anxious as you are to obtain speedy action on the humanitarian program of the President. But I am sure that you understand that we have unlimited debate in the Senate and no enforceable rule of relevancy. Therefore, we can move only as fast as the determination and the endurance of the opposition will permit.

"IF THE TIME consumed by debate on the major measures which are still to be considered makes their passage impossible by July 21, the time fixed by law for adjournment, we shall extend the length of the session until we have dealt with the most urgent proposals of the President.

"There are, as you say, many more phases of the Administration's program which must receive consideration and action at the next session of the 81st Congress, if they are not ready for consideration in this session.

"Your views on the legislative program will always be welcomed by the leadership in the Senate."

MEANWHILE, THE House Labor Committee Democratic members have decided that the subcommittee headed by Rep. Augustine B. Kelley (D., Pa.) shall meet and attempt to write a compromise labor bill.

The House committee has to do that because of these events, all a month or so ago:

1. Speaker Sam Rayburn (D., Tex.), fearing that anti-labor forces would defeat the Thomas-Lesinski Bill, had a new measure drawn up—to be sponsored by Rep. Hugo Sims (D., S. C.). The House rejected the Sims bill by a narrow margin on a teller vote.

2. Rep. John Wood (D., Ga.) then offered his bill—which labor hit as worse than T-H—and the House voted to substitute the Wood bill for Thomas-Lesinski. The vote was 217 to 203, rollcall-wise.

3. The following day, the House recommitted the Wood Bill by a vote of 212 to 209.

Now the Democrats have decided to try again.

Now!

The CIO is urging its members to take up their pen or pencil, or sit down to a typewriter and write (or telegraph) your Senators that you want them to:

Vote for the Thomas-Lesinski Bill (S249) with no crippling amendments.

Right now, please!

How It Stands

Where Taft-Hartley repeal legislation stands:

House: Wood bill substituted for Thomas-Lesinski, then recommitted. Subcommittee to draw up new bill.

Senate: Will take up Thomas-Lesinski Bill this week.

Pie Goes All the Way Around in Gadsden, Alabama

Thus went an old labor song.

And it was a case of "pie in the sky bye and bye" for the pie vendors at the gates of the textile mills in Gadsden, Ala., until Burns Cox and his volunteer organizing committee of the Dwight Manufacturing Co.'s textile mill decided to do something about it.

As a result the pie vendors, who are employed by the McNair Drug Co., joined the CIO Retail & Wholesale Union. A contract has been negotiated bringing raises ranging from $5 to $12.50 a week for the McNair employes, paid holidays and vacations. In addition, the work week of two girls employed in the McNair drug store was cut 10 hours with no loss in pay.

TWU k.o.s AFL in S.F.

THE CIO Transport Workers have won a lop-sided victory among all the San Francisco, Calif., surface transportation employes, sweeping out an AFL union which had been on the city transit properties since 1908.

Conducted by the Federation of Municipal Employes, an independent group, the election gave TWU a 1396-to-141 majority. Approximately 2400 employes are in the bargaining unit.

For years, the city's utilities commission has bargained with both the AFL's Amalgamated Street Railway Employes and the CIO union. Repeated efforts of TWU to prove its majority via an election were each time blocked by the Amalgamated. When finally a rank-and-file group succeeded in having the election scheduled, the State AFL raised $25,000 to fight TWU.

Now that it has proved the extent of its support among the employes, the CIO local's big task will be to obtain recognition from the Utilities Commission as exclusive bargaining agent.

IN LOUISVILLE, Ky., meanwhile, the union had a city-wide bus strike on its hands.

In response to the local's request for an 18c hourly increase, the Louisville Railway Co. had offered 2c. Average hourly rate is now $1.25, compared with $1.44 in New York City, and $1.43 in Philadelphia.

To the local's president, Hubert Moore, TWU Pres. Michael Quill and TWU Secy.-Treas. Gustav Faber wrote: "We are convinced that your demands are legitimate and that you deserve full support of all organized labor in Louisville. . . . You have the full support of the International office until victory is yours."

An arbitrator also granted the union's request for a uniform contract expiration date on the city's main private bus lines. The new expiration date of June 30 gives the companies and the union less than 30 days to complete negotiations before the agreements run out. Discussions on the union's contract program of a 21c hourly increase, a 40-hour week, increased vacations and other benefits have not yet begun.

Accuse Mine, Mill In Beating

OFFICIALS of the CIO Shipbuilding Union have accused two officials of the Mine-Mill Union of beating up and severely injuring two Shipbuilding employes in Connecticut.

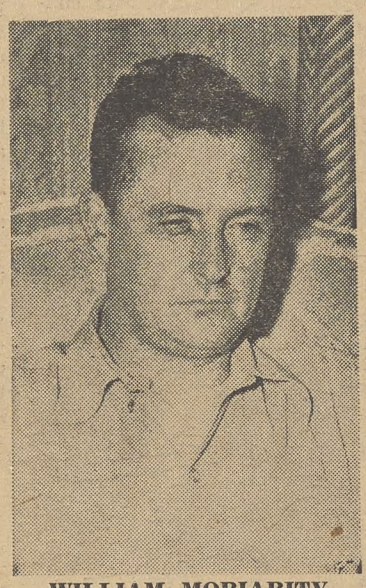
The incident occured about a month after one in Bessemer, Ala. There, a Mine, Mill officer, Secy.-Treas, Maurice Travis, was struck by a CIO member after he called that CIO member a filthy name. As a result, Travis lost an eye.

The Mine-Mill Union blew that incident into one of major proportions. It said Travis had been attacked by a goon squad paid by the CIO Steelworkers' Union. It accused CIO and Steelworkers' Pres. Philip Murray of KKKism, Hitlerism, dictatorship, Brown Shirtism and company stoogeism, just to mention a few.

In Bessemer, Mine-Mill, using a typical Communist line tactic, stooped to the Klan method of attempting to split the white and Negro workers. That failed, and Bessemer ore miners are now in the Steelworkers.

In Ansonia, Conn., the Progressive Metals Council of the Shipbuilding Union has been distributing literature for several months outside the American Zinc Co. plant. Many AZC workers have indicated their desire to get out of the Mine-Mill Union, accusing the union of Communist policies.

Last week, IUMSWA Intl. Rep. Thomas J. Cooke and PMC Staffer William J. Moriarity were outside the plant, distributing campaign literature. Suddenly, they declare, a group of from 20 to 25 men came from the plant and surrounded them. The two men assert they were attacked from behind without warning. They say the group hemmed them in while John Rapuano, president of Mine-Mill local 445, and a man who goes under the name of Lefty Chase beat them up.



WILLIAM MORIARITY

THOMAS COOKE

Cooke suffered a concussion of the brain and his face was badly cut up. He was knocked to the ground.

Moriarity was beaten heavily around the head and neck and was knocked to the ground. Doctors are awaiting the results of X-rays to see how seriously he was hurt.

John Driscoll, of the PMC group who led thousands of members out of Mine, Mill into Ship because of what he called the pro-Communist actions of Mine, Mill officers, denounced the tactics in Ansonia as "goon-like."

He accused the Mine, Mill leaders of attempting to scare AZC workers away from Ship by telling them they'll be laid off if they join Ship. That tactic is failing, he said, since many Mine, Mill members, disgusted, are mailing in filled-out application cards to Ship.

Here's To Oklahoma

OH, WHAT A wonderful state is Oklahoma!

And not only because of a play and musical comedy. This time because of the recent session of the legislature.

Not a single anti-labor bill was passed. Not a single anti-labor measure is on the state's books.

Most important action was passage of a death benefit law. The legislation, which covers "hazardous employment"—with a broad definition of "hazardous"—provides for benefits of $6400 to $8800, based on dependency and $5000 for a single person, plus funeral expenses.

The bill evoked the maximum of opposition from the Associated Industries and from insurance companies.

Other bills backed by CIO and passed included:

Increased State Labor Dept. funds; increased pay for State labor commissioners; improved factory inspection; workmen's compensation increased from $21 to $25 per week; unemployment compensation up from $18 for 20 weeks to $22 for 22 weeks; improved miners' safety law; jury wheel bill.

Another major victory was scored by labor when a rent decontrol bill failed of passage. The Apartment Owners' Association was active in the fight for the bill.

VERY POOR RECORD

We think it's time for some straight, blunt talk about the 81st Congress, which has been in session more than five months.

It has behaved as if it thought the people were kidding when they went to the polls last November.

Only two major measures—ECA extension and an inadequate rent control law—have been enacted.

The Senate has passed a housing bill and a federal aid to education measure, and the House has approved extension of reciprocal trade agreements.

Few of the regular appropriation bills have received an OK.

Sure, we know that it took some time for the new Congress to organize at the beginning of the session. And we know, too, that the illness of certain key Congressional figures has caused unexpected delays.

But these things don't provide an adequate excuse for the very poor record that Congress has made up to date.

A broadside, over-all condemnation of the entire Congress would be unfair because a lot of "right guys" have been in there pitching for the program that was approved at the polls last year.

So let's try to give credit where it's due and place blame where it should be.

CALL THEMSELVES DEMOCRATS, BUT--

The record of the 81st Congress would be much different than it is if a group of lawmakers who call themselves Democrats had acted like Democrats instead of like Old Guard Republicans.

The Dixiecrats joined forces with the GOP to battle the Fair Deal program upon which President Truman was elected to office.

Labor-supported Congressmen and Senators—with few exceptions—have attempted to carry out last year's election mandate. "Regular" Democrats from both the North and South have supported the Administration.

The blame, actually, shouldn't be placed on Congress as a whole but upon the Dixiegop coalition.

Credit should go to those who have been battling for enactment of the Truman program.

GET JOB DONE, THEN GO HOME

Unless Congress plans to put on a sudden burst of speed, talk of recessing and going home less than two months from now simply doesn't make good sense.

We're hopeful that there will be a burst of speed, that a major portion of the Fair Deal program will be enacted this summer. But we feel that there won't be unless Administration leaders in both houses—and the President himself—do some hard pushing where it's needed most.

Labor and other liberal forces still have a big political job on their hands. Those who had bucked the Fair Deal should be permitted in the future to return to private life.

Members of the CIO have a good agency through which to work in the political field. It's PAC, of course, and PAC already has done much planning for the 1950 elections.

The record of Congress already has provided much good campaign material.

Phony 'Socialized Medicine' Drive

Misrepresentation Basis Of Campaign Against National Health Insurance

By ALLAN L. SWIM

MOST CIO members unquestionably are strongly opposed to socialized medicine for the U. S.

They wouldn't want all of the nation's doctors to work for the Federal Government.

They wouldn't want a governmental agency to select the doctors who would treat them and their families.

And they would support doctors who contended that the government shouldn't select their patients.

There probably are many other things about socialized medicine to which they'd object.

So, actually, the CIO supports the American Medical Association in its contention that the U. S. shouldn't have socialized medicine.

BUT THE CIO doesn't support the AMA in its campaign of gross misrepresentation—a costly campaign designed to sell the public the idea that the health insurance program now before Congress constitutes socialized medicine.

It's hard to pick up a newspaper or magazine these days without seeing results of the AMA's drive to discredit health insurance by hanging false tags on it.

It's extremely regrettable that an organization which presumes to speak for the nation's medical men should stoop to subterfuge and disreputable public relations practices in an effort to defeat a program dealing with the health and welfare of millions of persons.

And it's regrettable that so few publications have attempted to present honestly to their readers the issues involved in the health insurance program.

HEALTH insurance isn't socialized medicine—and don't let your doctor or anybody else tell you that it is.

Wage earners, through payroll deductions or some other plan, would pay regularly into an insurance fund.

When a person became ill he would go to any doctor participating in the plan and receive the treatment recommended by the doctor.

Later the doctor would present his bill for services rendered and be paid out of the insurance fund.

Doctors would not be required to participate in the plan and patients could receive treatment from non-participating doctors.

The only compulsion connected with the plan would be in connection with the payment of taxes to support it.

NO DOCTOR worth his salt will argue that medical service in the U. S.—although undoubtedly the best in the world—meets the needs of the public.

Anybody who understands the economic facts of life knows there are millions of persons in the country now receiving "charity" medical services and millions more who do not have enough in reserve even to pay for a minor operation.

Voluntary health insurance plans have, for the most part, worked remarkably well—but they don't cover enough people.

The nation's doctors have been able to provide excellent treatment for those able to afford it—but too few can afford it.

Health insurance would provide a method by which more people could pay for better medical care.

THE CIO and all other groups interested in the nation's health should expose the current "we don't want socialized medicine" campaign for what it really is.

The people should have an opportunity to get the facts about health insurance and make up their minds—on the basis of facts—whether they want the Federal Government to set up a health insurance program.

The decision to be made is to important to be based on guesswork and misrepresentation.

Paper Worker Chosen As Example for Russians

RUSSIANS MAY get a chance to learn later this summer about the life and work of a typical member of the CIO United Paper Workers, if they are able to get a copy of the August issue of "Amerika," Russian language publication of the U. S. State Dept.

The magazine will carry an illustrated story about Mt. Vernon, Ohio, as an example of an average American industrial community, CIO Paper Worker Cloren James was one of those selected to show the varied occupations, interests and talents of Mt. Vernon's citi-

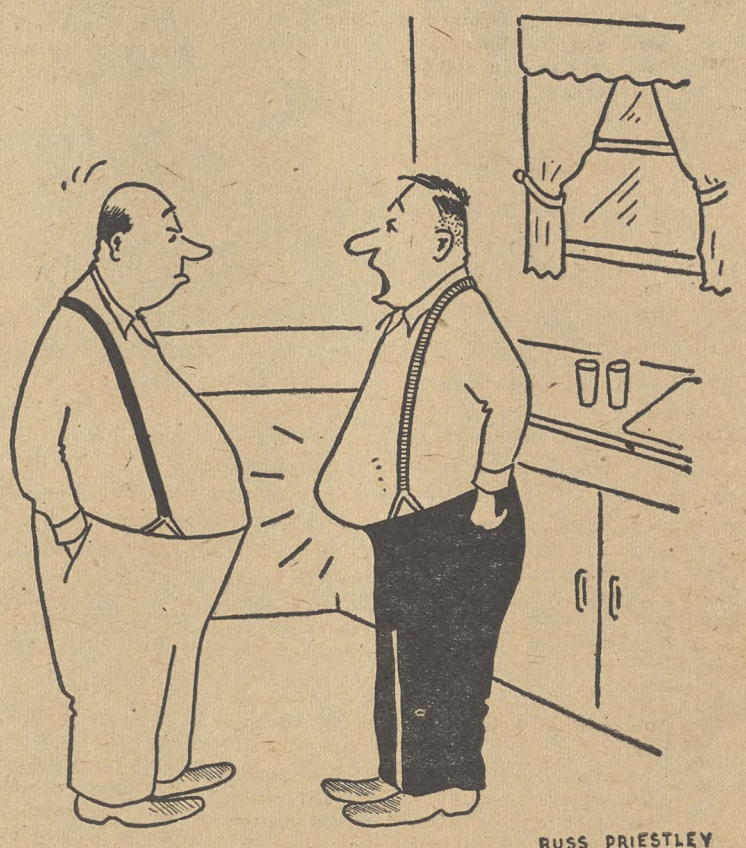
A member of Paper Workers Local 262, James works at Shellmar Products, cellophane bag and wrapper plant, where he earns $60 for a 40-hour week. The union contract provides for time and a half for overtime, double time for Sundays, paid holidays and vacation.

His family—wife and two children—live in a two-story house which they own. Recently he installed a new kitchen and a laundry.

It is estimated that a million Russians read the 50,000 copies of Amerika printed each month. The magazine is printed on slick paper and contains many illustrations. It is distributed through the American embassy in Moscow and is sold in such out-of-the-way places as the settlements along the Trans-Siberian Railway and in the Caucasus.

Mt. Vernon, chosen by the State Dept. on a previous occasion as a typical American town, is an industrial community of some 10,000, about 40 miles northeast of Columbus in a fertile farming valley on the Kokosing river. There are four plants in town—Cooper-Bessemer, Pittsburgh Plate Glass, Timken Roller Bearing, and Shellmar Products Corp.

Fourteen pages of the August issue of Amerika will tell the Russians how the citizens of Mt. Vernon work and play. It will be the story of free American citizens who live and work in the tree-lined town in the midst of central Ohio's lush farm land.



"Working at that desk all the time is beginning to show on me."

N. J. CIO Flays Gov. Driscoll

Gov. Alfred Driscoll, of New Jersey, has been sharply criticized by the N. J. CIO for his "unseemly and indecent haste" in planning to "repair the damage to your administration's unconstitutional public utility anti-strike law."

The State Supreme Court recently ruled the law unconstitutional. It had been passed during the telephone strike of 1947. Carl Holderman, CIO state president, wrote Driscoll:

"There has been no haste to remedy obvious defects in the unemployment compensation law. You have not hurried to amend the state's temporary benefits law. There has been no appreciable speedup in handling delayed worker claims for UCC benefits."

He Said He Was A Loyal Union Man

JOE WAS known among many of his fellow workers as a "company stooge." They said he often represented managements's viewpoint better than management did.

The comments Joe made when a discussion of strikes arose made it obvious he wasn't a union-minded man. He was always in accord with management when a controversy involving a union arose.

He said he just couldn't see any reason for workers organizing. His view was that "the boss always knows best."

So there wasn't any moaning among his colleagues when Joe left his job and the town in which he had been working.

JOE (WHICH isn't his right name) went to work a few years later in a shop which a CIO union was trying to organize.

And again he decided to play the role of "boss's boy."

He revealed how he felt about organized labor when the union made a postcard poll of employes, asking them if they wanted the union to represent them in collective bargaining.

Joe scrawled the word "NO" on the card, affixed his signature and return it to the union.

A majority of those employed in the shop did likewise, so the union dropped its attempt to organize them.

This happened a half dozen or more years ago.

JOE MOVED on later to another job—in a shop that had just changed ownership. The shop was well organized for a long time and had enjoyed reasonably good relations with the former employer.

For some reason or other Joe joined the union.

The new management made it obvious during its first contract negotiations that it was going to follow a "get tough" policy. It proposed contract changes which it knew the union couldn't accept without at least facing the threat of losing its charter.

Joe and all other members of the union were told this by their officers, but Joe began pitching for management's plan.

He said it was fair and reasonable, that the union should accept it, that there was no reason to hold out for more.

THE UNION held a meeting to discuss contract negotiations and to plan its next move.

Officers pointed out that the company was asking for an inferior contract containing at least one clause which the international union could not accept.

Joe got up and began arguing that the union leaders didn't know what they were talking about.

Debate got hot and heavy—as it sometimes does. Somebody questioned Joe's union loyalty. Joe protested.

He was an A-No. 1 union member and he was looking out for the best interests of the organization, he declared.

WHILE JOE was attempting to convince his listeners that he was a dyed-in-the-wool trade unionist an officer of the union began digging among some papers on the desk.

Finally the officer found an old postcard—one that was postmarked a half dozen or more years ago.

On it was scrawled the word "NO" and under the "NO" was Joe's signature.

The officer called this to the attention of the union—and suddenly Joe's case collapsed.

THAT REPORT CARD!

FCC Rules Radio Owners May Express Editorial Views

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

RADIO STATION owners—some 2000 corporations throughout the United States—have won the right to express their editorial views over the airwaves.

The Federal Communications Commission, after a 13-month study of the problem, reversed an eight-year-old policy decision that station owners could not use their own stations to express their own personal views.

CIO, together with more than a score of other organizations, had urged the FCC at the 1948 hearings to continue the ban on editorialization.

In its testimony at Commission hearings, the CIO argued that relaxing the ban would give over-emphasis to the corporate viewpoint in broadcasting. Such a move, CIO said, would tend to cut down the non-partisan character of news presentation by stations whose owners hold strong editorial views on current issues.

The FCC, in a 12-page policy decision, ruled that "individual licenses of radio stations have the responsibility of determining the specific program material to be broadcast over their stations.

"This choice, however," the FCC said, "must be exercised in a manner consistent with the basic policy of Congress that radio be maintained as a medium of free speech for the general public as a whole, rather than as an outlet for the purely personal or private interest of the individual."

Station owners, the FCC added, should not achieve "partisan or one-sided presentation of issues" on controversial matters, but should present their own ideas only in conformity with the right of the public to "hear a reasonably balanced presentation of all responsible viewpoints on particular issues."

Free Press

Freedom of press has scored a victory in Flora, Ill.

Charles A. Crowder, publisher of the Flora Sentinel, wants to put out a fair paper, in which he tells each side of the story in his news columns. On his editorial page, he reserves the right to take sides.

Recently, the AFL Electrical Workers went on strike against the local power plant, which refused the union recognition, though it could easily prove a vast majority. Crowder studied the case, printed statements from both sides, backed the IBEW editorially.

Local merchants decided to get Crowder. They bought up his $12,500 mortgage, told him they were foreclosing. He won a court stay of 30 days.

Last week, the IBEW loaned him the $12,500 with no strings attached.

MISS FRIEDA Hennock, a member of the Commission, dissented sharply from the decision, principally on grounds that no method exists for "policing and enforcing the requirement that the public trust granted to a licensee be exercised in an impartial manner."

There's nothing basically wrong with expression of the station owners' views, she said, "if fairness could be guaranteed. I believe we should have such a prohibition (of station editorializing) unless we can substitute for it some more effective method of insuring fairness."

A large proportion of the country's radio stations are now owned by newspaper publishers, and both the CIO and other organizations which testified at the FCC hearings warned that this growing monopoly of expression would be heightened by giving editorial rights to station owners.

On the other hand many station owners—and some of the networks—are obviously far less interested in expressing views on serious issues than of making money out of show business.

Their testimony at the hearings indicated belief in the principle of freedom of editorialization, but they showed little interest in making use of their new right.

CBS immediately hailed the decision, however, and announced it would start editorial broadcasts in the near future. NBC—linked financially to the Radio Corporation of America—and Mutual, in which the Chicago Tribune's Col. McCormick has a sizeable interest—have not yet announced their plans.

WHILE granting the station owners much of what they sought, the Commission also rapped the knuckles of some radio interests which have been fighting all FCC regulation policies.

The Commission denied the industry's claim that the Free Speech amendment to the Constitution took the whole matter out of the Commission's hands.

It also pointed out what many station owners tend to forget: that under the licensing system used in this country, radio stations are required "to devote a reasonable percentage of their broadcasting time to the discussion of public issues of interest in the community . . . and that such programs be designed so that the public has a reasonable opportunity to hear different opposing positions . . ."

FE Tries To Smear Murray And Reuther

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

THE FARM Equipment Workers, which has defied a CIO directive to merge with the Auto Workers, is engaged in character assassination of at least two top officials of CIO.

In Louisville, Ky., Local 236 of FE has taken to the radio in an effort to smear CIO Pres. Philip Murray and CIO Vice Pres. Walter Reuther, who is also head of UAW.

Local 236 put two members and the wife of a third on the air. The Bessemer, Ala., Big Lie of the Mine, Mill union was rehashed, even though Mine, Mill's story has been discredited by the facts.

Louisville followers of CIO policy, though they felt that most of the workers at the Louisville Intl. Harvester plant wouldn't believe FE's charges, made sure that a complete rebuttal was made.

Their theme: "To the Harvester workers: come with us. Join with us and march with us."

ONE OF the FE speakers, supinely reading what had been handed him by FE officers, said that Murray's Steelworkers had "teamed up with the company and a bunch of Ku Kluxers" in Bessemer. They further said that the Steelworkers "injected the race issue into the election contest" between them and Mine, Mill.

The "race issue," if the radio representatives of Local 236 are interested in truth, was injected, not by the Steelworkers, but by Mine, Mill, which followed the Communist Party line of splitting the white and Negro workers by spreading lies and fear among the latter, seriously setting back better relations.

The radio program referred to Murray as a "small man," as one who signs backdoor agreements, as one who "must think he is Hitler or Mussolini or somebody," as one who "sounds like Hitler, who rose to power in Germany by calling all his opponents Communists."

Murray has been elected president of CIO 10 times—every time unanimously.

The FE program even used a form of red-baiting. Murray, a staunch anti-Communist, had refused to sign the non-Communist affidavit of the Taft-Hartley law on the grounds that it is an invasion of personal rights.

The FE speaker said: "I thought he was the one who was attacking everybody as Reds."

Another speaker declared: "Well, that just shows how much sense there is to the whole thing. These dictators do not operate on principles. They take whatever tack is necessary to gain their end."

Reuther was given the works, too. He was referred to as "little people," as one "real people won't have anything to do with," as one who "hasn't got any decent contracts to talk about," as one who sold out his men in Detroit and elsewhere," as one who "can't get FE by fair means, so he is going to try foul methods."

FE recently signed a contract unchanged with International Harvester. UAW, at John Deere, has rejected a nine-cent offer and is striving for a higher increase.

MURPHY, referring to the FE broadcast, said:

"Never in my life have I encountered such a barrage of vilification and misrepresentation as I did in that broadcast, and I suppose that those who wrote this broadcast and those who delivered it felt that it would bait those of us in CIO who differ with them and who are among the overwhelming majority, into a like campaign of personal abuse and misrepresentation.

"But I would rather take the opportunity to present the program of CIO to my listeners because I feel that in that program is the answer to the will and the wishes of the working people of America.

"I do not come to defend the character and integrity of Philip Murray, because his character and integrity need no defense from me or any other worker.

"Certainly Philip Murray has nothing to fear from attacks by those whose loyalty is not to CIO and the American workers, but whose loyalty is to an agency and an organization outside the ranks of American labor.

"I would like to challenge those who speak for the FE to speak out, either for or against the program of CIO.

"The leadership of FE supported Henry Wallace for President, hoping to defeat Truman and bring about the election of Dewey. Now, Dewey was for the Taft-Hartley law; he was committed to it prior to the election, so we can logically assume that if the leadership of FE was for Dewey, they were for retention of T-H.

"We of CIO are for the enactment into law of the recommendations of the President's Committee on Civil Rights.

"Let the leadership of FE speak out. Too long they have been spending the money of the Harvester workers in a campaign of personal abuse that engenders nothing in the hearts of workers but hatred, and let me warn these misleaders of labor:

"You may organize a small group of men on the basis of hatred, but you cannot nourish a man on hatred. You must give him dignity and self-respect and, much more important, you must give him an objective."

"Those who oppose Philip Murray today are the same people who just a few years ago hailed him as the greatest leader of American labor. And I expect that very shortly the line will change again and these characters will again be hailing Murray as the great labor leader that he is.

"If you are for the objectives CIO has brought forth, then you are for the leadership of Philip Murray because, under his leadership, the CIO has promulgated this program. I think it behooves the workers at Intl. Harvester to take note of the fact that the leadership of FE have not presented a constructive program to the people in the shops.

"They are merely an opposition group and are attempting to maintain themselves only as such; and American labor knows that you cannot keep an organization alive merely on the basis of opposition to leadership.

"You must give a man food for his body, food for his mind and food for his soul. You must feed him not hatred, but decent, gainful objectives, as exemplified in the program of CIO.

"I believe that the overwhelming majority of Harvester workers can be found in the category of those willing to make any sacrifice for principle and a program and I urge them to follow the leadership of Murray and Reuther."

After FE had ignored an order from the CIO Executive Board to merge with UAW, and after numerous Harvester employes asked for UAW affiliation, UAW sent an organizing group into Louisville. The FE attack on Murray and Reuther followed.

Overtime Proposal Hit

A bill "reversing" the U. S. Supreme Court and depriving longshoremen of the right to collect back overtime pay may soon be considered by the Congress.

The bill, passed once by the House and made even sharper through a series of Senate amendments, has drawn strong criticism from CIO Legislative Director Nathan Cowan.

It would exempt longshoremen from the provisions of the Wage-Hour Act and at the same time wipe out a series of suits by individual workers to recover back payments for overtime work.

The suits were filed by a group of east coast longshoremen at premium rates because of night or Sunday time or because of extra hazardous conditions. The workers argued that their overtime rates should be based on their premium pay, while the companies contended the overtime amounts should be calculated on the basis of the regular flat pay scale. The Supreme Court, in a decision last session, upheld the men, whose lawsuits total several million dollars.

Cowan, in wires to House leaders, said such an act would be "shocking and indefensible . . . It would be strange if the first wage-hour legislation by the 81st Congress was a bill drastically curtailing protection of the wage-hour law instead of strengthening and modernizing it, as the Administration has planned to do."

The House Labor Committee voted 14-11 to accept the Senate amendments, and now they will be considered by the House Rules Committee.

Ohio Action

Two anti-labor bills before the Ohio legislature were marked for death by the Industry & Labor Committee of the House recently. One would prohibit political activity by unions, and the other would outlaw all forms of union security. Both were overwhelmingly buried by the committee.

Meantime, both chambers of the legislature have now approved a bill which boosts maximum unemployment insurance benefits from $21 to $30 a week; extends coverage from 22 to 26 weeks, and eliminates some "jokers" which deprived idle workers of compensation.

Beer Profits Up

The nation's big brewers aren't suffering any from this spring's falling off in business. Figures released this week show that the four biggest beer puroducers' earnings are 62 to 138% above the first quarter of 1949.

Mich. Gains

Organized labor in Michigan has lost its battle for a real labor relations law, but it has won a fight to knock out some of the worst provisions of the Bonine-Tripp anti-labor law.

A clause requiring a majority vote of all members in a collective bargaining unit for a legal strike was changed to a majority of those voting. Mediation of disputes in nonprofit hospitals is provided for, and a new system of selecting arbitration in utilities disputes was established.

Packing Union Parley Girds To Win Wilson Pact

By NORMAN DOLNICK

FRESH FROM an unbroken string of NLRB election victories over AFL and company unions, more than 500 delegates representing 200,000 workers in the U. S. and Canada met in Sixth Annual Convention of the CIO Packinghouse Workers Union at Estes Park, Col., last week.

President Ralph Helstein told the delegates: "If there is any union which has the kind of members who know what trade unionism means and know what life without a union can be—this union is the one."

Helstein cited the union's record in the 11 months since the 1948 strike in which three members of the union were killed on the picket line, union halls invaded and smashed by police, hundreds of union members discharged and dozens indicted for conspiracy and contempt of court citations.

Out of 591 discharged members, 541 had been returned to their jobs, some with many months' back pay.

In the record-breaking series of victories against company-inspired raids, the Packinghouse Workers cast a total of 13,975 votes for UPWA compared with 3,993 for the combined opposition.

HELSTEIN CONDEMNED tactics of a small minority of "self-appointed leaders" who, he said, had "dishonored their oaths of office and gave aid and comfort to our enemies by unceasing attacks upon the international union and its duly elected officers and by withholding per capita tax payments."

He called on the delegates to show by their actions that "this union has reached maturity and that it can no longer tolerate irresponsible or malicious activities of this character."

The convention moved quickly into action in support of recommendations on three major economic problems facing the workers in the meat packing industry: extension of broad social security under union contracts in coming negotiations, a general wage increase to compensate for reduction in hours and lay-offs, and intensified speed-up which is sweeping the industry.

Natl. PAC Dir. Jack Kroll commended the convention for the leadership shown in carrying forward a strong political action program aimed at uniting farmers and workers in and around the packing centers.

KROLL WARNED the delegates that the "nation today is in a dangerous situation" as a result of the "growing spread between buying power and production."

"Depression," he said, "is made by men of greed—it can be stopped by men of action."

He urged the delegates to immediately "undertake a program in every local to secure 100% registration of the membership and to collect the "buck for PAC" which makes political action possible.

"An unregistered member anywhere is a political scab, and he is letting our organization down just as much as a man who crosses a picket line," Kroll said, adding: "That may make some of you sore, but if it makes you register, I'll take the consequences."

THE TWO MAIN problems, aside from demands in coming negotiations, with which the convention concerned itself were the campaign to bring Wilson & Co. into line with the other meat packers by re-establishing a union agreement and a membership drive to complete organization in the packing industry.

Delegates voted overwhelming support to the campaign to drive home to the general public the union-busting tactics of Wilson, which for the past 11 months has refused to recognize the union. In spite of NLRB victories in every plant, Wilson is still refusing to discuss a master contract similar to those in effect in the plants of other big meat packers.

"Don't eat Wilson meat" is the slogan behind which packinghouse workers are planning to win support for their demands on the company.

DELEGATES ALSO voted to conduct a national referendum on a dues increase in order to raise the funds necessary to complete 100% organization of Swift, Wilson, Armour and Cudahy.

A report on the scientific survey being conducted by UPWA in cooperation with Fisk University to determine the facts about race relations practices within its local unions and the communities where the membership lives received strong support from the convention, which commended the officers for initiating this program and urged that it be continued and strengthened.

I Am Here Today To Tell You

Testimony of Anna Hilton before the Senate sub-committee on national health insurance:

I am here today to tell you what a serious illness has done to my family—to its savings, to its living standards, to its self-respect, and to its plans for the future.

Mrs. Hilton

My husband, August, is 41. All his life he has worked hard and his wages were more than adequate to support our family. For the last 10 years—prior to his illness—he worked in Camden shipyards as a welder. He was a member of the CIO Shipbuilders and earned a base wage of $60 a week. With overtime and incentive pay, his earnings average about $75 a week.

Up to July, 1948, we had accumulated about $1000 in savings, with which we had intended to make a down-payment on a house.

Then illness struck. My husband was rushed to the hospital for an appendectomy. Before the operation, my husband's appendix ruptured. He was stricken with generalized peritonitis.

He returned home in a slightly improved condition. But the peritonitis became chronic and in a few days he was returned to the hospital. His condition became steadily worse, until he was finally placed in a brace from his neck to his legs.

He was finally taken home two months ago—on Aprl 5, 1949. The doctor says his condition is grave and the chances of recovery are slim.

THAT'S THE story of what happened. Now I'd like to tell you about its costs.

My husband had considered the possibility of an illness in the family and we carried Blue Cross. This had cost us $2.50 per month—or $30 a year—for family coverage. But the policy only covered his hospitalization for one month. It did not provide anything for medical expenses or medicines.

The hospital bill alone totaled $4508.90. Doctor bills and prescriptions cost us an additional $770. The total cost to date of my husband's illness has been $5278.90.

In addition to the $648.45 from Blue Cross, we have exhausted our $1000 savings and used practically every cent of our family income to pay $2168 in hospital bills and $770 in doctor and prescription bills.

Despite our tremendous outlays, we find ourselves today with a $1692.45 debt for my husband's hospitalization. Through the efforts of the Union Organization for Social Service—an agency representing CIO, AFL and independent unions in Camden—arrangements have been made for us to repay our debt to the hospital at the rate of $5.00 per week. At this rate, the balance will not be repaid in full for 6½ years.

To help meet the medical bills, I had been working at the Howland-Croft textile plant as a weaver until January of this year. As a member of Local 229, Textile Workers, I earned a base pay of $31.76 per week. But now it's impossible for me to work.

So our only family income is the $40 a week my son, August, Jr., 20, earns as a welder. My daughter, Shirley, 17, is graduating from high school and is already looking for work.

I might mention that while in the hospital my husband had a semi-private room. A private room would have helped his recovery, but this was out of the question financially.

Because of my personal and family experience, I certainly hope this committee will give serious consideration to the passage of the national health insurance bill, as recommended by President Truman. From my own experience, I know voluntary Blue Cross plans are inadequate to do the job.

Carey To Taft:

Unions 100% For Health Insurance

"ONE THING which wage earners definitely want is health insurance," CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey last week told Senator Robert A. Taft (R. Ohio) during a rapid fire exchange between the two men at a hearing on National Health Insurance (S. 1679) before a Senate subcommittee.

"No convention of our members has ever opposed health insurance," Carey continued. "No CIO member has ever written me in opposition to the plan."

(Taft has introduced a health bill, embodying the aims of the American Medical Association. That bill would provide Federal funds to the states to aid voluntary health programs and to provide medical care for those taking poverty oaths.)

During the interchange with the co-author of the Taft-Hartley law, Carey lashed out at the AMA which has assessed its members $25 each to raise a giant war chest to fight health insurance. Carey asked:

"JUST WHEN are you going to apply the T-H Law to this labor leader Fishbein?" (Morris Fishbein, editor of the AMA Journal and a leader of the fight against health insurance.)

If Petrillo or John L. Lewis assessed their members $25 apiece there would be great consternation in Congress, Carey reminded Taft. The CIO official continued:

"One union that needs a little attention—where its service to society is not up to its ability to provide it—is the American Medical Association."

"THERE IS no interference with the free choice of doctors or patients and doctors can continue practicing as individuals if they choose, although group medicine is likewise permitted.

"Voluntary cooperative groups (which the AMA once fought but is now advocating) are encouraged in so far as they provide service.

"The employes of the CIO, for example, who now belong to Group Health here in the District, could continue to get medical care through that cooperative."

Another AMA argument that medical services should be kept entirely on a state basis was answered by Carey who asserted:

"The insurance program would be on a uniform nation-wide basis. The large number of workers who move from state to state would not be confused by state variations not risk losing coverage.

"WE WOULD avoid the deficiency and the complexities that plague us under the present state unemployment systems. The existing records now kept for old age and survivors insurance would readily show which persons are entitled to medical care insurance so that they could receive their cards at the beginning of each year.

"Both the Taft bill (S. 1581) and the Hill bill (S. 1456), would in effect leave control in the hands of medical societies or hospital administrators, or subsidize private organizations without any federal controls or standards.

"It is sheer folly to argue that Congress can fulfill its obligations to promote public health by granting funds to the states and letting the states draw up their own incomplete or conflicting provisions, under medical societies or Blue Cross control, with accompanying grave danger that consumers cooperatives, such as Group Health, would be knifed.

"It is by no means true that a state program is closer to the people than a national program. At conference after conference of our state council representatives there has been unanimous agreement that we want a national system of social insurance, not a bewildering and inadequate maze of state systems.

"OUR STATE governments have unfortunately in many cases remained or become highly undemocratic, as shown very effectively by the U. S. Conference of Mayors. I wish to file with the committee a recent publication of the Mayors' Conference entitled "Government of the people, by the people, for the people." I have had parts of that publication mimeographed and append it to my statement. I have time here to quote only a few sentences:

"'But in our state legislatures today we do not have equality of representation!"

"'59% of the people of this country elect only 25% of the state legislators!'

"'Who are the second-class citizens in this under-represented majority? They are the 84,000,000 people who live in our towns and cities. 59%=25% is bad arithmetic—and bad government. It hurts not just city dwellers, but everybody.'

"I recommend this publication to all those who are misleadingly told that Congress can best promote health by giving funds to the states with inadequate standards.

CAREY PREDICTED that the Administration bill "would aid the entire community—except some patent medicine manufacturers and others who now profit from illness, poverty and ignorance. Even the minority who can now afford first-rate medical service would benefit from the higher standard of public health, the new research discoveries, the conquering of contagious diseases, and the greater measure of community well-being."

The "great majority of people who are self-supporting but cannot meet the costs of heavy medical expenses, would benefit directly through insurance against costs and the availability of doctors," Carey testified.

Health Bill Provisions

The National Health Insurance Bill "implies although does not specifically provide that taxes on employers and employes would be 1½% of payrolls of each group," CIO Secy.-Treas. Carey testified.

"The CIO would prefer to have taxes apportioned on a still fairer basis.

"But we recognize that the system of financing in the Administration bill is more equitable than that in the present voluntary organizaions, such as Blue Cross, Blue Shield or even Group Health, where all participants are charged alike regardless of income."

The bill would provide:

Federal aid for the education and training of physicians, dentists, nurses, sanitary engineers, hospital administrators and other health personnel.

Expansion of hospital facilities and of public health services essential to meet shortages and to improve the functioning of local public health units.

Liberalization of maternal and child health services.

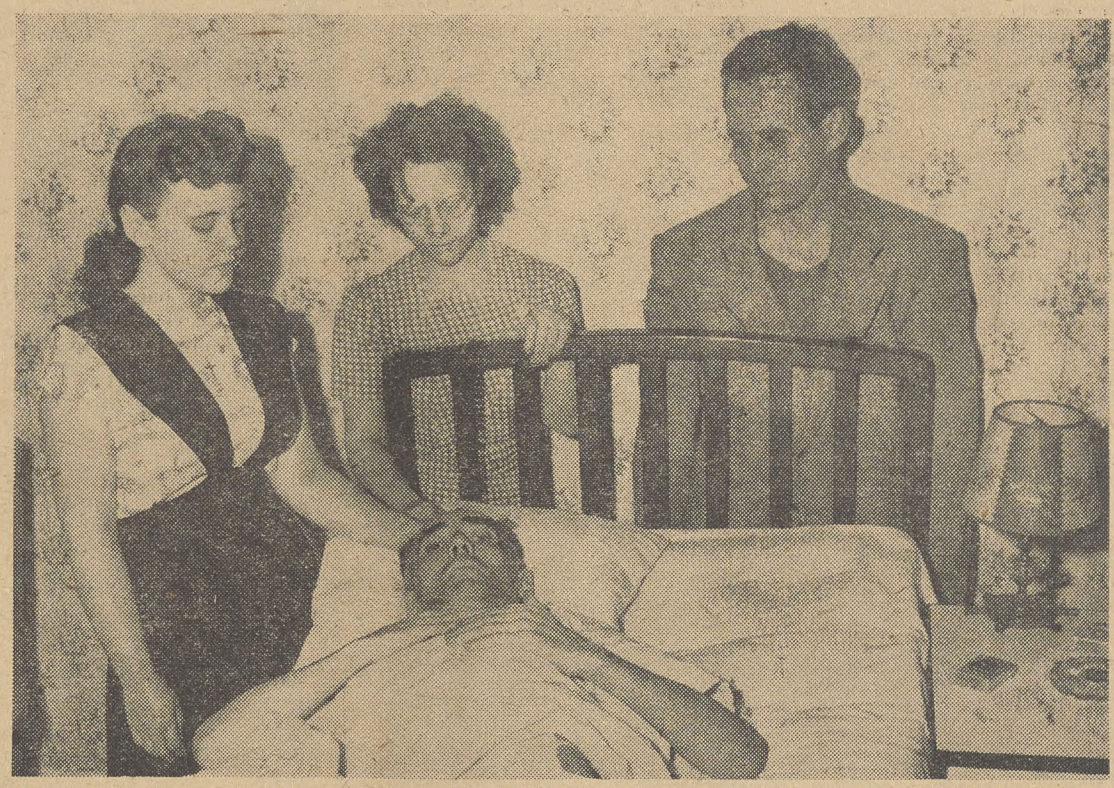
Special aid for rural and other shortage areas short of medical personnel and facilities

An Admission?

Sen. Taft indicated that there should be some sort of compulsory insurance to cover cases of "catastrophic illness."

He made this statement during a verbal bout with CIO Secy.-Treas. Carey over the testimony of Mrs. Anna Hilton, Camden, N. J.

She testified that her husband's illness had cost $5278.90, only $648.45 of which was paid by voluntary hospitalization insurance.



COST OF ILLNESS: Sickness of the head of this house, August Hilton, cost $5278, Mrs. Hilton last week told the members of the Senate sub-committee on national health insurance. At the head of Hilton's bed are Shirley Hilton, Mrs. Hilton and August Hilton, Jr. Hilton is a member of the CIO Shipbuilding Workers. Mrs. Hilton belongs to the CIO Textile Workers. A hospitalization plan paid only for the first month.

Old Man River vs. The Interests

ONE BIG HAPPY FAMILY: This is a picture of the doorway to offices jointly shared by the Associated General Contractors and the Mississippi Valley Flood Control Association. R. W. Crawford, a former Army Engineers general, is manager of one organization and executive vice-president of the other. The Army Engineers don't like river valley authorities, want to hold on to their own power. Head of the "Association" is Rep. Whittington of Mississippi. The lobbies are working hard—and working together! BELOW: Crawford as he looked when he supported the two stars of a major general in the Army Engineers.

THIS IS A story of interlocking directorates—designed to forestall creation of an over-all valley authority for the Mississippi River.

Tied in on the campaign are:

1. The powerful Associated General Contractors, big trade association of the construction industry, which has spearheaded the fight against many of the river valley plans.

2. R. W. Crawford, manager of the Mississippi Valley Flood Control Branch of the Contractors groups. Crawford is a former major general in the Army Corps of Engineers. The Army Engineers, now holding some jurisdiction over flood control, have fought the river valley authority programs tooth and nail.

3. Rep. W. M. Whittington (D., Miss.). Whittington is chairman of the House Committee on Public Works. He is also president of an organization known as the Mississippi Valley Flood Control Association.

This association shares office space in Memphis, Tenn., with the Associated General Contractors, where Crawford makes his headquarters. Crawford is also executive vice-president of Whittington's outfit.

Rep. Whittington is a vice-president of the National Rivers and Harbors Congress, an organization known as one of Washington's most potent lobbies. It has campaigned vigorously against other valley authorities, such as have been suggested for the Columbia and Missouri Rivers.

These authorities, designed to harness the rivers along TVA lines to provide soil conservation, navigation improvements, electric power and flood control, have been strongly endorsed by the CIO and numerous other liberal organizations throughout the country.

The Rivers & Harbors Congress is well represented on Capitol Hill. In addition to Whittington, the Congress includes among its officers Sen. McClellan (D. Ark.), who is president. Sen. McClellan is also a member of the Senate Public Works Committee, which must pass on CVA, MVA and other river valley bills.

Also connected with the Congress are Rep. Case (R. S.D.), and Sen. Wherry (R. Nebr.) the Republican leader in the Senate. Both are Harbors Congress vice-presidents.

With these contacts in the national Congress, and with the Army Engineers through Gen. Crawford, the contractors' lobby group is well set up to bring forth vigorous opposition to the liberal proposals for valley controls, not only on the Mississippi but in other important river basins as well.

Crawford is apparently a little embarrassed when it comes to publicity about the joint office space shared by the Congressman's outfit and the contractors' outfit.

He declined to pose for a picture in the doorway—and he told reporters he doesn't want to "get mixed up in this marriage of convenience between the two offices."

But Crawford used his influence to help the Engineers maintain their stranglehold control of the river valley projects, and to keep out ideas like those of the TVA. The Contractors' group does likewise. Rep. Whittington does likewise.

Meanwhile the top-soil equivalent of a 40-acre farm moves down the Mississippi every few minutes. Every spring the floods damage farm lands.

But the fight against a centralized valley authority just keeps rolling along.

COMPENSATION: Here are some of the 250 delegates who attended the three-day conference on workmen's compensation, industrial safety and unemployment compensation, held by the Ohio State CIO at Columbus. The high rate of industrial accidents and the increase in unemployment were major topics of discussion at the parley.

CIO Institute Set For Iowa

THE FIRST CIO leadership Training Term for 1949 will be held June 5-11 at the Des Moines "Y" Camp, near Boone, Ia. George Guernsey, Natl. CIO associate director of Education, announced.

CIO members from Iowa, Nebraska and Minnesota, including 18 telephone workers from the CIO's newest affiliate, the Communications Workers, are expected to attend.

The State CIO Councils and several International unions are cooperating with the Natl. CIO in running the course.

Study Flayed Bolivia Tin Companies

CONDITIONS that produced the violent strike of Indian miners now in progress in Bolivia's Patino tin mines were sharply criticized in a wartime report by a CIO official representative.

Martin Kyne, official of the CIO Retail Wholesale Union, visited Bolivia in 1943 as a member of a State Dept. mission which investigated a strike at the Patino mines during the war.

The Kyne report told a bitter story of starvation wages, illiteracy, police terrorism, dictation to the government by the absentee-owned mine corporation, and callous disregard for the rights of the miners by both the government and the company.

That conditions have not greatly changed is indicated by news stories from La Paz which describe the fury of the Indian miners' reaction when they learned that their union leader, Juan Iechin, had been arrested as a "revolutionary plotter" and deported to Chile. A number of U. S. executives and engineers were killed and injured in the riots that followed the miners' reaction to the arrest of their leader.

Bolivian government officials have sought to picture the strike as a revolutionary political movement. But CIO Latin American Affairs Committee staff members in New York believe strongly that this is propaganda designed to hide the miners' urgent needs for rises in their primitive living standards.

The Kyne report noted "the dire poverty" in which Bolivia's Indians live. "As a worker, his normal life span is 30 years; he carries his poverty with dignity, silent contempt and a hatred which occasionally boils over in overt acts of resistance to exploitation and resistance."

In a country where 75 per cent of the population is illiterate, "a deliberate lack of educational opportunities has kept the Indian ignorant," Kyne said in 1943. A start was made some years ago to create a system of Indian schools, but "powerful landlords have done away with these schools, undermining them by stealth or destroying them by force."

The Bolivian union movement, hampered by backward conditions and opposition, has had a long history of militance, Kyne said.

The present burst of violence occurred among employes of the mines of Simon Patino, an enormously wealthy operator who has not lived in Bolivia since 1924. Owning 150 mining concessions, Patino controls 47% of the country's all-important tin exports.

"THE MINE operators in the tin industry appear to have rights which the workers do not enjoy," Kyne commented. "They interpret labor laws and declare them unconstitutional when it suits their interest . . . In accordance with this practice, one large tin operator on a certain occasion refused to abide by the minimum hour law on the ground that it was unconstitutional."

Wages are low. Official statistics in 1940 showed that 10 out of 17 tin miners earned less than the equivalent of 60 cents a day, while only 225 out of a total of 17,000 earned more than 80 cents a day.

NEW 'UNION' LOOK: "The toast of the coast" are these members of the drill team of the Telephone Traffic Employes Organization, TWOC-CIO, at San Francisco, Cal. Membership in the union is a requirement for eligibility, and TWOC supplies the uniforms.

PRETTY SHARP TOO: Like the members of the drill team, these girls in the TTEO drum corps are employed by the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Co. The union's publication says: "Hip, one, two, three, four . . . and you can lose plenty of Hip, too. Fall in, girls! Don't stand on the side lines."

Michigan Council Says:

Organize New Unions Where CIO Is Defied

RIGHTWINGERS in the Michigan CIO demonstrated a considerable gain in strength as the State CIO convention easily adopted strongly anti-Communist resolutions and re-elected anti-Communist officers—with only a few dissenters each time.

Most significant of the resolutions was one urging the Natl. CIO to set up a national union into which could go local unions which rebel against their national union's failure to follow Natl. CIO policy.

The organization, the resolution specified, would also be open "for those who are denied, or are defrauded of, their democratic right to put into operation the CIO Board's recommendation that they retire those officers who violate CIO policy."

Directed against "the fifth column agents of the Soviet Union, Communists and their fellow travelers," the resolution said these groups have "repeatedly defied and denounced democratic decisions of Natl. CIO conventions and of the Natl. CIO Executive Board." As a result, the resolution continued, a stigma had been attached to the CIO, which caused many workers to refuse to join CIO, and many others to leave.

Accordingly, the delegates endorsed the CIO Board's stand in requesting the resignation of those Board members who refuse to accept policy as established in convention or by a majority on the Board.

The fight against the resolution was led by Mort Furay and Jerry Shore, regional directors for the CIO Public Workers and the Office & Professional Workers, respectively.

The election of August Scholle to his seventh term as president of the Council best illustrated the growth of the anti-Communists since the 1948 convention.

Scholle this year polled 3,855.67 votes (based on the locals' membership) to 371.39 for his opponent, Harry Sherman, of the Furniture Workers. Last year, with approximately the same number of votes cast, Scholle won 3,119.80 votes to his opponents' 988.32. Thus about 600 votes switched to the right-wing camp in the past year.

Incumbent Secy.-Treas. Barney Hopkins also trampled over his opposition by a better than 10-to-1 majority to win his sixth term in office.

The left-wingers drew more fire from CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, who suggested that if they couldn't find reason to defend the CIO's decisions, they should "just get the hell out of it."

Reciting numerous instances in which left-wing CIO Board members had worked at cross-purposes with the majority, Carey noted that "We couldn't even get unanimous approval in accepting into our ranks the Communications Workers of America."

Carey stressed that the democratic procedures of the CIO require that CIO Board members abide by decisions of the majority once reached in convention or on the Board.

PAC Director Jack Kroll told delegates "the CIO has no quarrel with 'free' enterprise, but we do have a quarrel with 'free' monopoly as represented by the Natl. Association of Manufacturers."

There's no secret to successful political action, the PAC chief said. His prescription: "Just take off your coats and see to it that all eligible voters are registered and that they get out and vote on election day."

Drawing a corollary between the number of votes cast and chances for the victory of liberal candidates, Kroll noted that only 50% of Michigan's 4 million potential voters cast ballots in last fall's election.

"In Michigan you have 10 Congressmen who voted wrong on rent controls and T-H repeal," Kroll pointed out.

If Michigan voters had turned out in greater numbers, at least seven of the Congressional votes would have been in the pro-labor column, he said, adding that those seven votes would have "given us the Thomas-Lesinski bill and Taft-Hartley repeal."

John Gibson, assistant secretary of labor, charged that T-H has "reduced to a minimum organizational efforts among the unorganized workers. Removal of these shackles and the restoration of labor's freedom will go a long way toward placing the labor movement back on an even keel."

The well-being of the American people, he said, is also dependent on regional development and conservation of natural resources. Such projects as the St. Lawrence Waterway and the Missouri Valley Authority, backed by CIO, were cited as examples of such needed development.

Guild Leader Named Editor

MRS. DOROTHY Schiff, president and publisher of the New York Post, believes in advancing good newspapermen, even if they are active leaders of their union.

Moscow, in resigning his Guild post and also from the New York City CIO Council board, said, "I believe that as managing editor I shall be able to further the viewpoint of labor in a far broader field than I was as president of the local, important as that job always seemed to me."

Last year, Moscow ran for the Assembly in Nassau County, N. Y., with Democratic and Liberal backing. He didn't win in that strong Republican district, but received the highest vote ever polled by a Democrat there.

Mrs. Schiff also named James A. Wechsler, noted labor writer, as editor of the paper.

SKF Bearing Plant Lockout In 4th Week

PHILADELPHIA may be the City of Brotherly Love, but there are some 2,200 CIO Steelworkers who'd give odds that the SKF Ball Bearing Co. hasn't heard about it.

Now entering their fourth week on the picket line, the Steelworkers have been locked out since May 16.

Before the contract expired, the union offered to extend the agreement and to continue working while differences were hammered out in negotiations. SKF refused. Instead the company insisted that its demands be accepted before it agreed to a temporary contract extension.

Among the company's demands was a proposal that the union pay the entire cost of grievance procedure—$26,000 a year more than the local takes in, union officials estimate. Such costs have heretofore been assumed by the company. In addition, SKF demanded the right to speed up operations, cut wages after a time study is made, remove incentive pay guarantees and sought revisions in the seniority clause which the union said would be "discriminatory."

THE UNION, ON the other hand is seeking a substantial wage increase, an insurance plan, two additional paid holidays—all denied by SKF.

The union members are awaiting an Unemployment Compensation Board decision to learn whether they will receive benefits under the Pennsylvania law. The State law bars payments to strikers, but makes no mentions of lockout victims.

Employes say "SKF has a reputation to live up to." After destroying one union in 1934, SKF, they charge, has tried to deliver the same medicine to the Steelworkers each contract negotiating period. Two strikes—and now a lockout—in the Steelworkers' five-year history at the company have punctuated the continually stormy relationship. During the 1945 strike, SKF sued the union for $2 million, but later withdrew the suit.

Not only the union—but the government also has had its troubles with the ball bearing manufacturer. The U. S. has charged the concern with engaging in an illegal combine with Swedish and Italian bearing manufacturers to fix prices and snuff out competition. This case is still pending.

Harris Gets ECA Post In Sweden

ECONOMIC Cooperation Administrator Hoffman has announced the appointment of Michael S. Harris, Philadelphia, as chief of the ECA mission in Sweden.

Harris, a former director of Dist. 7 of the Steelworkers, has been labor adviser to the ECA French mission since last October. He will succeed John H. F. Haskell, who has resigned. The change becomes effective June 15.

Harris was prominent in the labor movement before he joined the Steelworkers in 1937. Just before he accepted his first ECA appointment he was director of Dist. 7 of the Steelworkers, and a member of the International Executive Board of the union.

THESE YOUNGSTERS enjoy one of many hearty meals made from the contents of a "general relief" CARE food package delivered to a Greek orphanage. Under CARE's general relief plan, undesignated orders bring packages to needy cases abroad selected by member agencies. CARE's at 50 Broad St., New York City.

DINNER COMING UP! This little girl found a real treasure when the CARE package containing ingredients for a spaghetti dinner was delivered to the orphanage in Italy which shelters her and many other child victims of the war.

7½ Million CARE Packages Sent

The story of CARE's achievements in relieving some of the suffering abroad by its shipment of millions of the now world-famous CARE package is told graphically in a pictorial review, "Three Years of CARE," published by the organization.

Some of the pictures from this booklet, showing the excitement and joy that CARE packages brought to homes, orphan asylums and relief camps are reproduced on this page.

The first CARE delivery was made May 10, 1946, in France. Since then the service has been expanded over Europe and into the Orient. To date, more than 7½ million food and clothing textile packages have been sent abroad through CARE's non-profit service.

WITH THE aid of experts on overseas food problems, the CARE packages have been revised from its early 10-in-1 package, to meet changing needs. The one now being delivered contains more meats, fats, sweets and other items to enrich the European diet.

Cost of the regular package is $10. Last week CARE announced that reductions in wholesale food prices have enabled it to offer a new $5.50 'thrift' food package for delivery in 11 European countries. This was devised for Americans who want to help but cannot afford the $10 regular 22½-pound package costs.

Several special food packages designed for the dietary requirements of various countries have also been developed and are delivered at the regular CARE price of $10 each. These include the Oriental, Kosher, Italian and Greek, and British packages.

Three packages especially for babies are among others offered. One is a layette, one is for infants up to six months old, the other for babies over six months old. The four clothing textile packages contain wool, knitting, linen, and blanket materials which can be converted into a variety of garments for both children and adults.

TWO ITALIAN BOYS lift one of the numerous 29½-pound CARE packages delivered to the House of War Veterans' Children, Ostia, Rome, and are pleased to find it heavy, for it means better meals for them and the other war orphans in the home.

Food And Clothes Scarce Overseas

The Natl. CIO Community Services Committee has announced that it is intensifying its drive to send CARE packages to needy union members overseas.

Reports from foreign trade unions reveal that serious shortages of food and clothing and prohibitive prices are still giving the average worker a mighty hard time.

Some CIO unions and members are helping by sending CARE packages regularly to "adopted" unions or union families overseas.

How about bringing up such a proposition at your next union meeting? For information, write the CIO Community Services Committee, 1776 Broadway, New York 19, N. Y.

SIX-YEAR-OLD REFUGEE from Roumania at the Jewish internees camp on the island of Cyprus, inspects one of the kosher food packages sent in the thousands by Americans. The internees are awaiting entry into Israel.

CARE REACHES VIENNA. Gift of an American, the package came at a time when the blind mother and her two small sons were especially in need of nourishment after a struggle through the long bitter winter.

Report Latin-America Needing U. S. Labor Aid

THE ECONOMY of Latin-America has reached a crisis stage which might lead to disintegration if outside aid is not given, the CIO Committee on Latin-American Affairs has found.

"During the war, Latin-America performed invaluable services for the Allies, both in much-needed foodstuffs and in raw materials," the committee reported. "In so doing, the region in many instances overextended its production and in others reduced it. This caused a subordination of plans for progress and for the program for a better economy.

"Now, much of the area's equipment is obsolete. Replacements are difficult because of inflationary price levels. European markets have dwindled and in many cases have vanished, cutting off a once lucrative source of income.

"As has often been the case in Latin-America's history, this situation leaves the region prey to outside interference by monopolies and financial interests operating under the guise of 'free enterprise.'"

THE CIO committee sees in this situation a vital need for the cooperation of American labor in a program of reconversion, reconstruction and social improvement.

The committee further feels that such cooperation will succeed "only if it is undertaken under democratic governments and with the full participation of free labor and all progressive forces in its planning, administration and social improvement.

"The plan's purposes are simple enough: to free the peoples from their colonial and semi-colonial shackles and put them on their feet economically so that they can take their proper place in the world."

OUT OF the Puerto Rico's labor force of approximately 675,000 there is an estimated total of about 300,000 organized wage earners.

The two main organizations, of island-wide character, are the Federacion Libre de Trabajadores (FLT) and the Confederacion General de Trabajadores (CGT).

The oldest labor organization in the island, the FLT, follows the general organizational pattern of the American Federation of Labor, to which it has been affiliated since its inception half a century ago. Its membership is most extensive among dock workers, light and power services, bakers, etc.

'48' Take' Of Industry Up 14%

CONFIRMATION of the fact that U. S. industry made the highest profits ever in 1948 is provided by the official reports of the Securities & Exchange Commission, which show manufacturing corporations made $11.5 billions in profits after taxes, a 14% increase over 1947.

Smaller corporations didn't do so well as the big fellows, and the producers' goods industries showed the increases in profits while most consumers' goods industries showed the declines, SEC pointed out.

In addition to the sky-high profits, corporations had written off a lot of debts, SEC pointed out, citing the fact that the ratio of cash and government securities to current liabilities, "which is one rough measure of corporate liquidity, amounted to 78% at the end of 1948, compared with 83% at the end of the preceding year." Again, the biggest industrial corporations had written off the larger part of the debts.

Ex-Pug Found Guilty In Death of CIO Member

A PHILADELPHIA jury has found Gus Dorazio, one-time heavyweight title contender, guilty of second degree murder in the fatal attack on Albert Blomeyer, shop steward of Local 5, CIO Brewery Workers, last Jan. 7.

Dorazio faces a maximum sentence of 20 years or a fine not exceeding $10,000, or both.

After the Brewery Workers defeated the AFL Teamsters in an NLRB election in Philadelphia, the CIO Union was circulating petions for a union shop election in the Philadelphia breweries.

Witnesses for the state testified that Dorazio tried to stop the circulation of the petition in the Schmidt Brewery, where Blomeyer was employed.

The apparent close association of the ex-pugilist with the Teamsters was shown by these facts: the two principal witnesses for him were Morton Smith and William Lanni, business agents for two Philadelphia locals of the Teamsters. William O. Gray, counsel for the Teamsters in Philadelphia, was defense attorney. He is a famous criminal lawyer.

Two members of the Brewery Workers, Charles Hornung and Louis Kheefus, testified that shortly before the attack on Blomeyer, they were threatened by Dorazio with injury or death if they did not stop circulating the petitions.

Assistant Vice Pres. Carl Von Czoernig of the Schmidt Brewery, where the fatal attack occurred, testified that Dorazio told him that if he (Von Czoernig) did "not do something about it (the circulation of the petitions) he was going to."

Other witnesses for the state included Assistant Brewmasters William Hipp and Alois Witt, both of whom said they were beaten by the ex-pugilist when they attempted to protect Blomeyer.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

On June 15 the United Steelworkers of America will begin negotiations with the United States Steel Corp. on the Union's contract demands. These negotiations will not be easy. The company has already indicated, in a letter received by USA and CIO Pres. Philip Murray from the president of one of its subsidiaries that it will resist wage increases and pension and insurance plans.

But we take it for granted that there will be negotiations. The union will be there and present the just demands of the Steelworkers in an effective way. A simple exchange of letters sets up the meetings at which representatives of the union and representatives of the company sit down to discuss wages, hours and working conditions.

Each time such negotiations are entered into, we should recall the long years of struggle, sacrifice and martyrdom of the steel workers.

The struggle for a union in steel did not begin and end with the Memorial Day Massacre that we commemorated in last week's column. In 1892 a five months strike of steel workers against the Carnegie Co. to prevent a wage cut was drowned in rivers of the strikers' blood shed by Pinkerton gunmen and the Pennsylvania State Militia.

In 1901 another strike was brutally crushed by the United States Steel Corp. Workers in steel worked 12 hours a day, 6 days a week. Their average pay hit $600 a year. All mills were filled with labor spies. The steel towns were built, owned and governed by the companies.

In 1919 the steel workers again formed a union and attempted to negotiate with U. S. Steel. The company refused. Again the workers struck and after four months were starved, shot and beaten into submission.

The companies did not rely on the breaking of the strikes alone to retain their power. Union members were blacklisted. New workers were forced to sign yellow dog contracts. The mills were infested with hundreds of spies. Company unions flourished. The LaFollette Committee in the middle thirties, revealed that the corporations were stocked up with tear gas and machine guns "just in case of trouble."

But, in 1936 the CIO set up the Steel Workers Organizing Committee with President Murray as its chairman. United around progressive aims it rallied the workers, met the companies on their own grounds and with splendid leadership and a loyal rank and file industrial democracy finally triumphed.

An exchange of letters may be all that is required to open negotiations today, but we should not forget that the effectiveness of those letters was made possible by the blood and sacrifice of millions of gallant steel workers through many generations. The officers and members of the USA are to be congratulated for the splended job in building a great union against what, to some, were insurmountable odds.

CIO Reg. Dir. Michael Mann of Chicago reports that employes of the Dryden Rubber Division of the Sheller Manufacturing Co. voted 690 to 78 to be represented by the CIO Rubber Workers.

Director Mann also reports that the CIO Playthings, Jewelry and Novelty Workers Union won an election at the American Hobby Specialties, Inc.

Reg. Dir. Frank Bender of Maryland reports that the Brewery Workers have won an election at the plants of the G. L. Baking and Price Wilhoite Companies, Frederick, Md. The campaign was conducted by CIO Rep. Robert Brylke, assisted by James Reagan, Business Agent of Local 10 of the Brewery Workers.

CIO Reg. Dir. Loren Houser of Indianapolis reports that the American Newspaper Guild has won an election at the Indianapolis Star and News by a vote of 117 to 13. This election completes the organization of all of the Indianapolis daily newspapers. The campaign was directed by ANG Director of Organization William J. Farson.

Region 2A Director Paul E. Miley of the CIO Auto Workers announces victories in two NLRB elections among cafeteria employes in General Motors Plants. The cafeterias are operated by the Fred B. Profit Co. The plants are located in Hamilton, Ohio, and in Dayton, Ohio.

Actively assisting the UAW Regional Office in the organization of these cafeterias was Robert Hinders and Harry Marshall, shop committee chairmen in the Dayton and Hamilton plants, respectively.

Irwin De Shetler, Southern California Regional Director, reports a significant victory for the American Newspaper Guild. An eighteen day strike on the Bakersfield Press has been won with wage increases of from $2.50 to $11.00 and many other gains. ANG Representative Robert Greenock and Local President James Quick were in charge. Congratulations to all and keep 'em rolling.

No House, No Aid

A person who leaves his job because of a lack of adequate housing must be considered as having quite voluntarily and without just cause and therefore ineligible to draw benefits, the Ohio Unemployment Compensation Board of Review has ruled.

D. C. Home Rule O.K.'d By Senate

VOTELESS citizens of the nation's capital got a break from the Senate last week—but they're still a long way from running the affairs of their own city.

The Senate, in a surprise action, approved by a voice vote a bill to give the District of Columbia a limited measure of home rule.

In the House, however, prospects are dim for early action. Rep. Harris (D., Ark.), head of the House District sub-committee handling the bill, has been sitting on similar proposals. A year ago he spearheaded a successful fight against local suffrage for Washington residents.

Dixiecrats in the Senate, who had been expected to filibuster against the home rule proposal, changed their plans after decisive defeat of an amendment to "freeze" Washington's present segregation and discrimination policies.

The amendment, proposed by Sen. Johnston (D., S. C.) and Eastland (D., Miss.) would have required a referendum on any change in Washington's segregation set-up. But it was defeated 49-27.

THE HOME rule bill would not give Washington either Senators or Congressmen. But it does provide for election of nine out of 11 members of a city council, with the President naming two, and for a city school board. At present, Washington is governed by a board of three commissioners appointed by the President, and all local legislation must be passed by Congress.

The Senate bill, sponsored by Sen. Kefauver (D., Tenn.), provided that the city council may propose laws for the District. These laws could be disapproved by Congress in 45 days. If not disapproved in that time, they would go to the President, who would have 10 days to o.k. or veto them.

The bill had strong support from liberal, labor and citizens' groups in Washington. Recommendations for home rule for the District of Columbia were contained in the report of the President's Committee on Civil Rights last year.

NLRB Says Boss' Sons Can't Vote

Bosses' sons can't vote in NLRB bargaining agent elections, the Board has ruled.

When Local 807 of the AFL Teamsters asked for an election among drivers and their helpers at the Broadway Iron & Pipe Co. plant in Brooklyn, N. Y., it demanded that the bosses' two sons who drive trucks for daddy from time to time be excluded from the voting.

Daddy, company president Hyman Schreer, objected. But Local 807 pointed out that in addition to alternating as truck drivers the two younger Schreers also take turns being vice-president of the company.

"Their interests seem to be more closely allied with those of management than with those of the employes," the NLRB said.

Kassalow To Aid Jobs-for-All Group

Emil Rieve, administrative chairman of the CIO Full Employment Committee, has announced the appointment of Everett Kassalow as executive secretary of the group.

Kassalow is an assistant director of the CIO Dept. of Research & Education. He was formerly research director of the United Rubber Workers.

House OK's Improved DP Bill

THE HOUSE turned down a move to reduce the number of Displaced Persons who could come into this country, and approved by voice vote a measure to liberalize the present Republican DP Act.

Supported by the CIO and by the Citizens Committee on Displaced Persons, the bill would knock out the present law's provisions which have been widely attacked as discriminatory against Jews and Catholics.

Provision in the present law which drew the most fire is one which prohibits persons who entered the DP camps after Dec. 22, 1945, from entering this country under the act. Many of the Jews and Catholics, fleeing religious or political persecution in their homelands, entered the camps after this date.

The House-approved measure would move this "cut-off" date up to Jan. 1, 1949.

A total 339,000 DPs ould be able to enter this country over a three-year period under the new bill. This is 134,000 more than the number allowed under the present law. A proposal by South Carolina Rep. Joseph R. Bryson to cut the figure down to 239,000 was rejected by a 118-to-85 vote.

False Affidavit Probe Reported

The Dept. of Justice is reported investigating "More than a score" of union officials suspected of lying when they signed and filed non-Communist affidavits under provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act.

A Justice Dept. official said many of the investigations have been in process for some time, but that "it may be months before grand jury action is started against any of the labor officials." The government spokesmen indicated that most of those under investigation are officials of CIO unions, and that they do not hold top-ranking positions.

The affidavits are required of officers of national and local unions which wish to use the services of the Natl. Labor Relations Board.

False swearing to the affidavits, which attest that the signer is not a member of an organization advocating revolution by force and violence, is punishable by heavy jail sentences and fines.

U. S. Starts Action Against Univis

Contempt of court proceedings, based on flouting anti-trust judgment, have been started by the Dept. of Justice against the Univis Lens Co. of Dayton, Ohio.

Univis was the scene of a strike by CIO Electrical Workers several months ago. A number of strikers were arrested, and police violence was reported a number of times.

The Justice Dept. said that Univis had been found in 1942 to have entered into agreements governing illegal control of wholesale and retail prices of multifocal lenses. The company was ordered to stop the practice, but in recent years has been circulating price lists in such a manner as to fix resale prices in violation of the law, the Justice Dept.

Ship 'Strike' Ires Guadalcanal Fighters

Refusal Of Crew To Unload Cargo On Sunday Reported

By HELEN WATERHOUSE

Flaming with indignation at headquarters battle-scarred veterans of Guadalcanal have come back to Akron with the incredible claims that their buddies have been forced to unload their own supplies from a merchant ship on which they had been because of the refusal of civilian crew men to work on Sunday.

Their stories have been put up to navy officials in Washington for confirmation or denial. Thus far, the navy reports that it is investigating.

But confirmation has come from a high official source in Washington, who though he witnessed these conditions during his service in Guadalcanal, must necessarily remain anonymous.

The combined charges of three Akron marine quartermasters, a navy pilot and two sailors who relate the story while they were in action in the Solomons are:

1—That a merchant marine vessel stopped six feet two miles off Guadalcanal one Saturday afternoon and that after spending two hours in landing supplies the combat crew knocked off, refusing to work again until Monday morning.

2—That hungry marines—wounded and in some cases mightly wounded marines—set up a human line of supplies—were forced to put coal aboard in order to get supplies on Sunday.

CLAIMS REPORTS EXAGGERATED

One source in Washington put these reports down to "exaggeration that we find quite common when men are under the stress of emotion."

But the men who have been rotated from the blazing hell of Guadalcanal insist with the unanimous bluntness of seasoned, fighting men that there is "no exaggeration about it."

The young navy pilot summed up the whole incident as the "worst scramble of the war." He called the refusal of merchant marine crew to work on Sunday a "strike" and blamed the national maritime union.

He said that a ship loaded with urgently needed supplies stood two miles off shore. "The crew refused to unload the supplies, saying we had marines before supper and a terrific need," he said. "Why," he asked, "doesn't someone report this to Washington?"

A marine lieutenant, wounded and recovering from malaria, told of the merchant ship that had put in on a Saturday afternoon. He said the crew unloaded for two hours and then stopped. "They refused to work all day Sunday. Finally our marines swarmed onto the ship to get the supplies they needed." He called it a "disgrace."

Another Akron district marine lieutenant asserted the reason "the supplies were not landed was not because the crews couldn't get them in. The landing boats could have got in, all right. There was no opposition from the Japs. We had the landing covered." With that he cut off the conversation and refused to say more about it.

The two sailors, survivors of ships lost in the battle of the Solomons, said they reached shore too late to witness the incidents but that "stories of the strike were rampant."

"During the first weeks of action, the boys didn't have enough supplies. Food was short and so were medical supplies. For a time, all the food we got was rice we captured from the Japs," one officer said. He declared that after a few weeks of that diet, "our boys weren't interested in waiting over Sunday to get the food that lay just off shore. They just went after it."

A check with the Beacon Journal Washington bureau disclosed that not only has the same story been confirmed by an eyewitness of high standing, but further that the reports are beginning to be circulated widely in congress and that a blow-off is imminent.

Retraction

Probe Absolves NMU Of War Food Delay

By the Associated Press

NEW YORK, June 4.—On January 21 and 22, 1943, the Associated Press sent to its members several stories based on a copyrighted story appearing in the January 21, 1943, issue of the Akron (Ohio) Beacon-Journal.

The A. P. stories stated in substance that the Navy was investigating reports that sick Guadalcanal marines were forced to unload their own supplies when the National Maritime Union crew of a merchant ship refused to work on Sunday because of union regulations.

The Beacon-Journal story was attributed to six Guadalcanal veterans: Three marines, two sailors and a Navy pilot, all on individual visits to Akron. The story added that confirmation had come from a high official (but anonymous) source in Washington, who witnessed these things during his Guadalcanal service.

A thorough investigation conducted at the instance of the Associated Press has produced no evidence attributing such conduct or such an incident to a National Maritime Union crew.

FAKE EXPOSED: After 6½ years, the Associated Press and the Hearst interests have retracted a story which slandered the members of the Natl. Maritime Union and the CIO. The stories of January, 1943, based on an Akron Beacon Journal reporter's "Expose," are shown above. To the left, the retraction (this one from the Washington Star). See Page 3.

Press On CIO Executive Board:

Party Liners Screaming -- Red In Face

MORE THAN three weeks have passed since the CIO Executive Board's historical meeting at which the so-called left wing was told off in no uncertain terms.

Many union papers have had a chance to analyze the results and comment upon them. So have party organs. Let's look at some samples—on both sides of the question.

Take the Oil Worker, official organ of the Oil Workers' Intl. Union. Says the OW:

"The point has been reached that CIO cannot carry on any sort of program with the comrades trying to sabotage it.

"The Communists have a right to their opinions and a right to express their opinions. But in CIO, as in any democratic organization, the majority necessarily must rule.

"In recent months the CIO Executive Board has voted on a good many questions. Usually the vote goes about 30 one way, with about 9, 10, 11 votes the other way. But, this 9, 10, or 11 board members on the losing end have never accepted the majority vote. Instead, they have rushed out of the board meetings to start name-calling and mud-slinging.

"In other words, the minority has said: 'If the majority doesn't go along with us, they're a bunch of S. O. B.'s'

"This minority has always consisted of the Commie element in CIO."

PRETTY STRONG words, those, but take a gander at the Labor Herald, which calls itself "Official California CIO Newspaper."

The CIO News, California Edition, is the official CIO organ in California.

The Labor Herald says:

"The past history of unanimity, and more recently, of at least surface accord, was shattered by the national CIO Executive Board, which held the most stormy session in its history.

"(Harry) Bridges, on his return to San Francisco, charged that the board had broken with CIO's past tradition and had become a political, instead of an economic, organization; also that it was limiting the autonomy of international unions to economic matters only and requiring 'regularity' in any political matters."

One of the matters acted upon by the board was a bitter attack made on Pres. Philip Murray by the Mine, Mill Union after Bessemer, Ala., ore miners had voted to leave Mine, Mill and go along with the Steelworkers.

There's no question as to which paper is the official organ of the Steelworkers, of which Murray is also president. It's Steel Labor, and we quote:

"The Mine, Mill union was soundly beaten in the election. A cry of rage could be heard from as far away as Moscow.

"Chief target of the attack was Murray. On the one hand, he was labeled a 'tool of the Pope.' On the other hand, he was called a Klansman. He was called a Brown Shirt, Hitlerite, Fascist, un-Christian, anti-Negro, anti-union.

"So enraged was the CIO board when the facts were laid before it that it took the almost unprecedented action of passing a resolution soundly rebuking Mine, Mill."

THE DAILY WORKER, which carries the imprimatur of the Communist party and therefore is The Word of CP, has a columnist it calls its labor editor. He is one George Morris and he mortally hates and fears the CIO.

The Bessemer situation was meat for Comrade Morris. Paying no attention to the facts in the case, he burst into print:

"The resolution (on Mine, Mill) is as shameful as it is ominous.

"But even more serious is the pattern of race supremacy that right-wing elements are developing in the Southern CIO. In line with the well-known tactics of Southern bourbons, defenders of Negro rights and Negro-white unity are charged with 'stirring' up 'racial strife' because they expose the Klan influence in some unions."

As Morris well knows, the CIO's charge is that "progressives" in Mine, Mill injected the KKK charge, falsely saying that the Steelworkers—and Philip Murray—were tied in with the Klan.

And, Morris well knows the stand of Van A. Bittner, venerable director of Operation Dixie—"If a man is good enough for God to create, he's good enough for CIO."

Morris goes on to attack Arthur Riordan, assistant editor of the CIO News, who covered the Bessemer story. Writes Morris:

"Even the writer of the CIO News story, much as he tries, cannot conceal his own race supremacist feeling. He found in Alabama, he writes, that 'Negro workers were told that the Steelworkers did not take Negroes into their membership.'"

Morris well knows that his charges against Riordan are false, that Riordan has long fought for minority rights—and comes from a minority group himself. He well knows that Riordan was one of the leaders in a group of Washington Guildsmen who tried to save the job of an admitted Communist reporter fired from a Washington paper, not because the reporter had injected the party line into that paper, but merely because he admitted CP membership.

The Wisconsin CIO News reprinted an editorial which Allan L. Swim had written for the national CIO News—a statement saying: "It's the old party line policy of rule or ruin. They've found they can't split the CIO wide open, so—

"Watch for one of the nastiest, 'down in the gutter,' smear campaigns the Commies have ever conducted in this country."

THE MINNESOTA CIO has an official organ called Minnesota Labor. Says ML of this situation:

"This is the time to have the showdown. This is the time to air what CIO may have of dirty linen that the public may know, once and for all, just where this organization stands and where it is headed: that it is truly American and loyal to the core."

IN SAN FRANCISCO there is published the Dispatcher. This is the organ of the Longshoremen's Union. Head of that union is Harry Bridges, who led the fight against CIO policy at the last board meeting. Here's a Dispatcher comment:

"The National CIO broke completely with its past and became a political instead of an economic organization."

Bridges learned at the board meeting that Secy.-Treas. Maurice Travis of Mine, Mill was not beaten by Steelworkers representatives at Bessemer, as Travis charged, but by a local unionist who rebelled against Mine-Mill leadership. However, the Dispatcher said, "Travis was beaten by steelworkers led by Murray's own personal representatives."

THE GUILD REPORTER, organ of the Newspaper Guild, noted that the board had "raised the curtain for a showdown with Communist elements within CIO." The GR went on to say: "No words were minced."

Now we come to the Voice, organ of the Marine Cooks' union. In Voice, union Pres. Hugh Bryson, one of those who voted against CIO policy at the board meeting, writes:

"Because Pres. Murray stated the fundamental issue is foreign policy, we must challenge his right and the Democratic Party's right to force their opinions and positions on our members."

AT THE BOARD meeting, CIO Electrical Workers Pres. Albert J. Fitzgerald, who is also a vice president of CIO, did not vote on the resolution censuring Mine, Mill, for its campaign of calumny and slander against Murray, the CIO and the Steelworkers.

But UE News did not hesitate to hop into the fray. Says UEN:

"It becomes 'official CIO policy' that CIO Board members are no longer to take the instructions of the membership of their own unions, but the instructions of the group of leaders that controls the CIO.

"The kind of policies they (the board majority) stand for have nothing in common with the democratic rank and file tradition that built and has maintained the UE."

8c Raise Won At Oak Ridge

CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers at the Oak Ridge, Tenn., atomic plant won an 8 cent hourly increase and averted a walkout after reaching a last-minute agreement with the Union Carbon & Carbide Co., which runs the plant for the government.

The new contract will run for two years, with a wage reopening a year from now.

Earlier, when a strike appeared imminent, Pres. Truman appointed a three-man panel to investigate the dispute. The settlement made it unnecessary for the panel to act.

S. Indiana Parley Backs CIO Program

Delegates to a Southern Indiana Education Conference sponsored by the Indiana CIO, adopted a batch of resolutions calling upon Congress to enact without delay pending bills backed by organized labor. Taft-Hartley repeal, health insurance and liberalized social security were among the measures named.

The conference also urged passage of a Federal unemployment compensation law to replace the separate state laws, and inauguration of public works projects to employ the jobless.

TWU Moves To Oust Miami Reds

A LETTER from CIO Pres. Philip Murray to Pres. Michael Quill of the CIO Transport Workers asks Quill to take steps against Communist influences in TWU Local 500, Miami.

Murray's letter:

"Reports from our organizers and representatives in the Southern organizing campaign indicate that the growth of the Transport Workers Union in airlines, and the growth of CIO generally, is being hampered seriously in the State of Florida, as a result of the conflict which is going on within Local 500, of the Transport Workers Union in Miami.

"It is my considered opinion that if steps are not taken in the near future to solve this problem, I am afraid it will be useless for CIO to undertake NLRB elections in that area.

"Although we can disregard the publicity in the Miami newspapers about Local 500, the fact remains that in every publication which that local has issued during the past several months, the International officers and executive board of TWU have been attacked. It is also quite clear that the officers of Local 500, TWU, are out of line with both the national policy of your International and the national policy of CIO.

"DIRECTOR of Organization Allan Haywood has been in touch with this whole situation, and it is our opinion that if at all possible, you should investigate the situation in Local 500 and make clear to the officers of that local that the Transport Workers Union in every other section of the country is conforming to CIO policy and there is no reason why the officers of Local 500 should not conform to the policies of your International and of CIO.

"The people assigned to the Southern organizing campaign say they are finding it increasingly difficult to bring the thousands of unorganized workers into CIO in that area, and the continuous stream of statements issued by Local 500 with the inevitable publicity in the newspapers following the issuance of these statements, have been given as a critical reason for the refusal of workers in other industries to join CIO.

"You are well aware that National CIO extends full autonomy to its affiliated International Unions, but in all fairness to CIO, we are compelled to bring this matter to your attention, with the hope that you will be able to put your house in order in the Miami area."

"The wife reads my labor paper. Then she gives me a quiz—and if I flunk . . ."

OFFICERS OF the Miami TWU local were already targets of a special investigation instituted by the TWU International executive board at its semi-annual session in New York City last May 5.

A resolution singled out Maurice Forge and Charles Smoklikoff, ousted TWU officers, as ringleaders of the Communist drive in the airlines division. A seven-man committee was instructed to "investigate every phase of the Communist Party sabotage within our airline division and make recommendations to the International executive officers including, if necessary, a recommendation to reorganize the entire air transport division of TWU."

TWU International officers stated that Murray's letter would be brought to the attention of the investigating committee and officers of the airline division.

Chrysler Pact To Be Opened

Delegates from 17 CIO Auto Workers locals representing approximately 75,000 Chrysler Corporation workers will meet in Detroit, June 16, to plan for reopening the economic provisions of the UAW-Chrysler contract.

The Chrysler contract will be open for economic provisions July 15, and the company will be asked to open negotiations immediately after the conference completes the formulation of detailed demands.

CSC Institute Set For July 15-19

A program designed to "focus attention on the need of greater CIO activities in our communities for democratic representation, adequate services and better community relations" will be presented at the annual training institute of the CIO Community Services Committee at Lake Geneva, Wis., July 15-19.

The institute is held for CIO men and women who work in the general field of community organization.

The tentative program includes as speakers CSC Chairman Irving Abramson, Director of CIO Councils John Brophy, Ted F. Silvey of the Natl. CIO office who is on leave with ECA; Allan L. Swim, CIO publicity director and editor of the CIO News, and Perlis.

After 6½ Years:

AP Finally Retracts Fake Story Of NMU Guadalcanal 'Strike'

AN "EXPOSE" disparaging the war service of CIO Maritime Union seamen, which made headlines throughout the country in January, 1943, and which was officially repudiated a month later, was retracted last week by the Associated Press as one of the terms of settlement of a libel action brought against them by NMU.

AP also agreed to pay the union $7500 in the settlement, which was reached out of court. The union's suit against Hearst Consolidated Publications, publishers of the New York Journal-American, which had carried the original AP release, was settled at the same time by payment of $1000.

The libel suit was based on an AP story of Jan. 22, 1943, quoting a copyrighted article under the by-line of Helen Waterhouse, which had appeared in the Akron Beacon-Journal the day before.

The Beacon-Journal story purported to be based on the accounts of six servicemen who had returned to Akron from fighting on Guadalcanal with "the incredible claims that their buddies had been forced to unload their own supplies from a merchant ship on that island battleground because of the refusal of civilian crew men to work on Sunday." The story identified the servicemen only as "three marines, two sailors and a Navy pilot."

"Confirmation," said the newspaper, "has come from a high official source in Washington who, though he witnessed these conditions during his service on Guadalcanal, must necessarily remain anonymous."

THE "BEACON" featured the story across eight columns of its front page with the headline, "Ship 'Strike' Ires Guadalcanal Fighters."

The AP story went out the following day, quoting the "Beacon" story and adding a line to the effect that the merchant seamen refused to work on Sunday "because of union regulations."

JOSEPH CURRAN
'Small Satisfaction'

The New York Journal-American was one of the papers which used the story. It broadened the reflections against merchant seamen to include the entire CIO by headlining it "Marines Unload in CIO 'Holiday'." The story was featured on page one.

The Chicago Tribune added quotes of disparaging remarks supposed to have been addressed to the marines by the merchant seamen as they watched them work. "Fifty dollar a month suckers" was one of these.

NMU Pres. Joseph Curran immediately denounced the stories as "a tissue of lies." He pointed out that there are no union regulations against Sunday work. "On the contrary," he said, "crews are required to work whenever necessary—and that includes loading and unloading ships." He cited several instances in which NMU crews had volunteered to do the job of unloading their vessels in combat areas and their offers had been turned down by authorities.

THE STORY was officially repudiated a week later, on Jan. 28, when the Navy Department made public an official report from Adm. Halsey, commander of U. S. forces in the South Pacific. "In no instance," Halsey's report stated, "have merchant seamen refused to discharge cargo from their vessels or in any other way failed to cooperate with the U. S. forces ashore in that area." Halsey said that "the merchant seamen's cooperation, efficiency and courage, on some occasions in the face of enemy attack, have won high praise."

Halsey's statement was given one paragraph on an inside page of the first edition of the Journal-American for that day. It was dropped completely in later editions. The Chicago Tribune gave it one paragraph inside and carried it in all editions.

Before the Halsey report, Brig. Gen. Denig, Marine Corps public relations officer in Washington, had told reporters: "The Marine Corps knows nothing about the published charges. The people in Akron called us about it and we told them we knew nothing about it. We referred them to the Navy and I understand the Navy told them there was no basis for the story." Commander Berry, in charge of Navy public relations, confirmed that the Navy had no knowledge of the incident.

A Congressional committee investigated the Guadalcanal story and branded it wholly untrue. Chairman Warren Magnuson (D., Wash.) revealed that the author of the "Beacon" story had been questioned in the course of the investigation and had refused to identify her sources even in confidence.

The libel suit, naming AP and Hearst Consolidated Publications as defendants, was filed shortly afterward. The NMU complaint specified that the story "was intended to and did impute to the union and its members acts and conspiracies of subversion, sabotage and mutiny of a felonious nature and was designed to expose them to public contempt and ridicule."

The AP retraction, approved by NMU attorneys, was released for publication on June 3 and consisted of four paragraphs. The first three paragraphs reviewed the discredited story. The fourth stated: "A thorough investigation conducted at the instance of the AP has produced no evidence attributing such conduct or such an incident to a National Maritime Union crew."

The retraction was prefaced with the following note: "Editors who printed an Akron, Ohio, story distributed in the night report of January 21, 1943, regarding reports of ship unloading at Guadalcanal are requested to print the following:"

IN ANNOUNCING the terms of settlement, Curran emphasized that "this is small satisfaction for the seamen whose valiant efforts during the war were so viciously slandered."

He pointed out that the NMU and CIO are still fighting for Congressional recognition of the war service of merchant seamen similar to that granted to veterans of other services.

"There are still no provisions to grant special citizenship credit to alien veterans of the merchant marines although veterans of all other branches get such credit," he said.

"There is a GI Bill of Rights but no seamen's Bill of Rights. The Guadalcanal smear and stories like it are largely responsible for the public indifference which permits these legislative injustices to remain on the books."

CIO Warns of Peril in Joblessness

ALTHOUGH people who work only one hour a week are excluded, the Census Bureau has reported the number of unemployed in May was almost twice as high as it was in the same month last year.

May is the month in which employment usually rises, but this year the expected rise didn't occur. Instead, the number of idle increased in a month by 273,000 to hit a post-war record of 3,289,000 for the week ending May 14.

In addition to these, the Bureau found about 1½ million persons with normally full-time jobs were working short hours — "generally three or four days during the week ending May 14, because of slack work, material shortages, job turnover and similar factors." Many others were temporarily laid off.

The downward trend will probably continue, commented CIO Research & Education Dir. Stanley Ruttenberg, "unless industry adjusts its prices, wages and profit ratios so as to put more money into the pockets of its employes and leave more in the pockets of consumers.

"Overall profits are declining now, of course, but they are falling because of the low volume of purchasing power. Industry is trying to slow that fall by cutting back production. If realistic price, wage and profit adjustments were made, industry could maintain—and even increase — production levels.

Ruttenberg was talking about the "vicious economic cycle" that CIO has for years warned against. It works like this: Prices go up beyond consumers' reach; wages lag behind; people are able to buy less and less; as demand slumps, industry cuts production; millions are unemployed, others working only part time.

The CIO's prescription: Cut prices, raise wages. With purchasing power thus increased, demand will move upward — and with it production and employment.

Most severely affected by the production slump are New England's textile workers. The conservative U. S. News found that 6.1% of the eligible workers in the country are unemployed and drawing benefits. But in New England, the figure was 13% for Maine; 13.8% for New Hampshire; 18.7% for Rhode Island, etc. During the post-war reconversion unemployment peak, by comparison, there were 4% jobless in New England.

Special Session Asked In Penna.

The Pennsylvania CIO Council has urged Gov. James Duff to call a special session of the state Assembly to grapple with unemployment, which it said is "rapidly growing desperate."

In a letter to the Governor, Council Pres. Harry Boyer urged that the Assembly be called together to liberalize the "grossly inadequate" unemployment compensation, to appropriate sufficient money for construction of moderate-priced housing, slum clearance, and for wide-range public works.

He also called for changing the tax structure by placing greater emphasis on "ability to pay out of record-smashing profits" and by removing "soak-the-poor taxes which lower public buying power."

Perlow Quits CP Over T-H

SECY-TREAS. Max Perlow of the CIO Furniture Workers last week announced that he resigned from the Communist Party so he could sign the non-communist affidavit required by the T-H law.

At the same time he said that he stood "upon my constitutional right" to believe in Marxism and "it is not true that the Communist Party advocates the overthrow of government by force and violence."

"I decided," Perlow said, "to sign the affidavits and not allow this vicious law to bar me from continuing, to the best of my abilities, to serve the membership of our union."

There was speculation in the labor movement whether this was the beginning of a trend among Communists holding union positions to resign from the party so their unions could use NLRB services.

'Gas' Probe Slated

Congress at last is going to investigate gasoline prices. After studying a report on gas costs to the average motorist ($40 a year more than in 1946) and oil company profits (250% higher than in 1946), the Senate Banking & Currency Committee announced it will open hearings some time this month to look into the seemingly unwarranted price boosts.

REDS, EYEBROWS, TAFT

If the Taft-Hartley repeal compaign has you confused, you have plenty of company.

"Murray is selling the CIO membership down the river on T-H repeal," the lads who follow a devious ideological line began shouting just before the last CIO Executive Board meeting.

At the Board meeting, however, members unanimously voted approval of the Murray-directed T-H repeal drive—AFTER they got a full report of campaign activities.

We, of course, don't know whether there was any connection between the CP's false charges and what happened last week, but—

Mr. Eyebrows—a fellow who walked out of the AFL, walked out of the CIO and then walked in and out of the AFL—publicly charged Murray and the AFL's Bill Green with a sell-out on T-H.

"Foul betrayal of American labor," said the man with the awnings on his forehead.

Murray referred to the accusation as "false and malicious libels" coming from a " 'rule or ruin' union official."

The motives of the CPers were obvious. The motives of Mr. Eyebrows were questionable.

And while all the "fun" was going on, a fellow by the name of Taft from over in Ohio was working quietly on a slick little scheme to get his named removed from the labor law which all of labor abhors.

The Senator had said some time ago he had no objection to repeal of T-H if its basic principles were written into a new labor law.

This scheme, if successful, would give labor "basically" a T-H law under another name.

And just for the record: The CIO is still strongly in favor of enactment of the Thomas-Lesinski Bill without crippling amendments. ★ ★ ★

HASN'T KEPT PACE WITH CONDITIONS

We put the question this way to one of our statistician-friends: "How much would social security payments have to be increased today to give them the purchasing power they had when the law was enacted."

"Nearly doubled," replied the statistician.

And that illustrates one of the reasons the CIO has been campaigning for improvements in the Social Security Act.

Payments, now completely out of tune with the high cost of living, should at least be doubled and the Act should be broadened so as to include many persons now excluded.

There is need, too, for a "permanent disability" clause to be written into the law so those rendered unable to work because of accident or illness would be regarded—for social security purposes—as having already retired.

Lengthy hearings on social security have been conducted and the matter is now before the House Ways and Means Committee.

Final action on the measure should be taken at the present session of Congress—and this action should provide us with a much better law.

We're already convinced—so why don't you put your arguments into a letter or telegram to your representatives on Capitol Hill?

Reds Are Phony Liberals

They're Not Free Agents And They Don't Deserve 'Left-Wing' Title

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THAT OLD story that the Commies are radicals—or even liberals—is as phony as a faded $3 bill!

In many respects they're more reactionary than the Republican Old Guard and more "right-wingish" than the National Association of Manufacturers.

But, as an honest old radical out West said in a recent letter to me, "they're only trying to give us the same kind of liberalism Hitler and Mussolini practiced—state totalitarianism."

It's a darn shame they've been able to sell the public the idea that they're really left-wingers. That title fits just about like a No. 5 shoe on a No. 10 foot.

NOW, IF you're really looking for a hunk of radicalism all you have to do is study up a bit on the founding fathers of the U. S.

They came out with the bold idea that folks were smart enough to govern themselves—that a nation didn't have to have an all-powerful "brain trust" to tell the people what to do and then make them do it.

Why, they went so far as to say that it was a good idea to have more than one political party.

And, furthermore, they believed the political high mogul of the country—the President — should be denied the power to heave into prison those who disagreed with him.

Their idea was to have a country run for the people by the people—not a "people's government" run by a Politiburo.

I'D BE THE last to deny that we haven't occasionally made a mess out of our democracy here and there and that it sometimes fails to function like a $100 watch.

But the Commies make a mess of their "democracy" all the time!

Some innocent people have been railroaded to prison because of crooked U. S. officials, and others have been made to suffer economically because they rode the wrong political horse.

But I don't recall having ever seen or even heard about American prison camps for political prisoners.

Even those who accuse our FBI of unwarranted snooping will have to admit—if they're honest—that our G-men behave like polite Boy Scouts in comparison with the Russian secret police.

And in this country a man isn't tried and sentenced without being permitted to appear in court.

BACK IN THE days when the U. S. and Russia were wartime allies many persons in the CIO thought it would be possible to work with the Commies, who became super-patriots after they learned they'd made a mistake by shouting "the Yanks aren't coming!"

After the war ended and the party line went back to its normal twisting, it became obvious that the Commies' main objective was to use the CIO to advance the cause of Communism—not American trade unionism.

That's when the process of giving them the heave-ho began—and it's been going on ever since.

And it's likely to reach greater proportions in the near future.

One of the principal reasons for this is that more and more persons are learning that the Reds are not free agents but act as puppets attached to a string leading to Moscow.

ANOTHER GREAT illusion that needs to be knocked into a cocked hat is that Commies are super-militant people who will give their all for the cause of organized labor.

Very few of the persons now engaged in the CP-inspired attacks on the CIO leadership have given any real support—financial or moral—to the Southern organizing drive, one of the CIO's most important undertakings.

One of the leaders of the attack heads a union that hasn't contributed a single penny voluntarily to Operation Dixie.

Leaders of two unions flouting CIO policy have scraped up enough money to finance malicious, lying public attacks on the CIO leadership but not enough money to keep their per capita payments to the CIO current.

A lot of union people these days are recalling that one of the leading "attackers" proposed a couple of years ago that strikes be outlawed.

And a lot more are wondering if the inexcusable Communist strikebreaking in Berlin doesn't show what the Reds really are when their false whiskers are off.

UAW Offers $205,000 Reward In Shootings

THE CIO Auto workers' executive board offered a $200,000 reward for information leading to the arrest and conviction of person or persons in the shooting of UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther and of his brother, Victor Reuther, the union's director of education.

Victor Reuther lost his eye as a result of being struck by pellets from a shotgun fired through a window of his home May 24, 1949. Walter Reuther was the victim of a smiliar attack April 20, 1948, and is still carrying his right arm in a sling.

The new offer, the union said, is in substitution for the offer made on April 21, 1948, in the shooting of Walter Reuther.

The UAW also announced it would pay $5000 for information "which leads to any person being held for trial after preliminary examination or waiver of examination on a charge of complicity as principal or accessory in either shooting. The right to this reward or any part of it shall not depend on conviction."

The identity of the accuser will be protected through the following method: The informant shall sign his statement with two identical numbers of six figures, tearing off the second number and leaving a jagged edge on the paper.

He shall retain the duplicate number. If the information entitles the sender to any part of the reward, the number will be widely publicized by the UAW. The reward, the UAW announced, will be paid upon presentation of the duplicate number on the paper torn from the letter. The letter must be addressed to Post Office Box 1714, Detroit 21, Mich.

J. Crow Clause Dumped

Lovittown, L. I., low-cost "mass home production" town, came out from under its Jim Crowism last week, when Federal Housing Administrator Franklin D. Richards announced that the discrimination clause in the leases has been deleted.

But It's The Same Old Stuffing!

SheUnquestionably Felt Like A Fool!

Somewhere in this country there is an avid Republican Party worker who once carried a picket sign in front of the White House.

Years ago she was a rabid Communist —not a "small fry" one, either—and she followed CP instructions to the letter.

Then the party line made a sudden twist which she couldn't follow and she didn't like the way the limb was sawed out from under her.

In her anger and humiliation she said goodbye to the comrades and walked out. She threw overboard what she'd considered liberalism and later tossed in her lot with the GOP.

Later she stepped up into the big Red league, where she was playing when a little guy named Hitler set out to conquer the world.

She, like most Americans, was perturbed by the Fuehrer's first successes, but she felt better when Hitler and Joe Stalin worked out a deal which appeared to make Russia safe from aggression.

At about this time a fellow named Roosevelt began pushing for greater preparedness and for military aid to Great Britain.

This, of course, made FDR an "imperialistic warmonger" to the woman and her colleagues.

The 1918 slogan "The Yanks Are Coming" was twisted around so it read, "The Yanks Aren't Coming."

Isolationism was the order of the day for the party liners. U. S. youth had no business spilling blood for war-mongering imperialists, they said.

And the woman who later became a GOP worker was right in the thick of the campaign.

MOST OF THE people in the world felt like they were sitting on a powder keg when the middle of June 1941 rolled around.

Would Hitler's legions cross the channel to the British Isles? Was the U. S. really getting ready for active participation in the war?

Those were the questions that were being asked.

And at this time the Communists were planning a demonstration to show how they felt about Roosevelt.

They threw a picket line in front of the White House—and among the pickets was the woman with whom this story deals.

Her sign said, "The Yanks Ain't Coming —Let God Save the King."

A MOMENTOUS event occurred in Europe on June 21—an event which shook the world and threw the Commies into complete confusion.

Hitler had broken with his pal Joe—and Germany and Russia were at war.

When word of this reached CP leaders in this country they went into a dizzy tailspin—but not for long. In a matter of hours they converted the conflict from an "imperialistic" into a "people's" war.

Nobody, however, told the White House pickets what had happened. They paraded back and forth, back and forth.

Then one of the marchers spotted a newspaper headline—and on that day a woman walked out of the CP and headed for the GOP.

Carey Tells in Post How Reds Sabotaged WFTU

"The CIO was under no illusions" when it participated in the formation of the World Federation of Trade Unions. But three years and 11 months later, the CIO and the British Trades Union Congress, "disillusioned and doublecrossed," walked out of the WFTU.

"Once again we had learned the old lesson that when the Communist brethren give you the kiss of 'friendship,' they also take a bite out of your cheek."

Thus does CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey explain why the CIO bowed out of the WFTU in an interview appearing in the June 11 issue of the Saturday Evening Post.

Some may argue, Carey told Post writer Sidney Shallett, that the CIO's withdrawal vindicated the AFL's position of staying outside the WFTU. "I do not agree," he said. "To admit failure in advance and to stay out because of it was as unthinkable as it would have been for the United States to refuse to join the UN because it didn't trust Molotov."

THE FIRST conference—in London on Feb. 6-17, 1945—was a "honeymoon period" among the delegates—partially because the "wartime honeymoon" was still in effect, and partially because "Soviet foreign policy itself had not crystallized to the point where the Kremlin's stooges within the WFTU could be told exactly what kind of ride they were supposed to take us for."

It was not until the Paris meeting in September and October, 1945, that "the Communists commenced their dirty work," Carey relates.

"The first major betrayal was in connection with alliance between the WFTU and a group of organizations known as Intl. Trade Secretariats . . . Most of the trade secretariats were forced to suspend their activities during the war. . . . When the WFTU was formed, it became obvious that the trade secretariats should be revived to work with the new world group.

"It was agreed at the early WFTU meetings that the principle of full autonomy for the trade secretariats would be recognized but when the showdown came, the Communists and their satellites put obstacle after obstacle in the way of recognition, insisting that the secretariats give up their autonomy and come in as subdivisions."

"The second major betrayal," Carey continued, "was on the vital question of reorganizing the German trade unions and getting them operating again on a free and unified basis under international trade union supervision, regardless of occupation zonal boundaries . . .

"In the Soviet Zone, the unions were reconstituted, all right—on a dictatorial pattern as bad as anything Adolf Hitler had ever ordained. Instead of cooperating with us toward establishing a democratic, unified labor movement, the Reds tried to take over the unions in our zones. It was a clear sellout. . . ."

The worst "double-cross," said Carey, was at WFTU headquarters where Louis Saillant, the general secretary, "was jumping through hoops for the Russians . . ." He rigged meetings against the CIO and British TUC, sent out unauthorized party-line statements and permitted the WFTU Information Bulletin to become an instrument of violent attack against the CIO and TUC, Carey said.

The battle over the Marshall Plan led to the final break. Anxious to have the Plan discussed at least, Carey won the WFTU executive board's sanction to present the facts concerning ERP at a meeting to be held in February 1948. But when Carey set sail for the meeting, he learned on board ship that Saillant had postponed the meeting indefinitely.

"It was time for the final showdown," said Carey, "a WFTU that the Communists could manipulate like a lump of soft clay was no federation for the CIO."

Have Another!

There were light, amusing experiences, too, during the CIO's WFTU contacts with the Russians.

With toasts being proposed every three minutes, "I just couldn't take all the vodka," said Carey, "so I surreptitiously poured my portions into an empty water tumbler."

When Vassili Kuznetsov, head of the Russian delegation, got wind of the fact that Carey wasn't drinking, he addressed Carey directly, proposing a toast. Carey stood up taking his water tumbler filled with eight slugs of vodka.

"No, no, Carey; that is water," said Kuznetsov.

"No, no, Vassili; it is vodka," replied Carey.

The CIO representative got a bright idea. Suddenly he shoved his water tumbler at Kuznetsov and took the Russian's glass in exchange.

Kuznetsov practically strangled on Carey's "water."

"But I didn't have a bit of trouble with his drink, for his waiter had been filling up his glass with plain water out of a vodka bottle," Carey said.

Murray Assails Lewis' Charges; Taft A

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

WASHINGTON, where more words are said per minute than any other given spot in America, was hearing a lot of words last week about the Taft-Hartley Act.

The Senate had finally taken up the Thomas-Lesinski Bill, which was approved months ago by its Labor Committee. And the words were mighty sharp at times.

The debate is expected to last for some time, with many amendments and substitute bills in the offing.

While debate raged on, there were two other major developments:

A. Mine Workers' Pres. John L. Lewis issued a statement accusing CIO Pres. Philip Murray and AFL Pres. William Green of a sellout on labor legislation.

Murray immediately wired all U. S. Senators, saying Lewis' statement, "admittedly based upon rumor rather than fact, is another demonstration of that lack of responsibility which in the recent past has so frequently characterized Lewis' actions and utterances."

B. A group of labor attorneys, from CIO, AFL and the Machinists, met in Washington and prepared an analysis of Sen. Robert A. Taft's labor law amendments. They said it was "their considered opinion that the Taft amendments would substantially reenact T-H."

C. A bipartisan group of Senate liberals, including Sens. Paul Douglas (D., Ill.) and Wayne Morse (R., Ore.), introduced four amendments to the Thomas Bill which they feel will assure passage of the measure.

The four amendments include those dealing with affidavits, financial statements, good faith in bargaining and freedom of speech. A fifth, dealing with plant seizure, is under consideration.

The Senate debate opened with a scholarly presentation by Sen. Elbert Thomas (D., Utah), who with Rep. John Lesinski (D., Mich.) is co-sponsor of the Thomas-Lesinski Bill. They are chairman of their respective Labor committees.

Thomas emphasized the moral obligation of the Democratic Party to carry out its platform and campaign pledges. He analyzed his bill and called for its passage.

NO ONE interrupted Sen. Thomas in his detailed presentation. But, the following day, when Sen. Claude Pepper (D., Fla.) took the floor, the fireworks began. Taft, who had opened the argument against the Thomas Bill, was on his feet many times asking "will the gentleman yield?"

Pepper yielded every time and that was where Taft had made his mistake. Pepper was just too much for him. The Floridian made such a deep impression that at one time the galleries burst into applause, a most unusual occurrence.

Sen. Scott Lucas (D., Ill.), the Majority Leader, had to go through a perfunctory request that the galleries be warned about demonstrations.

WHILE THIS was going on, a New York state political organization called the American Labor Party tried to get into the act. It sent what it billed as 3000 persons (actually not much more than 1000) to Washington. The expressed aim: To repeal T-H and get civil rights legislation. Not much was said about the main theme of the ALP campaign last fall when it was plumping for Henry A. Wallace. Then it was peace, peace, peace.

To base a campaign on peace last fall was like going in to a nursery and saying you were for babies.

No one in Washington paid much attention to the ALP's "People's Lobby" except Rep. Vito Marcantonio (ALP, N. Y.).

AFTER BEING shellacked by Pepper, Taft was at it again against Sen. Garrett Withers (D., Ky.), who was making his first floor speech. (Withers was appointed in January to succeed Vice President Barkley.)

Withers declared Taft's proposal calling for injunctions to end national emergency strikes means "the beginning of the abridgment of our liberties." Withers said he was inclined to the opinion of lawyers who feel the President has an "implied" power to act in an emergency and seize property.

Taft sprang to his feet. He declared that for any one to hold that the President had "complete discretion" in national emergencies without specific authority of law would "bring a complete end to our legislative system."

Sen. Morse also was critical of Withers' view He declared such a belief is "one of the most dangerous divergencies from the Constitution of the U. S. ever expressed in he Senate."

He went on: "The notion that implied powers can exist in a vacuum is naive."

WITHERS URGED his colleagues not to be stampeded into drastic legislation by the action of any one labor leader." This was obviously a reference to John L. Lewis' "stabilizing period of inaction" which the newspapers have been so unkind as to term a "strike."

Withers declared that while he felt the President not only has power to seize property in national emergencies but also has power to seek an injunction. He said that he would vote for a seizure amendment despite his belief in Presidential "inherent" powers merely to satisfy those who do not believe the President has such powers.

Sen. Douglas, who's on leave from a professorship at the University of Chicago, lectured the Senate on the evils of T-H. He assailed it section by section.

He told the Senate it is "permeated by a vindictive spirit toward unionism and labor and is contrary to the spirit of equal justice upon which our democracy is built.

Murray To Congress:

To Set The Matter Straight

CIO Pres. Philip Murray has sent the following telegram to all members of the U. S. Senate:

A "rule-or-ruin" union official has seen fit for reasons of his own to spread false and malicious libels concerning the presidents of the Congress of Industrial Organizations and the American Federation of Labor.

These ridiculous "charges," under ordinary circumstances and considering the source, would not merit the dignity of a reply—but for the fact that they are circulated by telegraph to the members of the Senate on the very day when the crucial debate on the Taft-Hartley repeal bill began in the Senate.

That telegram, admittedly based upon rumor rather than fact, is another demonstration of that lack of responsibility which in the recent past has so frequently characterized Lewis' actions and utterances.

My own position and that of the CIO are very clear. Unlike Lewis, I campaigned for Pres. Truman and for those members of Congress who today are actively fighting for Taft-Hartley repeal. Unlike Lewis, we in the CIO stand not only for repeal of Taft-Hartley but for the restoration and strengthening of the Wagner Act as a necessary protection to American workers. Even in his telegram Lewis manifests no concern for this great Magna Charta of labor, to which he and his union, along with every union in the country, owe so much.

Lewis speaks of "secret" agreements. He can speak of this subject more authoritatively than I, since I have never in my career made secret deals.

Specifically, I have made no secret agreements to accept oppressive amendments to the Thomas-Lesinski Bill.

My position and that of the CIO on Taft-Hartley repeal are a matter of public record. Our Executive Board's resolution on Taft-Hartley repeal has been widely published and has been circulated among members of Congress. In this statement the CIO Executive Board advocated passage of the Thomas Bill without crippling amendments as a first step toward the full re-enactment of the Wagner Act, with improvements designed to furnish additional protection to labor's basic rights.

We proclaimed our unalterable opposition to the Taft-Hartley provision for injunctions. We said "government-by-injunction has been tried in Taft-Hartley and in the years before the Norris-LaGuardia Act and found wanting. Our opposition to injunctions is a fundamental principle now and for the future."

Perhaps it is too much to expect Lewis to examine the public record before rumor-mongering.

I am sending this wire not because I am concerned that his irresponsible slander will influence your official action on this most important legislative matter, but rather to set the record straight.

The Douglas Amendments

HERE ARE the amendments to the Thomas - Lesinski bill offered by a group of Senators, including Paul Douglas (Ill.), Lister Hill (Ala.), Garrett Withers (Ky.), Sparkman (Ala.), Humphrey (Minn.), all Democrats, and George Aiken (Vt.), Wayne Morse (Ore.), Margaret Smith (Me.), Charles Tobey (N. H.):

1. Would place upon unions the same duty to bargain collectively as is placed on management. Identical language is used.

2. Free speech. This gives, according to Sen .Douglas, "a fair and reliable statutory guaranty to both employers and labor of freedom of expression. The extreme provisions of T-H on free speech, which prevent (employers') statements from being admitted as evidence, no matter how relevant, would be avoided by this sound proposal."

3. Filing of financial statements by both labor and capital, including employer associations.

4. Non - Communist, Non - Fascist and Non-totalitarian affidavits. For unions (except where a union bars a Communist from holding office) and officers of any employer organization (including owner, partner, receiver, trustee, or, if a corporation, each officer thereof).

A fifth amendment, concerning seizures in cases of strikes affecting the national welfare, has not yet been offered. The sponsors are reflecting upon whether this seizure method carries the implied idea of injunctions.

As has been stated by Pres. Murray, CIO still prefers the Thomas-Lesinski Bill, unchanged.

SHARPEST exchanges in the ea days of Senatorial Taft-Hartley bate was between Sens. Claude Pe (D., Fla.) and Robert A. Taft (R., both members of the Senate Labor C mittee.

(House) members voting on the (Wood) Bill, 81 reversed the stand of their predecessors who had voted for T-H. Only one a Representative from North Carolina (Rep. Thurmond Chatham), switched the other way; he voted for the Wood bill while his predecessor, former Rep. Folger, was against T-H.

Rep. John H. Folger did not seek reelection.

"I wonder if there is any more conclusive judgment in the minds of men who voted in the way in which they did vote that they were standing by the party platform, standing by their President and standing by all that had been promised."

He then went into the makeup of the Senate Labor Committee. "Of the present members, three have been chairmen of one of the major committees of the House. There are three former governors; the former mayor of a great city; and nine lawyers with wide and varied experience. When I say that, I, as chairman, begin to shiver in my shoes, because the greatest of those lawyers are on the other side."

"There are five university professors on the committee. What kind of professors are they? Are they ordinary university professors? No. One had experience on the War Labor Board. Another sat in judgment in many arbitrations. Another had troops under his command when martial law was invoked."

TURNING TO industry, he declared: "I am not afraid of industry. But today I stand as much afraid of employer organizations, their judgment, their selfish approach, and what they are trying to do, as I did in 1934, when we brought about this change (the Wagner act).

"There has been a complete change of sentiment in the country, but no change as far as employer associations are concerned.

He then attacked T-H.

"The Labor-Management Act of 1947 (T-H) stands as a political aim, as a monument to a political program that was to destroy the New Deal, but which also was to carry us back to a political philosophy of the late 20's, and to overcome whatever changes the Supreme Court and the Congress had brought about since 1932, the date of the passage of the Norris-LaGuardia Act, the Republican Party's contribution to Labor reform.

(In 1932, the Republicans controlled the Senate by one vote; they started the 72d Congress with control of the House by six votes, but lost control through deaths.)

"Not only did they wipe out all the New Deal had acomplished, but what had been acomplished by the Republican Party in enactment of the Norris-LaGuardia Act."

He returned to the political scene with an appeal to some Southern Senators to go along with him.

"I want every Senator on this side (Democratic) to realize that we cannot escape the political aspect of the question.

"We have arrived at the point where the people can ask, and ask with real meaning, 'When your political party speaks, does it mean what it says? When your President speaks, does he mean what he says? When you pose as Democrats and pose as supporters of Administration bills, do you mean what you say?'

"Perhaps I should leave space for our Democratic forces to go in all directions. However, I do not want it to do so. I want to hold them to the unity of the Committee on Labor.

(The Labor Committee voted, 8 to 5, to support the Thomas-Lesinski Bill. All eight were Democrats. All five were Republicans. None was absent.)

"I want them to hold to the unity achieved in the Administration.

(There had been rumors that some in the Administration had originally favored a weaker T-H repealer, but that Truman had argued all to his side.)

"I want to hold them to the unity we have acomplished by way of labor support.

(CIO, AFL and Brotherhoods have worked closely on this legislation.)

"But above all, I want to be able to tell the people of the U. S. that so far as the Democratic Party is concerned, it stands on its pledges, it stands by its President. and its members stand by one another."

He then went into a detailed analysis of his bill.

HE WOUND up with this appeal to his colleagues:

"As a result of the amendments offered today (the Thomas-Lesinski Bill), as a result of a study of the minority views, and as a result of the propositions I have set forth in defense of the bill, the Senate is faced with accepting one of four propositions:

"1. Vote for the bill as reported.

"2. Reject the bill. If that is done, T-H will be left on the books.

"3. Vote for the Thomas bill as modified by the majority members of the committee and some members from the minority side (the Douglas amendments). I am sure these amendments will be considered as perfecting amendments in harmony with the fundamental spirit of the Thomas Bill.

"4. Accept the Thomas bill with amendments offered by the minority. That scheme will eliminate many bad features of T-H, but from a majority standpoint it is objectionable and cannot be accepted as fulfilling the platform pledge or the requirements as laid down by the majority report."

they want to accept the last offer of the employers.

"But the board does not have the power to go over the heads of the company and poll the stockholders . . . on whether they will accept the last offer of the union . . .

Capitol Hill observers feel that at least two more weeks of debate will ensue before a real test. The issue of injunctions alone probably will take up a week."

HERE IS the status of T-H repeal:

1. The House turned down the Sims Bill, a compromise bill supported by some liberals; then voted to substitute the Wood Bill—T-H plus—for the Thomas-Lesinski Bill. Next, in an about-face, the House recommitted the Wood Bill.

The House Labor Committee will attempt to bring out an acceptable liberal labor bill.

2. The Senate has before it the Thomas-Lesinski Bill, the Douglas amendments and the Taft amendments. Other amendments are expected.

THE GROUP of labor lawyers issued the following statement:

"We have met informally to review from a legal standpoint the Taft amendments to the Thomas Bill.

"In the course of our meeting we have made a careful legal analysis of Taft's proposals, taking into consideration the experiences of our respective clients during the last two years under the Taft-Hartley Act.

"It is our considered opinion that the Taft amendments would substantially re-enact T-H. The purported concessions contained in Taft's proposals are insubstantial in character, and would not basically alter T-H. We have advised our clients accordingly and are preparing a detailed analysis of the Taft amendments, which we also propose to make available to members of Congress and to the public."

Those present at the meeting were:

Herbert S. Thatcher—AFL; Arthur J. Goldberg—CIO and Steelworkers; Gerhard Van Arkel—General Counsel, AFL Typographical; Frank Bloom—AFL Telegraphers; Jerome A. Cooper—CIO Southern Organizing Committee.

Leon M. Despres—CIO Transport Service; Morris Glushien—AFL Garment Workers; Thomas E. Harris—CIO; William J. Isaacson—CIO Clothing Workers; Henry Kaiser—AFL Musicians; Isadore Katz—CIO Textile Workers.

G. L. Patterson—CIO Rubber Workers; Alan Perl—Machinists; Nat Wells—Texas Federation of Labor.

Now!

Does your Senator know how much you want Taft-Hartley repealed?

Does your Senator know how much you want Thomas-Lesinski adopted with no crippling amendments?

It not, why don't you write or wire your Senator asking support in the present debate.

Your Senator can be reached at the Senate Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.

Now, please.

the state laws on union security are more severe.

"The law is made to behave like the proverbial Irishman at Donnybrook Fair, namely, when it sees a union security head, he hits it with whatever weapon comes handy.

"Thirdly, during a strike, when the board orders an election to determine the choice of a bargaining representative—which it can do upon a petition presented by an employer—it must deny the vote to the men out on strike and grant it only to the strikebreakers who have taken their place—section 9(c) (3).

"In other words, the act assumes that replaced strikers have no rights in their former jobs which the law need respect, and that only the strikebreakers, are entitled to decide whether collective bargaining shall continue, and if so, upon what terms and through what bargaining agent.

"Since it is easy to see on whose side the strikebreakers will range themselves, the denial of a vote to the replaced strikers is one of those features which former Congressman Hartley must have had in mind when he declared, 'There is more to this act than meets the eye.'

"IN THE FOURTH place, complaints by labor alleging unfair practices by an employer must first go through the long-drawn-out administrative process which now consumes, on the average, over 14 months from the time the charge is filed until the Board decision is rendered, with the further possibility of the delays of judicial review heaped upon that.

"In sharp distinction to this protracted course for complaints filed by labor, however, the act . . . requires that complaints against labor for using the secondary boycott are 'to be given priority over all other cases . . .'

"Therefore, the worker who has suffered injustices . . . suffers from the fact that justice delayed is justice denied. But the employer is given immediate relief, even though the board ultimately decides that his case should be dismissed.

"It is as though in the chow line from which justice is dispensed, the workers are always put at the end of the line, but the employers are rushed to the front . . .

"In the fifth place, in national emergency strikes, the board which makes the investigation is confined in its report to a bare recital of facts, but is prevented from making any recommendations, lest possibly the public might conclude that the strikers might be right in whole or in part . . .

"In the sixth place, as the 80-day cooling-off period in national emergency strikes is about to expire and no settlement is agreed upon, the Government, through the Labor Relations Board, is directed to go over the heads of the union and behind its back and poll the workers individually on whether

T-H As 'Unprejudiced'; Galleries Applaud Pepper's Answer

What does Taft think of the law which he co-spawned?

"T-H was a sincere, unprejudiced attempt to deal with serious abuses which had risen under the labor laws previously in affect," Taft blandly remarked—as the galleries gasped.

He went on: "The act was passed for only one purpose, to restore justice and equality in labor relations and to eliminate special privileges."

Taft is an able spellbinder. But, there were more gasps from the packed galleries when he said: "How has the act worked? Except for the rather violent labor propaganda, so far as I can see it has entirely satisfied the people of the U. S."

Taft's home state of Ohio, which went for Dewey over Roosevelt in 1944, went Democratic last fall—after passage of T-H. Next year, Taft faces a hard battle for re-election.

Pepper took the floor right after Taft and had the almost unprecedented experience of hearing the galleries applauding him.

Turning towards Taft, the Floridian remarked.

"I venture to say, with the utmost of kindness, that when the able Senator from Ohio shall come to the more mellow period of retrospect and contemplation, he will recall with more delight and satisfaction, with more warmth in his heart and memory, what he has done to help the school children of America secure care for their bodies, to get a better opportunity for education, and what he has done to make it possible for the families of America to foresake hovels and live in better homes, then he will recall his Herculean success in putting the retarding fist of his power in the faces of multitudes struggling up the ladder of life to enjoy a few of the satisfactions to which the fortunate were born."

(Senators always refer to opponents as "my good friend" or "my able colleague" or "the distinguished gentleman" before letting them have it.)

When Taft later interrupted him to defend temporary injunctions, Pepper shot back:

"As the Bible says: 'When I was a child I spake as a child, I thought as a child, I understood as a child; but when I became a man, I put away childish things.'"

Then, again on injunctions, Pepper noted that T-H "imposed a duty not to withhold one's labor from another man's goods.

"On that point, the Senator might have a million dollar deal which he could make if he could get to the other end of Pennsylvania Ave., and he might ask me to give him a ride in my car, and if I could imagine myself being so uncivil as to deny the Senator's request, and he lost a million dollars, he could not sue me for not giving him a ride."

Taft: "The Senator may be certain I will never sue him for a million dollars or any other sum."

Pepper: "That is not an act of charity, that is good judgment on the Senator's part. He would not want to sue a worthless subject."

When Taft interrupted to defend bans on mass picketing, Pepper asserted: "I am defending the right of American citizens to put a sign over their shoulders and walk down the street, even though it be in front of the place of business of an employer."

Carey Predicts:

AMA Will Take Credit For Health Insurance

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

THE AMERICAN Medical Assn., bitter opponent of national health insurance, some day will accept the program and may even claim credit for it, CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey predicted last week.

Carey was testifying before a Home subcommittee on the National Insurance and Public Health Bill (HR 4312). The previous week he testified before a Senate subcommittee in favor of the Senate version of the bill (S. 1679).

"For years Congress has had a health insurance bill before it," Carey said, "but it is still in the hearing stage. We are fed up with all the discussion about states' rights that forget the rights of the people to decent health standards."

Referring to the proposals advocated by the AMA and its supporters, Carey declared:

"We are awfully tired of the use of so-called 'voluntary' plans and 'state' plans as a means to delay providing decent health opportunities. Do the advocates of these proposals think the people can be kidded or satisfied by these excuses for not passing a decent bill?"

HEALTH PLAN FOE

Dr. Marjorie Shearon, anti-national health insurance witness at House hearings, objected when a member of the committee asked her if she had not been previously "fired" from her job as health consultant for a Senate Committee. She maintained that this was an affront to her "professional dignity," but agreed to having it stand in the record that she was "discharged."

CAREY GAVE the subcommittee a summary of the AMA's long record of opposition to sound programs of social progress, most of them now in general acceptance, and predicted that its hostility to national health insurance would ultimately go the same way.

Ridiculing charges of the AMA and other opponents of national health insurance that the program was communistic, Carey told the House subcommittee that the best way to defeat communism is for the Federal government to meet the needs of the people.

"Americans naturally turn to their government to provide essential health services and insurance against the costs of medical care," he said. "More than a century ago they carried on a similar fight for public education against the opposition of those who thought that workingmen's children didn't deserve it."

He declared that compulsory health insurance would be welcomed by the American people as being in their interest, just as compulsory education was.

AT THE conclusion of Carey's testimony, Rep. Andrew J. Biemiller (D., Wis.) praised him and the CIO not only for the direct fight being waged against Communists, but "more important, for working to bring about conditions that will prevent communism."

Rep. George H. Wilson (D., Okla.) commended him for admitting some "honest fears" about the program and for not trying "to misrepresent the opposition."

Earlier, members of the subcommittee had objected to some of the testimony presented by Dr. Marjorie Shearon in opposing the proposed health legislation. Rep. J. Percy Priest (D., Tenn.), chairman of the subcommittee, reprimanded Dr. Shearon for making personal attacks on government officials she mentioned and asked her to keep her testimony on a higher level.

Biemiller angrily challenged unsubstantiated charges she made against William G. Reidy, who supplanted her as health consultant for the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare after she was discharged.

Beimiller accused Dr. Shearon of "professional jealousy," and tried unsuccessfully to pin her down as the source of her charge that Reidy, whom she said came to the Senate committee "right out of the Committee for the Nation's Health in 1947," was a "rabble rouser."

Dr. Shearon appeared at the hearing accompanied by her husband, a wisp of a man with white hair who beamed fondly while she was reading her testimony and jumped up excitedly to whisper in her ear when members of the subcommittee challenged her.

Long a familiar sight at health hearings, this militant woman Republican told the House subcommittee that she was an "independent" witness who came "in the public interest" to oppose the proposed health bill, but admitted that she had been forced to register as a lobbyist. She denied that she received any money and said her only source of income for her work came from the sale of her pamphlets.

Her testimony, delivered in an emphatic manner, with frequent odd stresses on words that brought forth titters in the audience was in line with the series of pamphlets she has written in an effort to smear national health nsurance as "Socialized Medicine." One of them is called "Paradise Unlimited! The Menace of the Police State."

The program she said, stems from the Prussian social insurance system of Bismarck, and from the "Socialist-dominated International Labor Organization," and would "lead directly to complete socialization or nationalization as in Britian or Russia."

Her pamphlets have been widely distributed by agencies of the AMA and other groups induced to circulate them. She told the house subcommittee that she had sold 30,000 copies.

St. Louis Newspaper Quizzes AMA

The St. Louis Post-Dispatch used the American Medical Association's decision to retire Dr. Morris Fishbein, long editor of the AMA Journal, as an occasion for asking some pointed questions of the association which was in convention in Atlantic City last week.

Excerpts from the editorial:

"Dr. Fishbein has done a disservice to American medicine by standing in the way of reform. But, after all, he was and is only a 'hired hand.' Does his repudiation constitute a repudiation of the ideas for which he battled so vigorously? Do the politicians of the AMA now realize that they have been going against the grain of American opinion? Do they realize that many AMA members do not approve the AMA line?

"If so, the AMA convention which is getting under way in Atlantic City may become an historic occasion. If the doctors will re-examine their position, they may yet become the leaders, instead of the targets, of the crusade for better medical care. It would be wonderful if their leaders would drop their unyielding opposition; if, instead, they would join legislators and administrators in a sincere effort to work out the best possible program.

"Is there such a deeper meaning behind the silencing of Dr. Fishbein? The next few days may tell."

Record Of Opposition

Here are some of the past policies of the American Medical Association listed by CIO Secy-Treas. Carey for a House subcommittee:

- Years ago, the AMA opposed the formation of community boards of public health, and was against the compulsory reporting by physicians to a public body on communicable diseases.
- In 1921 it was in violent opposition to federal grants-in-aid to public health agencies.
- When the Natl. Tuberculosis Assn. was organized to deal with the disease as a national problem, it was initially opposed by the AMA.
- Through the years, the AMA has been consistently opposed to group practice of medicine through the voluntary organization of citizens and local physicians.
- The Mayo Cinic fought the AMA to establish itself.
- The AMA opposed Workmen's Compensation, designed to protect workers injured in industry.
- In 1929 it opposed Government medical care for veterans suffering from illness not connected with military services.
- In 1932 it denounced all group practice as communistic or socialistic.
- In 1934 it opposed the Blue Cross hospitalization plan, and several years later was indicted in the Federal Courts in Washington under the anti-trust laws for the tactics it used in opposing formation of the Group Health Assn.
- As recently as 1948, the AMA House of Delegates rejected a proposal by the Blue Shield and Blue Cross to work out a combined medical and hospitalization plan for voluntary groups.

'Airlift' Exhibition Opens U. S. Tour

"Airlift Berlin," a practical exhibit describing the Berlin airlift released by the United States Information Service, last week began a month-long display in the education corridor of the Institute of Art, Detroit. The exhibit is under the joint sponsorship of the UAW-CIO Education Department and the Institute of Art.

The dramatic series of 132 pictures prepared by the U. S. State Department give a vivid picture of what the Berlin airlift meant to housewives, students, and workers during the blockade. The exhibit has been given to the UAW-CIO and will be sent to the UAW National Convention in Milwaukee during July. Afterwards the airlift pictures will make a tour of local union halls throughout the U. S.

Steel Local Sets Up 'Murray' Scholarships At College

Local 1557 of the CIO Steelworkers at the Clairton, Pa., works of the Carnegie-Illinois Steel Corp. has set up a "Philip Murray Scholarship Awards" fund under which two youths will be eligible to enroll in Pennsylvania State College each year.

The fund will be applied against tuition, room and board for the students during the full four-year course.

There are two eligibility requirements: the applicant must come from the family of a member of Local 1557 and submit a 500-word paper on "The Trade Union Movement in America." Applicants must take a competitive examination supervised by professional educators.

Pres. Murray wrote Local 1557:

"The action of your local union in the creation of your Committee on Education . . . is indeed a meritorious one in the sense that I know of no other local union which has taken such a forward step to promote the educational activities of our organization."

Congress Passes Spy Measure

A HUSH-HUSH bill providing for administration of the government's Central Intelligence Agency has been cleared by Congress and sent to the White House for signature.

The Agency, created two years ago as a successor to the wartime Office of Strategic Services, engaged in all forms of overseas intelligence, including underground espionage. A few Senators and Congressmen objected that a full explanation of the bill's provisions was withheld from the Senate and House at large, but was provided only to members of the two Armed Services Committees.

The final bill was passed after inclusion of two amendments demanded by Sen. Langer (R., N. D.).

One provided that CIA officials and agents who come back to the United States on leave from their jobs abroad may not be assigned to any government work except in the Intelligence Agency itself.

The other amendment adopted by Congress tightend up a provision to permit the director of CIA to bring into the country 100 aliens a year without regard to other immigration statutes. The provision was changed to provide that clearance on these immigrants would have to be approved by both the Attorney General and the Director of Immigration.

GOVERNMENT officials advocated the special quota of 100 to take care of special informants from other countries whose services are of special value to the U. S. and whose lives might be endangered outside this country.

During the Senate debate, Sen. Langer, who had been critical of many phases of the bill, and Sen. Tydings (D., Md.), chief spokesman for the measure, both denied that CIA would have any espionage functions in the U. S.

Tydings indicated a situation, however, in which U. S. intelligence agents might be placed in foreign union movements.

"Let us assume that a laboring man is a part of this organization (CIA)," Tydings said, "and that we want to send him over to Germany, for example. Let us assume that he speaks German.

"HE MAY NEVER have had any affiliation with a labor union. He is going to associate with men both in and out of labor unions. Obviously he would have to be sent where labor unions meet and discuss questions and where they act, so that he could get the feel of the situation, and so that he would not be like a sore thumb sticking out when he reached a foreign country.

"He would need to know the techniques, the lingo, the habits, and so forth, of those who are labor-union men, in order that he might be an efficient, undisclosed officer gathering information, without any idea on the part of those who would give it, that the information was being imparted to our government."

At another point Tydings emphasized that the intelligence agency "has nothing to do with the internal affairs of the U. S. A."

CIO Urges Support For DP Bill

Support for the Displaced Persons Bill, now pigeonholed in a Senate subcommittee, has been asked of all CIO state councils.

Nathan Cowan, CIO legislative director, said in a wire to the state groups that the Celler Bill (HR 4567) "in general conforms with the position of the CIO regarding admission of displaced persons" from European refugee camps. The Celler bill was passed in the House by a wide margin, but a Senate judiciary subcommittee headed by Sen. McCarran (D., Nev.) has taken no action on it for several weeks.

A bill (S. 311) identical to the Celler bill has been introduced in the Senate by Senators Neely (D., W. Va.) and McGrath (D., R. I.). Cowan suggested that councils ask the governors of each state to wire members of the Senate seeking immediate action.

Meanwhile, another Senate group called for "effective measures aimed at liberalizing the admission of displaced persons." A Senate Expenditures Committee investigation showed that only 72,500 DP's have entered the U. S. since the war, and only 28,500 of these have come in under the DP Act passed by the 80th Congress.

That law authorized the admittance of 205,000 in two years, but it set such difficult eligibility rules that few people have been able to meet the requirements. The bill passed by the House would permit 339,000 to enter in three years, and would loosen the admission standards.

The standards set by the 80th Congress' legislation have been attacked as discriminatory and unworkable by President Truman and scores of labor, liberal and church groups.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

THE TELEPHONE WORKERS AFFILIATION WITH CIO CONTINUES TO ROLL ON. Members of the Ohio Federation of Telephone Workers, representing approximately 10,000 workers, have voted by a majority of more than three to one to affiliate with the CIO telephone workers union. The merger will be brought about in Chicago. Pres. Thomas Ryan and associate officers led the campaign for this affiliation. The workers are employed by the Ohio Bell Telephone Co.

ALL ROADS LEAD TO CHICAGO. Two historic telephone workers conventions will be held. The Telephone Workers Organizing Committee meets Saturday, June 11, at the Stevens Hotel, Chicago. On Monday, June 13, all telephone workers, CIO-CWA, CIO-TWOC and independents, will listen to an address on unity by President Murray. All efforts are directed to bringing about a unified convention which will probably take place on Tuesday, June 14. The two organizations will be blended into one and, with the CIO, are destined to build one of the most powerful unions in the country.

It is a history making gathering and means much to telephone workers and to the labor movement everywhere. We thank all those who assisted us in bringing this about. We shall work with the telephone workers to build a sound, influential powerful organization. We are determined to come from Chicago with one unified union.

TWUA Dir. Harry Stillman advises that in an election held at the American Extruded Products in Los Angeles, Cal., the workers voted 28 to 12 for the TWUA. Rep. Anthony Ramuglia was in charge.

USWA Rep. Dave Wilson reports that in an election held at the International Shoe Co., Vandalia, Missouri, out of 81 employes eligible to vote, 77 voted, 56 voted for the USWA-CIO, 21 no union. Gerald Crane and Joe Starmann were the organizers in charge.

SOUTHERN CAMPAIGN

Van A. Bittner, Director of CIO's Southern Organizing Campaign, reports nine victories for "Operation Dixie" within a week. Two of the wins were for Packinghouse, with one each for Oil, Auto, Textiles, Transport Service Employes, Retail and Wholesale, and the Optical and Instrument Workers.

Alabama: Dir. Carey Haigler reports the employes of the Poultry Cooperative, Inc., Montgomery, Ala., voted affiliation with the Packinghouse Workers, while the workers of the McNair Drug Co., Gadsden, Ala., chose the Retail and Wholesale Union as their bargaining agent.

Texas: Dir. Robert Oliver reports that the Oil Workers Intl. Union was victorious in an election held for the production employes, Port Adams ammonium sulphate plant, Phillips Chemical Co., by a vote of 120 for the CIO to 16 against. This plant is located in Pasadena.

He also reports the CIO Auto Workers victorious in an election held at the Armco Drainage and Metal Products, Inc., Houston, by a vote of 118 for UAW, 51 for AFL, with one lonely worker voting for no union. The Textile Workers' Union was victorious in an election held at the Sherman Manufacturing Co., Sherman, which operates a cotton textile mill, by a vote of 188 for TWUA. 89 against, with 7 challenged ballots.

Georgia: Dir. Charles H. Gillman reports the production employes of the Georgia Fertilizer Co., Valdosta, gave a 2½ to 1 margin to the CIO Packing Workers in an NLRB election.

Arkansas: Assistant Southern Campaign Director Walter H. Harris reports the production workers of the American Optical Co., Little Rock, gave better than a 90% majority to the CIO Optical and Instrument Workers. In a second election he reports that the CIO Chemical Workers were victorious in an election held at the Southern Cotton Oil Co., Little Rock, where the vote was 69 for the CIO, with 14 against.

Florida: Dir. Charles H. Cowl reports that the production employes of the Jacksonville Box Co., Jacksonville, voted for affiliation with the CIO Transport Service Employes by a vote of 58 for the CIO and 28 against.

Education Bill Moves Forward

THE BILL to provide federal aid to education edged a bit closer to final passage by Congress last week.

A House Labor sub-committee gave its approval to HR 4643, with amendments. The Senate has already passed a companion bill.

At House hearings, the CIO and numerous other organizations urged speedy adoption of the proposal, which would authorize the federal government to grant $300,000,000 to local schools throughout the country.

George Guernsey, CIO associate director of education, told the hearings that such federal grants "in the long run are the only method that will destroy the great inequalities in educational opportunity which exist in the U. S. today."

Guernsey quoted from recent studies of the nation's schools to show that in 1939-40 "there were differences as great as 60 to 1 in the amount of money spent on educating children in various parts of the country."

In the years 1942-47, New York State spent an average of $200 on each school child, the CIO representative pointed out, while Mississippi spent only $45.

"States like Alabama, Mississippi and Arkansas would have had to spend between 6 and 9% of their income on education in order to raise all their schools to the national average," Guernsey noted.

Angus McDonald, representing the National Farmers Union, spoke of crisis conditions in rural education. He quoted a remark by former Sen. Josh Lee of Oklahoma that "it looks like the kids are where the money ain't."

Basing Point Bill Defeated

EFFORTS TO over-ride a Supreme Court decision on corporation pricing policies, and to curb the effectiveness of the federal anti-trust laws, have been beaten down in the Senate.

The Senate rejected a proposal (S. 1008) to vote a two-year delay in legislation affecting the "basing point" system of selling prices used by many industries. Instead it adopted a substitute motion by Sen. O'Mahoney (D., Wyo.) designed "to avoid creating a new opportunity for monopolistic practices."

Opposition to S. 1008 had come from the CIO auto and steel unions and other opponents of corporation monopoly.

The basing point system was used by big corporations to set common prices for their product, regardless of distance of shipment or independent competition. The Supreme Court, after hearing a case that had been in the courts for years, upheld a decision outlawing the practice.

Business interests then sought the two-year "moratorium" which would have had the effect of putting the decision on ice for that period of time. Adoption of the O'Mahoney substitute by the Senate scotched that scheme.

House Unit Slows Anti-Polltax Bill

A MOVE TO push anti-polltax legislation into the time-consuming process of a constitutional amendment was suggested last week by a House sub-committee.

By a 4-3 vote the group recommended that the House Committee on Administration withhold action on the polltax matter until the Judiciary Committee has "a reasonable opportunity" to study a proposed constitutional amendment.

This view differed from that of President Truman, who late last week said that he did not think that a constitutional amendment is necessary to outlaw the polltax.

The sub-committee decision could be overturned by the full committee when it meets June 15.

On the other hand, approval by the full committee would mark the end of any possible chance of anti-polltax legislation at this session of Congress. The consitutional amendment to outlaw the tax—now levied on voters in seven Southern states—has long been advocated by Southern polltax Congressmen and lobbyist against the bill. They feel it will be difficult to get 36 state legislatures to ratify such an amendment.

MEANWHILE the Senate Judiciary Committee gave its approval to an anti-lynching bill (S. 91) that would provide $10,000 fines and 20-year prison terms for conspiracy to incite, aid or commit lynchings.

Similar bills have been reported out in past years, but have had scant success in clearing through the Senate, where Southern members have threatened—and used—filibuster tactics.

There is litle reason to believe the bill will be taken up by the Senate in the next few weeks.

A House Labor sub-committee two weeks ago gave its blessing to an FEPC bill, but that has not yet been cleared through the full committee.

Anti-Lynch Action Asked

IN PROTEST against the southern "pattern of violence," Assistant Secy. Roy Wilkins of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People wired majority leaders of Congress demanding that Congress "bring in a rule of law" to do away with mob violence.

The text of the telegram, sent to Sens. J. Howard McGrath (R. I.) and Scott W. Lucas (Ill.) and Rep. John W. McCormack (Mass.), follows in part:

"Lynching of Caleb Hill at Irwinton, Ga., is but one more indication of necessity for civil rights legislation in this session of Congress. Georgia had two lynchings in 1948 and numerous acts of violence and terrorism against Negroes including murder of one man in Montgomery County because he voted in primary last September and beating up of another man in Toombs County who carried voters to polls in his car."

House Dixiegops Delay Housing

By GLORIA CAPLAN

IT WAS THE same old story: The Republicans and Southern Democrats together had more votes than the Administration Democrats. And another major piece of Pres. Truman's program got kicked aside—at least temporarily.

Had this been the Republican 80th Congress, there would have been no hope of salvaging the housing bill after the House Rules Committee turned thumbs down. But this was the 81st, and the Democrats had changed the rules.

After sitting in the Dixiegop-controlled House Rules committee for almost a month, the bill was finally pigeonholed. The Republican committee members voted solidly against sending the measure to the floor. They were Reps. Leo Allen (Ill.), Clarence Brown (Ohio), James Wadsworth (N. Y.), and Christian A. Herter (Mass.).

They were joined by three Southern Democrats: Eugene Cox (Ga.), Howard Smith (Va.) and William Colmer (Miss.).

THE committee then voted to reconsider its action June 13, but Committee Chairman Adolph Sabath (D., Ill.) doubted that any of the seven die-hards would shift his vote.

If the bill fails to win committee clearance, as is expected, it may reach the floor on June 27 under the Democrats' new "anti-blockade" rule. A resolution to bring the housing measure to the floor was introduced June 1 by Rep. Brent Spence (D., Ky.), chairman of the Housing Banking Committee, which had approved the bill.

Earliest date, under the "anti-blockade" rule, on which the resolution can be taken up is June 27. Chances for its acceptance are considered good. If the resolution succeeds, it will mark the first time the housing bill has jumped the hurdles to reach the Housing floor.

The Senate has already passed a comprehensive housing bill, differing only slightly from the House version.

During the Rules Committee's deliberations on the bill, it was reported, Rep. Church (R., Ill.) charged that the people who stood most to gain from the housing bill were "too lazy" to look for homes.

Snapped Democrat Ray Madden, an Indiana liberal from a CIO Steelworkers district: "I'd like to invite these gentlemen to my district, where they would see thousands of homeless people who are not poor and not lazy.

"Workers in the mills in Gary and other plants are forced to live in trailer camps, where there are as many as 700 families bunched together. These people are crying for homes of their own and they could afford to pay $7000 to $8000, but they can't afford the $20,000 and $30,000 being charged for homes by the big real estate boys."

The "big real estate boys" meanwhile weren't snoozing. Around the end of May, the Natl. Association of Home Builders—chief among the real estate lobby groups—boasted that its Natl. Board of Directors had visited 211 members of the House and "a large number of Senators" in their fight against the bill.

The NAREB directors said they found the Congressmen increasingly worried about the "dangerous impact of its cost of $19 billion," the NAREB's Washington letter reported.

But the U. S. Bureau of the Budget has put a crimp in that often-repeated claim. The Bureau told the House Rules Committee that the housing measure would cost 9 to 10 billion dollars over the entire period, and not the 16-19 billions claimed by the bill's opponents.

Chicago Ford Workers Get Compensation

Employes laid off at the Ford Chicago plant because of the recent strike of Ford workers in Dearborn, Mich. are eligible for unemployment compensation under a ruling made by an Illinois Labor Dept. The decision is hailed by the UAW because it may establish a precedent for similar disputes in other states. Ford had protested compensation payments to UAW members laid off because of parts shortages during the strike

A New Picket Line.

CVA Blow In Reports Is Feared

CIO OFFICIALS are worried that "efforts may be made in some quarters to head off a Columbia River Valley Authority or cripple its work."

The view was expressed in a letter to Pres. Truman signed by John Brophy, CIO councils director and head of the Committee on Regional Development and Conservation; and by Nathan Cowan, CIO Legislative Director. The CIO is supporting the Columbia Valley Authority bill (S. 1645) introduced by Sen. Magnuson (D., Wash.).

Danger to the CVA idea comes in pressure to get Congressional endorsement of two reports on the Columbia Valley—one by the Army Engineers, the other by the Bureau of Reclamation.

"The Army-Reclamation plans may or may not be good or bad on the whole," Brophy and Cowan wrote to the President. "The general public does not know, because the Army Review Report is, to all intents and purposes, secret."

They added that one aspect of the report would injure the Columbia River fisheries and lead to extensive unemployment.

"All these projects should be re-examined by the Columbia Valley Authority when it is established," they wrote. "CVA, therefore, should be set up as soon as possible."

Wholesale Grocers Want 1-Way Street

The U. S. Wholesale Grocers' Association at its annual convention at St. Louis, Mo., asked the federal government to help fight the big grocery chains, but at the same time turned thumbs down on the government giving any breaks to labor.

A resolution said that the small fines for anti-trust violations that have been slapped on the big combines "represent insignificant amounts compared to their volume of business and financial resources."

But when they came to consideration of pending labor legislation the wholesale grocery men lined up with the big corporations. They said that Taft-Hartley shouldn't be substantially changed, and objected also to the union-supported minimum wage law revisions.

Doherty is Renamed To School Board

John Doherty, intl. rep. of the CIO Steelworkers, who served three years on the Chicago Board of Education, has been appointed to a full five-year term on the board. He had been serving an unexpired term.

The city council approved the appointment unanimously without committee study when it was submitted by Mayor Martin H. Kennelly. Doherty's name was among three "acceptable" candidates submitted to Mayor Kennelly by a screening committee composed of representatives from 15 civic groups.

Benefit Payment Delays Flayed In N. J.

CONTINUED delays up to three months in the payment of unemployment compensation benefits, "despite the sugarcoated promises of Governor Driscoll and UCC Director Harold Hoffman to speed up service," have been attacked by Newark City Commissioner Stephen J. Moran.

Moran who is also executive secretary of the State CIO, opened the first annual "Institute on Community Services," sponsored by the New Jersey State CIO Community Services Committee on the Rutgers University campus at New Brunswick.

Moran called for the opening of additional UCC offices in industrial centers, such as Newark; for a speed-up in claims-handling by permitting local offices to make initial determinations on eligibility questions, instead of sending all claims to Trenton for such decisions; and for an increase in UCC benefits to a maximum of $30 weekly for 30 weeks.

AL WAGNER, Passaic, chairman of the State CIO community services committee, said the CSC proposes building "a better community by merging the strength and resources of the CIO with those of other representative groups to provide more adequate health, welfare and recreation services."

Private insurance companies "will make a cool net profit of at least $50 million this year" from the New Jersey temporary disability benefits law — "about three-fourths of it out of the pockets of workers" — Harry Kranz, legislative director for the State CIO, told the group.

He said employers are permitted to choose either state plan or private plan coverage for their workers under the state TDI law.

Kranz declared that while "this social security measure permits private profiteering, is slanted against the state plan, and provides inadequate benefits under the state plan, insurance companies have brought pressure against the State Senate, which killed the bill to increase benefits."

STANLEY RUTTENBERG, national CIO research director, spoke on "a cradle-to-grave social security program." Participating in a panel on "union counseling" was Robert Kinney, midwestern representative, national CIO-CSC.

Discussion leaders at sessions on CIO's program to meet the health and welfare needs of unemployed and employed workers were Irving Abramson, chairman, and Leo Perlis, director, of the National CIO-CSC.

Dixie State Jobs Urged For Negroes

The executive committee of the Southern Regional Council has urged the Southern governors to appoint representative Negro citizens to positions on policy-making boards.

The Council is an organization of church, labor, business, and professional people of both races from thirteen Southern states. Its announced aim is the "attainment of equal opportunity by all the South's people."

The group's executive committee issued its message to the Southern governors following a one-day meeting in Atlanta. It commended Gov. Kerr Scott of North Carolina for appointing Dr. Harold L. Trigg, Negro college president, to the state board of education. Similar action in other Southern states, it declared, would be "of the greatest public benefit."

The Southern group told the governors that such appointments would get greater attention for the needs of Negroes, lessen needless irritations, strengthen the civic pride of Negro citizens, and prove to the nation the South's intent to administer services fairly.

Among the signers of the statement was Charles Gillman, CIO director for Georgia.

Accident Prevention Bureau Is Proposed

BILLS designed to end the present "crazy quilt" pattern of workmen's compensation and industrial safety bills throughout the 48 states have been introduced by liberal members of both the House and Senate.

Rep. Tom Burke (D., Ohio), former officer of the Toledo CIO Council, and Sen. Humphrey (D., Minn.) introduced the proposals (S. 1992; HR 4997).

The bills, proposing an "Accident Prevention Act of 1949," would set up a Bureau of Accident Prevention in the Dept. of Labor to conduct technical investigations on job conditions in hazardous industries. The Bureau would develop "reasonable standards for safe and healthful operations and for the prevention and correction of industrial hazards."

In addition, Accident Prevention Boards, representing the government, labor and industry, would be set up in each "hazardous" industry to establish health and safety standards, to be determined on the basis of evidence at public hearings. Violations of these standards could lead to fines up to $1000 and sentences of up to six months, the bills provide.

REP. BURKE, in the course of an hour speech in the House, charged that at present "we do not have uniform standards of health and safety; we do not have uniform enforcement of such standards as now exist; and we do not have uniform workmen's compensation payments and insurance charges.

"It is high time that we act to take workers' lives, workers' health and workers' disability payments out of competition as between plant and plant, industry and industry, state and state.

"My bill proposes to make a beginning by bringing hazardous industries under uniform enforcement."

Burke added that he was "of course" suggesting that health, safety and workmen's compensation standards and enforcement should be "leveled up" to those prevailing in the most advanced states, and "not down to the inhumanly low standards of some states where . . . lower labor costs are still offered as bait to lure plants from other states."

In addition, Burke told Congress, "we should go higher than even the best standards prevailing anywhere . . . We can take much of the blood and tears and some of the sweat out of hazardous industries."

The bills have been referred to the Senate and House Labor Committees.

Loew's, RKO Stall In Pact Talks

The New York City CIO Council has threatened to place Loew's and RKO theatres in the mertopolitan area on the unfair list unless the companies take immediate steps to wind up a 10-months contract dispute with the CIO screen unions.

Both the Screen Publicists Guild and the Screen Office & Professional Employes Guild, UOPWA, charge the movie concerns with failure to bargain in good faith. Contracts expired last September.

To officials of the companies, Michael Quill, president of the CIO Council, wrote: "Your stubborn insistence in these times on pay as low as $23 a week, on the right to fire for any reason without arbitration, and on open shop, is a challenge to all unions."

'Minimum Livelihood Due Every Worker'

There is a "minimum livelihood due every worker for the simple reason that he is a man made in the image and likeness of God," the Catholic Committee of the South declared at its annuel meeting in Lexington, Ky.

"This minimum should include: 1. Food, clothing and housing of sufficient quality and quantity to keep the worker in normal health and comfort; 2 Reasonable security against sickness, accident and old age; 3. adequate education and recreation."

Wolchok Appointed As CIO Organizer

Samuel Wolchok, for many years head of the Retail & Wholesale Employes Union, has been appointed to the CIO organizing staff, it was announced by Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice-president and director of organization.

Wolchok has not yet received a definite organizing assignment.

Textile Chain Accused Of Effort To Wreck TWUA Gains

Pres. Emil Rieve, of the CIO Textile Workers Union has accused the Ely and Walker Dry Goods Co., of St. Louis, Mo., of "attempting to destroy the hard-earned gains of 500 textile workers in Tarboro, North Carolina."

He declared that "in reality, this dispute involves far more than 500 Tarboro workers. The outcome will affect the welfare of workers throughout North Carolina and in other states as well."

The Ely and Walker Co. owns the Hart Cotton mill of Tarboro where a strike has been in progress since May 12 when negotiations for a union contract broke off.

Workers in the plant are members of TWUA Local 316. In addition to the Hart mill, the St. Louis concern owns five other mills in four states. It has large interests in two additional textile chains, and owns or has interests in a number of other manufacturing enterprises.

"This 40 million dollar industrial giant earned more than 16 million dollars in profits last year," Rieve said. "There is absolutely no economic justification for the attack it has made upon these workers.

"The workers of the Hart Cotton mill are asking for no increase in wages or improvements in working standards. They are demanding only that the standards which they have built up over the past few years be maintained during the coming year."

VISIT GUNMAN'S VICTIM: Three Reuther brothers are shown leaving the Henry Ford Hospital, Detroit, where they visited the fourth brother, Victor, who was badly wounded by a blast from a shotgun fired by a would-be assassin. L. to r.: Roy, Mrs. Walter, Mrs. Victor, Mrs. Roy and Walter. Victor is education director of the CIO Auto Workers, of which Walter is president. Roy is a UAW organizer; Ted is in private industry.

Columnist Urges Carson Confirmation

The Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce continues to do nothing about confirming the appointment of John Carson to the Federal Trade Commission.

But Peter Edson, in his widely sydicated column, hailed the appointment as a step which restore the FTC to its original purpose.

"The Federal Trade Commission was created in 1915 to operate 'in the public commission' and to 'foster the American economic system of free competitive enterprise,'" Edson said. "In short, it was set up under the anti-trust laws to check monopolistic and unfair trade practices, such as price-fixing, boycotts and combinations in restraint of trade."

Edson further pointed out that "the objection of some Senators to Carson—formerly an ace newspaperman—is obviously that he has recently been connected with the Cooperative League of America. Many business interests oppose his nomination on the same grounds. But the Federal Trade's record in recent years indicates some new blood of this kind may be exactly what it needs."

AFL Political League Issues Weekly Paper

Volume 1, Number 1, of the League Reporter, new weekly newspaper of Labor's League for Political Education-AFL, has come off the presses. The first issue is dated June 6.

It is a four-page slick-paper tabloid, carying highlights of the major political battles in the nation's capital. Features include a Washington Column, devoted in the first issue to the battle over a Columbia Valley Authority; a column of "Radio Notes from the Capitol" and another column on "News from the States."

Princeton Magazine Says:

Fulton Lewis, Jr., Inaccurate, Irresponsible

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

The words are those of radio commentator Fulton Lewis, and you can hear them five nights a week on the Mutual network as Lewis winds up the 15 minutes of discussion. Usually the "top of the news" is reactionary news, as it comes to the microphone from Lewis. It's almost always belligerent, and it almost always sounds slanted.

The slant in the news and views of Fulton Lewis, Jr. has now been measured, almost scientifically, in an article in the current issue of The Public Opinion Quarterly. That magazine, sponsored by Princeton University, looks at the radio commentator in an article entitled "What Constitutes Irresponsibility on the Air?"

The author, Giraud Chester, former Cornell University professor, obviously feels that Fulton Lewis is a clear case of irresponsibility. And pretty well proves it.

SLANTED

Fulton Lewis, Jr. He gets $250,000 a year. His listeners got innuendo, distortion, suppression—and often, plain misstatements of fact.

FULTON LEWIS struck it rich on radio. He rose rapidly from a $25-a-week reporter's job on a Washington Hearst paper to a $250,000 yearly income. His father-in-law was at one time chairman of the Republican National Committee. President Hoover, unable to attend the Lewis wedding in 1929, sent a silver salad bowl.

Today, you can hear Fulton Lewis on any one of 300 Mutual stations. (Some stations like his views so much they broadcast his program twice each evening.) Many of his broadcasts originate from his own suite of offices, a couple of blocks from CIO headquarters. Others emanate from his luxurious $100,000 estate a few miles down the Potomac from Washington.

A survey in 1939 showed Lewis was a 2-1 favorite among Congressmen. One Democratic Congressman has called him a "hatchet man"; Sen Mundt (R. S. D.), author of bills criticized for their danger to civil rights, thinks him "the fairest and most accurate news commentator in America."

Few union men, who have heard Lewis declaim against the "left-wing, CIO-dominated, Roosevelt (or Truman) administration" would agree with the Senator.

John Crosby, radio reviewer for the Republican New York Herald Tribune, "listened to Lewis's pre-election broadcasts last year and charged that Lewis was not a commentator at all but an outright Republican campaigner. Crosby thought that Lewis's national air time ought to 'be paid for and so listed by the Republican National Committee.'"

PROF CHESTER, in his magazine analysis of Lewis, looks at the Lewis record in three major compaigns—his attacks on cooperatives, on a government housing program and on price control.

The attack on the co-ops, Chester says, "is fairly characteristic of his personal crusades." Drawing material from an anti-co-op pressure group, the Natl. Tax Equality Association, Lewis jumped into the fray.

He described the co-operatives as a "new and highly threatening form of super-big business . . . enjoying freedom from taxation . . . a sort of sacrosanct monopoly . . . a legalized system of tax evasion."

The co-operatives sought radio time for an answer, got three morning spots from Mutual. (Lewis is heard at the choice 7 PM time in the East). The co-operatives' spokesman pointed out that Lewis himself belonged to a farm co-operative, and had cashed co-op dividend checks for three years.

Lewis, strangely annoyed at the broadcasting of that item, pouted that the information had been broadcast without "obtaining any permission on my part to do so." (Try using that for an alibi next time your union is slandered on the air!)

The commentator hedged a bit: "There has been no attack in these broadcasts on co-operatives, as such . . . Co-operatives are an excellent thing as they operate as such . . .," he said.

But a few weeks later, the Lewis line changed drastically: Co-operatives exist to "tear down and destroy the profit system . . . The people who are supporting, promoting and advancing this are the same left-wingers . . . who man the Daily Worker . . . who were in the office of the OPA . . . who want to take the American economic system out of the hands of private enterprise . . . and put it all into the hands of the government."

Lewis threatened to go to the courts if necessary, to cash in his $61.01 in co-op stocks. The co-ops said in effect: go ahead. The radio man then "changed his position and adamantly refused to take his money and get out," Prof. Chester reported.

Another of Lewis's big campaigns was directed against Wilson Wyatt, who served as U. S. Housing Administrator right after the war.

IT WAS the Office of Price Administration and the program of price controls that really drew Lewis's fire. As Prof. Chester comments, his "crusades against co-operatives and government housing were relatively minor compaigns compared with his series of attacks on the OPA."

In April, 1946, when the anti-OPA fight was getting under way, Lewis predicted that "removal of OPA may bring price rises of 15 to 18%." He added that these "price fluctuations would continue for not more than six months after removal" of controls.

Prices of course went up far higher than 18%, and three years later they're still higher than under OPA.

In May 1946, he asked listeners to write to Congress "to clean up OPA . . . unless you want OPA continued, with you paying 20% more than you would be paying for meat."

When OPA Administrator Chester Bowles predicted that ending of controls would send meat prices up 40 to 50%—as they did—Lewis replied knowingly that consumer meat prices would actually fall when controls were lifted. "The worst that can happen is for the present black market prices to stay the same," said the exponent of "free enterprise."

When prices started soaring after OPA was killed, Lewis made his record of sour predictions complete: "these present prices are entirely temporary, indeed momentary, and they'll only last a very few days."

The "shocking examples" in Lewis' record, Prof. Chester concludes, are among the factors which lead to radio commentators being described as "irresponsible." Lewis, he added, "may be said to have departed from the highest standards in two respects: inaccuracy of facts and hyperbole (exaggeration) in expression."

'Katzenjammer Kids'

John Herling, a veteran labor reporter recently turned commentator, doesn't go for the Fulton Lewis Jr. type of thinking. In his recent "Labor and the Nation" broadcast from Washington Herling said:

"Now, it looks as if Senator Hickenlooper is worried about being lost in the political shuffle. Well, in that case, what does a politician do—any politician? He wants to hit the front pages—and wants to get himself wired for sound—to show the folks back home that he's some 'punkins' in the nation's capital.

"Yes, sir, much to nobody's surprise, he finds Chuckle-Boy Fulton Lewis, junior—ready and willing—and away they go—the Katzenjammer kids of the political campaign of 1950."

The CIO News

Vol XII | WASHINGTON, D. C., JUNE 20, 1949 | 82 | No. 24

MERGER: CIO Pres. Philip Murray holds the hands of Margaret Kish, of the Telephone Workers' Organizing Committee, and Mayburn LaBrache, of the Communications Workers of America, signifying the amalgamation of the two CIO unions last week. This historic action makes a mighty body representing traffic, plant, production, commercial, etc., workers over a wide field. It will strengthen the hand of the workers against America's most powerful monopoly, the A. T. & T. That company recently informed CWA it was withdrawing recognition of the union, just after it voted to go CIO. Last week, the convention unanimously authorized a nationwide strike action against the A. T. & T. Bell system within 90 days if necessary to win recognition of CWA as bargaining agent. Murray told the CWA convention "I am going to recommend to the CIO convention a constitutional amendment be adopted which would bar any organization from representation on CIO board or our councils which fails to live up to the decisions of our conventions or to our constitution." He lauded TWOC and CWA for being free of communist taint. For more news of CWA, of Mayburn and of Margaret, look on pages 6 & 7.

Would-Be Assassin's Shot Misses Organizer By Inches As He Lies On Hospital Bed

By AL ZACK

BY A SCANT three inches, death or a serious injury missed Thomas S. Mitchell, 30-year-old chief organized for the Ohio Federation of Telephone Workers, June 12, as he slept in his hospital room in Marion, Ohio.

His unknown assailant used a shotgun. The shooting markedly duplicated shotgun attempts on the lives of Pres. Walter Reuther, of the CIO Auto Workers and his brother, Victor, UAW educational director.

Mitchell told the CIO News, "I have a good idea who was responsible. Of course, I can't say yet—I haven't any proof."

Meanwhile, Marion police "went through the motions" of trying to solve the crime and, at the same time, tried to minimize the shooting.

The attempt on Mitchell's life came nine days after the Ohio Federation of Telephone Workers had voted to affiliate with the CIO.

Mitchell was a patient in Marion City hospital, and was recuperating from an emergnecy appendectomy.

As he slept in his hospital bed, three feet from an open window, the gunman placed the barrel of the shotgun against the screen and pumped one shell into the darkened first-floor hospital room.

The blast tore Mitchell's pillow to shreds, ripped into the hospital bed mattress and lodged in the wall at the head of the bed, having torn the bed lamp loose.

THOMAS MITCHELL

His dive caused the incision to open and he lost a good deal of blood as a result.

As other patients and hospital attendants rushed to the room, Mitchell cautioned them against turning on lights, which would have provided the shotgun-armed hoodlum with a better target. Police, summoned immediately, were unable to find the gunman.

Police Chief William E. Marks said the gunman apparently stood on a terrace outside Mitchell's room, placed the shotgun against the screen and fired. He was less than five feet from Mitchell's head.

A quick search of the area outside the room left police with no clues, Marks said. The ground was dry and no footprints could be found. Minutes later, rain pelted down on the area, wiping out any chance of finding footprints not immediately apparent in the rays of police flashlights.

MARKS ORDERED the hospital room sealed off, while he sent for the State Highway Patrol's mobile crime detection laboratory. He refused to allow newsmen to photograph the interior of the room, or the hospital bed, according to the Marion Star, once owned by the late President Warren G. Harding.

Mark's story to reporters differed from Mitchell's version, in that the police chief said "a few pellets hit the pillow." According to Mitchell, the pillow was torn to pieces by the blast.

Newspapers, devoting considerable space to the shooting, noted that the strike has been marked by "violence and vandalism." They said that the telephone company's cables had been slashed 51 times during the strike.

Mitchell reiterated the Union's repeated denials that it had anything to do with the cable slashings.

On June 3, the Ohio Federation of Telephone Workers officially counted ballots of its 10,000 members who had voted in a mail referendum on the subject of affiliation with the CIO.

By better than 3 to 1, the membership voted to end the independent status of the Ohio Federation of Telephone Workers and follow the lead of the Communications Workers of America in affiliating with the CIO.

The attempt on Mitchell's life came as officials of the CIO, CWA, and Ohio Federation were in convention in Chicago, arranging for the merger of telephone unions.

"If it hadn't been for my appendix operation, I'd have been in Chicago, too," Mitchell said.

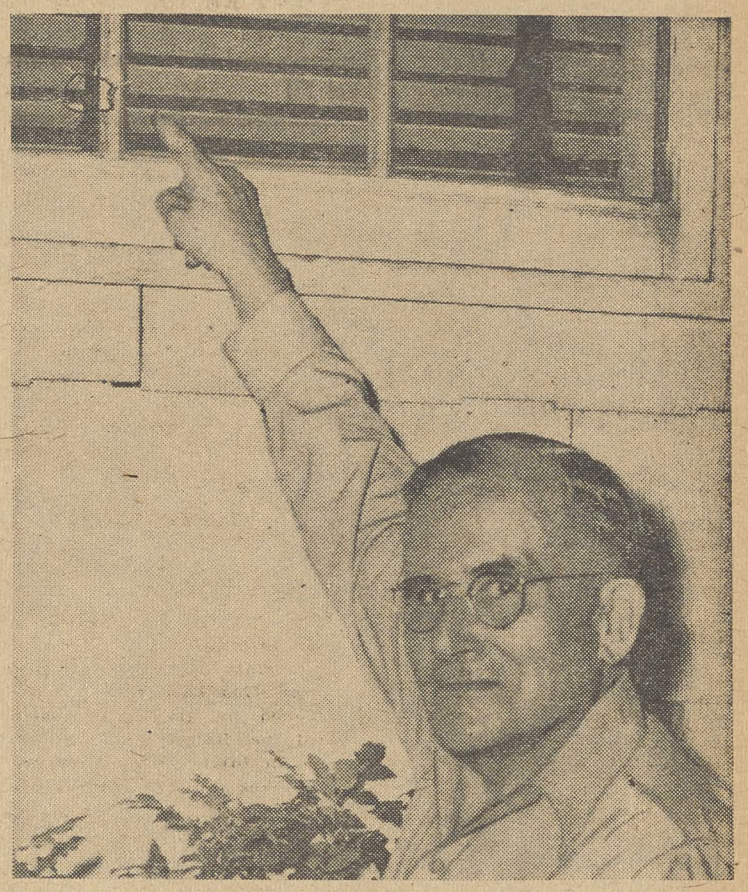
He said that while he was in the hospital, he received a get-well-quick card, which had been altered to read:

"I hope you never get well."

There was no signature on the card and Mitchell was inclined to attribute it to a "crank." He said he did not believe it had any connection with the shooting.

The Marion strike began April 7, when the company refused union demands for a 15-cents-an-hour wage boost and a union shop. The company offered 5-cents an hour.

To date, efforts of the U. S. Conciliation service to settle the strike have been fruitless. Further talks were scheduled to begin June 20.



WOULD-BE ASSASSIN fired at Thomas Mitchell, organizer for the Ohio Federation of Telephone Workers, CIO, through this window in the Marion, Ohio, Hospital. The pellets missed Mitchell by three inches and tore his pillow into shreds.

Economic Advisers Urged To Face Jobless Issue

EFFECTIVE government action, rather than "more pious optimism," is needed to combat the "rising tide of unemployment," the CIO reminded government economists last week.

"We must squarely attack the basic problem by forming national policies which will return the jobless to productive work. At the same time, we must take steps to mitigate the present suffering of the unemployed and their families."

That demand was placed squarely before the Council of Economic Advisers—the three-man group of economists which reports quarterly to the President on economic matters. The Council is a key agency in the development of the government's attitude on economic affairs.

The CIO statement was issued after a visit to the Council by two members of the CIO's Full Employment Committee—its administrative chairman, Pres. Emil Rieve of the textile union, and Pres. Walter Reuther of the auto union. They were accompanied by Stanley Ruttenberg, CIO research director, and Everett Kassalow, secretary of the Full Employment Committee.

Next day, Reuther visited Pres. Truman at the White House. Afterwards, he predicted that the Administration will deal "realistically and effectively" with the unemployment problem.

Government officials, he added, are not taking a "do-nothing" attitude on the false assumption that something automatic will come into play to correct this. That was the Hoover-GOP policy that brought on 1929."

The President, at his weekly press conference, said his mid-year report on the economic situation would outline his views as to what the government should do.

THAT THE TIME for action is rapidly approaching is clear from reports reaching many national unions, and from government statistics on the job situation.

The Bureau of Census figures, generally regarded as on the conservative side, recently revealed a 300,000 increase in unemployment—at a time when joblessness usually drops. The Census figures also show 8½ million people working less than 35 hours a week.

The Census Bureau reports note that about 1.7 million people have a job but are not currently at work. While many of these are people who are sick, on vacation or on leave, CIO economists believe that at least a quarter-million of them are workers who have been furloughed or laid off, but who have not been without work for over 30 days.

It is clear that development of the unemployment problem has given a new "economy" argument to foes of the Fair Deal program, in big business and in Congress. Numerous Republicans and Dixiecrats have dropped old propaganda against increased social security, housing, health insurance, etc., in favor of a "new approach"—that the government should clamp down on all "unnecessary spending" at this time.

"NOW IS THE TIME for the Council of Economic Advisers to speak out boldly against unwise proposals to curtail federal spending on behalf of social programs which both the Administration and the CIO are supporting," the statement said.

"Passage of the housing bill, federal aid to education, and a health bill are especially essential at this time.

"With private demand lagging in many parts of the economy, to sacrifice the government's program on the altar of budget-balancing would be morally indefensible and economically absurd."

The CIO also lashed out at suggestions for "across-the-board" tax relief—suggestions which, together with demands for reduced government spending, have been coming frequently from business and Republican sources.

Those demands, "in the face of continued over-all record profits, just don't make sense," the Full Employment Committee said.

What is needed, the committee pointed out, is a "new look at taxes"—with drastic cuts in income taxes for families in the lower income brackets, and removal of the wartime excise taxes—on a whole variety of so-called luxury products—which have been plaguing consumers.

Other suggestions of the CIO economists:

1. Strengthening of "out-moded" unemployment compensation and relief programs.

2. Special attention to "severely depressed industries and areas"—through concentration of public spending in those areas and possible development of additional river valley planning projects along the lines of TVA.

3. An adequate public works program, with an eye to long term needs.

Senators Open Debate On Injunctions

Labor Lawyers Hit Taftism

THE SENATE last week got to the heart of a new labor law—what to do about so-called "national emergency" strikes.

No one on the employer side seemed able to define exactly what would constitute such an emergency, but they were dutifully attempting to make things as tough as possible for labor—and as easy as possible for the boss.

The Taft-Hartley Law contains an explicit injunctive process, which has been employed several times. The Administration Thomas-Lesinski Bill eliminates this. The so-called Douglas amendment—and the Ives amendment—provide for seizure powers.

Sen. Robert A. Taft (R., O.), who continues to carry out his spite against the working man, has joined with Sen. Forrest C. Donnell (R., Mo.), to put in an amendment which would allow injunctive power along with seizure authorization.

(Both Taft and Donnel are up for reelection next year.)

Last week, the Senate tentatively adopted these amendments to the Thomas-Lesinski Bill, all urged by liberal senators who feel that the Thomas Bill could not pass in its present form and who want to eliminate the core of T-H:

1. Require employers and employes to bargain collectively.
2. Guarantee free speech to both sides.
3. Require employers, as well as unions, to file financial statements.
4. Require employers, as well as unions, to sign non-Communist and non-Fascist oaths in order to use the facilities of the Natl. Labor Relations Board.

Taft tried unsuccessfully to convince his colleagues that the amendments were just like T-H. He fought the amendment requiring employers to file financial statements on the grounds that most business concerns already file such reports with government agencies, so the amendment was useless.

He ignores the fact that unions also must file financial statements under the income tax law.

As the debate began on seizure vs. injunctions, Sen. Paul Douglas (D. Ill.) conceded that there might be an implication, in ultimate emergencies, of Presidential power to seek injunctions under his plan, but only where a struck plant was under government seizure and only if and when the workers resisted all appeals to go on working.

He and Sen. George Aiken (R., Vt.), who is co-sponsor of the Douglas amendment, declared their purpose was to put the use of force as far into the background as could possibly be done. They want to rely primarily on the belief that men would be very reluctant to "strike against the government."

While the plant is under seizure, the amendment sets up machinery to bring the parties to a settlement.

TAFT ARGUED that the Administration is "blowing hot and cold" on the use of injunctions by opposing continuance and at the same time "laying a claim" that the President has inherent powers to act in the "public interest."

Douglas declared there is "a great distinction" between making men work for a private enterprise and making them work for the government. The former, he asserted, isn't "one to obtain justice." He said that in its extreme form it smacks of a "police state."

TAFT MAGNANIMOUSLY conceded that any form of injunctive power does involve "some infringement" of the right to strike. He contended that under his law (T-H) and also under his super-duper T-H, that an injunction could also be gotten against an employer to avert a national strike. Just how that would work he didn't make clear.

He went on to say that the use of injunctions would not be relevant to more than "one strike in a thousand."

To him, "it is perfectly clear that being asked in these circumstances, to continue working for 60 days under working conditions previously agreed to by both parties is not an unreasonable demand where the alternative might be national disaster."

Comic

Sen. Elbert Thomas (D., Utah), during Senate debate on labor legislation:

"If we tried to outlaw the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, would it not be like trying to outlaw the comic papers or some of the other things which are part of our life and which the people rather enjoy, but never take seriously?"

DON'T BE FOOLED by the sugar that coats Sen. Robert A. Taft's amendments to the Taft-Hartley Law, a group of leading labor attorneys warns.

The amendments "are carefully designed to give the appearance but not the reality of concessions to the popular demand for T-H repeal," the lawyers say.

"Lip service only is given to the mandate of the 1948 election. At no point is the core of T-H Act touched. touched.

"To test these statements, the reader need only recall those features of T-H which have received most prominent attention and then seek to see whether they would be repealed by the Taft amendments. He will find that the following basic provisions are to be left intact.

"1. Government by injunction would be continued. The Norris-LaGuardia Act remains weakened by giving the Labor Board the discretionary right to apply for injunctions against certain strikes and boycotts.

"2. The use of injunctions in 'national emergencies' even against clearly justified strikes over wages and other working conditions would be continued. In an attempt to make this provision more palatable, a provision for token rather than real government seizure would be added.

"3. Boycotts would still be illegal, including many forms which have long been regarded as legitimate union activities. The one exception which would be added is of limited and infrequent application.

"4. Unions would still be subject to damage suits by employers or even outside parties for violation of the many provisions forbidding strikes and boycotts which have been traditionally regarded as legal.

"5. Unions would still be subject to damage suits for violation of collective bargaining contracts on the false theory that legal warfare can achieve peaceful industrial relations.

"6. The federal government would still punish picket line activity, already more than adequately covered by state law.

"7. The ban on the closed shop contract would remain as would most of the limitations on the union shop contract. State laws on the subject would still be subordinate to the federal law except where such state laws were more hostile than the federal law to union security.

"8. The T-H ban on the check-off of union dues, proved in the past two years to be entirely unwarranted, would remain

"9. Welfare funds would be subject to slightly modified restrictions which would be no less onerous and would inject the government further and unnecessarily into this field.

"10. Financial reports would still be required only of unions.

"11. The anti-Communist oath would not be extended explicitly to Fascist and totalitarian organizations and would be broadened to the point of being administratively unworkable.

"Taft's desire to make a show of concession may be seen in the last of 23 "changes" which he has asserted his amendments would make in the Taft-Hartley Act. Every amendment, however insignificant, has been dragged in to make this list look impressive.

"In the main these concessions are designed only to correct evils in T-H for which no defenders can now be found. The list includes repeal of the requirement of elections authorizing unions to sign union shop contracts, a requirement which has served only to prove that employes favor such contracts overwhelmingly.

"It includes repeal of the prohibition of feather-bedding, that much talked of but non-existent evil. It eliminates the peculiarly unjustified exclusion of economic strikers from representation elections.

"At the same time Senator Taft uses the demand for T-H repeal as an opportunity for introducing new repressive features. These include a new approval of employer interference with elections under the guise of free speech, relaxing of procedural safeguards against injunctions without, notice and further limitations on the check-off.

"T-H cannot be salvaged by amendments proposed by its author. The time is past due for a return to a constructive labor relations policy based upon the principles of free collective bargaining."

The attorneys included Arthur Goldberg, general counsel for CIO, and Wool, Glenn & Thatcher, general counsel, AFL.

Defender

During the labor legislation debate, Sen. Humphrey attacked Gerard Reilly, former NLRB member and now a highly-paid lobbyist for labor-hating firms.

Guess who jumped up to defend Reilly?

You're right. Sen. Taft.

SEN. WAYNE MORSE (R., Ore.) made a lengthy and complete attack on injunctions.

"We are dealing with a subject that can be treated only on a case-by-case basis," Morse said. "The moment we try to fit this subject matter into a legislative strait-jacket, the moment we try to lay down any legislative language or any stereotyped set of rules in the handling of emergency disputes, it seems to me we have undertaken to prescribe a legislative form which will prove not to be workable and applicable to future cases which are likely to arise under facts and circumstances we cannot at this present time foresee.

"I warn American employers that they not only have little to gain, but, in the long run, nothing to gain, from a procedure which, in respect to individual cases, may seem to put the Government on their side of the table.

"Such a precedent, or the establishment of such a policy, can spread. I fear the danger that with the passage of time American industry would come to realize that by seeking to give the Government such blanket authority as some would have the Government exercise in connection with emergency disputes, they would bring about a situation to which the Government would become the determiner not only of wages, hours and conditions of employment with respect to labor, but the determiner as well of what has heretofore been believed to be managerial rights in respect to production, prices and the terms and conditions under which industry shall operate.

"It is no alarmist argument to warn industry in all seriousness today that it ought to join with labor in an united effort to keep government participation in employer-labor relationships to a bare minimum consistent with the basic objectives of Government.

"In my view, our obligation is to see to it that no segment of our economy, be it labor, management or any other, can use the principles of our free enterprise system in such an abusive manner as to jeopardize the legitimate rights of any other segment of the economy or of the public."

PREVIOUSLY, SEN. Hubert H. Humphrey (D., Minn.) had taken the floor to make an overall attack on T-H. He noted that Sen. Styles Bridges (R., N. H.) had told the Senate that the Republican party had failed in its responsibilities on foreign policy.

"There are some of us who believe that the Republican Party has not lived up to its responsibilities in terms of labor-management policy, and I intend to direct my remarks toward the consideration of what I and many of us consider to be a sound, constructive, modern labor-management policy for the industrial economy of the U. S.

"T-H is profoundly reactionary. It ignores the facts of economic life by assuming that the individual worker can successfully pit himself against the power of a highly organized and complex economic system.

"The act, however, is worse than reactionary, in the sense of seeking to reinstate a one-sided individualism applicable to the worker but not to the employer.

"It departs from our past traditions and policies by setting up a governmental system for the direct and detailed intervention of Government into areas of economic activity always heretofore reserved to the parties in the field of industrial relations."

Quoting from William Leiserson and Nathan Feinsinger, both noted as impartial experts in the field of labor relations, the Minnesotan showed the unfairness of T-H. He then said: "I think it is of paramount importance that the American people, who speak of freedom, who believe in freedom, who want freedom, remember that there is a price for it, and a real price.

"Everyone of us has a deep concern for and a vital interest in political freedom, free speech, free press, freedom of religion, freedom of enterprise . . ."

Hawaiian Strike Will Be Probed

A four-man Congressional subcommittee this week will begin a probe into the seven-weeks strike by CIO Longshoremen in Hawaii.

The union's most recent effort to end the walkout met the same employer cold shoulder as previous union proposals. The union offered to return to work immediately if employers would accept the recommendations of a five-man fact-finding board appointed by Territorial Gov. Ingram Stainback.

The employers' reason: "The union is trying to make the governor's board an arbitration proceeding."

ILWU is striking to wipe out the differential between rates paid stevedores on the West Coast and those paid in Hawaii. The employers have repeatedly rejected union proposals for arbitration.

NAM 'Feeds' Students

A new drive to plant its propaganda in the nation's schools has been launched by the National Association of Manufacturers.

Planning to bring in "outstanding educators" to form an Educational Council, the aim will be to glorify "free enterprise," NAM fashion.

Now's the time to sit down and write your Senator, whose vote is vital against Taft-Hartley.

'RED MENACE' BOYS

We're getting mighty fed up with the "anti-Red crusaders" who continue to give aid and comfort to the Communists.

We're referring to two groups.

1. Those who can hardly distinguish between rheumatism and communism but pose as authorities on subversive activities.

2. Those who deliberately hang false Red tags around the necks of their enemies.

There are many people in Washington in both groups. They've given the headline writers a lot of material and they've given the public a lot to worry about.

But they've made no real contribution to the advancement of a democratic America.

The case of Dr. Edward U. Condon, head of the Bureau of Standards, provides a good example of their handiwork. So does the case of David E. Lilienthal, head of the Atomic Energy Commission.

The man who tried to put the skids under Dr. Condon—Rep. J. Parnell Thomas—is under indictment on salary kickback charges.

Senator Hickenlooper, who's trying to "get" Lilienthal, obviously is waging a re-election campaign through the headlines and is carrying the ball for the Army in its efforts to regain control of atomic energy.

There are many cases of lesser importance from the viewpoint of the headline writers—cases involving government employes who were discharged or placed under heavy suspicion through the "guilt by association" technique.

The whole business a long time ago reached a state bordering on hysteria.

And one of the sad things about the whole situation is that most of the newspapers and radio commentators have helped so many phonies drag so many Red herrings across so many paths that the public is beginning to wonder whether there are really any Commies around.

There are—and their ears should be pinned back. But the innocent and the guilty shouldn't have to suffer the same fate.

WE'RE NOT NEUTRAL: NEITHER ARE THEY

Nobody with any intelligence has ever accused the CIO News of being a middle-of-the-road publication when it comes to dealing with matters affecting the labor movement. Our job is to reflect the official CIO viewpoint and we make no bones about it.

We sometimes slap back when they slap at us, but we never complain that the publications of the NAM and the Chamber of Commerce travel under false colors. They express official viewpoints, too, and make no pretense of doing otherwise.

These facts increase rather than diminish our growing concern over those "neutral" publications which frequently conduct partisan campaign "in the public interest."

We'd like—at least just once—to see a "neutral" publication say something like this: "We're for the Taft-Hartley Act because it's been a big help to Big Business. We think the country would be better off if present T-H curbs on labor unions were retained. Business and industry, in our opinion, need the Taft-Hartley Act as an aid in the handling of management-labor affairs."

Many partisan campaigns, of course, are "in the public interest," but we'd like for more publications to say honestly who they're lined up with and why they take the positions they do on controversial issues.

Radio And Freedom Of The Press

Newly Granted Permission For Stations To Editorialize Has Dangers

By ALLAN L. SWIM

FOURTEEN years ago I suddenly became an ex-publisher when the daily paper another fellow and I had been operating was forced to the wall by cut-throat competition and then purchased by the opposition.

Perhaps the deal was "good business" but it was bad for the community because the one paper left in the town wasn't as good as either of the competing papers had been.

What happened to our little daily is important to the nation as a whole only because it was one of many victims of a trend toward consolidation of newspapers and the establishment of powerful chains.

And there is a definite and important connection between this trend and a ruling handed down by the Federal Communications Commission granting radio stations the right to editorialize.

HUNDREDS OF independent newspapers — both large and small—have disappeared from the scene through merger and the formation of chains during the past 15 years.

During the same period the newspaper chains—and the big independents—established or obtained control of many radio stations.

As the situation stood a few weeks ago one person in, say, Washington or New York could order a dozen or more big newspapers scattered over the nation to take a certain editorial stand on an issue.

Today the same person could order perhaps an equal number of radio stations to take exactly the same stand.

That's perfectly OK, some will argue, because we have freedom of the press in this country.

But is it OK? And is freedom of the press all that is involved?

I CAN REMEMBER when city editors used to tell us that "freedom of the press" justified the burglary reporters committed when they broke into houses and stole photographs.

"Freedom of the press," we were told, made it OK for us to break the speed limit, leave our cars in "no parking" zones, accept confiscated bootleg whisky from deputy sheriffs, etc., etc.

Editors and publishers shouted that "freedom of the press" would be violated if reporters joined the Newspaper Guild, and they're still claiming that the Guild's union shop provisions would interfere with press freedom.

But they shed few "freedom of the press" tears when an effort was made through the Taft-Hartley Act to silence the CIO News and other union publications on matters political.

Ah! That was different, they said. And so is the matter of editorialization by radio stations.

RADIO CHANNELS are limted, so a person can't establish a station where he pleases on any wave length he chooses—even if he has the necessary finances.

It became necessary years ago for the government to set up an agency — the FCC — to regulate certain phases of broadcasting.

A radio station operates on a public franchise—called a license—and is subject to restrictions drawn up for the public good.

The public is certainly entitled to a large degree of impartiality from radio stations on controversial matters dealing with the public welfare.

But the public won't get it if the stations take advantage of the FCC's latest ruling.

Could anybody really expect stations to express pro-labor viewpoints on important subjects while receiving nearly all of their income from corporations.

Could anybody expect stations to express a viewpoint different from that of the newspapers which own them?

CIO MEMBERS should keep an eye—and an ear—on the radio industry in the future and report to the FCC any abuses of the new freedom to editorialize.

Television, which is likely to be concentrated in fewer hands than radio, is growing by leaps and bounds. Those who gain control of it will have one of the most potent opinion-forming "machines" that man has ever devised.

The right of radio and television stations to editorialize — unless used very carefully—will take us one big step further toward "monopoly of opinion."

And in discussing the problem don't forget that freedom of the press applies to the public as well as to the publishers.

Freedom to listen only to one general viewpoint is no freedom at all.

Potofsky Hails Israel As A Democracy

ISRAEL, THE one-year-old Jewish state, is a "citadel of democracy in the Middle East," Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers reported on return from a tour of inspection.

Potofsky and Pres. Joseph Curran of the Natl. Maritime Union went to Israel as an official CIO delegation and met with both government and union officials. Curran returned a few weeks before Potofsky, who arrived in New York last week.

The clothing union president predicted that Israel will require large-scale financial help — perhaps $800 million—during the next four years to meet housing and other economic needs. Both private and governmental loans are wanted and are needed, Potofsky said.

"I am confident that American labor, both the CIO and the AFL, will participate in those ventures," he told a press conference at union headquarters.

"Housing is the pressing problem in Israel. The population of present population—and will run to two million in 10 years."

POTOFSKY hailed the work of Histiadrut, the Israeli Federation of Labor, which operates a variety of cooperative enterprises throughout the country. Histadrut co-ops represent about 20% of the country's economy, he estimated.

"There are great projects under way, such as the construction of a canal from the Mediterranean to the Dead Sea, and the building of a 'Pittsburgh' in the Negev desert," he said.

A formal report to CIO Pres. Murray will be presented by the delegation in thet next few weeks.

"Sorry I have to let you go, Mr. Smith, but I'm overstaffed now."

Harry Bridges Pleads Not Guilty

Pres. Harry Bridges and two other officials of the CIO Longshoresmen's Union have pleaded not guilty to charges of fraud and conspiracy in connection with Bridges' obtaining U. S. citizenship in 1945.

Also pleading innocent were Vice-Pres. J. R. Robertson and Henry Schmidt of the ILWU. The three were indicted last month on charges of perjury in swearing that Bridges was not a Communist Party member at the time he sought and won his citizenship.

Two Photographs, And One Told A Lie

OUT IN THE Mid-West there are a large number of CIO members who will challenge anybody who asserts that "photographs don't lie."

They know—from personal experience—that they sometimes do.

Some of them probably have as evidence a set of badly-worn newspaper clippings, which serve as a reminder of a big organizing campaign and a newspaper hoax that backfired.

They chuckle when they recall that they didn't have to expose the hoax, that anoter newspaper did it for them.

HERE'S THE STORY, as related in broad outline by one of the persons who was on hand when the hoax was attempted:

It was back in the early days of the CIO, when the new labor organization was growing by leaps and bounds.

A top-flight organizer was sent to the Mid-West to attempt to set up new unions and increase the membership in unions that already existed.

He got a staff together, established headquarters, began making contacts.

Before long the campaign was really rolling.

And it didn't take long for one of the newspapers in the area to train its guns on the CIO and open up with both barrels.

It painted the young labor group as a subversive outfit determined to destroy the American way of life.

AFTER WEEKS of campaigning, the director of the drive decided it was time to hold a mass meeting for workers of the area.

He arranged to use a big stadium and then started a publicity drive to get out a crowd.

While this was going on, the newspaper which didn't like the CIO, got rougher and tougher. It really cut loose on the CIO and the campaign director.

The director said later that this probably had a lot to do with a big turnout for the mass meeting. "I'm sure a lot of folks came just to see if I was the kind of skunk the paper had been picturing me to be," he said.

HUNDREDS OF industrial workers arrived at the stadium long before the meeting was scheduled to start.

There were thousands there by the time teh speaking began. They nearly packed the big athletic field.

Oratory poured from the speakers' stand. The audience applauded and cheered. Reporters hurriedly scribbled notes. Photographers' flash bulbs popped all over the place.

It was an enthusiastic session—one of the really big labor meetings for that part of the country.

The drive director and his colleagues knew that it had been exactly what they termed it—a "huge success."

Their spirits were high when they went home for the evening. The world really looked rosy.

THE FOLLOWING morning the drive director bought a copy of the newspaper which had been bitterly attacking the CIO.

He opened it to the page which told about the mass meeting—and his eyes nearly popped out when he saw how the story had been handled.

The paper said the meeting had been a failure, a complete flop.

As "evidence" it printed a picture showing one of the few sections of the stadium that had not been packed. The photo indicated only a few hundred had attended the meeting.

The hoax exploded later in the day when an afternoon paper in the same town published a full page picture showing a packed stadium. Its caption said, "Thousands Attend CIO Rally."

Norwegian Unionists Report

'U. S. Visit Gives Greater Confidence In Democracy'

WHAT DO the United States and the American labor movement look like to European workers and trade union leaders?

The answer comes in a 45-page report of a group of Norewegian unionists who toured the eastern United States during the month of January. They met with government officials, union leaders, rank-and-file workers, industrialists and college professors.

The core of their findings:

"A visit to the United States gives one greater confidence in the ability of democracy to solve its problems."

"The American trade union movement is one of the foremost champions of the international idea in the new world. This movement is stronger than at any time before—and there is no doubt that in coming years will become still stronger."

What strikes the visitor first, the Norwegian delegation commented, it "the economic prosperity." But they saw problems in growing unemployment—and in the realization that American streets are not "paved with gold."

IN THE NORWEGIAN delegation—which came here as part of an ECA program—were spokesmen for a number of unions; the Norwegian Federation of Labor's chief time study expert; and Haakon Lie, a leading figure in the Norwegian Labor Party. During their month's stay, they talked with American unionists—CIO, AFL and independent—in Washington, Pittsburgh, Detroit, Boston and New York, and other parts of the country.

"The surprise which greeted the outcome of the elections in November 1948 shows how far the world has under-rated the strength and fighting power of American labor," they comment. "Outside the U. S., many persons will have to revise their views of the American labor movement.

"If it is different from the European labor organization, it does not signify by any means that it is weaker. It has not, it is true, organized its own political party, but is nevertheless a political factor of rank."

In fact, say the Norwegian unionists, there's a good deal of similarity between American and European unionists; their operations vary, but their goals of better living are "not very different."

Workers' standard of living: A number of commodities are cheaper than in Norway—but some, like clothing and footwear, are expensive in the U. S. American rents are far higher than those a Norwegian worker must pay.

"Apart from certain important articles of food, it may be said that a U. S. industrial worker needs to work only a little more than half the time of a Norwegian industrial worker in order to purchase certain industrial commodities . . . He has a better standard of food, housing and clothing than any European worker."

Social legislation: Before the New Deal, the U. S. "ranked far behind certain other countries." During the Roosevelt reform period, much progress was made—"but there are still large gaps in American social legislation. It does not, by far, cover the whole population, and with respect to health insurance it is quite inadequate."

"Certain areas—especially in the South—are still backward in social and economic development. They cast a shadow over a picture which would otherwise be bright. Great tasks, therefore, must be accomplished before the U. S. reaches a uniform social standard."

Wage systems and productivity: "The same systems of payments which we utilize in our own country, payment by hour and by piece, predominate. When it is a question of learning from American industry, it is not their wage system but their methods of production we must first and foremost try to acquire . . . In America we have a cycle of cause and effect: the workers are well paid because they are productive, and the workers are productive because they are well paid."

NATURALLY, THERE are some conclusion with which American unionists may disagree.

In view of Congressional delay, it is to be hoped rather than predicted that Taft-Hartley "no doubt will soon belong to past history." And the Norwegians were off base when they concluded that "T-H never represented any real hindrance to the American trade union movement."

But all in all, this is a generally accurate and a thoroughly friendly study by leaders of a national union movement which has a fine tradition of democracy and progress. Report such as this contribute to fraternal ties and better understanding between the workers of the democratic world. H. C. F.

Theme Song: 'Communications Work

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

AN EVENT which will be recalled as one of the most dramatic in CIO history occurred at 9:37 P. M., Central Daylight Time, on Monday, June 13, 1949.

That was the moment when the Communications Workers of America, CIO, completed the actions merging CWA with the Telephone Workers' Organizing Committee, CIO. The united union will represent more than 300,000 workers.

It was a solemn moment, a joyous moment. The several hundred delegates cheered. Some cried in happiness that a long-wished-for dream had become a reality. CWA Pres. Joseph E. Beirne beamed. So did CIO Organization Dir. Allan S. Haywood, who was chairman of TWOC.

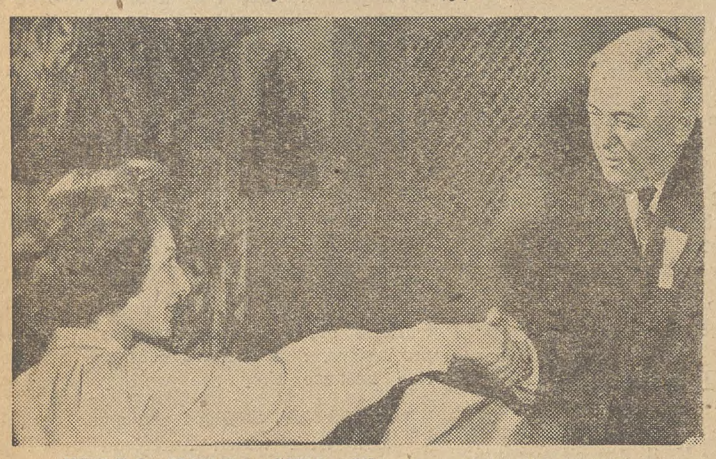
Two of the happiest delegates were these girls:

MAYBURN LaBRACHE

Native of Beaumont, Tex. where she's a service assistant for Southwestern Bell. She's union chairman representing 400 workers in Beaumont, Sourlake, Kirbyville, Woodville and Silsbee. She's charter union member. Attended all three CWA conventions and one of its predecessor, Natl. Federation of Telephone Workers, which became CWA three years ago. Married, has a daughter, Dolores, 12. "Dolores is sure a honey," says proud Mayburn. Maybe that's because her mother is also a honey.

MARGARET KISH

Miner's daughter, is operator for Blue Mountain Phone, Bangor, Pa. (That's not far from Easton.) Vice president and chief steward, former president of TWOC local. Struck for 18c raise in October, '47. Out one day, boss offered 10c, return and negotiate rest of contract. No progress, out they (39 members) went again. Contacted Steelworkers, who got CIO to assign Rep. Ben Stahl to strike. Settled in four days, with union shop, and other improvements. She's a honey, too.



HELLO, HELLO GIRL: The two girls didn't meet until Monday, because the TWOC convention opened two days ahead of CWA's. One of the first to greet Margaret on her arrival at Chicago's Stevens Hotel was Haywood.

TWOC's convention heard the amalgamation plan (worked out by a joint CWA-TWOC committee), debated it fully and then voted overwhelmingly to merge. When CWA acted (unanimously) two days later, two CIO unions had become a strong, single body, ready to fight A. T. & T. with all its strength.

The union covers. all types of Bell workers—white collar, plant, production, installers, etc. And about 65% of them are women (and pretty, too.)

SIGN UP: First thing a delegate does is sign her credentials. Here, Margaret gets her badge from Pearl Phillips, who's on Haywood's staff. In the background are (left), Molly Lynch, Pres. Murray's secretary, and Bonnie Sublette, Haywood's executive assistant. At the convention, Haywood, as presiding officer, introduced a score or so of his regional directors, telling an anecdote about each one. He even introduced the CIO News writer.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray told the CWA: "The CIO is no place for those who place loyalty to the Communist Party above loyalty to the CIO and the labor movement."

T: Margaret was looking for Mayburn, after ention ended at the Stevens. So, she went over where the CWA meeting was to be held. By net for the first time while using the house ent to the first session together and heard accuse American industry of "a cold war"

WORKERS: There are crafts in the phone industry. Here, left to right, are: Fred Maguire, research, New York; Lenora Burk, accounting, Los Angeles; F. J. Sweeney, telegrapher, New York; Margaret, who's an operator; A. A. Johns, telegrapher; Harry Cockshott, PBX repairman, LaPorte, Ind. M. W. Gray. installer, Denver; T. E. Webb, test board man, San Antonio, Tex.; Mrs. Audrey M. Smid, commercial, Baltimore; W. E. Bland, manufacturing, Long Beach, Calif.; E. V. Edwards, central office repair, Tupelo, Miss., and Mayburn, who's a service assistant. Pres. Beirne was a repair man.

CY: CWA has an unusual system for dele the chairman's attention. Each division has its number attached. When a delegate wants she holds up a place card, with the divisio ere, Mayburn seeks the floor.

SEEING DOUBLE?: No, you're not. Here, Margaret nd Mayburn sit with Bobbie and Robbie Lee, twin operators from Hattiesburg, Miss., (Mississippi CWAers were for CIO by almost unanimous vote in the recent referendum.)

The paper they're holding is CIO Research & Education Dept. literature. All sang the new CWA song — "Communications Workers—one for all and all for one," written for the union by Michael Johnson. They sang lustily during the casting of ballots for officers. They cheered when one delegate said he wanted the merger to pass quickly "so those up in the balcony (TWOC) can sit down here with us."

Picture to left above is of C. G. Palmer, representing the Canadian Congress of Labour and a member of the United Telephone Workers of Canada.

Univ. Of Michigan Survey:

'Democratic Majority Rested On Workers'

By GLORIA CAPLAN

"IT AIN'T necessarily so"—what the Republicans, Fulton Lewis and the newspapers said after the 1948 election.

For instance:

It is not true that the Republicans lost the 1948 elections because they were overconfident and failed to vote.

It is not true that the farmer, rather than organized labor, was responsible for the Truman victory.

It is not true that such union groups as the CIO-PAC were ineffective.

It is not true that Truman won the election on his own steam without the aid of organized groups, particularly unions.

That is—these and many other Republican post-election excuses fall by the wayside if the post-election survey conducted by the University of Michigan's Survey Research Center is valid.

There's good reason to believe the study is valid:

The Survey Research Center's method of sampling the population is considered so good that its findings are used by the Federal Reserve Board in shaping ideas about economic conditions, now and in the future.

Last October the Center conducted a pre-election poll, and found those who knew how they were going to vote about evenly divided between Truman and Dewey. They also found a reservoir of 20% who were then undecided. It was from this pool—a majority of whom were workers—that Truman won his plurality in the last two weeks of the campaign. These voters went 4 to 1 for Truman. His election was aided further by last-minute switches from the Dewey camp.

The Research Center made these findings in a second survey conducted in November among the same people it polled earlier.

THE MAJOR part that unions played in the election was evident throughout the report. In fact, one chapter heading reads: "Democratic majority rested on skilled and unskilled workers."

About three out of every four skilled and semi-skilled workers who voted went Democratic—"No other occupation groups were as strongly Democratic," says the report.

This reflects the general Democratic preference in the big cities, as well as "the organized efforts of the trade unions, which have much of their membership in these occupational categories," the survey found.

The survey completely squelches the Republican claim that unions had little or nothing to do with the Democratic victory. It found:

● That union members and their families voted overwhelmingly for Truman. But most non-union families were Dewey supporters.

● That only 28% of union workers failed to vote. But 42% of non-union workers failed to cast ballots.

It squelches another pet Republican argument that people didn't vote for Taft-Hartley repeal when they voted for the Democrats. Sixty percent of the Truman voters opposed T-H. In addition, 11% of the Dewey supporters opposed T-H. There were in both camps, however, a good number who had never heard of the law.

Contrary to Republican post-election speculations—but bearing out CIO-PAC's five-year-old slogan, "A Big Vote Is a Good Vote"—a larger vote would have meant a greater Democratic plurality.

IN MANY of the groups which voted heavily Democratic, there was a large proportion of non-voters. These were:

Young voters, ages 21-35—Were about 2-to-1 Democratic, but half of them failed to vote. This is the greatest group of non-voters.

Farmers—They went for Truman, 2 to 1, but 58% didn't vote.

Unskilled workers—Voted Democratic almost 3 to 1, but 50% stayed home.

Negroes—Voted Democratic 2 to 1, but two out of three didn't vote. (The report explains: "Many of the non-voting Negroes answered . . . with the response, 'Can't vote,' suggesting a political isolation strongly enforced by local custom.")

Predominantly Republican segments, on the other hand, had the highest percentage of voters:

● In the professional and managerial group (including businessmen), three out of four voted. This group is staunchly Republican.

● White collar workers voted in the greatest numbers of any occupational group—82%. They gave Dewey a slight edge.

A bigger vote—if there had been one—would have been drawn primarily from the predominantly Democratic groups and would have resulted in a greater Democratic victory.

Commented the report: "It is apparent that . . . non-voters resembled Democratic voters far more closely than Republicans and this suggests that additions to the vote would have been preponderantly Democratic."

This substantiates the PAC slogan: "A Big Vote Is a Good Vote," and refutes the Republican claim that it lost the election through the overconfidence and failure to vote on the part of Dewey supporters.

Why did people vote as they did?

● Among Truman supporters, domestic planks in the Democratic platform were mentioned as the reason in 36% of the cases. Only 15% of the Dewey supporters mentioned the GOP program as their reason for backing him.

● Almost two out of three identified Truman with the common man or with organized labor. Another 25% spoke of his being close to the farmer. "Almost everyone who did link Dewey with some segment of the population mentioned the business community, or used the less friendly expression 'big money'," says the survey.

Elsewhere the survey finds: "Apparently Truman's campaign championship of labor and farm interests was almost always viewed as an asset, while Dewey's identification with the business community—when perceived at all—was considered a handicap."

● About 18% of those polled thought Truman would maintain prosperity, avoid a depression. Only 3% (and this includes Republican voters as well) attributed such powers to Dewey.

● One-fourth of those who switched their votes at the last minute said they changed their opinion after discussion with family, or friends or considering arguments advanced by a trade union, club or church. (Because most of those who switched were trade unionists, it seems probable that the union influence was strong at this point.)

Perhaps the reasons for Truman's victory were best summarized by a Brooklyn carpenter, who said he was "about 40% for Dewey" during the campaign. "About a week or so before (the election), I made up my mind I would definitely vote for Truman . . . I'm in the poorer class and I felt Truman was more for us than Dewey would be."

Bill Aims To 'Overrule' Court on Overtime Pay

DEFEAT OF a bill designed to allow employers a back-door escape from a Supreme Court decision on the wage-hour law has been strongly demanded by CIO.

Nathan Cowan, CIO legislative director, asked Rep. Adolph Sabath (D. Ill.), head of the House Rules Committee, to help kill a bill involving collection of judgments won in back-pay suits under the Wage-Hour Act. The right of a group of east coast longshoremen to file the suits was upheld by the Supreme Court earlier this year.

The longshoremen, paid premium rates for night or "specially hazardous work," demanded that their overtime rates be figured on their premium pay. Employers have sought to pay the overtime on the basis of longshoremen's straight hourly pay, rather than on the higher premium wage rate.

Business papers dubbed the suits as an effort to collect "overtime on overtime."

IN HIS LETTER, Cowan said the CIO had reluctantly agreed to a suggestion of the Labor Dept. that a ban on future "overtime on overtime" in two industries be contained in the over-all wage-hour bill supported by the Administration in Congress.

"We were shocked when this one provision was split off and rushed through to immediate passage," Cowan said. The CIO protested again when a Senate subcommittee expanded the bill to cover all industries, and then went on to throw out law suits now pending in the courts on the basis of the present law.

The question involved in the bill (HR 858) is "whether whenever a heavy damage verdict is rendered in favor of employes, the corporations are to be permitted to cry 'windfall' and run to Congress for special laws to relieve them of their just debts," Cowan wrote to Sabath.

"The Wage-Hour Act depends very largely for its enforcement upon the private damage suit provision in the law. If HR 858, as amended by the Senate, is passed, word will soon spread among employers that it is safe to violate the act—if the back pay is large enough, Congress can always be counted on to wipe the slate clean."

Kroll A Grandpa

PAC Dir. Jack Kroll, recently became a grandfather when Mr. and Mrs. Mark Kroll, his son and daughter - in - law, became the parents of a baby boy, christened Mark Steven.

Snug Harbor Capitulates

OLD SEAMEN who live at Sailors Snug Harbor, home for retired mariners on Staten Island, N. Y., no longer will be forced to sign a "property agreement" turning over their pensions or other small income to the trustees in payment for room and board, reports the CIO's Natl. Maritime Union.

The trustees, faced with a suit filed against them by the New York Attorney General several weeks ago, decided to surrender without a fight.

They promised to drop the property agreement; to return all the money taken from the retired seamen since March 1, when the agreement went into effect; to take back without red tape, the mariners who left rather than sign; and to open their books for complete investigation.

The NMU together with other maritime unions in New York, had put up a strong protest at the time Snug Harbor trustees tried to put the property agreement into effect, and pressed for an investigation.

When the Attorney General's office later filed suit in the state court, NMU General Counsel Herman E. Cooper entered a petition as a "friend of the court."

NMU Pres. Joseph Curran in commenting on the Snug Harbor trustees' capitulation, said, "We're happy to see this threat against the oldtimers removed."

U. S. Urged To Save Merchant Marine

UNCLE SAM has been urged by a CIO official to save the American merchant marine from disintegrating.

John Green, head of the CIO Shipbuilders Union, told a Congressional Committee that it should approve construction subsidies for all U. S. ocean-going vessels, with the exception of oil tankers. A big repair program should also be undertaken for the "moth-balled" reserve fleet, he said.

Green's testimony was given to the House Committee on Merchant Marine & Fisheries, which is holding hearings and studying a possible long range program for the country's maritime industry.

"The minimum employment in private shipyards in this country, necessary for national defense, is 150,000," Green declared. "In cases where employment is receding to the danger point, the Maritime Commission should have the authority to allocate contracts."

The union official said it's "unfortunate" that the merchant marine gets the full attention it deserves only when the country is preparing for war or engaging in war.

He pointed out that a strong American merchant marine is necessary for development of world trade.

"Foreign trade, if neglected, would mean that we are fundamentally untrue to American free enterprise," he added. "American world trade is one of our greatest home industries."

Union Optical Plan

More than 3000 Amalgamated Clothing Workers members in New York are participating in a union optical plan under which they get eye examinations and glasses at a minimum cost. Average cost of glasses comes to a little less than $6.

TWU Gives Demands To 3 N. Y. Bus Lines

Matthew Guinan, president of Local 100, CIO Transport Workers, has presented demands for 1949 contracts to the three major bus companies in New York City.

Principal contract proposals are: a 40-hour 5-day work week with no reduction in take-home pay, plus a 21-cent an hour increase, three weeks' vacation after one year's service; a pension plan for retirement at 60, after 20 years of service; 11 paid holidays a year, a 10-cent an hour differential for night work, swing time to be paid after one hour, and severance pay.

Economy-Minded Rep. Rich Also Pays Workers 45c

One of the chief advocates of penny-pinching in Congress, Rep. Robert F. Rich (R. Pa.) also practices economies when he pays his workers at the Woolrich Woolen Mills, near Williamsport, Pa., according to the CIO Textile Workers.

Rich, who frequently asks on the House floor, "Where's the money coming from?" is the general manager and treasurer of the mills.

Rep. Rich

TWUA Reg. Dir. Sol Stetin said that rigth now, when the prevailing wage in the woolen industry is $1.32, Rich's mill is paying a starting rate of 45c an hour. Thereafter, pay is based on a complicated incentive system, according to the union.

"To us," he wrote to the economy-minded Congressman last week, "it seems not only the most unfair kind of competition that you should be permitted to pay rates of less than half the industry minimum, but also the cruelist kind of economic exploitation to work men and women for such disgracefully inadequate wages.

"We are making this letter public because we have long tried to figure out the motives of members of Congress in refusing to pass legislation raising the statutory minimum wage to at least 75c an hour. Perhaps facts regarding wages at Woolrich provide a fairly obvious clue to the reasons men like yourself have not supported long overdue improvements to the Fair Labor Standards Act."

Wage-Hour Substitute Bill Stalled

A SUBSTITUTE wage-hour law proposal aimed solely at raising minimum wages to 75c an hour, got stalled last week in the House Labor Committee.

A committee vote on a new Lesinski Bill (HR 4552), eliminating all improvements in coverage and enforcement, resulted in a 10-10 tie. The committee, Chairman Lesinski (D. Mich.) said, would consider the measure again this week.

HR 3190, providing for wide-scale improvements in the present wage-hour law, was approved by the Labor Committee several months ago and went to the Rules Committee. Priority was given, however, to the Taft-Hartley repeal bill.

After the failure to win passage of the T-H repealer, Lesinski did not ask for a rule for the wage-hour changes. It is understood that House Democratic leaders felt the Dixiecrat-Republican bloc would be able to knock down that bill.

Whether the compromise measure will fare any better remains to be seen, if it clears through the Labor Committee.

'There Are Some Newsmen Who Can Smell Libel Suit'

A former CIO member has revealed to The CIO News why one of the nation's leading press services did not carry stories six years ago about a non-existent National Maritime Union strike on Guadalcanal.

He is Dennis Dalton of the NBC Newsroom in New York, a member of the Radio Writers' Guild and former member of the American Newspaper Guild.

"It so happened that when the Guadalcanal 'strike' story first broke, in the Akron, O., Beacon Journal, I was bureau manager for the United Press in Cleveland," Dalton said in a letter to The CIO News.

"I recall very well the 'strike' story and how UP clients were after the Cleveland bureau for a report on it. But I questioned its authenticity and the story never appeared on the UP wires."

Dalton said he was calling this to the attention of The CIO News to demonstrate that "there are still some newsmen around who can smell out a libel suit."

As a result of the fake "strike" story—purporting to reveal that NMU members would not unload a war cargo on Guadalcanal because it was Sunday—the Associated Press paid NMU $7500 and Hearst Consolidated Publications settled with the union for $1000.

Security Bill OK Reported

PLANS TO increase coverage of the nation's social security system by about 10 million people are believed to have won approval of an important Congressional committee.

In addition, the House Ways & Means Committee is said to be ready to recommend "substantial" increases in benefit payments to retired workers and their survivors.

The Commttee has been studying changes and improvements in social security for several weeks. Long hearings were held durng the spring, when CIO and other groups suggested doubling of benefits and broad extensions in coverage.

Rep. Doughton (D. N. C.) said the committee's formal report bill will be ready in the next few days.

Reports said that social security coverage would be extended to some three million domestics, a million employes of non-profit institutions, and about six million self-employed persons — grocers, druggists, doctors and lawyers.

These Washington rumors indicate, however, that farmers will not be included. CIO and the Farmers Union had urged inclusion of farm workers, and the Grange later took a similar position.

CIO asked for at least 100% increases in benefit payments, which have remained unchanged since 1937. There was not indication how far the committee will go in its recommendations on this matter.

Belgian Federation Votes To Leave WFTU

The 600,000 - member General Federation of Belgian Workers has voted, nine to one, to withdraw from the World Federation of Trade Unions.

The group also voted to participate in the creation of a new world-wide non-Communist labor organization.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

The conventions just completed which united the Communications Workers of America, CIO, and the Telephone Workers Organizing Committee, CIO, into a single national union for all telephone workers were a great and historic event in the annals of the CIO.

The manner in which the two groups effected their unification is a tribute to their fairness and to their desire for the kind of a union which will be able to cope with AT&T, the world's greatest protected monopoly.

The selection of officers in a series of spirited elections reflected the desire of both groups to recognize the contributions to the unity of telephone workers made by each of the groups.

Inspired by the presence and eloquence of Pres. Philip Murray at a Sunday evening banquet, a Monday luncheon, and before the combined conventions on Sunday afernoon, the delegates set about with dispatch and determination to create an organization of which we all will soon be very proud.

The actions of this convention were indeed courageous ones. The AT&T has seized upon this occasion to make its last ditch fight against the participation of the unions of its employes in the family of CIO unions.

Knowing that the success of this move will forever free telephone workers of company paternalism, domination and intimidation, it cancelled nearly every collective bargaining agreement held with unions of its workers that are a part of this new CIO International.

Pres. Murray expressed the spirit of telephone workers, the delegates, the officers and the CIO when he declared in words of action the undying fight which will be waged to reinstate every abrogated contract and to bring true industrial Democracy and industrial unionism to the telephone field. Our new CIO union already represents over 300,000 workers in the traffic, plant commercial, manufacturing, accounting, sales, installation and research departments of the vast AT&T empire. With the vigorous organizing campaign to be instituted with the aid and guidance of the CIO, it will represent all of the 750,000 potential members in the industry.

My congratulations to all who participated in this noble achievement: CIO regional directors and field representatives, TWOC officers and executive board, CWA officers and executive board, the officers and members of all the affiliated unions and divisions, all the CIO national unions who contributed money and staff men to the TWOC campaigns.

My best wishes and heartfelt encouragement to our newest international, the CWA-CIO. We shall be with you, side by side, in all of your worthy endeavors.

Reg. Dir. Frank Bender reports that in an NLRB election held at the Chesapeake Paperboard Co., Baltimore, Md., the workers voted as follows: eligible to vote 148; CIO 74; AFL 37; void 1. T. R. Linn, Robert Turner and William Sheer of the Paperworkers-CIO conducted the campaign.

Re. Dir. Ernest B. Pugh announces that in an election held at the Richmond Cedar Works, Norfolk, Va., the workers voted as folows: CIO 204; AFL 73; no union 4.

George Brown, Director of Organization IWA, reports that an election at the Associated Plywood Mill, Roseburg, Ore., was won by the IWA-CIO by a vote of 27 to 15.

SOUTHERN CAMPAIGN Three NLRB election victories for the CIO's Southern Organizing Compaign were reported during the first week of June by Director Van A. Bittner.

At the same time, Dir. Bittner announced, the J. A. Bentley Lumber Co. of Zimmerman, Louisiana has been ordered to cease and desist from unfair labor practices in interfering with organization of its production workers. Further, the Operations Dixie Director revealed Mason and Hughes, Inc., of Clarksville, Tenn., has been ordered to bargain collectively with the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers, and to cease and desist from interfering with the CIO efforts to negotiate a contract for its employes. Five NLRB elections have been ordered for the next thirty days. Bittner said, as a result of petitions filed by the Southern Organizing Drive.

ALABAMA: Dir. Carey E. Haigler announces that the production employes of the Thompson Swaim Plywood Co., Inc., of Tuscaloosa voted for affiliation with the IWA-CIO by a vote of 48 for with 24 against.

GEORGIA: UAW Dir. James J. Starling reports victory for his International Union in an election held for shipping and receiving clerks of the Atlanta, Ga., plant of General Motors Corp. Production workers have been affiliated since the plant opened about a year ago.

ARKANSAS: Dir. Lee F. Tucker reports that the employes of the Democrat Printing and Lithographing Co. of Little Rock, Ark., have voted the CIO's Lithographers as their choice as bargaining agent. Included are artists, camera-men and plate making workers.

Carey Hits AMA Stand

"IT IS MOST unfortunate that the American Medical Association's House of Delegates has again failed to insure that the AMA meet its responsibilities to the public," CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey said last week.

"I refer specifically to the action taken June 10 in Atlantic City where only lip-service approval was given to a set of standards and principles governing voluntary group health plans throughout the United States.

'The CIO participated in discussions on three occasions during the last year with a committee of the AMA Council on Medical Service to draft an agreed upon set of standards and principles. It was hoped by the CIO and the other conferees that the AMA would at long last take a forthright position on voluntary health programs originated among groups of citizens and physicians in various communities.

"THE SUBORDINATE bodies of the AMA at state, county and city level have in many instances sought and fought to keep on the books, state legislation prohibiting or making totally impossible the formation of voluntary group health plans. A second practice in which these subordinate bodies have too often indulged is barring from membership any physician who participates in a group health plan. This denial of membership means, of course, that the physician affected will not be permitted to use local accredited hospital facilities in caring for his patients.

"The standards and principles worked out with representatives of the AMA implicitly carried a recommendation by the AMA that such restrictions and discriminations be eliminated at the local level."

Hooded Men Threaten Woman in Alabama; Educator Scores House Text Book Probe

A 42 - YEAR - OLD grandmother and a university professor have resisted infringement of personal rights in Alabama and New York state, respectively.

A total of three violations of personal rights by hooded men occurred in the Birmingham, Ala., area within a four-day period.

(The men were identified as members of the "American Bilbo Club," a successor to the outlawed Columbians.)

The grandmother, Mrs. Hugh McDanal, who recently underwent brain surgery, was talking over the telephone to a friend when hooded night raiders broke into her home in Birmingham, Ala.

Mrs. McDanal told police that two of the men, holding pistols, forced their way into her house. One struck her on the head and the other took an unloaded shot gun from her. She broke free. Then she jerked up their hoods to see if she could recognize either of them.

They caught her again, dragged her outside and in the eerie light of a blazing six-foot cross threatened to burn her at a stake. One of them told her neighbors had complained that her home was being used "to bring men and women together and to sell whiskey." She denied it.

THE ROBED MOB also visited the cafe of Steve Marshlar in the mining community of Brookside, near Birmingham, forced the Negro patrons outside and made them watch the burning of a cross. A Brookside policeman was in the case but made no move to intervene, witnesses said.

Marshlar's sister-in-law, Mrs. John Marshlar, whose husband is a member of the Brookside Town Council, quoted one man as saying, "you've got to keep those niggers down" and another as saying, "We're tired of the Catholics running this town." Steve Marshlar is a member of the Greek Orthodox Church.

The Jefferson County Sheriff's office said that the Ku Klux Klan paraded that night in the Crumley Chapel area, where Mrs. McDanal lives.

The third incident precipitated by the robed men in the Birmingham area occurred at the home of Billy Guton Stovall, 31-year-old white Navy veteran. He said that six or eight hooded men dragged him from his home, took him to a lonely road and flogged him 20 times with a leather belt. Stovall told reporters:

"The only reason they gave me is that I left my children home alone." He said that wasn't true.

"I'm getting a gun and I know how to use one," Stovall added.

In Ithaca, N. Y., Pres. Edmund Ezra Day of Cornell University told the university's alumni association that he had asked the American Council on Education to find what the House UnAmerican Activities Committee "was up to" when it requested a list of Cornell's text and reference books.

Several universities, state teachers' colleges and grade and high schools were requested by Chairman Wood (D. Ga.), of the House committee to furnish lists of text books.

DR. DAY SAID that universities were "in danger of infiltration, not by those attacking communism, but those who under the guise of attacking communism, attack something quite different." He explained that he referred to academic freedom.

At Brunswick, N. J., Dr. Ralph J. Bunche, director of the division of trusteeship of the United Nations, who is a Negro, received an honorary Doctor of Laws degree from Rutgers University. Dr. Bunche recently refused appointment as an assistant secretary of state because he could not tolerate racial discrimination as practiced in Washington, D. C. Dr. Bunche's citation said:

"With unmistakeable courage and fearlessness and with infinite patience—without any suggestion of belligerency—you have withstood the incredible pressure of communist thought and action and have demonstrated to the peoples and the governments of Germany and Russia that democracy—the faith of the free—possesses the will and the power to prevail over the brute force of the police state.

"You have established an enviable record of achievement as a scholar, educator and statesman, a record which has been crowned by your distinguished success in resolving in Palestine a program on international and interracial relations which was highly charged with nationalistic aspirations and racial prejudices."

KLAN RIDES AGAIN: Members of the Southern Klan, Inc., rehearse for a parade at Tallahassee, Fla. A high Klan official garbed in black and holding an American flag sits on a fender of the car. Increased Klan activities have been reported recently in the south.

HONORED

Dr. Ralph J. Bunche, who recently refused to accept an assistant secretaryship in the State Dept. because of racial discrimination in Washington, D. C., received an honorary Doctor of Laws degree at Rutgers University, New Brunswick, N. J.

2 Cleared in Georgia Lynching

Two white men were cleared last week by a Wilkinson County, Ga., grand jury of any guilt in connection with the lynch-murder of Caleb Hill, Jr., Negro.

The accused men were Denis Lamar Purvis, businessman, and Malcolm Vivian Pierce, electrician.

Hill allegedly caused a disturbance at a Negro cafe, where he was arrested by Sheriff George Thatcher, who put him in jail but left his keys in the building where they could be found easily.

Several hours later Hill was taken from the jail and shot.

Solicitor C. S. Baldwin said that the grand jury investigation had removed "any question of doubt" about Sheriff Thatcher's blame.

"Most Georgia sheriffs would have shot the Negro instead of taking him to jail," Baldwin added. Thatcher had reported that Hill disarmed him.

Textile Union To Hold Series of Institutes

A SERIES OF regional summer institutes to train local leaders are being held again this year by the CIO Textile Workers Union.

Three general institutes will be held in New England, the South and the Mid-Atlantic area for local union officers, shop stewards and active union members.

The New England general institute will be held June 20-25 at the University of New Hampshire, Durham, N. H. Two will be held in the South—at the Univ. of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, N. C., July 24-29, and at Lake Junaluska, N. C., Aug. 28-Sept. 2. The Mid-Atlantic general institute will be held at Hudson Shore Labor School, West Park, N. Y., Sept. 11-16.

Officers' institutes will be held at Rhode Island State College, Kingston, R. I., July 10-15; Univ. of North Carolina, July 24-29; Univ. of Wisconsin, Aug. 14-19; and Hudson Shore Labor School, Sept. 18-23.

Political action institutes are scheduled for Wellesley College, Wellesley, Mass., July 17-22; Lake Junaluska, N. C., Aug. 28-Sept. 2; Univ. of Wisconsin, Aug. 14-19 and Hudson Shore, Sept. 18-23.

Advanced Collective Bargaining Institutes will be held at Wellesley College, July 17-22; Lake Junaluska, Aug. 28-Sept. 2; Hudson Shore, Sept. 18-23.

Cost of tuition, board and lodging at the institutes is met jointly by the international union and the local organization, with the local assuming the cost of travel and lost time.

New World Labor Unit In Making

PLANS FOR formation of a new democratic international labor federation will be worked out next week at Geneva, Switzerland.

CIO will be represented at the June 25-26 meeting by a three-man committee.

Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey sailed from New York June 15 to attend the sessions. John Brophy, CIO councils director, left for Europe a few days earlier, while Michael Ross, CIO international affairs director, has been in France for the past few weeks conferring with European union leaders.

The Geneva meeting will be attended by spokesmen for a number of non-Communist labor movements which have already indicated general approval of the plans to build the new organization. Representatives will be present from the AFL, the British Trades Union Congress, the French Workers Strength movement, non - Communist Italian unions, and numerous union centers in other countries.

Plans for the new organization were started soon after the CIO, the British and the Dutch left the World Federation of Trade Unions last January in protest against Communist policies and the inability of the WFTU to adopt a course of action satisfactory to all participating organizations.

The WFTU—from which almost all non-Communist affiliates have now withdrawn—is scheduled to hold a convention in Milan, Italy, late this month.

The Geneva meeting will be in the nature of an arrangements committee session for the new federation, and it is expected that a full-dress convention will probably be held before the end of the year.

Several Unions Join Film Co-Op

Several CIO and AFL unions have joined a cooperative project to stimulate production of new documentary films and to increase the use of current public service and labor movies, according to Robert Delson, acting chairman of the National Film Cooperative.

With operations scheduled to begin within six months, the cooperative will act as a distributing agency and film library, will purchase equipment, such as motion picture and film strip projectors and screens, and will stimulate production of films on labor and current social problems, Delson said.

Delson reported that more than half of the funds necessary for active operation has already been raised, with $12,500 received from Ladies Garment Workers Union, Amalgamated Meat Cutters, and Hatters Union, all AFL; Newspaper Guild and Textile Workers Union, both CIO; National Cooperatives, Inc.; Jewish Labor Committee; Anti-Defamation League (B'nai B'rith); and Georgia Workers Education Service. An additional $7,500 is expected to be raised within six months.

MMSW Paper Refutes Own Story Of Beating

By ALLAN L. SWIM

(The CIO News, after reporting the unfortunate "Bessemer story" and refuting the myriad distortions which grew out of it, had hoped to let the matter rest. The Mine-Mill union, however, is still devoting its official organ to attacks on the CIO News and one of its staff members, and to furthering the distortions. The CIO News does not believe in beating a dead horse—but it believes also that it should not leave unanswered certain false allegations.)

WHEN YOU compare the numerous Mine Mill & Smelter Workers' Union accounts of the beating sustained by its secretary - treasurer, Maurice Travis, in Bessemer, Ala., last April, you're left wondering whether one man, three, 12 or 15 took part.

One Mine-Mill account says Travis was felled by a chair. Another says he was bashed in the face by a flashlight. Some MMSW stories say Travis was almost murdered, but their Graham "Cozy" Dolan's "eye-witness" account tells how Travis got up unaided, and proceeded alone to the men's room to wash up. (Dolan is Mine-Mill educational director.)

In its June 6 issue the MMSW newspaper hit the jackpot. It not only devoted a page to "refuting" the CIO News' account of the story and attacking CIO News Staffer Arthur Riordan—but for good measure it refuted its own previous accounts as well. This latest full-page tale carries the by-line of Rod Holmgren.

Mine-Mill hurled many charges at the Steelworkers Union in connection with the Bessemer case. One most frequently made was that Steel was exploiting race prejudice in the Bessemer area.

Shortly after Travis was beaten, Riordan was sent by CIO Pres. Philip Murray to Bessemer to make a thorough investigation. Murray's instructions were in effect: "Learn all the facts; if Steelworkers are engaging in an anti-Negro campaign, I want to know about it. If they are at fault in the Travis fight, I want to know about it."

MURRAY asked Willard Townsend, president of the Transport Service Employes, to make a similar investigation. As a Negro, Townsend would be sensitive to any anti-Negro attitudes —if they existed among the Steelworkers' representatives.

Then, too, Negro workers might possibly be more free in telling him of any intimidation. Townsend and Riordan worked independently of each other. Yet their reports were almost identical.

Neither Townsend nor Riordan found any evidence of anti-Negro or Ku Klux sentiments among the CIO or Steelworkers' representatives in Bessemer.

As both Townsend and Riordan reported after numerous interviews with those on the scene, the Travis beating occurred this way:

Both sides in a forthcoming representation election broadcast 15-minute programs over the Bessemer radio station — one broadcast following the other.

Travis entered one of the little rooms in the station in which there were George Elliott, young head of one of the locals which seceded from Mine-Mill, two others in his local and Bob Christofferson, publicist for the Southern Organization Drive.

Nick Zonarich, CIO Steelworkers representative, was in another room.

As Travis passed Elliott he taunted: "That the first time you've been on the air, kid?"

With that, words passed back and forth thick and fast. Finally Travis called Elliott a "popsicle." Elliott's southern temper flared up, and his fists began to fly.

At no time was Travis felled by a chair or hit across the face with a flashlight, as Mine-Mill stories have asserted.

When Zonarich heard the commotion, he rushed into the room and pulled Elliott away from Travis. Travis then picked himself up—unassisted—and walked to the men's room.

★ ★ ★

". . . The brutal unprovoked attack upon Travis" was "unprecedented since the Ludlow massacre." (29 persons were killed in the Ludlow massacre. In the Bessemer incident, two men were engaged in a fight.)

Mine-Mill goes on: "Riordan's righteous resume of the story tries to give the impression that Elliott was the ONLY one who attacked Travis. Actually, Elliott was joined by more than 12 goons, hired strong-arm mercenaries on the CIO Steelworker payroll, all of whom were personally egged on and encouraged by Nick Zonarich and Bob Christofferson."

Although Holmgren later devotes considerable space to defending "Cozy" Dolan's name as a newspaperman, he failed to give too much credence to Dolan's earlier account.

In his "eye-witness" account in the Mine-Mill paper on May 9, Dolan himself unwittingly indicated that Zonarich was not in the room at the time the fight began. A careful analysis of Dolan's story shows that Elliott and "two other Steel supporters" and Christofferson were the only ones in the room—along with MMSW Exec. Board Member Charles Wilson and Travis.

Dolan made no mention of Zonarich's participation in the fight or presence in the room while the fight was going on.

This substantiates the story as Riordan and Townsend learned it, for they reported that Zonarich rushed into the room only after he heard the commotion.

Actually, no one hit Travis but Elliott—and Elliott is an unpaid local union head, a former Mine-Mill & Smelter Worker. Nonetheless, the Mine-Mill paper continues to refer to the "gang of goons, led by Nick Zonarich."

THEN Holmgren lets his friend Dolan down again. Says Holmgren (who was not on the scene, but has a more vivid imagination than Dolan):

"What's more, Travis was not only unarmed, alone and hopelessly outnumbered, he was unsuspecting. It was a hot night and he was on his way to the water-cooler for a drink of water. So he was caught completely by surprise when Elliott hit him across the face with a heavy flashlight, blinding one eye permanently."

A month ago Dolan's imagination hadn't had as much time to reconstruct the story as Holmgren's had. Dolan's account told of the "four Steel supporters"—Elliott, Christofferson and "two other Steel supporters"—leaving the room in which Dolan was and passing into a room in which Travis and Wilson were waiting. Then the commotion started.

(Unlike Holmgren, Dolan makes no effort to give the impression that Travis was the victim of a surprise planned attack. Where Holmgren picked up the flashlight version, no one on the CIO News knows.)

Perhaps the most amusing of the Holmgren concoctions, though, is the touching defense of Dolan's honor as a "newspaperman."

Here's Dolan a la Holmgren: "Just to set Riordan straight, Dolan was fired from the Chicago Tribune simply because he refused to stoop to the kind of distorted reporting Riordan seems to enjoy so much. Dolan was one of the first newspapermen in the country to join the CIO American Newspaper Guild. And he was a leader in the historic Guild strike against the Chicago Herald & Examiner. Dolan's record as a newspaperman and trade unionist is one of the finest—and best known—in the country."

The CIO News staff has checked with a number of Chicago Tribune employes—past and present. Most of them never heard of Dolan. None recall his ever having written a story for the newspaper — because Dolan, they say, was never a reporter for the Tribune. He was a copy reader on the newspaper's suburban Sunday edition—to which the least competent employes on the staff are relegated.

This is the edition of the Tribune which is concerned mostly with society, Boy Scout and Service Club news.

Those who were on the Chicago newspaper scene at the time of Dolan's firing say he was dismissed after he took it upon himself to run a former Hearst employe out of the Tribune office. The victim was applying for a job.

One ironic note in that particular connection: It was the present CIO general counsel, Arthur J. Goldberg, who fought for—and eventually won for Dolan—his severance pay, although the Guild had no contract with the Tribune.

Who Hit Travis or Which Issue Of "The Union" Did You Read?

On April 25, page 3:

". . . by a gang of 'organizers' for the United Steelworkers and the CIO southern organizing drive."

On May 9, page one:

". . . by a mob of goons led by Nick Zonarich, Steelworkers' Intl. Rep."

On May 9 (same date), page 7:

", . . I rushed out to the outer room just in time to see Elliott and some other men swing a chair over Travis' head and knock him to the floor."—Graham Dolan.

(In Dolan's "eye-witness" account, no mention is made of participation in the altercation by Zonarich, who—as his own account indicates—was in another room when it began. The story, however, quickly spread until Zonarich was pictured as the leader of a planned blitz or the sole villain.)

On May 23, page 5:

On June 6, page 5:

"Actually, Elliott was joined by more than 12 goons, hired strong-arm mercenaries on the Steelworker payroll."

FTA News, May:

"He was beaten almost to death and blinded by a union member, Nick Zonarich . . ."

Telegram from Ewart Guinier, secretary-treasurer, Public Workers, to CIO Pres. Murray:

". . . A Steelworkers regional director, not only has been inciting white workers against Negroes, but that this hoodlum . . . led a group of Ku Kluxers who attempted to murder another union official, Maurice Travis . . ."

Telegram from Pres. Grant W. Oakes and other officers of Farm Equipment Workers, to Murray:

Demands Fail To Make Congress Act On Civil Rights

A STEADY RAIN of demands for action on civil rights continued last week to pour on Congress, but there was little evidence that new laws would be on the books before Congress adjourns.

Both Atty.-Gen. Tom Clark and Pres. Charles E. Wilson of General Electric — who headed the President's Committee on Civil Rights a year ago—urged a House Judiciary sub-committee to approve the wide range of recommendations made by the Civil Rights Committee in its final report. CIO Sec.-Treas. James Carey was a member of that Committee.

Carey was among a group of representatives from labor, liberal and minority organizations which called at the White House to urge continued pressure for passage of the FEPC bill in Congress.

Wilson told the Congressmen that civil rights laws are "increasingly inadequate and archaic" and need overhauling.

"If we now modernize these statutes," he said, "we can make them effective twentieth century tools for the protection of civil rights."

The corporation executive also voiced strong support for an FEPC statute to forbid Jim Crow segregation practices directed at Negroes and other minority groups.

"Segregation is one of our nation's greatest social problems," GE's Wilson declared.

"It seems particularly appropriate that in the channels of interstate commerce, control of which has been the express power and responsibility of the federal government for more than a century and a half, racial segregation should be outlawed without further delay."

THE Attorney General warned that present laws "fall far short of providing decent safeguards for protection of life, liberty and property. Pointing out that a "large number of people live in fear and distrust," he urged a new law to enforce a ban on Jim Crow practices on all interstate commerce facilities.

Clark further demanded passage of anti-lynch legislation to erase a "blot on our national life."

In a letter to Rep. Celler (D., N. Y.), sponsor of the anti-lynch bill, Cark said he felt the federal government "has the obligation to protect its citizens, and in fact all inhabitants of the nation, from the forcible deprivation by mob action of the right to a fair trial."

His letter was made public at a time when reports of mob action — against both whites and Negroes—appeared to be on the rise in several Southern states.

Every civil rights bill now faces strong probabilities of extended talkathons in the upper house.

At present, anti-polltax, anti-lynch and FEPC bills are mostly still in committee. A Senate group, however, has reported out the anti-lynch bill.

Out In 'Corn Country'

Farmers And Unionists Hold Political Pow-Wow

By HENRY ZON

The Democratic National Committee invited labor and farm spokesmen to meet with governors, senators and congressmen at Des Moines, Iowa, June 12 and 13. Among those taking part were 30 CIO and CIO-PAC officials from Texas, Missouri, Colorado, Oklahoma, Kansas, Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Iowa and Minnesota.

Climax of the conference was a public meeting of 5000 people from the Iowa farm country, which was addressed by Vice Pres. Barkley, CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey and Agriculture Secy. Charles Brannan.

Barkley delivered a searing attack on big business propagandists who scheme to drive a wedge between farmers and union labor. A roar of applause swept the hall when he declared these propagandists mean no good either to labor or the farmers.

Carey told the crowd he understood there was considerable speculation about the interests of the CIO in the farm states' conference.

"And we are guilty," said Carey. "The CIO is deeply concerned with the prosperity and security of the farmers of this country. We in the labor movement understand their situation perfectly. We know the necessity of minimum wages for ourselves; we understand the need of minimum prices for farmers. There are no empty words in the CIO slogan, 'Forward Together!'"

Carey received a huge ovation as he concluded, and scores of people crowded forward to shake hands as he left the hall.

CIO-PAC Dir. Jack Kroll aroused equal enthusiasm when he squarely met the question, "What is labor doing at a farm conference?"

"As trade unionists, we are good American citizens," said Kroll, "and as citizens we have a direct concern with the welfare of all of our country.

"And that is particularly true of farm welfare. We know that when the farmers are broke, we are broke. When prices collapse, wages collapse and jobs fade away. When the farmers have no market for ham and eggs, we have no money for ham and eggs.

"Much has been said here about the Brannan Plan to stabilize our national economy. The last word on this proposal will have to come from the farmers themselves. They know what is best for their business, just as we know our own problems best. If they are for the Brannan Plan, then we are for it!"

SIGNIFICANTLY, those attending the panel session on Sunday, June 13, asked many questions about the Taft-Hartley Act, and prospects for its repeal or revision.

Besides Carey and Kroll, CIO officials attending the conference included Rod Jacobson and Robert Gannon of Minnesota, William Kemsley of Michigan, Neal Edwards and H. J. Noel of Indiana, Bob Oliver and Jeff Hickman of Texas, Vernon Dale, Kenneth Everhart and Ben Henry of Iowa, Willard Murphy and H. J. Yount of Kansas, and Jacob Clayman of Ohio.

A. F. Whitney of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, Cy Anderson of the Railway Labor Political League and Joseph Keenan of the Labor League for Political Education (AFL) also were present.

Eisenhower Aids Campaign Against Education Bill

The bill, already passed by the Senate, won approval in a House Labor subcommittee and will probably come up for the full committee's vote in the next few days. It provides $300,000,000 payments to the states to improve education standards.

Sharp criticism came from Gen. Dwight Eisenhower, head of Columbia University. His letter was addressed to Rep. Ralph Gwinn (R. N. Y.), leader of the opposition to the bill and a close crony of the reactionary Committee for Constitutional Government, headed by Frank Gannett, upstate New York newspaper publisher.

Eisenhower's letter voiced opposition to the aid bill on grounds that funds would go to all the 48 states. Maintaining he would support payments to only the poorest states, Eisenhower charged that the bill as drawn would create "an ambition — almost a requirement" for the free spending of money.

THE GENERAL'S letter claimed that federal school grants and greater centralization of authority is a prime threat to the democratic system. The aid-to-education bill, however, leaves teaching policies squarely to the states and provides only for maintenance of decent minimum school standards.

Sen. Wayne Morse (R. Ore.) snapped back at Eisenhower with charges of "misleading propaganda" coming from "high personages" in "schools supported by private endowments."

"It is so perfectly obvious that the government can aid without control," Morse said, "that for someone to come along and raise the scarecrow that to provide such funds will endanger the schools, is sophomoric. It shows lack of understanding of the whole history of the country."

WHILE THE aid-to-education bill waits House Labor Committee action, both that group and the Senate Labor & Public Welfare Commttee are hearing testimony on other bills to provide U. S. funds for school constructoin throughout the country.

George Guernsey, CIO associate director of education, testified before the House Committee in support of two proposals—S. 1670, introduced by Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) and S. 287, sponsored by Sen. Neely (D. W. Va.).

Murray: They'll Talk Pensions

"THEY'LL BARGAIN with us on pensions before this thing is over," vowed CIO Steelworkers Pres. Philip Murray last week as negotiations with U. S. Steel went into their third day.

Murray's determined statement was issued after the giant corporation said it would not discuss pensions during the current talks. The corporation's excuse, as offered by John A. Stephens, chairman of the wage conference and vice president of U. S. Steel, was that the contract provided reopening only for pay and insurance issues.

Both the Supreme Court and the NLRB have defined pensions as part of wages, Murray countered. Big Steel's refusal to discuss the union demand for $150-a-month pensions is "incredible," he said. He charged the company officials with "quibbling" and engaging in "legal sophistry."

The mammoth corporation is reluctantly planning to bargain on wages and insurance. Even though its net profit last year far outdistanced all previous records, U. S. Steel is maintaining that any rise in wages "will be most detrimental."

Housing Bill Discharged

THE administration's giant housing program will finally get an airing on the House floor this week after spending a month locked up in the hostile Rules Committee.

The measure won clearance from the committee after three of its opponents — two Southern Democrats and a Republican—reversed their previous votes against granting it a rule. Certainty of the program's coming to the floor via the new House rule, thus bypassing the committee, was responsible for the vote switches.

Under the new rule, the bill would have come before the House on June 27 with the House's acceptance of Rep. Brent Spence's resolution to take it up. Under this procedure, however, no amendments could have been offered. It was fear of the measure's sailing through without amendments which prompted Reps. Cox (D., Ga.), Colmer (D., Miss) and Herter (R., Mass.) to change their votes in committee.

The bill provides for the construction of 1,050,000 public housing units in the next seven years; a slum clearance program; and loans and grants for farm housing.

Meanwhile, in the House, a program which would more closely affect trade union members than the public housing bill was picking up steam.

More than 40 Representatives —of both parties—have already introduced housing bills which would ease the way for middle-income families to buy homes.

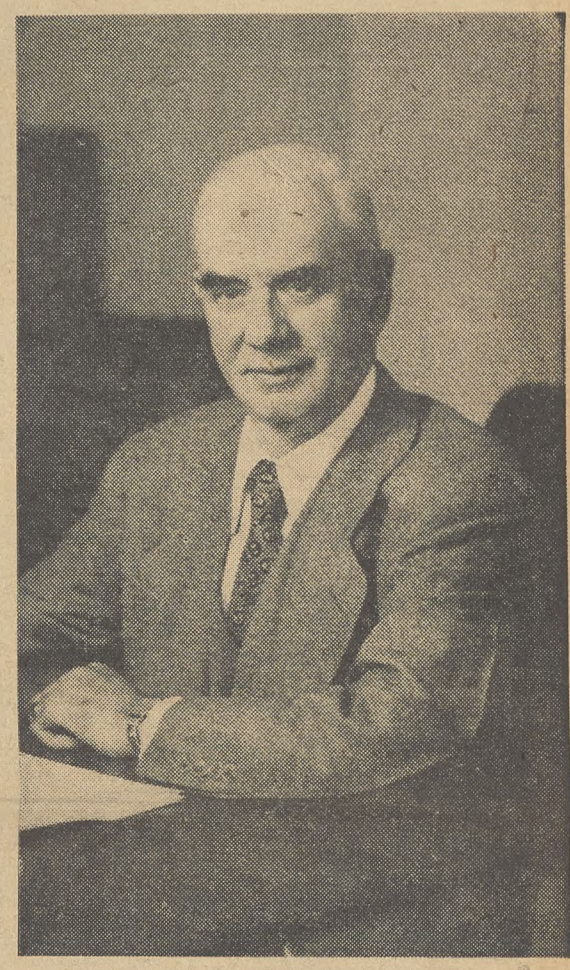
A Message To Every CIO Member

• • •

Subject: Repeal Taft-Hartley Now

From: CIO President Philip Murray

• • •



A series of crippling amendments to the Thomas-Lesinski Bill are being considered in the United States Senate this week.

These amendments have been sponsored by Senator Robert A. Taft of Ohio. They are framed with one — and only one — purpose: to maintain all the essential features of the infamous Taft-Hartley Act.

The Taft Amendments must be defeated.

The Thomas Bill must be passed by the Senate.

It is time for every CIO member, for every CIO local, for every city and state CIO council to demand of their Senators that the Taft-Hartley Act be repealed.

The Taft Amendments would do nothing to help labor unions. They will do much to strengthen the Taft-Hartley Act. The Taft Amendments will preserve the evil of injunctions, of government interference with collective bargaining, of government support of employers against unions.

The people of the United States voted against this evil, one-sided law last year. Now is the time to remind your Senators of this vast public demand for the repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act.

Wire your Senators today.

Defeat Taft Amendments

Pass The Thomas Bill!

Murray Says U. S. Steel 'Morally, Legally, Contractually' Obliged To Discuss Pensions

THE CIO Steelworkers have charged the mammoth U. S. Steel Corp. in current negotiations with breach of contract and commission of an unfair labor practice.

The union's charges stem from the corporation's steadfast refusal to discuss pensions. Pres. Philip Murray of the USA-CIO, on the other hand, argues that the corporation is "morally, legally and contractually" obliged to discuss the issue.

Negotiations were recessed last week but will be resumed this week.

In a minutely-documented brief by Arthur Goldberg, Steelworkers' general counsel, the union cited court, NLRB and arbitration decisions in support of its claim that the company is required to discuss pensions at this time.

U. S. Steel's position is based on the wording of the contract's reopening clause which permits discussion of "wage and insurance proposals."

The union brief cited an NLRB definition of wages—in which the U. S. Supreme Court has concurred—as "emoluments of value, like pension and insurance benefits, which may accrue to employes out of their employment relationship." This definition was given in the Inland Steel case, in which the Board ruled that pensions are a mandatory subject for collective bargaining, since they are part of wages.

Again in a case involving the W. W. Cross & Co. vs. NLRB, the court held that a group insurance plan is a bargainable subject because group insurance is a form of wages.

Also cited by the union brief was an arbitrator's decision in the "Godner case" in 1946. This decision also included welfare plans within the scope of wages.

"AS A MATTER of economic reality," the union contended, "increases in hourly or incentive rates of pay cannot be separated from the overall demands which the union has made upon the company.

"The union feels that it is a proper subject for collective bargaining to decide as to what part of increased 'rates of pay' should be in the form of hourly or incentive rate increases, or in the form of pensions and insurance benefits; or partly in each of these forms."

Even aside from the company's contractual obligation to bargain on all wages—including pensions—the brief noted that U. S. Steel is required to bargain on pensions at any time, since the present contract includes no provisions on the subject.

This contention is based on an NLRB decision in the Allied Mills case. There the Board stated: "With respect to unwritten terms dealing with 'wages, hours and other terms and conditions of employment,' the obligation remains on both parties to bargain continuously."

Thus, the union explained, since no agreement is in force on pensions, "the company is under a continuing statutory duty to bargain with the union on this subject before, during and after the reopening period."

ALTHOUGH THE negotiators have not yet discussed rates of pay, the company has already indicated that it will oppose any hourly raises, as well as discussion of pensions. This was made clear before talks got underway, when C. R. Cox, president of Carnegie-Illinois, U. S. Steel's biggest subsidiary, wrote Murray that "higher wages or other increased costs will be most detrimental."

Murray had apparently anticipated just this sort of corporation resistance even before receipt of the letter. In addressing the union's wage policy committee earlier, the Steel union chief warned emphatically that the union would need every ounce of its potential strength in the ensuing months.

Members of the committee said that Murray's dead-earnest tone left no doubt that he was referring to the possibility of a strike.

NMU Keeps Hiring Hall, Wins Raise, More Vacation

By BARNEY RASKIN

THE CIO Natl. Maritime Union has wound up eight weeks of negotiations with Atlantic and Gulf coast steamship operators with a new two-year agreement which retains the union hiring hall without amendment.

The pact provides an additional $7.50 monthly and one additional week's vacation for all hands.

These are also important gains on basic issues which the union had been vainly seeking for years. Among these are a positive guarantee against cuts in vessel personnel and improved grievance machinery.

Agreement was reached June 16, eight hours after the midnight deadline on the old agreement, following an around-the-clock session at the offices of Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service Commissioner Harry Winning in New York.

Settlement had been held up for five hours as NMU negotiators refused to conclude discussions until they were assured that representatives of ship wireless operators of the American Radio Association, CIO, had reached a satisfactory agreement with the shipowners.

The new NMU agreement expires June 15, 1951. It allows each party one review of wages and overtime rates by request at any time during the life of the agreement.

NMU membership in the port of New York ratified the agreement by a vote of 2030 to 147. Similar endorsements came from the rest of the NMU ports last week.

In reporting the agreement to the New York membership, Joseph Curran, NMU president and chairman of the negotiating committee said:

"It is our unanimous opinion that this agreement represents a real push ahead and will benefit every member of the union."

The union negotiating committee was composed of the six national officers, three national port committeemen, New York port agent and six rank and file members elected by the membership.

PRINCIPAL issue in the negotiations was the hiring hall, which gives the union control over hiring and which is conceded to be the life's blood of the maritime unions. The institution is now under attack by the NLRB.

NMU seamen, however, have made it clear that any attempt to weaken the hiring hall will be fought on the picket line and can succeed only after the union has been smashed. This was the union stand at the start of negotiations, and it was never changed.

Less than a week after the opening of negotiations, the NLRB handed down a decision on a complaint against the hiring hall by Atlantic and Gulf coast operators which had been pending for over a year. The board held that the hiring hall violated closed shop prohibitions of the Taft-Hartley Act and that a strike or threat of a strike to preserve the hiring hall was an "unfair labor practice."

A similar decision was handed down last year by the board on complaint of Great Lakes steamship operators. An NLRB petition for an order enforcing that decision is now being considered by the U. S. Court of Appeals.

The union refused to alter its demands to fit the NLRB decisions. It insisted that the hiring hall be maintained without change—subject only to a Supreme Court finding as to its legality, the same basis on which it has been maintained since the advent of Taft-Hartley.

The union demanded also a clause stipulating that if the Supreme Court finds the hiring hall is illegal, the entire contract between the union and the operators shall be voided.

Negotiations were hung up for weeks on this issue. The operators finally agreed to continuing the hiring hall without change, subject to Supreme Court ruling, but they still balked at the clause voiding the entire agreement in the event the hiring hall was outlawed.

It was not until four days before the deadline that this issue was settled with a complete victory for the union.

NEXT IN importance to the hiring hall was the issue of manning scales, which establish the number and ratings of men to be carried on vessels.

For ten years, the union has demanded the right to negotiate on manning scales in all departments. Although this right was established in regard to the stewards department by the War Labor Board in 1944, the operators have steadfastly refused to discuss manning in the other two departments, deck and engine. Attempts by operators to cut crews without consulting the union have resulted in frequent disputes.

The deadlock was broken in the final hours of negotiations when the operators agreed to insert a clause in the contract stating flatly that "there shall be no reduction in the manning scale of the deck and engine department for the life of the agreement."

Since this clause gives the union an air-tight floor under manning scales with no restriction on improvements, and since it is the first time the operators have ever permitted curtailment of their "prerogatives" in regard to manning in the deck and engine departments, it represents a substantial victory for the union.

ON GRIEVANCE machinery, the union asked for appointment of an impartial arbitrator for the industry but is well satisfied with the permanent joint disputes board which the new agreement establishes.

The board will be composed of six members, three from the union and three from the American Merchant Marine Institute, representing the operators.

Agreement on wages was held up by a question over language of the clause providing an additional $7.50 monthly to all hands. The operators insisted on calling it a clothing allowance, the union wanted it termed simply an increase in the basic wage structure.

Other clauses assure seamen of ample time to report to their ships and of regular weekly payment of illness and injury benefits. It had been the frequent practice of shipowners to hold up payment of these benefits if the seaman had a legal suit pending against the company.

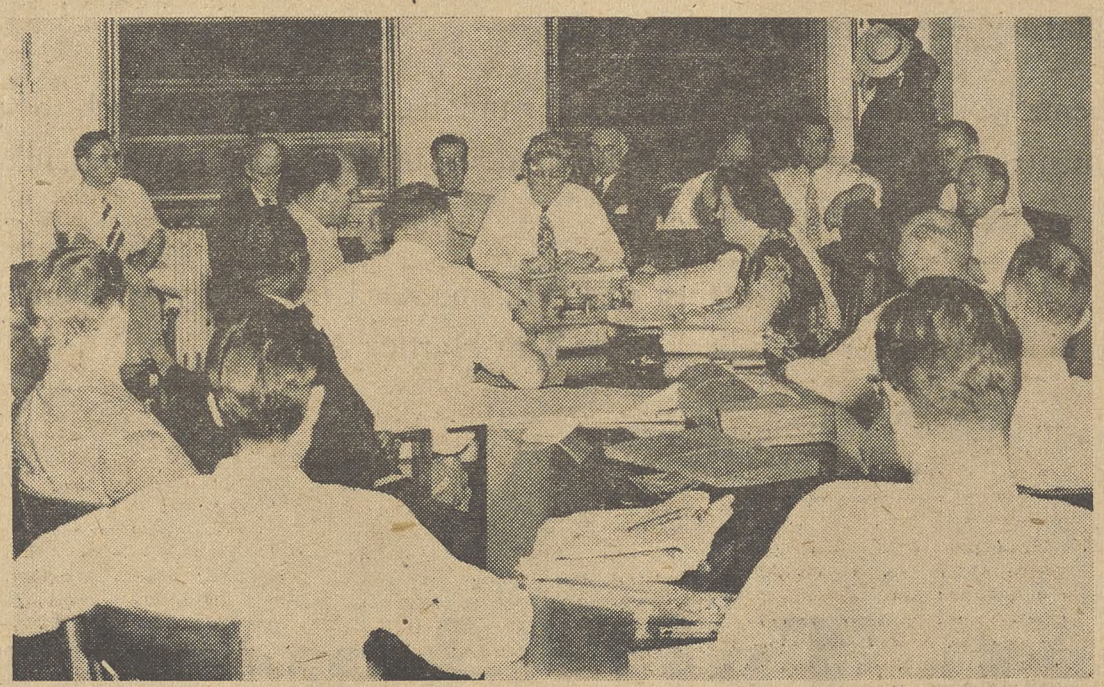
THE agreement, in the opinion of both union and operators, provides the basis for stable operations in the shipping industry for the next two years. This, of course, depends mainly on the Supreme Court decision on the hiring hall—not expected before the early part of next year—or on repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act.

The union's sentiments were voiced in the "NMU Pilot," which stated editorially:

"We don't know what the court will decide in this case. But—from bitter experience with the crimp joints and fink parlors, with the slave wages and miserable conditions, with the graft, abuse and discrimination that went with shipowner-controlled hiring—we know this for a fact: not only is the hiring hall legal; it is the ONLY legal system of hiring the waterfront has ever known.

"Any so-called law which would make the hiring hall illegal is a crime in itself.

"We are firm believers in law and order. That's why we'll fight with everything we've got against any attempt to smash the hiring hall."



NEGOTIATORS for the CIO Natl. Maritime Union and the American Merchant Marine Institute are shown five hours before they reached agreement on the hiring hall. It was agreed that the halls will be maintained until a final effecting order is issued by the Circuit Court of Appeals after the U. S. Supreme Court hands down a decision. This picture was taken at 8 a. m., June 16, five hours before a final decision was reached. The ship owners are on the right, the union representatives including NMU Pres. Joseph Curran are on the left, and seated at the head of the table and facing the camera is Harry Winning, Federal mediator assigned to the case.

Administration Fights Taft on Injunctions

THE U. S. Senate, interrupted spasmodically by other business, was last weekend getting into the core of the Taft-Hartley Law—the injunction process.

Doggedly, the Administration leadership was lining up votes in an attempt to beat down Sen. Robert A. Taft's drive to shackle the labor movement with injunctions even stronger than those of T-H.

Taft, his eye on his next year's drive for reelection, kept talking on and on about his devotion to the working man. But he was bending every effort to keep the injuction power on the books.

The Senate beat down three alternatives—by Sens. Paul Douglas (D., Ill.), Irving Ives (R., N. Y.) and Wayne Morse (R., Ore.)—which would provide for either seizure, as in the case of Douglas and Ives, or Congressional action on each "emergency," as in the case of Morse.

The real test was on the Douglas amendment. It showed that a sizeable number of liberal senators feared that the Douglas amendment, though it did not mention injunction and gave no procedure for obtaining them, might inferentially lead to injunctions.

These Senators voted against the Douglas amendment because they want not even the slightest inference, real or imagined, of injunction power. Taft and others of his kind voted against it because they want to be sure that industry would have a weapon to break strikes.

Among the liberals voting "no" were Sens. Hubert Humphrey (D., Minn.), Brien McMahon (D., Conn.), Warren Magnuson (D., Wash.), Wayne Morse (R., Ore.) James Murray (D., Mont.), Matthew Neely (D., W. Va.), Claude Pepper (D., Fla.), Elbert Thomas (D., Utah) and others.

Then, Majority Leader Scott Lucas (Ill.) made a move which reportedly brought all the Democratic and Republican liberals into one camp. He moved to strike the injunction power from Taft's amendments.

That was the issue to be joined in the Senate this week.

ENERGETIC SEN. Matthew Neely (D., W. Va.) had the galleries and his fellow Senators listening intently, sometimes laughing at his barbs, as he tore into the very idea of an injunction in labor affairs.

"It has been recorded that the old Goths of Germany in their primitive assembles debated every important question twice, once when drunk and once when sober—sober to promote wisdom and decorum; drunk to promote courage and vigor of action.

"I have no first-hand information concerning either the decorum or sobriety that prevailed during the passage of T-H, with which we struggle and under which millions suffer humiliation and distress.

"But, certainly, those who voted for this act were free from the influence of any stimulating liquor or soothing drug. Otherwise, they would, by accident or design, have failed to make this measure the most tyrannical ever placed upon the statute books of the nation.

"An unlearned old woman was asked what she thought about the King James Bible. She replied, 'If it is good enough for King James, it is good enough for me.' (laughter.)

IN PENNSYLVANIA, in Sept., 1917, Judge Langham issued an injunction which restrained striking miners from 'congregating on the Magyar Presbyterian Church lot or any other lot, lots, or places at the time the employes of the plaintiff enter the mine and at the time the employes of the plaintiff come out of the mine; from singing a song or songs in hearing of the employes of the plaintiff of a threatening or hostile nature . . .'

"Subsequently, an investigating committee of the Senate found and reported that the church in question was on a lot owned by the local union, and that some of the hymns which the miners were enjoined from singing were the following: 'The Victory May Depend Upon You,' 'Nearer, My God to Thee,' 'Stand Up, Stand Up, for Jesus.'"

The West Virginian warned his Democratic colleagues that they would get no campaign contributions by playing up to the NAM. "On your life they will never come," he said. "They will go to the party of the distinguished Senator from Ohio (Taft.)"

Sen. Douglas then asked: "Is the Senator charging that I am attempting to get campaign funds from large contributors by helping, with others, to sponsor these amendments?"

Neely answered: "No. The Senator is to great of college professor and too little acquainted with the skullduggery of practical politics and has too high a sense of honor to accept a tainted contribution."

Neely wound up:

"It is my hope that the Thomas Bill will be passed and the blessings of the Wagner law restored.

"When I speak on the final question of repealing T-H, I propose to prove by facts as convincing as the demonstration of a problem in Euclid, that not only labor but the great corporations and every class of the American people for a dozen years under the Wagner act enjoyed the greatest period of prosperity, freedom and happiness that has ever blessed mankind since God said: 'Let there be light.'"

T-H VICTIMS AT LIBERTY SHRINE: John W. The group came to Washington to tell Congressman how T-H hurts workers. Prospects Are Bright For Favorable Action On Housing Measure

IT WAS pretty much "Housing Week" on Capitol Hill last week, and for the first time in six years of desperate attempts it looked as if the nation's ill-housed were going to get some relief at last.

There were these developments in the Lower House, the Senate having passed the administration's public housing-slum clearance program months ago:

• The housing bill, after escaping the hostile rules committee, finally was being debated on the floor, and was rapidly moving to a vote.

• Ten Congressmen — all but one convinced of the need for federal action—dramatically walked off the floor to take a flying tour of New York and Philadelphia slums. The expedition was financed by the CIO, AFL, Veterans of Foreign Wars and Americans for Democratic Action.

Back from the tour, Rep. James G. Fulton (R., Pa.), who was uncertain before, announced: "One look at what passed for a toilet for a whole floor in one building convinced me that I had to cast my vote for the housing bill."

• Bitter foe of the bill, Georgia's Rep. Eugene Cox, 69, forgot his Congressional etiquette on the floor long enough to strike venerable, 83-year-old Rep. Adolph Sabath (D., Ill.) across the face and call him a "liar." Sabath, who has slugged it out verbally for many years in the House, returned a fast one-two with the agility of a man much younger.

• The omni-present real estate lobby was busy defending itself against a presidential onslaught at the beginning of the week. Truman had blasted the lobby for distorting the housing issue and issuing "false propaganda." The lobby acted very shocked, and issued a "you're another" statement against administration spokesmen.

But what had union legislative representatives most excited last week, was the probability that the housing bill was not only going through, but would possibly run interference for the rest of the Truman program, blocked behind housing.

Debate in the House was almost a carbon copy of the arguments that have been batted around the Senate, in committees, in pro-and-con literature and public forums over the past six years. To make it even more like old times, there was even a Roosevelt in the middle of the fight, defending his beliefs against cries of "socialism" as his father had done before him.

Young FDR, Jr.—newest Congressman in the House—devoted his maiden speech on the floor to introducing the middle income housing bill, strongly backed by CIO, and urging passage of the public housing bill.

"In my limited experience," he said, "I can remember that almost every piece of legislation in recent years which has sought to serve the interests of the people instead of interests of the few, has always been tagged by the same old gang as socialistic."

Here are some of the debate highlights:

Rep. Sabath, leading off: "Some people say this legislation will affect private enterprise. That is all wrong. It will aid private enterprise; furthermore, private enterprise has promised to build homes; it has made that promise for the past 9 or 10 years. Has it built these homes for the low-income people? Indeed not. Private enterprise has built homes for those who could pay 12 to 15 and 20 thousand dollars, but not for those who could afford to pay only 7 or 8.

McCormack (D., Mass.): ". . . I call attention to the fact that in 1935 when we were considering the Social Security Act . . . the cry was made in relation to old-age and survivors insurance that it would destroy the private insurance companies. As a matter of fact, it has greatly increased the business of private insurance companies. These companies now admit that they were wrong and that it has been of great benefit to them . . . This bill will have the same effect on private industry."

Martin (R., Mass., minority leader): "Mr. Speaker, in opposing the housing bill I am swayed not entirely by the content of the measure, although there is much that could be singled out for criticism. My opposition is chiefly due to a profound conviction we cannot afford to engage in this new enterprise in which so few will benefit at the peril of so many."

(Martin then used the real estate lobby's estimate of 16-to-19 billion dollars as the cost of the program. This has been refuted by the Budget Director, who estimated the total at '$9 to $10 billion, rather than $16 billion.")

Cox, D., Ga.): "This bill plainly, openly and boldly declares socialism to be our new national policy."

Karsten (D., Mo.): "In my opinion Federal assistance is absolutely necessary for cities such as St. Louis if we are ever to relieve the housing shortage and eliminate slums . . . Those that eliminate slums . . . Those what must live in substandard dwellings do not do so by choice."

Madden (D., Ind.): "During the last 20 years, on a number of occasions, legislation has been passed by this Congress aiding corporations and financial interests to pass over a critical period of their existence, but not one word concerning the socialistic aspects of that legislation was heard. I refer to bills calling for railway mail subsidies to the railroads; for legislation aiding banks to survive . . . and numerous bills of that type."

Spence (D., Ky., Banking committee chairman): "A vote against this rule is not a vote against the bill, but is a declaration by the House of the United States that it does not care to function . . . I have heard many cries of socialism. Always when we attempt to do something for the plain people you will hear that cry . . ."

O'Hara (D., Ill.): I would sooner leave this Congress a defeated first-termer than go to bed for just one night with the conscience of a real-estate lobby."

Time Off To Vote

Two hours off on election day is provided for employes of Western Felt Works, Chicago, in a contract recently negotiated by the CIO Textile Workers.

The contract also provides a general raise of 5c an hour, with about half those covered receiving from 7c to 12c.

NO JOBS TODAY

We wish the CIO News had been wrong when it said many months ago that the nation was heading toward a serious unemployment problem.

Well, the problem is here. Today. Right in our laps.

Perhaps it isn't critical yet from a national economic standpoint—but it's serious enough to warrant a lot of real soul-searching by leaders of industry, business and government.

It isn't enough for these leaders to dodge the issue by saying that we're merely going through a "period of necessary economic readjustment."

They should face the issue squarely, grab the problem by the scruff of its neck and try to work out a solution before we hit the skids that lead to depression.

This, of course, would mean industry and business would have to alter some of their methods and toss some of their pet theories into the wastebasket. And it would mean that Congressional leaders would face up to their responsibilities to those who become jobless through no fault of their own.

Maybe that's asking for a lot—but it would be a little in comparison with the disastrous consequences of a major depression.

One of the first steps toward solving a problem is to learn what created it—so let's see what we find in the economic picture.

WE CAN 'THANK' PROFIT GOUGERS

Shortly after the end of World War II, business and industry embarked on the greatest profit-taking spree the nation has ever witnessed—a spree that was bound to be followed by a bad economic hangover.

Prices went higher and higher and higher. Profits skyrocketed. Those who raised their voice in warning were usually accused of "attacking the profit system" and "trying to undermine the American way."

Eventually the inevitable happened. Consumer purchasing power got so badly out of balance with prices that buyers were forced to curtail their purchases.

"Surplus" production began developing in various lines. Business and industry "met" this problem by laying of workers.

Thus purchasing power was decreased again.

Much the same thing began happening in the late 1920's. A serious depression followed.

TALK WON'T DO THE JOB

Pronouncements—pious or otherwise—regarding the "inevitability" of what has happened, and stupid statements that "we must follow natural economic laws" won't move the nation one inch nearer to solution of a problem that must be met if we're to avoid real trouble.

It's time for the corporations to begin using their huge resources to fight growing unemployment.

It's time for Congress and the states to provide realistic unemployment benefits for those who're out of jobs.

Certainly the course outlined here will cost business and industry—and the taxpayers—money. Probably a lot of it.

But the price would be low in comparison with the cost of a depression.

And it's worth mentioning here that a large segment of the public no longer goes for the idea that the only function of business is to make money for its owners.

Commies Have Phony New Line

"Autonomy" Has Replaced "Unity" As Watchword Of Kremlin Boys

By ALLAN L. SWIM

OH, BROTHER! The things that can happen when the party line changes are almost completely out of this world!

Take this business of "autonomy" for example.

It's taken on great significance and has become the by-word of a group of persons inside the CIO who said only a few years ago they would give their all for 'unity."

Now it's "unity be damned—except on our terms" and the lads are trying to build up the idea that autonomy is a good substitute for democratic majority rule.

And don't tell me that the boys can't put their heart into such a phony switch—because I saw them change an "imperialistic aggression" into a "people's war" in one day back in 1941.

That was the day Joe and Adolf ended their shotgun-wedding honeymoon and headed for the divorce court.

AUTONOMY IS really a desirable and necessary thing in the labor movement but it, like water, needs to be applied in proper portions.

If there's too little water you have a drouth; if there's too much you have a flood.

The CIO, when it was founded and in its early years, worked out what nearly everybody considered to be a reasonable balance between autonomy for the various unions in the handling of their internal affairs and majority rule for the CIO in matters affecting the entire organization.

Nobody challenged the right of delegates to meet in convention and, by democratic methods, set what was known as "CIO policy." Nobody challenged the right of the Executive Board to make policy decisions between conventions.

The party line boys used to yell that any group which violated such policy was guilty of high treason. They used to say no group had the right to "use the good name of CIO" and at the same time flout CIO policy.

Ah, but that was before the party line changed!

WITH ALL OF the loose talk that's making the rounds these days, it's difficult for many persons to learn when "autonomy" became the watchword of those who formerly pleaded for "unity."

It happened when a majority in the CIO decided to back the post-war foreign policy of the U. S. and a minority decided to support Russian policy.

All the minority wanted was:

1. To continue to enjoy the support and influence of the CIO in dealing with employers on the domestic scene.

2. Use their CIO connection to undermine CIO policy—and the policy of the U. S. government—on the foreign scene.

And they had the gall to say that "autonomy" gave them the right to do so!

YOU'RE GOING to hear a lot more about "autonomy" between now and the end of the 1949 CIO convention at Cleveland.

You're going to hear that "autonomy" gives the dissenters the right to lie about and slander the CIO leadership and you'll hear the leadership termed "dictatorial" because it fights back.

You'll be told that "autonomy" gives individual unions the right to affiliate with the World Federation of Trade Unions, which the CIO recently repudiated.

"Autonomy" will be used by certain of the dirtier-tongued party-liners as phony justification for publicly calling CIO Pres. Philip Murray a fascist and a "Brownshirt."

And the Kremlinites will attempt to convince everybody that all they're trying to do is preserve the democratic rights of the unions to which they belong!

New "Witchhunt" Of Federal Agencies Halted

Objections by Sen. Neely (D., W. Va.) last week halted Senate passage of a bill which CIO legislative officials had described as "mischievous, disruptive and dangerous."

The bill (S. 1496) would set up a "permanent commission on intergovernmental relations," which CIO Legislative Director Nathan Cowan said would serve to "break down the standards and effectiveness of such federal statutes as the Social Security Act under the pretense of promoting a more 'efficient' fiscal relationship between the states and the federal government."

Although originally drafted to create a "study" group, the bill was changed to give the commission "expediting" powers. The Commission, representing federal, state, county and city governments, would be heavily overweighted with spokesmen from the smaller branches of government.

CIO officials fear that it would become a method of fighting the establishment of high state and local standards for effective carrying out of national social welfare programs, where most of the money comes from the federal government.

The bill "obviously shows an intent to set up a watchdog or witch-hunting commission that day in, day out would harass, intimidate and influence federal agencies that are seeking to carry out national policies established by Congress."

"Take my advice! Lay off the television!"

Labor Wants Voice In N. Y. Mayoralty

The leading CIO and AFL unions in Greater New York have served notice on the major political parties that they expect to be consulted in the consideration and designation "of desirable candidates for Mayor" in the forthcoming election contest.

The unions said that the candidates to be considered for the mayoralty must "have a distinguished public record, sympathetic to and understanding of labor's problems . . ."

The statement was signed on behalf of CIO unions by Pres. Michael Quill of the Transport Workers Union, head of the New York CIO Council, and Hyman Blumberg, Clothing Workers executive vice president, and for the AFL by Pres. Martin T. Lacey, of the Central Trades and Labor Council and Pres. Howard McSpedon of the Building and Construction Council.

Williams Signs Mich. Bill Boosting Benefits

Gov. G. Mennen Williams of Michigan has signed into law a bill which increases unemployment benefits by $1 to $4 a week, but which still "does not meet the need for adequate compensation."

The new bill raises maximum benefits for a single person from $20 to $24 weekly but makes no change in the dependency allowance of $2 for each child up to four children.

The Democrats tried to boost the benefits to $30 weekly for a single person and up to $42 weekly for workers with four dependents, but the measure was kept from coming out on the floor by the GOP.

They Really Got Heat Turned On

THIS IS A story about low wages, high courage, an impartial arbiter and men who were forced to work while wearing their overcoats.

The villian in the plot was a tight-fisted manager. The No. 1 hero was a fellow who believed in calling his shots as he saw them.

The chief beneficiaries were workers who believed in fighting for what they thought to be right.

THE FACTORY, located in a so-called "low-wage area," believed in paying as little as it posibly could.

Workers finally decided the only way they could get decent wages was to form a union—so they set up an "independent."

The union had tough going and after months of negotiating and threatening to strike it finally established a starting rate of about 33 cents an hour.

No further wage hikes were forthcoming until the Wage-Hour Law brought the minimum rate up to 40 cents.

Eventually the "independent" decided it should affiliate with the CIO—and it did.

The manager liked the CIO even less than he did the "independent" and he said so frankly.

WHEN THE next contract negotiating period came around the CIO union made a fight for and won an increase of 7 cents—under threat of a strike.

The manager, by then a very unhappy man, started a campaign of corner-cutting and heckling.

He tried various schemes, some of which amused the workers and some of which antagonized them.

Then he gave them the "cold" treatment —in the wintertime.

He ordered the fireman not to start the furnace until 5 a. m., which meant the plant was always cold during the early part of the morning shift.

And on Mondays—with no heat over the week-end—many of the men had to wear their overcoats until nearly noon.

UNION representatives complained to the manager, but he brushed them aside with the statement that "I can't afford a fire or a fireman all night because the union's nearly driven me into bankruptcy."

The union did a bit of checking, and learned the company could well afford to heat the plant properly.

Next step was to file a formal grievance under the procedure set up in the contract.

An arbiter was finally called in to settle the dispute. He read the contract carefully and then reported:

"There's nothing in the contract which says the management must heat the plant in any particular manner. In fact, heat isn't even mentioned. Consequently the union doesn't have a just grievance."

A UNION meeting was hurriedly called and the matter was discussed at length. Then the workers voted to strike.

The next day a picket line was thrown around the plant and all work on the inside ceased.

A day or so later the arbiter was called back into the case. He studied the contract again and said: "There's nothing here which says the workers can't go out on strike because there's not enough heat in the plant. As I said before, there's nothing about heat in the contract."

On the following morning the plant was warm as toast when the men returned to work.

IT'S A THIN DISGUISE

Idea That Most Farmers Are Wealthy Called Business Propaganda

By HAROLD V. KNIGHT
North Dakota Farmers Union

SECRETARY OF Agriculture Brannan never said a truer word when he told a Congressional committee that depressions are farm-led and farm-fed.

Yet when he made his proposal to maintain farm income at the prosperous level of the past decade, while giving consumers abundant food at reasonable prices, a howl went up from the same sources that are opposing all Fair Deal measures to improve the welfare of the common man.

Reactionaries raise the same old cries of "socialism" and "regimentation." They say that the idea of letting food prices find their natural level (which abundant supplies would lower) and making up the difference to the farmer from the federal treasury, means paying for our food twice —directly and through taxes.

It may be hard for city folks to picture the income of average farm families, just as it is difficult for farmers to understand the problems of the union labor family. The propaganda of the big boys doesn't make it any easier. Both groups are told that the other are rolling in wealth.

As a matter of fact, in 1945—supposed to be one of the best years for farmers—two out of three farm families had less than $2,000 net income.

Of course, that two-thirds includes the great mass of sharecroppers and tenants in the South. It also includes the great bulk of "typical" American farm families —the kind that "set a good table" and buy cars, refrigerators, radios, furniture, tractors, lumber, and other things factories produce—when they have the money.

THIS MATTER OF gross income and net income for farmers is something city workers may find confusing. A farmer may gross $10,000; but after all his expenses of production—tractor fuel, depreciation and repairs on equipment, interest, taxes, seed, feed, etc.—he will be lucky if he has a net income of $3,000.

That is equivalent of a factory worker who gets $1.50 an hour working 50 weeks a year. Is that an unreasonable standard of living for American families? Yet few farmers fall into that category. Farm income also greatly fluctuates from year to year, depending on price and weather, but many of the costs of farming are fixed.

Another idea about which city folk sometime wonder is "parity." Parity means simply a fair relationship between what a farmer sells his output for and the cost of what he buys. A parity price is a fair price.

Sixty per cent. parity is only 60% fair. Ninety per cent. parity is 90% fair. What laboring man would stand for a union which urged them to accept a 60% fair wage? Many farmers disapprove of the position of their Congressmen, who urge them to be satisfied with less than fair prices. The Farmers Union is battling for full parity—nothing else. It also proposes a program of storing foodstuffs—frozen, canned, or in their natural state—so consumers will have a steady flow of goods at stable, reasonable prices in years of low production and high.

The Farmers Union has long sought to correct the misinformation farmers generally have received about organized labor. It believes that labor, too, should have a better idea about farmers problems.

Instead of anti-farm blocs and anti-labor blocs—we need a pro-prosperity bloc that will promote better living conditions for both farmers and city workers.

$2,000 More In Rewards Offered In Shootings Of The UAW's Reuther Brothers

Rewards of $1000 each have been offered by the Michigan CIO Council executive board and Local 174, CIO Auto Workers, Detroit, for information leading to arrest and conviction of the assailant of Victor Reuther, UAW educational director.

These are in addition to the rewards of $1000 each offered by the council and Local 174 in the shooting last year of UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

UAW's executive board has offered $200,000 for reward leading to arrest of the assailant of the Reuther brothers, both of whom were hit by shotgun blasts fired into their homes.

The board issued an additional $5000 for information resulting in any person being held for trial as a principal or accessory in either shooting, even though the accused is not convicted.

St. Louis Post-Dispatch Employs Negro Reporter

The St. Louis Post-Dispatch, which is noted for its outspoken crusades for minority rights, practices what it preaches.

Last week the newspaper, which circulates in Jim Crow territory, hired its first Negro reporter—John Henry Hicks, 21, of East St. Louis, Ill.

Hicks has just been graduated with honors from the University of Illinois, where he completed four years' work in three.

As Thrown By Columnist George Morris

Daily Worker Line Boomerangs

THE LEADERSHIP of CIO—not Big Business, Wall Street or the NAM—has been the chief target of attacks in the Daily Worker for about 18 months.

The newspaper, mouthpiece of the Communist Party, apparently operates on the theory that no edition can go to press unless it contains accusations against Philip Murray and others who support CIO policy.

The anti-Murray campaign began in earnest when the CIO Executive Board in January 1948 indorsed the Marshall Plan and rejected the Third Party candidacy of Henry Wallace.

George Morris, who writes a "labor" column, has been the Worker's chief hatchet man in this undertaking. The general viewpoint expressed in his column is that Murray can do nothing right and the unions which defy notional CIO policy can do no wrong.

Typical titles of Morris' column follow:

- "Philip Murray Red-Baiting to Hide Failure in Pay Talks."
- "Does the NAM Need the CIO Mailing List?"
- "Murray's Theory Costs the Worker Plenty."
- "Connecticut PAC Dead as a Door Nail."
- "CIO Heads Now Ready to Deliver to ACTU."
- "Murray Will Never Get 'Unity' for Truman."

FOR A SHORT time last year Morris was trying to peddle the idea that Philip Murray—personally—had sold members of his own union down the river because of his wage policies.

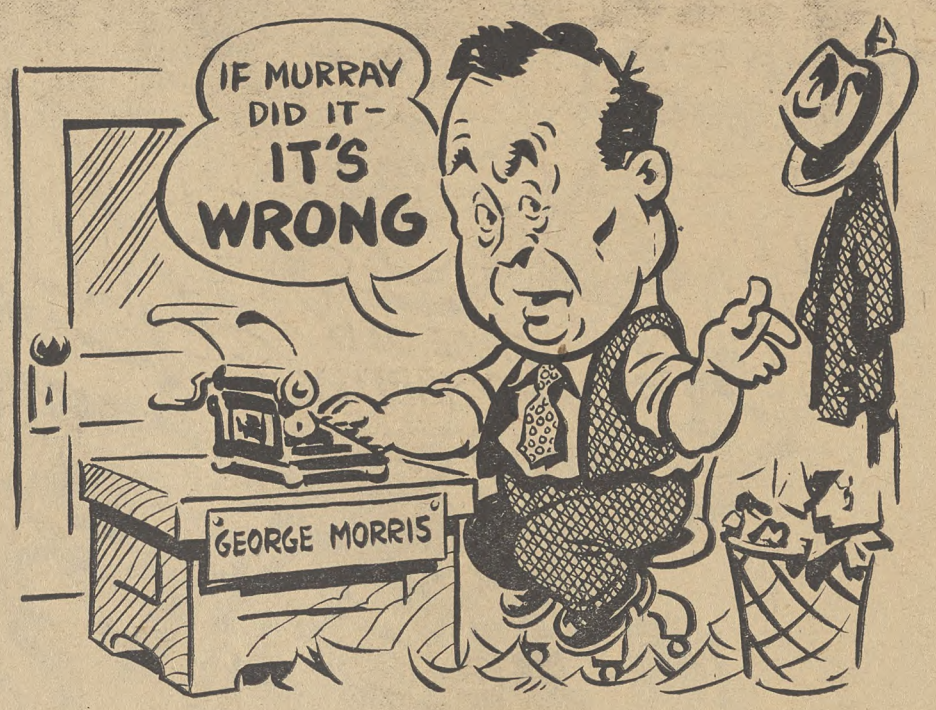
This little campaign ended suddenly when the Steelworkers got wage increases ranging from 9½ to 25 cents an hour.

In April of last year Morris cut loose on Pres. Mike Quill of the Transport Workers after Quill resigned as head of the policy-defying New York City CIO Council.



"When the TWU launches a wage fight in New York the campaign of necessity must reach down to every organization and community, Morris wrote on April 4. "It takes a terrific amount of pressure to bend the city toward a raise. The TWU always had to rally a very active support of the CIO council and its 600,000 affiliated members."

ON APRIL 29 last year Morris said that the CIO-PAC in Connecticut was "as dead as a door nail." But, Morris added, things were really looking up for Wallace in the state.

The record shows PAC did a bang-up job in Connecticut last year and that a governor and three Congressmen supported by PAC were elected.

It also was in April 1948 that the Worker carried an editorial saying, "The most conservative of capitalist-hired statisticians now estimate the Henry Wallace vote of 10,000,000 in November. To Murray this 10-million-strong army of progressivism and peace is nothing but a 'Communist' plot."

In November Wallace polled less than 2 million votes—and the "capitalist-hired statisticians" made a lot of mistakes about Truman, too.

Georgs T. Guernsey, CIO associate education director, was the victim of an amusing, underhanded Morris attack.

"The CIO's national office is mailing some awful stuff to its affiliates these days, but circulating NAM pamphlets to its educational directors sets a new low," Morris wrote.

He then said Guernsey had been distributing a NAM pamphlet called "People vs. Rabbits." He implied that this pamphlet had the approval of CIO and Guernsey.

Morris didn't explain that the CIO often distributes to key union people throughout the country material put out by organizations which fight the CIO—so the key people can easily follow the opposition's line.

On numerous occasions the Daily Worker has attacked CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, CIO Organizational Dir. Allen S. Haywood, Pres. Walter Reuther of the Auto Workers, the CIO News and its editor.

A GOOD EXAMPLE of Worker technique is provided in the April 4, 1948, issue. A black, five-column head on Page 4 says "How Reuther Worked With Rankin To Bust Miami Transport Union."

Nearly an entire page is devoted to the "Reuther-Rankin" story but Rep. John Rankin is not mentioned a single time directly. Apparently the headline was based on a statement in the story, that "other leaflets issued by the UAW organizers let go the whole Thomas-Rankin line against TWU."

During last year's political campaign Morris wrote:

"The bulk of the pages of the CIO News is now taken up with ballyhoo about the ERP and denunciation of Wallace, the only candidate running who opposes the Taft-Hartley Law . . ."

A few weeks ago the Worker "went to town" on the beating of Secy.-Treas. Maurice Travis of the Mine, Mill union.

"Travis was the victim of an assault by Steelworkers Union goons . . .," said the Worker.

The "goons" (plural) turned out to be one man (singular)—a local worker who struck Travis after the latter called him a filthy name.

And—just in case you didn't know it—the Daily Worker is published by the Freedom of the Press Co., a corporation.

New UOPWA Contract Won At John Hancock

"THE BEST contract ever won from a major insurance company" was wrapped up last week by the CIO Office & Professional Workers for 5,900 John Hancock Insurance Agents.

Termed "the best" by UOPWA Pres. James Durkin, the agreement was reached after six months of negotiations and after the union surmounted a representation election thrown into the midst of the talks.

Following are the principal gains provided by the new two-year contract:

- A $5 weekly increase to be paid up to the early part of 1950. For the first half of 1950 and each six months thereafter the company will make a new calculation based on the ratio of the company's expenses to the New York Insurance Law expense limit. Under this formula, the increase can go up as high as $10 a week.
- All firings are subject to arbitration, and grievance procedure is speeded up.
- The company agreed to a union shop if, in an NLRB poll—required by Taft-Hartley—75% of the ballots cast are affirmative. Either party can cancel the union shop by written notice after 60 days.
- Agents aged 60 with 25 years' service can retire at a pension equal to the amount they would receive at 65, excluding the payments they would have made between 60 and 65. In addition, the company will pay to those retiring between 60 and 65 an amount equal to the social security payments the employe would receive at 65.
- A permanent disability plan will begin on Jan. 1, 1950.

The union estimated that the retirement and disability improvements are equivalent to an average $2 weekly gain for the agents.

UOPWA LEADERS expect the new contract to serve as a shot in the arm to the union's chances of winning crucial NLRB elections next month at the Prudential and Metropolitan Life Insurance companies.

Bargaining agent at both companies since 1942, UOPWA is being challenged by both the AFL's Natl. Federation of Insurance Agents and by the Independent Union of Life Insurance Agents. Campaigns of both these latter-day unions have been strongly supported by the companies, the UPOWA charges.

The contest at Prudential, involving 14,500 agents in 31 states, is a run-off election, scheduled for July 8. In this the UOPWA and the AFL union will be pitted against each other.

At Metropolitan, 10 statewide elections are due July 15.

Denham Hit Twice On Rulings

The five-man Natl. Labor Relations Board — like the labor movement — is suffering from indigestion these days. It can't stomach Robert N. Denham's Taft-Hartley "interpretations" any more than labor can.

In the past week the Board twice slapped down the NLRB chief. In addition Denham is reported to have handed the board members a strong complaint that they are "usurping" his powers.

The NLRB general counsel's complaint stems from a Board decision of a month ago in which the NLRB refused to consider unfair labor practice cases brought before it by Denham.

In one case, Denham was reversed when he sought to have CIO Oil Workers charged with conducting an illegal boycott.

THE COMPLAINT was brought by the Pure Oil Co., which has a dock in Toledo on Standard Oil property. The Oil Workers local was engaged in a strike against Standard at the time and was picketing Standard in support of the walkout.

Respecting the picket lines, the Pure Oil employes—members of the same local as the strikers—refused to unload oil from the dock at the struck Standard refinery.

Denham held that the strikers' picketline was illegal, since it prompted the non-striking Pure Oil workers to refuse to handle Pure Oil products.

But, argued the Board, to have ruled that way "might well outlaw virtually every effective strike, for a consequence of all strikes is some interference with business relationships between the struck employer and others."

The second rebuff suffered by Denham last week also involved his interpretation of the secondary boycott ban.

Beer Strike Settled; Gain Most Demands

AFTER 12 weeks out on the pavement, New York City's 7000 CIO Brewery Workers have returned to their machines and their trucks with most of the demands won.

Actual end of the long strike came a week after a false alarm settlement. A tentative agreement reached between the negotiators was rejected by 92% of the workers after "settlement" of the walkout was hailed by the companies and newspapers.

Chief opposition to the earlier proposals reportedly centered around the two-men-on-a-truck and the work week clauses. The first was said to be worded too vaguely and the second provided the 37½-hour week only during slack periods.

The final agreement requires that two men be assigned to "almost all" trucks, according to the union. Brewery truck drivers, the union charged during negotiations, suffer the highest incidence of hernia of any industry in New York City.

This, they said, is caused by the heavy load one man on a truck is required to lift by himself. The demand for two-men delivery trucks thus was one of the chief union goals.

OTHER provisions of the new contract:

- A 37½-hour work week for all inside workers throughout the year.
- A company-financed pension plan costing $3 a week per worker.
- An increase of 2½c an hour in night differential pay.
- A general wage increase of $2 a week.
- Improved safety conditions.
- Maximum Union security allowed by Taft-Hartley.
- An eighth paid holiday.

Shut down by the long walkout were the following breweries and distributors: Schaefer, Ruppert, Rubsam & Horrman, Trommer, Piel, Burk, Rheingold, Schlitz, Annheuser-Busch, West End and Ballantine. A number of smaller concerns settled earlier in the strike.

Alabama CIO Council Calls On Members To Expose Ku Klux Klan As Mob Violence Continues Unabated

By BOB CHRISTOFFERSON

AS "reprehensible" as "Hitler's Gestapo, Stalin's secret police"—that was the description applied to the Ku Klux Klan last week by John J. Playfair, president of the Alabama CIO Council, in calling on all affiliated unions and members to "give their fullest support to combatting and exposing" the KKK.

Playfair's call for united support of CIO members in combatting the Klan was publicized in Birmingham daily newspapers as reports continued to pile up of floggings and cross-burnings by hooded and robed mobs that apparently moved at will in Jefferson County and nearby areas. Birmingham is located in Jefferson County.

Gen. Gorgas Post of the American Legion in Birmingham joined the public outcry against the hooded mobs after a Navy veteran was taken from his home at midnight and given 20 lashes in an isolated place by a hooded gang.

The post adopted a resolution striking at the sheriff's office for having failed to take action against the raiders.

The resolution declared, "The law enforcement officers of Jefferson County . . . have failed or refused to this date to bring to the bar of justice a single person connected with any of said numerous crimes and acts of violence, although the said crimes were committed in mass, and of frequent occurrence . . ."

When Sheriff Holt McDowell answered the charges, Legionnaires said, "We are not one bit satisfied with what the sheriff had to say."

The Young Men's Business Club of Birmingham adopted a resolution which declared, "Our established law enforcement agencies have failed miserably in the prevention of these unlawful acts."

MYSTERIOUS COPPER: Outbreak of mob violence sent the staff of the Birmingham (Ala.) Post scurrying through the files for pictures. The uniformed policeman was unnoticed when this picture was taken at a Klan initiation last November. Shape of the badge on his left chest indicates that he is not in the uniform of a Birmingham officer.

IN NEXT-DOOR Shelby County authorities were quick to act when violence reportedly flared June 13, the first day of the week-long strike ordered by John L. Lewis' Mine Workers. A mob of un-masked men allegedly intruded on the premises of a small wagon mine operated by the Cahaba Coal Mining Co. just across the Cahaba River from Jefferson County.

They demanded that business must cease, it was reported. Three persons, including the co-owner and a 15-year-old boy who was visiting the mine, were allegedly beaten by the band of un-masked men.

A special Shelby County Grand Jury was convened last week to investigate the case. The county solicitor was reported to have established the identities of most of those who allegedly participated in the raid. Seventy-one-year-old Circuit Judge W. W. Wallace charged the grand jury to "place the iron fist of the law" on the armed mob which was reported to have shut down the small coal mine.

In his charge, the judge declared, "Any group of men, organization or mob who seek to dictate when a man shall work and when he shall stop work, are violating the Declaration of Independence, the Bill of Rights and the Alabama Constitution."

He added that his court would not stand for a counter-mob "to force people to go back to work . . . a man has a right to quit his job or to strike . . ."

IN JEFFERSON County, Sheriff McDowell claimed he did not have sufficient "trained" personnel to investigate "difficult cases" like the raids of the hooded mobs in his area. The County Commission acted on his request for additional men by authorizing him to employ four deputies to patrol the county at night to put down "the reign of terror and lawlessness."

Public action first became aroused three weeks ago when hooded and robed men broke into the home of a Westwood woman and forced her to watch a cross burn in her yard. Later that night reportedly the same gang invaded a small cafe at Brookside, a mining community, and forced Negro patrons outside to watch a cross burning.

The American Legion took action when Billy Guyton Stovall, a Northside Navy veteran, was snatched from his home and children, taken to an isolated spot and whipped.

Birmingham newspaper men have uncovered at least nine other victims of hooded mobs. All were white persons, most of them living in small mining communities in next-door Walker County.

A reporter for the Birmingham Post was knocked down last week while conducting an investigation of night riders at Sumiton.

PLAYFAIR'S letter on night-riding raids by hooded mobs was addressed to all affiliates of the Alabama CIO Council.

"The Ku Klux Klan is rearing its ugly head again in Alabama. Recent night-riding raids in Birmingham and nearby communities and KKK parades and outrages in other Alabama cities and towns are increasing evidence that the Klan is being revived in full strength," the State Council president, a field representative for the United Steelworkers of America, said.

"The Ku Klux Klan follows the same pattern as did the Nazis and as do the Communists.

"Hitler's Gestapo, Stalin's secret police, the hooded hoodlums of the bedsheet—it is difficult to tell which is the most reprehensible.

"When you read in the newspapers about people being dragged from their homes at midnight, taken to isolated places and whipped, it is difficult to believe that you are reading about happenings in Alabama.

"It sounds more like the fate suffered by the Jews in Nazi Germany or the political enemies of the Communist state in Soviet Russia.

"It is doubtful if any event today pleases the Communists more than the despicable outrages that have been taking place here and elsewhere in the South. The Ku Klux Klan gives aid and comfort to all enemies of democracy.

"I urge all affiliated unions of the Alabama CIO Council and their members to give their fullest support to combatting and exposing this ugly menace that has reared its head again under the bedsheet covering of the KKK."

At the state capital in Montgomery, a bill outlawing the wearing of masks in public had passed the State Senate and was before the House for action. Two lobbyists appeared for the Ku Klux Klan to oppose the bill.

One identified himself as William Hugh Morris of Birmingham, who said he was "state Klan director" and the other identified himself as the Rev. Alvin Horn, Baptist minister of Talladega County, who said he belonged to the Klan board of directors.

Horn was quoted in daily newspapers as saying, "We don't want a return of carpetbagger rule or nigger rule."

Both Horn and Morris claimed the Klan had no connection with the "recent disorders" in the Birmingham area. They declared, "We will be willing to disband our organization if it can be proved we have violated the law."

Los Angeles CIO Votes For Return Of Building

By HENRY SANTIESTEVAN

THE CASE of the "lifted" Los Angeles CIO building broke into action again as the Greater Los Angeles CIO Council overwhelmingly approved a National CIO executive board resolution directing return of the structure to the Council and a highly-vocal minority shouted defiance.

Submission of the resolution, which asked that "title to the property housing the Greater Los Angeles CIO Council and rightfully owned by the Council be forthwith reconveyed to the . . . Council," was met with violent opposition from spokesmen closely identified with the defunct pro-commie Council.

Leading the struggle to keep control of the building in the hands of a few unions—instead of all CIO locals in Los Angeles—were Al Caplan, organizer and officer in ILWU Local 26; Bill Lawrence, ILWU regional director, and Jim Daugherty, organizer with the Furniture Workers.

The building was "transferred" by the "building corporation" which manipulated the by-laws during the period when the great majority of CIO locals had disaffiliated from the Council to place the structure under the "ownership" of only those locals "affiliated at the time." Since those locals were the ones under pro-commie domination, with only one or two exceptions, control of the building actually was placed in the grasp of the party line clique.

"CIO is attempting to get this building for CIO," shouted Daugherty in opposing the resolution. "You can pass your resolutions here until you're blue in the face—the board of directors is going to handle this."

DAUGHERTY'S defiance of the resolution asking return of the building to all of the CIO locals was echoed by Caplan, who told the Council delegates—representing some 85,000 rank-and-filers—that they could do nothing about it.

Similar statements were made by Lawrence, who maintained the manipulation of the by-laws was intended to "safeguard" the investment of the ILWU in the building.

Arguments by the minority group accused by pro-CIOers of "stealing" the building — that they were holding on to it "for the rank-and-file"—were blasted by speakers who pointed out that the overwhelming majority, represented by Council delegates, had twice demanded return of the building.

COUNCIL LEADERS made it clear they will press their fight to have the building returned to the entire CIO. A suit filed last April by pro-CIOers to stop the pro-Commie clique from selling or otherwise disposing of the building will be taken into court, promised Albert T. (Blackie) Lunceford, Council secretary-treasurer. The suit has been frequently postponed in order to allow the anti-CIO faction a chance to honor the CIO Constitution and Rules without being forced into court action.

Meanwhile, the anti-CIO clique was attempting to use their "paper" control of the building as a financial club over the Council. A bill for $1,895 rent, dating back to February, 1948, has been submitted to the Council by the "building corporation," for offices now being used by the Greater Los Angeles CIO Council. The post-dating of the bill indicates no rent had been paid by the defunct pro-commie Council for more than a year.

New York Papers Say Wagner May Retire

SEN. ROBERT A. Wagner of New York—father of a dozen New Deal laws—may retire from the Senate early next month, according to reports printed last week in New York papers.

Sen. Wagner

The Senator has been seriously ill for the past two years, and has been unable to attend sessions of Congress since 1947.

Robert Wagner, Jr., housing commissioner of New York, said he did not know the source of the news reports.

"If and when the Senator does resign, the report will come from the Senator himself," his son declared.

"The only date I know that has been discussed is July 8. If an official resigns before that date, his successor can be chosen in the regular November election. If he resigns after that, the successor cannot."

With the New York governorship held by Republican Tom Dewey, it was not believed that either Wagner or Empire State Democrats would wish to create a situation in which the Republicans could name Wagner's successor.

Wagner, born 73 years ago in Germany, came to America as a boy. He was a justice of the New York supreme court when he ran for the Senate in 1926, and was elected in that year. He was re-elected in 1932, 1938 and 1944.

A fighting New Dealer, Wagner sponsored the Natl. Labor Relations Act, housing legislation, banking reforms and a wide variety of New Deal legislation during the Roosevelt era.

TWU Asks Safety Measures In Subsidies For Airlines

THE CIO Transport Workers have called on Congress to include mandatory safety measures in any subsidies for airlines.

The TWU, which represents the largest number of employes in the air transport industry, was represented before the Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee by Hugh States, legislative representative.

States criticized the present subsidies paid to air lines as "actually a subterfuge to make up losses."

He hit this method as "slipshod and incorrect since it actually subsidizes in some cases inefficient management and in other cases penalizes efficient management."

He also criticized payment of subsidies "for losses incured as a result of a strike on their property." He particularly referred to the case of TWA, where there was a strike of several weeks and the Government made it up.

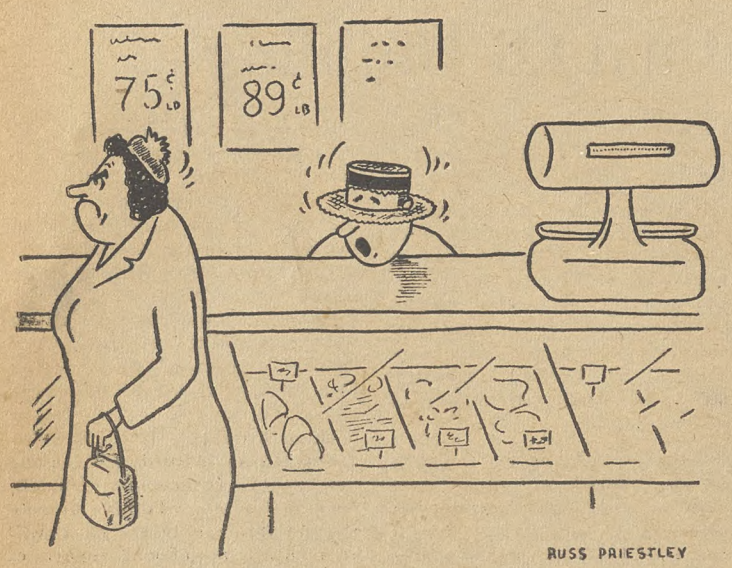
As to safety measures, States hit at the "dumping of navigators' duties on the already overburdened pilots."

Ewing: 2,000,000 Kids Cheated Of Education

In almost every community in the nation today, "many children are attending school in classrooms that are over-crowded, in basement or other rooms that are not at all suited to the purpose, in rooms so poorly lighted as to injure their eyesight, in rented quarters over stores and other places equally unsatisfactory, in half-day sessions or under other undesirable conditions."

This was the picture painted by Federal Security Administrator Oscar Ewing when he presented the case for a school construction bill to the Senate Labor Subcommittee. He said that "well over two million" children are being denied an education because of lack of school facilities, and that to build the needed classrooms would cost from eight to 10 billion dollars.

He asked Congress to lay down a policy that the federal government provide funds and advice to the states for a long-range school building program, as well as grants of $5,000,000 to aid the states to survey their needs and draw up long-range plans.



"——But Madam, I assure you the price of our meat is entirely beyond my jurisdiction."

ELECTED

Annie Belle Swaney, president of Local 365, CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers, Atlanta, Ga., was elected a member of the Natl. Industrial Council at the recent YWCA convention at San Francisco. The council is the YWCA's legislative arm.

Cotton, Rayon Slump Blamed On Industry

THE CIO Textile Workers Union is advising cotton and rayon workers in northern states not to seek wage raises when their contracts reopen in September.

A TWUA policy committee representing nearly 120,000 workers in the two branches of the industry announced that it made the decision "with great reluctance." Under terms of its present agreements, the TWUA said, wage questions would be submitted to arbitration and, because of conditions in the industry, an arbitrator would decide against them.

"The slump in textiles is due directly to management's short-sighted price and profit policy after the destruction of price control," the committee said.

"Textile workers have been twice victimized by this policy. We were forced to pay high prices without receiving a fair share of the resulting profits; and now that excessive layoffs have smothered consumer demand, we are suffering from widespread layoffs and short-time week.

New Rug Contract Has Pay Reopening

A three-month breather, to see which way business conditions go, was given the carpet industry by CIO Textile Workers Union.

More than 25,000 TWUA local members ratified a contract renewal with major rug companies, running through June 4, 1950. The contract, however, may be reopened by the union any time after Sept. 1 on the questions of both wages and pensions.

TWUA's carpet director Jack Rubenstein said that the union will be free to strike at that time, with the alternative of sending the wage question to arbitration.

House Unit Approves Anti-Polltax Bill

THE anti-polltax bill last week completed its long, slow journey through the House Committee on Administration, but the bill is still a long way from becoming law.

The Committee endorsed a bill sponsored by its chairman, Rep. Mary Norton (D., N. J.). The vote was 11-7.

In doing so, the Committee over-rode a sub-committee's suggestion that action be withheld until the House Judiciary Committee had made up its mind on advisability of a constitutional amendment dealing with polltaxes.

Foes of the polltax system—which limits voting in seven southern states—have argued for years that a constitutional amendment would be no cure, since it seems unlikely that it could be approved by 36 state legislatures.

Voting for the Norton bill in committee were Reps. Deane (D., N. C.), Garmatz (D., Md.), Albert (D., Okla.), Jones (D., Mo.), Hays (D., O.), Cavalcante (D., Pa.), Christopher (D., Mo.), LeCompte (R., Ia.), Bishop (R., Ill., Marcantonio (ALP, N. Y.), and Woodhouse (D., Conn.). Voting against the bill were Stanley (D., Va.), Harrison (D., Va.), Burleson (D., Tex.), Regan (D., Tex.), Trimble (D., Ark.), Wheeler (D., Ga.), and James (R., Pa.).

The bill would outlaw collection of polltaxes in seven southern states as a requirement for voting in federal primaries and elections. The taxes average about $2 a year, and in many states are retroactive—so that many would-be voters would have to pay out sums ranging up to $40 in order to cast their ballots.

Similar bills have been passed by the House in years past, but have always been held up in the Senate, either by filibuster or the threat of filibuster.

Failure of a sweeping reform in Senate rules early this session endangered the entire civil rights program. The changes, which would have made possible limitation of debate among the Senators, were defeated by a coalition of Republicans and Dixiecrats.

ONE CIVIL rights measure—the anti-lynching bill—almost slipped through the Senate by unanimous consent last week.

The unanimous consent calendar is used for passing routine or minor bills. Bills on the calendar are called out, and if no objections are heard, the bill is declared to be passed.

The anti-lynch bill—already approved by a Senate Committee—came up on the unanimous consent list. For a moment there was no objection. Then Sen. Holland (D., Fla.) realized what was happening and leaped to his feet with an objection.

Thus the bill must wait until such time—if ever, this session—as it is called up for full debate.

WHILE IT seems unlikely that any of the three major civil rights measures—anti-lynch, anti-polltax and FEPC—will be passed this session, some New Deal Senators are understood to be searching for means to carry out at least some of the recommendations of the President's Committee on Civil Rights.

The New York Herald Tribune reported that Sen. McGrath (D., R. I.), chairman of the Democratic Natl. Committee, is seeking agreement on creation of a permanent Civil Rights Commission and of a joint Congressional Committee on Civil Rights. Both proposals, which would provide for "study" groups, may have a chance of passage without too much filibustering from the Dixiecrat bloc.

The Commission, which would have no hearing or subpoena powers, would function with a paid staff and would be required to make an annual report to the President. The Congressional Committee would be a 14-man group, under the bill's present provisions.

IN THE midst of these developments, the House Un-American Activities Committee found it had an angry bear by the tail in its request that a large number of colleges furnish copies of textbooks for examination by the Committee for possible "subversive" doctrines.

With college officials reacting vigorously against the request, members of both the Republican and Democratic blocs on the Committee started quickly to disavow the planned study. Some Committee members charged it had been the work of an "overzealous" staff member.

Rep. Hollifield (D., Calif.) suggested on the House floor that the committee stop "sticking its nose in places it doesn't belong."

ADA Names C. LaFollette To High Post

CHARLES L. LaFollette, liberal former Republican Congressman from Indiana and more recently military governor of Wuertemberg-Baden, has been named natl. director of the Americans for Democratic Action.

In this new position—to which LaFollette was named by unanimous action of the ADA national board—he will be in immediate charge of national political action, field organization, cooperative efforts with labor, farm and other liberal groups.

Sen. Humphrey (D., Minn.), ADA chairman, said:

"As a liberal Congressman, LaFollette was a New Deal supporter, and as military governor in Germany, he consistently sought to stimulate the growth of democracy in that country."

Mass. Labor Group Contests Rent Boost

A brief has been filed in a Federal court at Washington, D. C., by the United Labor Committee of Massachusetts, which is contesting a ruling by which rent increases were approved for eastern Massachusetts tenants under the rent control law.

The committee, composed of the AFL and CIO, rail brotherhoods, machinists and Americans for Democratic Action, in its brief charged that the legislative history of the law shows that Congress intended to specifically forbid rent increases granted solely on the basis of tax increases.

Tenn. CIO Bars Reds as Convention Delegates

THE TENNESSEE CIO convention has altered its constitution to prohibit members of the Communist Party, the Ku Klux Klan, the IWW and the Bund and their fellow-travelers from being delegates.

Only delegates voting against this resolution were from the Food and Tobacco Workers, the Furniture Workers local at Chattanooga and the Natl. Maritime Union.

These delegates, who represented less than 8% of the convention vote, also opposed a resolution supporting the Natl. CIO executive board in its recent action requiring that board members must live up to the constitution or quit. The resolution was passed after a two-hour debate.

Candidates for top officers were unopposed. Earl Crowder and Matt Lynch were re-elected president and secretary-treasurer respectively. B. R. Allen was elected first vice president, succeeding W. A. Copeland, who declined renomination.

Delegates heard Rep. Helen Gahaghan Douglas (D., Cal.), Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers, and PAC Dir. Jack Kroll.

Kroll called upon Tennessee CIO members to do a better PAC job in 1950. "You folks did a splendid job in 1948—one of the outstanding jobs in the nation," Director Kroll said, "but we still have reactionary Congressmen from Tennessee. That must be corrected in 1950, and we are looking to you to make that correction."

Rieve commended the Marshall plan as a means of preventing spread of communism in Europe, but warned that while we are stopping communism abroad, we may be neglecting the situation at home.

"With three and a half million unemployed in this country, and those jobless ranks increasing, we may need a Marshall Plan for America to prevent Communism at home."

Rep. Douglas, pointing out that she has been a life-long opponent of communism, suggested that Americans would do well "to talk more about democracy and less about communism."

"We are playing into the hands of communists by continually giving them the major portion of the front page news in our newspapers," she said.

Maine CIO Urges Assembly to Act on Joblessness

THE MAINE CIO Council convention has asked Gov. Frederick C. Payne to call a special session of the legislature to act on unemployment and other problems. The convention was held at Old Orchard Beach.

The resolution said that a special session was needed to act on public works, extension of unemployment compensation, supplemental funds for municipal relief for the unemployed, funds for teachers' salaries and school construction, and an income tax to finance these proposals.

In a sharply worded resolution, the convention scolded the Maine legislature for its failure to provide additional revenue for improvements in education and welfare.

Another resolution called for establishment of a public power authority in Maine to produce and distribute eleltricity in areas where power is inadequate or too costly.

The council backed its plans to intensify its activities during the next session of the legislature by adopting a constitutional amendment increasing the per capita payments.

After the convention indorsed the PAC dollar drive, an overwhelming majority of the delegates, led by the chairman of the resolutions committee, marched to the speakers' rostrum to make PAC contributions.

Rep. Charles Nelson (R. Me.) told the convention he would vote for the T-H repealer if it contains provisions for dealing with national emergency strikes. He also voiced support for a 75-cent minimum wage law.

George Baldanzi, executive vice president of the Textile Workers, said that labor unions will answer any management attempts to decrease wages "with strike action if such is found necessary."

The council urged Congress to enact the Truman Administration's Fair Deal program.

George Jabor, Denis Blais and Michale Schoonjans were re-elected as president, secretary-treasurer and first vice-president.

AS MAINE GOES SO GOES THE NATION—that old slogan may be true in politics, but not in political action. Here are delegates to the Maine CIO Council convention responding to the call for dollars for PAC. The delegates made their contributions after passing a resolution urging the CIO members throughout the state to give PAC a buck.

"Independent" Driver Wins Compensation

The New York Workmen's Compensation Board has held that an "independent laundry driver" is an employe entitled to compensation for injuries received while on duty.

The referee's award was made public by the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers. Independent Laundry Drivers Local 324, New York City, to which the driver belonged, is affiliated with ACW.

Abraham Greenberg, referee, awarded Irving Shaimberg, a member of Local 324, $28 per week for the period from April 14, 1948, to June 4, 1948. He fractured his right hip as a result of a fall from his laundry wagon when a wheel came off.

The claim had been opposed by the Star Bright Laundry, N. Y. City, on the ground that Schaimberg was an "independent contractor" and not a real employe, within the meaning of the word. The laundry had a contract with Local 324.

Potofsky: Labor's In Key Spot In Israel

ORGANIZED labor is a major factor in every phase of life in the new state of Israel, and its leadership is recognized by all groups in the population.

Jacob Potofsky

That was the report brought back to Washington last week by Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers, who has spent two months conferring with union leaders in Europe and Israel.

Potofsky and Pres. Joseph Curran of the CIO Maritime Union constituted a CIO committee to develop friendly relations with Histadrut, the Israeli Federation of Labor.

Accompanying them on the trip was Maxwell Brandwein of ACW.

"They really laid out the carpet for the CIO delegation," Potofsky said in Washington last week. "It's amazing how closely they follow news of the American labor movement. They like us and respect us, and they deserve our affection and fraternal feelings."

Histadrut is a labor organization that has branched out into a dozen types of "social pioneering," Potofsky reported.

It acts as a traditional labor organization, signing collective bargaining agreements and fighting grievances—but its interests go far beyond that.

"HISTADRUT controls a very large percentage of the Israeli economy," Potofsky said. "It has formed cooperatives which function in all sorts of enterprises. For instance, every bus and streetcar line in Israel is owned and operated by a Histadrut co-op. Many cooperative farms were created and are administered by the trade union. Histadrut cooperatives are building homes and warehouses; they run 300 clinics and 12 hospitals throughout the country. And they're doing a wonderful job."

Histadrut aso ties in closely with Mapai, the labor party which is the largest and most powerful on the Israeli political scene. How close are the ties?

"About as close as CIO and PAC," Potofsky suggested. "Sometimes it's a little difficult for the outside observer to see where Histadrut, the labor union, stops, and Mapai, the political party, begins."

Most members of the Histadrut executive board are members of Mapai, a party whose policies of moderate socialism are something along the lines of the British Labor Party. Two members of the Histadrut board are leaders of Mapa'm, a non-Communist group to the left of Mapai. Mapai received about 38% of the votes in Israeli's first election, Mapa'm about 14%.

Potofsky, who met with leaders of both Mapai and Mapa'm, won a pledge from the left group that it would take no action to split Histadrut along political lines.

IN CONFERENCE with leaders of the government—all of them from Mapai and many of them former officials of the labor organization, the CIO representative was given a frank, clear outline of Israel's many economic and social problems.

Israeli leaders, he said, are anxious to receive into the country as many Jews—particularly from eastern Europe—as wish to immigrate. There are hundreds of thousands of Jews—in Roumania, Bulgaria, and Hungary, in particular—who want to go to Israel.

Many Israeli policies, Potofsky observed, are shaped with the goal of making possible continued immigration from these countries. On the other hand, American democratic ideals are strongly admired, and financial assistance from this country is an absolute necessity if Israel's growth is to continue.

"Capital is a prime need, and leaders of almost every phase of Israeli life are willing to make adjustments in order to encourage economic help from the rest of the world," he said.

"That may even require an 'austerity' program in Israel, where inflation has been severe. But they realize the need for price-wages-profit stabilization, in order to build their democracy, to build their economic system, and to make Israel a safe haven for oppressed Jews from many lands.

"Israel is a citadel of democracy in the middle east. Its people, its government and its labor organizations need our help—and I think the American people will continue to be as generous and friendly as they have in the past."

Potofsky was in Washington for conversations with Pres. Truman and other government officials. He and Curran, who was able to stay in Israel only six days, will soon draft an official report of their findings for submission to Pres. Murray and the CIO Executive Board.

Haywood: How CWA, TWOC, CIO Did It

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

TEN DAYS after the historical CWA-CIO convention, Allan S. Haywood found a few minutes to sit back and relax, reminiscing happily over that convention and the events lead-up to it.

Still ringing in the ears of the CIO's vice president and director of organization were the words of CIO Pres. Philip Murray, spoken to the convention.

"Our deepest thanks must be given to Director Haywood and his staff for their miraculous work in accomplishing the merging under the banner of CIO of these two great organizations of telephone workers, the Communications Workers of America, CIO, and the Telephone Workers Organizing Committee."

"Our boys did do a miraculous job, but Murray and I also know well how hard and long and untiringly our boys worked on this job," Haywood recalled. "And the rank and file did a beautiful job, too, buddy."

He hastened to add: "And don't forget that after the CWA voted to indorse affiliation in a referendum of its workers, Joe Beirne and his staff—boys and girls, both—pitched in there with all their might."

Haywood harked back to the CWA convention, held in Chicago, June 13-17, to single out two major actions of the delegates. They were:

1. The elimination of the "group system." That means, Haywood declared, that "CWA is well on its way to meet such a giant organization as A. T. & T." The two-level system is planned as the next step, he said.

In CWA parlance, "two-level" system means a group of locals united under one international. Under the old, or "three- (or more) level" system, groups and regions stood in between. The CWA convention ordered a meeting of division presidents to be held no later than Dec. 1 to consult and advise with a special constitutional committee drafting a two-level structure.

At the request of CWA Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, CIO Vice Pres. and Organizational Director Allan S. Haywood has appointed Richard Leonard as CIO liaison man with CWA.

Leonard, CIO director in Arizona, is a former vice president of the CIO Auto Workers.

HAYWOOD LEANED back in his chair and chuckled: "They said it wasn't time yet, they said it couldn't be done."

Couldn't be done? Two conventions — TWOC and CWA — were held in one city. TWOC opened Saturday and by mid-evening had approved overwhelmingly the merger.

"Two days later, at 9:37 P. M., Central Daylight time, CWA unanimously completed this historic event. And they said it couldn't be done!

"By 'they' I mean the wise guys, the know-it-alls. Yes, we had them when we tried to organize steel—and now the CIO Steelworkers have more than 1,000,000 members. Yes, we had them when we tried to organize auto—and now the CIO Auto Workers have more than 1,000,000 members. The same 'it can't be done' was said about other unions. Look at them now.

"They even said 'it can't be done' when CIO started!"

"I never said it can't be done. I knew it could. But I knew it was a hard campaign, long, and one that needed tirelessness and utmost energy.

"We have had five years of contact and association, five years of committees seeking information on affiliation, five years of ground work well planned.

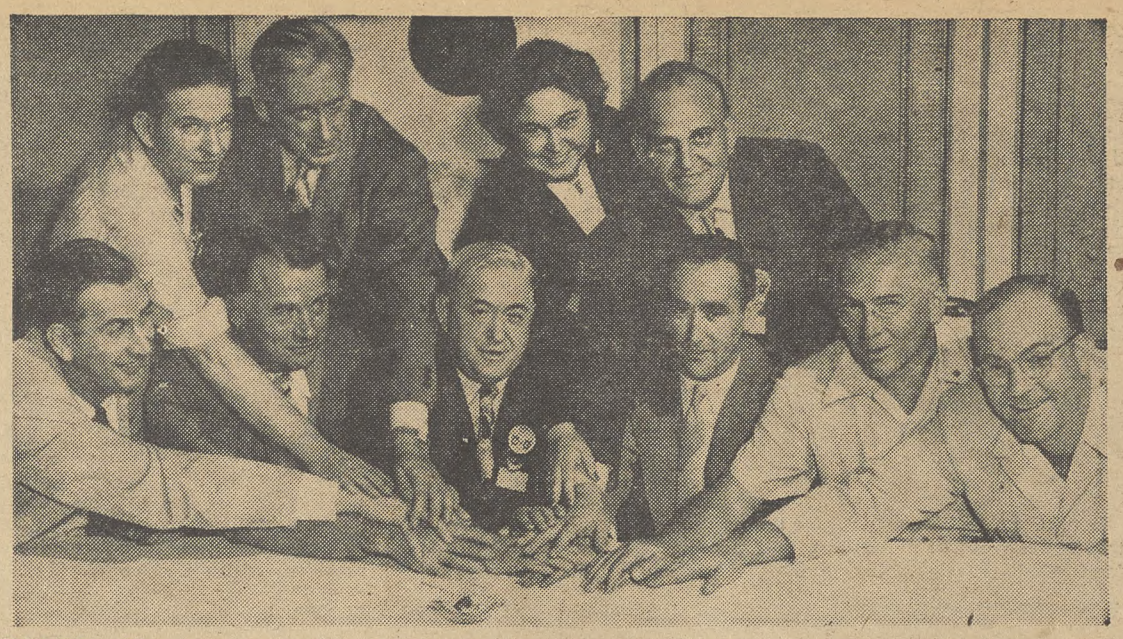
"Back in June, 1948, the Spokane CWA convention amended its constitution to permit affiliation to be authorized by a majority of those voting (and not by a majority of all eligibles, as under previous rules.)

"Then, they named a committee to investigate affiliation and mandated the executive board to report the committee's findings to the membership with the board's recommendation. That was a major step.

"Conferences were held with the CIO and with the AFL. The CIO looked good to them, as we knew it would. Upon receiving the committee's report, the CWA executive board voted, 8 to 5, to recommend the members to vote to become CWA-CIO.

"A wonderful spirit of unity, a unionism strong, followed that 8-5 board vote. The five who voted 'no' stood up like real trade unionists and accepted the majority verdict. They declared they would work to effectuate the majority decision. And they did.

"As was expected, the membership of CWA voted everwhelmingly for CIO."



BOARD: The new executive board of the Communications Workers of America, CIO, pledges its solidarity to the CIO through Vice Pres. and Dir. of Organization Allan S. Haywood. Left to right (means reelected), seated: Carlton Werkau (), secretary-treasurer; John L. Crull (), vice president; Haywood, Joseph A. Beirne (), president; John J. Moran, vice president; A. T. Jones, vice president (Jones had been on the previous board as Southern Regional Director). Standing, left to right: Joseph M. Deardorff (), western director; Ray Dryer (), central director; Mrs. Mary H. Hanscom (*), eastern director; Ray Hackney, southern director. They will work as a team.

THAT WAS FAR from the last step, though they came thick and fast after that, Haywood said.

"TWOC had already, after the CIO convention in Portland last Fall, set up a committee to meet jointly with a group from CWA, when that group was appointed, in order to draw up a merger basis. CWA then named a committee.

"Pres. Beirne and I were on call at any time to counsel the joint committee. But, diligent work and tact won the day and a plan was agreed to.

"So, we all went to Chicago. We met not far from labor's most hallowed scenes—the Haymarket massacre, the Chicago massacre, the bloody fights of the Illinois coal miners, the heroic leadership of Mother Jones, etc.

"The TWOC board met and approved the merger. The TWOC convention did its part. Pres. Murray addressed the TWOC banquet and lauded the delegates and all those who had aided in this splendid move. All these events were held at the Stevens Hotel."

THE NEXT DAY, the scene shifted a block and a half north of Michigan avenue to the Congress hotel and it was CWA's turn.

"A stirring ovation was given to Pres. Murray when he entered the hall that afternoon," Haywood recalled. "And, about seven hours later we had a united union.

"Never before have I been received with such warmth as I was by these wonderful phone workers. There was a lump in my throat as I addressed them, so happy was I at the culmination of this mighty merger.

"I assured them that they were an integral part of CIO and that CIO fights for its own. The A. T. & T. is no exception, I assured them, and CIO is not going to hesitate to let A. T. & T. know that.

"The CIO and its affiliates have already pledged more than $350,000 for this fight. Together we'll win!"

THAT CONVENTION was just about the prettiest the CIO has ever held, Haywood said. "Hundreds of beautiful girls . . . Some elderly, lovely ladies who have come through the struggles . . . Young and middle-aged from New England, most with beautiful Irish brogues. These had known the ineffectiveness of affiliation with AFL under IBEW and are now paying dues voluntarily to CIO. . .

"Girls from the mountains of West Virginia, from Texas, Maryland, pretty twins from Mississippi, girls from every state of the South, North, Southwest and West —all united with CIO . . .

"There were a lot of men there, too, installers and repeatermen and linemen and a lot of others —all good trade unionists."

HAYWOOD WAS particularly happy over the cooperation of officers of both groups.

"This was one of the biggest days in CIO since its founding period," Haywood declared. "Here emerged a unified organization representing more than 300,000 members destined to be one of CIO's most powerful unions—and CIO has the most powerful unions in the nation."

For legal reasons, to protect its bargaining rights against A. T. & T.'s vicious and sinful abrogation of its solemn contractual obligations to CWA, the convention retained the name, Communications Workers of America.

HAYWOOD, WELL versed in labor lore, warns that the "task is now before us. Our word is given that we will accomplish this program.

"1. To compel the Bell company to respect its contractual obligations and re-recognize CWA-CIO as the bona fide collective bargaining agency;

"2. To build a stronger union where we are still recognized and where we have bargaining rights;

"3. To start drives among the independent unions and among unorganized phone workers.

"4. To bring all these present members and future members into full association with CIO, its activities and democratically-arrived-at policies."

HAYWOOD'S LITTLE period of relaxation was over. But not before he said:

"I'm proud and I'm happy to welcome these phone workers, united under CWA, into the family of CIO.

"I'll work with them to bring the rest of the phone workers in America and Canada into the fold. I assure them that within CWA-CIO, all telephone workers will gain more security and a better way of life, and will achieve real security, happiness and freedom for all.

"It was good talking to you, buddy."

The joint committee which drew up the plan for merger of CWA and TWOC consisted of:

CWA-CIO—Ray Hackney, chairman; Mae Mann, W. M. Gruwell, George Walton, John S. Klopp.

TWOC-CIO—Robert T. Creasy, chairman; Norma Naughton, Margaret Weiss, R. W. Long, James Massey.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Good news comes this week from Sam B. Eubanks, executive vice president of the CIO Newspaper Guild. In a nationwide NLRB election, the Guild has won collective bargaining rights for all Associated Press employes. The vote was ANG 1166; no union 212. The vote, which was conducted in many cities, brought out 91% of the eligibles. The ballot boxes were sealed in each city and mailed to New York for counting.

The AP, the world's largest newsgathering organization, holds a position in the newspaper industry compared to U. S. Steel, Ford and A. T. & T. My heartiest congratulations to the officers of ANG, to its staff members who worked so strenuously, and, most of all to the hard-working AP rank and file committee which did so much to win this major victory.

ANG formerly had collective bargaining rights only in some of AP's bureaus. Now, all employes will have the benefits of unionism.

George Brown, Director of Organization, CIO Woodworkers, announces that in an election held at the Updegrave Trucking Co., Glide, Oregon, eight workers voted for IWA-CIO and 6 for the AFL Teamsters. In an election held at the Mt. Shasta Pine Manufacturing Co., Mt. Shasta, Calif., the workers voted 65 to 64 in favor of the IWA-CIO.

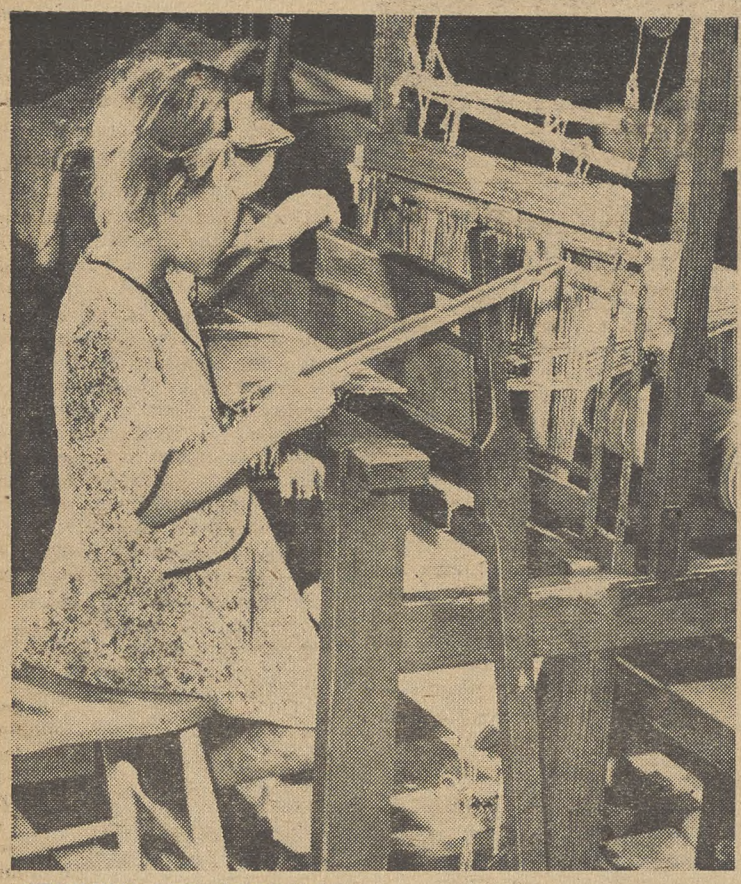
Pres. James H. Durkin of the CIO Office and Professional Workers, announces that in the John Hancock agreement negotiated June 15, the workers won a $5.00 weekly increase, union shop and check-off, plus $2.00 in retirement and disability improvements; arbitration of all discharges, improved grievance machinery, strengthened seniority rights. This agreement covers 5900 John Hanock Insurance Co. agents.

The enemies of organized labor are doing all in their power to stop repeal of the infamous Taft-Hartley Act.

A. T. & T. and the Bell System continue to resist the right of telephone workers to affiliate with CWA-CIO. There are now some thirty contracts before the NLRB. We have every right to expect an early decision on these cases.

They know full well that the telephone workers are the same people, and the recent affiliation with CIO does not mean that CIO will administer the contracts. The union's dealings with the employer of its members are its own.

Indiana CIO Council Raising $400,000 To Help Finance Research On Children's Diseases



NTEREST AND EXERCISE are provided for patients at the James Whitcomb Riley Hospital for Children, for which the Indiana CIO is raising $400,000 to help pay for research on children's diseases. This little girl gets treatment for her legs, contracted by severe burn scars, while she weaves on the loom.

The council has announced a state-wide movement to raise a $400,000 fund for research into diseases of children.

It will be known as the Indiana CIO-Philip Murray Foundation and will help support a vast program of scientific investigation being carried out in Indianapolis at the James Witcomb Riley Hospital for Children, one of the largest hospitals in North America devoted exclusively to children.

A statement from the CIO Council to all affiliated councils declared:

"Since its beginning, CIO has worked valiantly for the protection of the economic conditions of everyone. The principles of CIO represent the betterment of living conditions for all mankind . . . economically and physically, and we pledged ourselves to fulfill the things in which we so sincerely believe.

"We can well be proud of our economic strides. Now an opportunity presents itself for CIO to engage in a philanthropic task that will bring joy to thousands of children and their parents, and permit us at the same time to gain the respect and admiration of the citizens of Indiana."

ANNOUNCEMENT of the foundation drew page-one notices in Indiana newspapers, and from the president of the James Whitcomb Riley Memorial Association a declaration that "this gift gives great impetus to our research program . . . union members will never regret their participation."

When the Riley Memorial Association revealed plans to set up a $1,000,000 fund for research into children's diseases, the Indiana CIO announced its intention to throw the strength of its 200,000 members behind the movement.

"Riley Hospital has demonstrated its ability to care for our children in the way they should be cared for," an Indiana CIO statement said.

"Now we can give to Riley Hospital the means to go far beyond the boundaries of today and enable its doctors and its staff to delve into those medical mysteries which remain to be solved for the benefit of mankind.

"We have the means, through numbers, to build an everlasting result and our membership can be depended on to do its share in a great cooperative effort between government agencies and the people.

"It is the democratic way."

The day after the announcement, editorials in leading Indiana newspapers agreed.

MEMBERS OF the council making the announcement are: Neal W. Edwards, president; Claude Becktell, secretary-treasurer; Loren J. Houser, CIO regional director; Clyde Lusher, CIO representative, and Tom Fuson, president of the Indianapolis Industrial Union Council.

"Reaching our goal towards this foundation," the state council explained, "will cover a four-year period. Each member of CIO will be asked to contribute 50 cents per year during that period of four years, the total contribution amounting to $2.

"The money contributed will go into a fund to help staff and equip a fine new research building at Riley Hospital. The CIO-Philip Murray fund will be invested and kept separately from other research funds.

"It will be spent only on approval of a permanent committee of our own state and regional directors."

All councils in the state were urged to call special meetings of all officers, executive board members, stewards and committeemen of locals to lay plans for the CIO Foundation.

RESEARCH projects already under way at the hospital are studies of surgery of the heart and large blood vessels, nerve transplantation by which paralyzed limbs might some day be made useful again, glandular functions controlling body growth and development. Research is being conducted into the virus diseases, including rheumatic fever and polio, cancer, "bone banks" similar to present-day blood banks, diseases of the blood-forming organs, surgical possibilities in cerebral palsy and the broad field of bacteriology.

The studies are being conducted by scientists of the Indiana University School of Medicine, which staffs the hospital.

Riley Hospital was opened 25 years ago through the generosity of more than 40,000 Indiana citizens whose gifts memorialized the poet, James Whitcomb Riley.

A native Hoosier, the late Riley authored such classic poems of childhood as "Little Orphan Annie," "The Raggedy Man," "The Happy Little Cripple," "When the Frost is on the Punkin," and "The Old Swimmin' Hole."

It was sentiments in poems such as those that inspired the people of Indiana to provide a hospital where all children of the state might have the best of medical care.

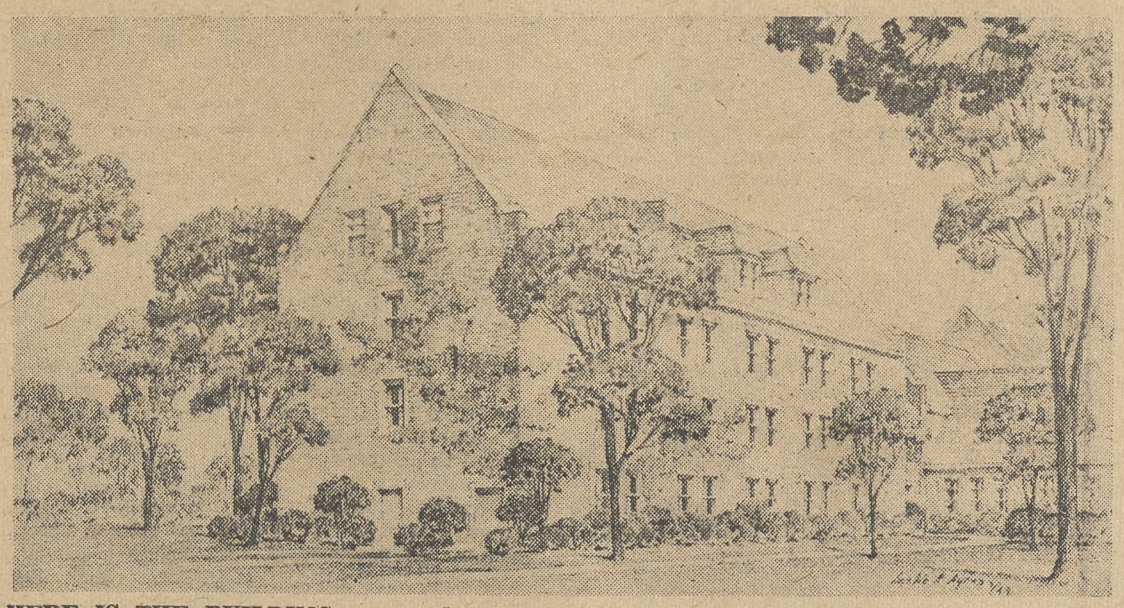
WITH A PRESENT capacity of 275 beds, Riley Hospital, including its various clinics, has treated nearly a half-million children in its quarter-century of service.

Children whose parents cannot afford to pay for hospitalization are given top priority in admittance. When those children are taken care of, children whose parents can pay part or all of the costs are admitted.

Thus, the Riley Memorial Association, administrator of gifts to the hospital, came to providing hospital services to all Indiana children who might not otherwise have them.

The question arose then of those children stricken with diseases about which medical science still knows but comparatively little. The obvious answer, the Riley Association felt, was to underwrite a full-fledged program of research.

The State of Indiana appropriated $400,000 to build a new research wing at Riley Hospital, which is run as a part of the Indiana University Medical Center to insure its permanent operation.



HERE IS THE BUILDING now under construction at the Riley Hospital for the diseases of youth. Money raised by the Indiana CIO will help finance the research work which will be conducted with the latest devices for aiding leading medical scientists. The labor contribution will be known as the Indiana CIO-Philip Murray Fund.

Murray Urges 'Action Now' To Halt Job Drops

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

THE TIME has come for "immediate action" to "stem the tide of growing unemployment," Pres. Philip Murray has advised all CIO affiliates.

Launching a vigorous attack on industry claims that the present "readjustment" is a benefit to the economy, Murray said:

"Workers cannot be put on the shelf while business goes through its so-called 'healthy' readjustment."

Murray asked all CIO national unions and city and state industrial union councils to "contact their Congressmen and Senators and the President of the United States, to urge action on the program which the CIO has proposed to combat the growing tide of unemployment."

"This problem of unemployment is more serious than most of our Congressmen and Senators in Washington apparently realize," Murray charged.

"As we know," he said, "hundreds of thousands of workers in many industries are working less than full time. Total unemployment, with its attendant distress, has risen 50% in a year, and the end is not in sight.

MURRAY RECALLED that in a White House visit two months ago he had urged the President to "submit a special message to Congress dealing with the problems of unemployment and the need for taking positive action to develop and maintain a full-employment and a full-production economy."

The CIO President urged passage of a seven-point legislative program:

1. To increase and extend duration of unemployment compensation benefits, and to enlarge the coverage under a coordinated federal system.
2. To increase relief payments, and to extend their coverage.
3. To provide tax relief for low income families by raising personal exemptions on the income tax and eliminating many war time taxes on commodities and services.
4. To start immediate construction of public works in areas most heavily affected by joblessness—the financing to be done through federal grants or loans to states and cities.
5. To increase minimum wages under the law to at least $1 an hour.
6. To grant loans to new and small businesses.
7. To transport workers to areas where employment is apt to be available.

"Action must be taken on these measures if we are to handle properly the growing problem of unemployment and part-time employment," Murray said.

In addition, he wrote to the CIO groups, Congress should pass amendments to the Employment Act of 1946 in order to aid the government in carrying out its mandate, under that law, to "promote maximum production, employment and purchasing power."

In the present situation, Murray declared, unemployment has risen 50% in less than a year, and hundreds of thousands of workers are on part-time jobs. The blame, he indicated, lies squarely on policy makers in American industry.

"SINCE THE WAR, the CIO has continually predicted that the pricing and profit policies of industry would eventually bring about a serious economic collapse. We have warned that industry was pricing itself out of the market. Big business was determined to make the highest possible profits without regard to the public welfare.

"High prices and exorbitant profits have forced the American people to cut their purchases because prices were too high and incomes too low. The result has been that demand has fallen off for millions, production is being cut back, work week schedules are being reduced—and all are producing eventual employment."

PRES. MURRAY'S statement came at a time of increasing worry about the country's economic situation.

- Americans for Democratic Action sponsored an informal discussion of the problem with Congressmen, White House aides, liberal economists and union officials.
- The Public Affairs Institute, a liberal research organization, predicted that unemployment will reach six million by the end of 1949—and unless the tide is turned, mid-1950 will find almost eight million workers out of jobs.

"Unemployment is serious, and growing," the Institute said. "Nothing in sight warrants any prediction that it will stop soon."

"Don't be misled by current talk of the increased employment being due to an artificially swollen labor force resulting from young people out of school for the summer and house-wives seeking vacation time employment. The figures on non-agricultural unemployment disprove that," the Institute said.

"Unemployment below the levels of the fourth quarter of 1948 has already cost the American people many billions in goods and services. Our study estimates $13 billion, at annual rates. More unemployment will cost more."

- Delegations of unemployed members of CIO Electrical Workers visited with Congressmen, the Council of Economic Advisors and other government agencies to describe pressing economic problems "back home."

The electrical industry has been bady hit by lay-offs, and the members called for "government action to redirect the flow of income more towards low and middle-income families."

MEANWHILE the Council of Economic Advisors, which advises the President on economic matters in the form of quarterly reports, will be squarely in the spotlight when it issues its mid-year findings and suggestions. The President has indicated that he is awaiting the report before formulating a full-scale program.

While the Bureau of Census unemployment figures has hovered at about 3.2 million, many union and government economists believe it is considerably lower than the actual number of people who can be classed as "unemployed." With lay-offs accelerating, it is also expected that the Census figures themselves may show a heavy increase next month.

UAW Will Open 2d FM Station

The CIO United Auto Workers this week opens its second FM radio station—WCUO in Cleveland.

The station goes on the air June 29 and will broadcast daily from 3 to 9 p.m. Another UAW station, WDET-FM, has been operating for several months in Detroit.

The Cleveland outlet is owned and operated by the non-profit UAW-CIO Broadcasting Co. of Ohio. Manager of the station is Ralph Wallace, who has had radio station experience in New England, upstate New York and Cleveland.

Station and UAW officials say that some 125,000 FM sets are in operation in the Cleveland area. The station is selling FM sets to CIO union members in Cleveland at a 20% discount.

Subscribers To Pay For Telephone Ads

The New England Telephone & Telegraph Co. has won its battle in Massachusetts for the right to advertise—at the customer's expense—the reasons it should have a rate increase.

The Massachusetts Dept. of Public Works has lifted its ban on such phone ads. The DPW on May 17 had ruled that the company, which was seeking the right to increase rates, must stop spending money from its service charges to buy newspaper space in which "the customer was told how good the company was, at the customer's expense."

An ADA spokesman, referring to a public meeting planned for next month, said: "We want to stop this emergency before it really gets started."

Mullady Appointed

Bernard B. (Barney) Mullady, director of information for the Federal Works Agency, has been named assistant to Maj. Gen. Philip B. Fleming, chairman of the Maritime Commission.

Mullady was a charter member of the CIO Newspaper Guild. In the early days of that union, he was demoted by the New York City News Bureau because of his Guild activity.

DP Bill Still In Committee

EFFORTS TO blast the improved Displaced Persons Bill out of the Senate Judiciary Committee brought forth some sharp debate last week.

The committee, headed by Sen. McCarran (D., Nev.), has been sitting for months on a proposal to remove discriminatory features from the act passed by the 80th Congress, and to increase the number of war refugees who may enter the U. S. to about 300,000. The House has already approved the measure.

Sen. Ives (R., N. Y.) criticized a "deplorable lack of action" by the Judiciary Committee, which has held no hearings on the measure. He said that only 28,500 DP's have entered the country since last year's bill was passed.

Sen. McCarran argued that the bill is "sugar coated" with "fraud and deception." But Sen. McGrath (D., R. I.) said the Democrats' campaign pledge on liberalizing the DP law is sacred, and Sen. Lucas (D., Ill.), Democratic leader in the Senate, promised action "one way or another" at this session of Congress.

Senate Unit OKs 75c Pay

THE Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee has, in effect, approved a 75-cent an hour minimum wage.

Last week, a seven-man subcommittee approved S. 653, which would amend the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938. Since there are 13 men on the full committee, the seven subcommittee members constitute a majority.

Those who voted for the amendment are:

Democrats: Claude Pepper (Fla.), chairman; Paul Douglas (Ill.), Garrett Withers (Ky.), Elbert Thomas (Utah).

Republicans: George Aiken (Vt.), Robert A. Taft (O.) and Forrest Donnell (Mo.).

The amendment would:

A. Provide for the 75-cent minimum; B. permit suability—that is, amend the existing law to permit the government to sue for back wages in behalf of an aggrieved worker; C. strengthen the existing prohibition on child labor.

In the house, the bill is buried in the Rules Committee.

A CALL FOR ACTION!

Congress of Industrial Organizations

CIO

718 Jackson Place, N. W. • Washington 6, D. C.

EXecutive 5581

Office of
THE PRESIDENT

July 1, 1949

TO ALL C.I.O. MEMBERS:

The Congress of the United States, despite the clear vote of the people last November, has refused to repeal the odious and malignant Taft-Hartley Law.

This measure, which has been proved time and again to have been conceived in malice and dedicated to the complete destruction of our free trade unions, still remains a cancerous growth on our body politic.

The victory which was forged last November by the plain people of our Nation has been snatched from them by the reactionary bi-partisan coalition in the Congress. This is the same group of cynical and shortsighted men who supported the filibuster against long-overdue civil rights legislation and who thwart and obstruct the passage of President Truman's Fair Deal Program.

To those members of Congress who voted for Taft-Hartley repeal and who consistently support decent legislation, we give our thanks and our praise. For those who arrogantly disregard the people's will we express our scorn, contempt, and unalterable opposition.

In the present situation there can be only one answer—the full exercise by the people of their democratic rights at the polls in November, 1950.

Therefore I issue this call for political action now.

I call upon each member of the CIO to register now so that he can be a qualified voter.

I call upon each member of the CIO to contribute his dollar now to our political action committees.

I call upon each member of the CIO now to intensify his support of our political action program.

Apparently the people's victory in 1948 was not decisive enough. We can and we will win in November, 1950 by that overwhelming majority that will remove the obstructionists and will insure the complete enactment of the people's program.

Fraternally yours,

Philip Murray

Administration Victory: Housing Bill Passed

THE 81ST CONGRESS will go down in history as having provided homes for low income people, even if it never does another thing.

After six years of solid failure in its efforts to get a housing program through the Lower House, the administration finally scored a smashing victory with passage of the multi-billion dollar housing program. Republican efforts to amputate principal sections of the bill were thwarted in every case.

The bill sailed through the Senate months ago, and now goes to conference, where minor differences in the two versions will be ironed out.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray voiced the jubilance of the 6 million workers he heads in a message to Pres. Truman.

"I want to congratulate you upon your effective leadership in support of the housing legislation which has now passed the Senate and the House," he said.

"Passage of the housing legislation providing 810,000 units of low-rent public housing is a practical demonstration that democracy can work in behalf of its under-privileged people."

LIBERAL observers suffered a scare briefly during consideration of amendments when the House by teller vote approved an amendment cutting the public housing section out entirely. Republican Rep. Edward H. Rees, Kansas, was the amendment's sponsor.

Later, however, when a roll call was conducted at Rep. Spence's request, the Rees proposal was defeated, 209 to 204.

The touchy question of discrimination in public housing projects entered into the House deliberations as it had in the Senate. This time, though, the anti-discrimination amendment—which has been used in an effort to kill the bill—was introduced by Vito Marcantonio, Labor Party Representative from New York.

In the Senate the amendment was sponsored by Republican foes of the bill. In both instances, however, conservative Republicans were the main supporters.

Liberal proponents of civil rights measures, including Rep. William Dawson (D. Ill) voted against the Marcantonio measure, charging that it was not intended as an honest effort to aid minorities, but instead was intended to kill the bill. The proposal was easily defeated.

The issue was later cleared up with introduction by Adam Clayton Powell (D. N. Y.) of an amendment first proposed last April by CIO Housing Committee Director Leo Goodman.

BEFORE THE House Banking Committee, Goodman at that time suggested that the amendment would "eliminate the difficulties which took place on the Senate side without, I believe, compromising any group's position."

As explained by Powell the amendment would guarantee "that when you clear a slum, the people whom you put out will have the first chance to go back when the housing development has been completed."

Thus, the amendment would avert a situation in which Negro slum dwellers are pushed out of their homes, only to have the site replaced by an all-white project.

The proposal was adopted by a 199-to-41 vote.

When, after a week-long fight, the bill came to a final vote, it won approval in almost its original form. The count was 228 to 185. Bulk of the Republicans voted against it to the bitter end.

For those Congressmen who had fought so tenaciously for the bill these past six years—Helen Gahagan Douglas, (D. Calif.); Brent Spence (D. Ky.), Banking Committee chairman; Frank Buchanan (D. Pa.) and others—it was one of their greatest moments.

British Union Parley Rejects Red Proposal

By 2096 votes to 187 the British Natl. Union of Public Employes' annual convention rejected a Communist-sponsored motion calling the United States a "warmonger" and endorsing Russia's foreign activities. Speakers against the motion called attention to Russia's aggression in eastern Europe since the war, and the lack of free trade unions in the Soviet Union.

How Congressmen Voted on the Housing Bill

The vote on the housing bill and its amendments, CIO feels, is a pretty accurate barometer of whether your Congressman is guided by the needs of the people or the interests of the wealthy real estate lobby. Below are the votes on the Ress Amendment (designated 1), which would have stricken out the public housing section, heart of the bill, and on the final passage (designated 2). (R) indicates a vote for public housing and for final passage; (W) indicates a vote against; (A) means not voting, absent or paired. The Rees amendment was defeated, 209 to 204. Final vote on the bill was 288 to 185. Of the "againsters" in the end, 155 were Republicans, the remainder Southern Democrats. Keep this list to help you determine what you should do when you next vote for a Congressman.

Next Chance To Repeal T-H After '50 Election

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

THE NEXT real chance to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act will be after the 1950 elections.

Taft-Hartley will not be repealed in 1949. Unless a miracle takes place the 81st Congress—whose controlling Dixie-gop coalition buried T-H repeal in a swarm of crippling amendments—will not repeal the anti-labor law in 1950 either.

Opposition in the Senate to the Taft-Hartley Act almost doubled from 1947, when the law was passed, to the time of the crucial Senate debate last week. In 1947, there were only 25 votes to sustain Pres. Truman's veto of the law. In the key votes of 1949, the Senate opposition to T-H garnered from 40 to 44 votes.

But most of the northern Republicans and most of the Dixiecrats held their coalition together.

The result: only four lines of the Thomas Bill written to repeal T-H, remained after the Taft amendments had been passed by the Senators.

WHEN THE bill, filled with the crippling amendments, finally passed by a 51-42 vote, it represented not repeal but just about all of the original Haft-Hartley Act. There were minor changes throughout—but the total effect was little more than the difference between tweedle-dum and tweedle-dee.

Before the Taft "package" amendment had been passed, leaders of CIO and AFL warned that the bill would be opposed by labor. CIO Pres. Murray described it as a "new Taft edition" of the Taft-Hartley Act. AFL Pres. Green said he would recommend a Presidential veto.

The bill, having been passed by the Senate, was sent to the House, which referred it to the Labor Committee. It is doubtful that that group—which early this session endorsed the Thomas-Lesinski bill by a close vote—will act for at least a fortnight.

Since the Wood Bill was recommitted, a House Labor sub-committee has been wrestling with possible substitute legislation for the Lesinskl Bill, but nothing has yet been approved.

Final days of the Senate debate produced thousands of angry words on the subject of labor-management relations.

THE ISSUE rode into the last lap after a series of four amendments proposed by a group of bi-partisan liberals headed by Sen. Douglas (D., Ill.) were adopted by a "voice vote." Sponsors had hoped that these concessions might win support away from the anti-labor bloc headed by Sen. Taft.

But the plan fell through when the Senate refused to support the Douglas proposal for seizure of plants and profits in cases of national emergency disputes. On that issue, pro-labor Senators split themselves, some feeling it might produce eventual victory, others feeling it might still leave the door open to union-busting injunctions.

After that came a series of other suggestions. Sen. Ives (R., N. Y.) sugested an intricate plan of "cool ing-off," which was defeated. Sen Morse (R., Ore.) gained little support for a plan of Presidential seizure in emergencies, but only after Congress had been called into session. That plan lost, too.

Then the Lucas proposal, to rip the injunction teeth out of Taft's amendment, came close to winning. The 46-44 vote was the closest of the series.

The Taft proposal itself won handily, 50-40, in what was perhaps the most clear-cut showdown on pro-labor vs. anti-labor sentiment. Then his package of amendments carried by 49-44—a Taft-Hartley repeal was dead.

JUST HOW little the Taft amendments offer unions was shown clearly in a study of the proposals made recently by a group of 20 lawyers representing CIO, AFL and independent unions

They concluded that "lip service only" is given the people's mandate, expressed in the 1948 election, for T-H repeal. The lawyers' analysis showed that:

1. Government by injunction is retained, both in so-called national emergency strikes and in many other types of disputes.

2. Economic boycotts, in many forms long regarded as legitimate union activity, would be illegal.

3. Unions would still be left wide open to damage suits by employers.

4. Federal government opportunity to interfere with justifiable picket lines would be continued.

5. Ban on closed shop agreements, and limitation on union security pacts would be maintained—and state governments would be practically invited to pass even more restrictive statutes than the national law.

6. Restrictions on check-off arrangements, proved during the past two years to be unwarranted, would be kept.

7. Welfare funds would still be subject to "onerous" restrictions.

8. Financial reports would still be required of unions only, and the anti-Communist oath would be so broadened as to be "administratively unworkable."

"In the main," the labor attorneys said, the concessions made by Taft "are designed only to correct evils in T-H for which no defenders can be found."

It's T-H All Over Again

Here is what CIO Pres. Murray had to say about the Senate's action in approving the Taft injunction amendment to the Thomas Bill:

"The CIO at this session of Congress has consistently advocated passage of the Thomas Bill without crippling amendments. The Taft injunction amendment, adopted by the Senate yesterday, is a crippling amendment of the most vicious type.

"Passage of this anti-labor provision definitely converts the Thomas Bill into a new Taft edition of the Taft-Hartley Act. Any bill carrying this vindictive and punitive injunction provision must of necessity be opposed by organized labor.

"We express appreciation to those fair-minded Senators who yesterday cast their vote against Taft's amendment.

"To the other members of the Senate who, oblivious of the record of the past two years under the evil Taft-Hartley Act, voted for injunctions, we can only say that their record now speaks for itself. We will submit their record to the political judgment of the voters at the next elections."

Small Recovery Follows Taft Victory After Early Selling Follows Growing Sterling 'Crisis'—Market Extremely Sensitive to Spot News

JUBILANT REACTION of business to Taft's successful efforts to retain T-H is indicated by this head in the (N. Y.) Journal of Commerce.

Taft Puts It Bluntly

"It seems to me that injunction is the only thing that really will stop strikes."

"... I think injunction is an essential weapon."

—Sen. Robert A. Taft, of Ohio.

CIO Praises Sen. Lucas

CIO legislative representatives were impressed with the manner in which Sen. Scott Lucas (D., Ill.), Democratic leader in the Senate, handled parliamentary strategy and marshalled votes in the final round of the anti-Taft-Hartley fight.

Lucas's amendment, aimed at pulling the injunction teeth from the Taft proposals, served as a rallying point for Senate pro-labor members.

Debate Quotes

"It seems to me that injunction is the only thing that really will stop strikes."

The statement—a bold exposition of anti-labor thinking—came from Sen. Taft during last week's Senate debate.

"In any remedy, I think injunction is an essential weapon," the Ohio Senator added.

Then, reversing his mental field, he explained why he coupled his injunction amendment with a plan for government "seizure" of plants struck in so-called national emergencies—a seizure plan which has been denounced by labor attorneys as "phony."

"I am glad to add the other weapon (seizure)," Taft explained to fellow Senators, "because I think it meets the argument of labor that in some way, injunction is looked upon as anti-labor. I do not think it is; it works both ways."

Thus, Taft in one breath admitted that injunctions are the only way to smash strikes; in the next breath, complained that unions mistakenly regard injunctions as "anti-labor."

It was hot in Washington last week—but not hot enough to cause that much silly talk.

How Senators Voted On Thomas Bill Amendments

Here's the Senate record on the three key amendments to the Thomas Bill to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act:

1. The LUCAS amendment, June 28. To remove the injunction feature from the Taft injunction and seizure plan. A vote FOR the amendment is right, and is indicated by R. A vote AGAINST the amendment is marked W. There were 44 votes for the amendment. (Dem. 38; Rep. 6); there were 46 votes against (Dem. 14; Rep. 32). So the amendment failed to carry.

2. The TAFT INJUNCTION amendment, June 28. To preserve Taft-Hartley injunctions in "national emergency" strikes, adding U. S. seizure of struck plants but not of profits. A vote AGAINST the amendment is right, and is indicated by R. A vote FOR the amendment is marked W. There were 50 votes for the amendment (Dem. 17; Rep. 33); there were 40 votes against (Dem. 35; Rep. 5). So the Taft injunction amendment passed.

3. The TAFT package amendments, June 30. These were all the Taft amendments, substantially containing all the Taft-Hartley Act, wrapped up in one package. A vote AGAINST the amendment is right, and is indicated by R. A vote FOR the amendment is marked W. There were 49 votes for the Taft amendment (Dem. 16; Rep. 33); there were 44 votes against (Dem. 36; Rep. 8). So the Taft amendment was passed, practically as a substitution for the Thomas Bill.

Good Work, But Not Enough

OK, and so you gave a buck to PAC and you pushed doorbells and you made political speeches—and you read that labor won a victory at the polls last Nov. 2.

You were positive that the Taft-Hartley Act would be kicked into the ashcan and that a large portion of the Truman Fair Deal program would be enacted.

You started getting disgusted when weeks and then a couple of months passed without Congress enacting any domestic legislation in which you were vitally interested.

T-H came up in the House and you wired or telegraphed your Congressman, asking him to vote for the Lesinski Bill.

Then came the shock! By the very skin of their teeth the opponents of T-H blocked enactment of the Wood Bill.

"Something's wrong," you said—and perhaps you began wondering whether political action was worthwhile and whether labor actually had won at the polls in November.

The T-H repeal move began rolling in the Senate—and then came another shock for those who believed the Thomas Bill might go through the upper house without crippling amendments.

By a two-vote margin, the Lucas amendment, which would have removed the injunction feature from T-H was defeated. Later the Taft amendments were adopted.

Labor had been kicked in the seat of the pants—and hard!

All of which makes this a good time to try to assess the Congressional situation for what it's really worth.

TOOK 12 YEARS TO OBTAIN T-H Let's begin by pointing out that the nation's industrial and business interests fought and campaigned vigorously for 12 years before they were able to bring about defeat of the Wagner Act and enactment of T-H.

The Taft-Hartley Act has now been on the books two years. And it was put there because business and industry conducted a vigorous "no let-up" political action campaign.

Labor and other liberal forces did a good political job last year. They halted what was regarded as a strong trend toward conservatism and reaction. They played the major role in electing the President on a good platform.

The scales are fairly evenly balanced on Capitol Hill. A handful more pro-labor votes in the House and a few more in the Senate would completely change the outlook for considerable legislation in which the unions are interested.

NO TIME TO CRY, SO GO TO WORK The easy thing for labor and other liberal forces to do would be to moan that "we've been sold down the river" and make accusations that Congress hasn't carried out the mandate given by the voters at the polls last November.

But that wouldn't help provide the type of Congress we think we ought to have—unless we're willing to combine our complaints with a lot of hard work.

So—regardless of what happens on Capitol Hill during the remainder of this Congressional session—we have a job cut out for us.

It's political action of the same type we engaged in last year, but more of it.

A lot more of it!

Hoodlums Who Hide Their Faces

KKK, Which Exploits Race and Religious Prejudices, Rides Again

By ALLAN L. SWIM

A HUGE cross was burned on Stone Mountain, near Atlanta, a little less than four years ago, giving notice to the nation that the Ku Klux Klan was back in action.

A few weeks later Dr. Samuel Green, the KKK's grand dragon, declared during an interview with me in his Atlanta office:

"The Klan has never been dead—and the Klan is never going to die!"

The organization, he said, had ceased publication of its "Fiery Cross" a short time before the Japs attacked at Pearl Harbor.

"Our board of directors thought we ought to lay down anything that might produce prejudice during the war," he said.

At that time Dr. Green estimated there were 20,000 Klansmen in Georgia—and now the hooded outfit is active in several sections of the South.

TWO WEEKS ago Pres. John J. Playfair of the Alabama CIO Council said the Klan was as reprehensible as "Hitler's Gestapo" or "Stalin's secret police" and called on affiliated unions in the state to "give their fullest support in combatting and exposing" the KKK.

Last week the Alabama Legislature enacted and Governor Folsom signed an "anti-masking" measure directed at the Klan.

These actions came after a series of floggings and beatings involving both whites and Negroes.

And a House subcommittee in Washington last week opened hearings on mob violence in Alabama.

ALTHOUGH the Klan is in the news again few persons really know what the organization is and what it stands for—or pretends to stand for.

Dr. Green said the KKK doesn't fight Jews because of their religion. "We're fighting the 'kikes'—and there are as many 'kikes' among the Protestants as among the Jews," he said.

"The Klan is essentially a white man's organization and essentially a Protestant organization. A man to belong must be a native American. No foreigners are allowed."

Dr. Green, a Klansman since 1922, said the "cardinal principles" of the KKK are "to develop character, to practice clannishness, to protect the home and the chastity of white womanhood and to exemplify a pure patriotism in the U. S., its Constitution and its flag."

Under the guise of carrying out these principles, the Klan has engaged in the worst type of terrorism and flogging.

And many persons have hidden their identities under Klan hoods while carrying out acts of personal vengeance.

NO PERSON who believes in law and order can find any justification for existence of the KKK.

The Klan is an organization which frequently takes the law into its own hands to administer its own cruel and peculiar brand of "justice."

The average Southern Negro fears the Klan more than any other organization—and for good cause. He knows that the "sin" of being black often is enough to send the Klan riding.

The KKK engages in mob action—and mob action easily leads to lynching. And where lynching is permitted to go unpunished law enforcement becomes a farce.

The Klan should be outlawed and its members arrested and prosecuted when they violate the law.

IT'S NOT enough, however, merely to say that the KKK should be put out of business by legal action.

Widespread education is needed to wipe out the fear, prejudice and ignorance which permits men to become hooded mobsters and at the same time to consider themselves as solid citizens.

Every organization existing in a region in which the KKK operates can—and should—take a part in a campaign to stamp out Klanism and the factors which cause it to exist.

Alabama is a trouble spot today. Tomorrow the Klan may become active in some other part of the nation.

The organization and its slick promoters—and the politicians who go along with the bed-sheet hoodlums—should be exposed for what they really are.

And they really are un-American.

Denham Asks U. S. Judges To Aid Him

GENERAL Counsel Robert Denham of the Natl. Labor Relations Board has tried to enlist at least the moral support of the federal judiciary for the Taft-Hartley law, and his rigorous interpretations of it.

Denham spoke at the conference of circuit and district judges of the ninth federal circuit at Los Angeles. He publicly entered the battle against the administration's fight to repeal the Taft-Hartley law, and asked the judges to uphold him in his feud with the five-man NLRB.

"I admit to a strong prejudice in favor of the Taft-Hartley law," Denham declared. "I would be dishonest if I did not do so."

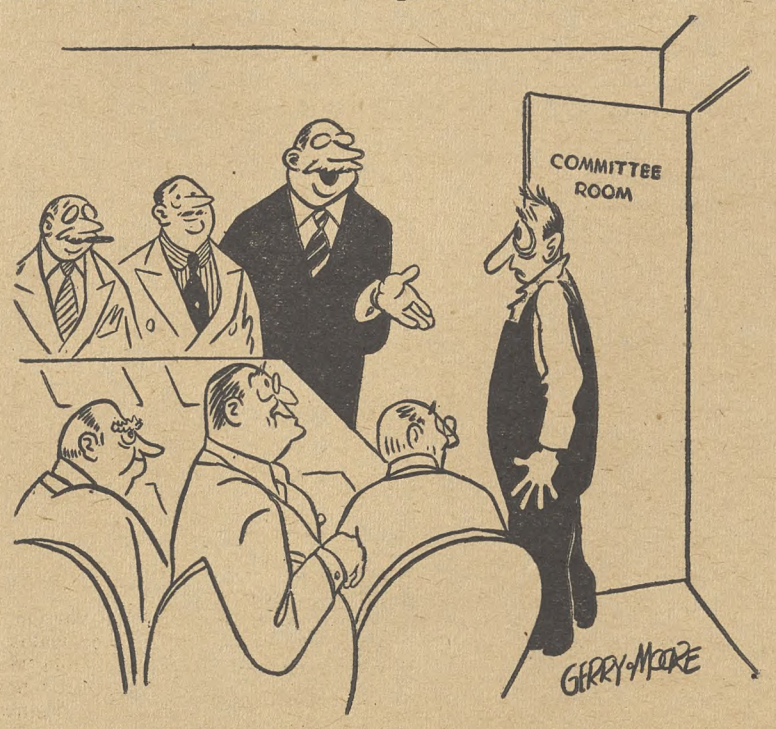
With the Senate debate on whether to retain T-H's injunction provisions in a new labor statute at its climax, Denham openly aligned himself with Sen. Taft (R. Ohio) and the other advocates of this way of handling industrial disputes.

"Any injunction is obnoxious to the leaders of organized labor, but throughout all the rest of our regulatory machinery of government, the injunction is almost standard equipment of the administrator," he affirmed.

Taft-Hartley's top enforcement officer began his speech with a strong defense of the almost complete independence which T-H gives his office.

Then he told the judges, some of whom may have to rule on cases involving the issue, that the courts should uphold him, not the board, in their current feud.

The NLRB has asserted its right to refuse to handle small-time labor disputes which do not effect interstate commerce. Denham, again in his Los Angeles speech, insisted that under T-H the board must take up every case he wants prosecuted.



"Welcome, Mr. Jones, to the company-sponsored labor-management committee."

2 Theater Chains On Unfair List

The New York City CIO Council has unanimously voted to place on an unfair list all Loew's and RKO theatres, and to so inform the CIO's 400,000 members in that city. Loew's theatres currently are being picketed by the Screen Publicists Guild and Screen Office and Professional Employes Guild which have been trying to renew collective bargaining agreements since last September, 1948.

According to Council Pres. Michael J. Quill, this action in support of the picketing unions, "puts the City CIO Council back in business, and serves warning on all industry and all employers that we will not tolerate any union-busting efforts anywhere."

The action was taken in behalf of two UOPWA locals, the Screen Publicists Guild, Local 114, and the Screen Office and Professional Employes Guild, Local 109. Both have held contracts with the film companies since 1942. Involved in the dispute are Columbia, Universal, 20th Century-Fox, RKO, Loew's, MGM, Republic, Paramount, Warner Brothers and United Artists.

They Argued And Argued And Argued

HE WAS feeling good, as well he might, because he had just recently tucked his portion of an important election victory—and several slugs of liquor—under his belt.

He was in a talkative mood and in a happy frame of mind when he ran into an old friend at the Newspaper Guild convention in Columbus, Ohio, last week.

He had played an active part in the campaign which resulted in Associated Press employes throughout the nation voting by a margin of more than five to one to have the Guild serve as their collective bargaining agent.

So, he was celebrating—and telling stories about the AP organizing drive.

"AH," HE SAID, "I can tell you some good stories about that campaign—but the best one I know concerns a rank-and-file guy who really did a bang-up job for the Guild."

He named the rank-and-filer, a well known Washington writer, and then told this story about him.

The AP staffer became convinced a long time ago that he and his fellow workers should have a strong Guild organization, so he started talking unionism to those who worked around him.

He was particularly anxious to sign up a certain reporter, who didn't believe AP men had any business joining a CIO union—or any other union, for that matter.

He started working on the fellow—and that was the beginning of a series of long, interesting arguments between the two.

THE TWO MEN met frequently at bars at restaurants, at social functions—and whenever they got together they renewed their pro-Guild, anti-Guild argument.

This went on for months, and each time they argued the pro-Guilder brought out new reasons for the other joining the union.

Friends said the sessions between the two helped make the union-minded man into a top-notch organizer.

He became a guy who really knew the answers—an expert on the Guild, the CIO and unionism generally.

But the man opposed to the Guild held his ground. He wouldn't budge an inch.

THE GUILD organizing drive picked up steam throughout the country and reports coming into national headquarters said the situation really looked good.

The Washington "expert" and his buddies were really going to town. They were putting on a real campaign. They were winning converts.

But the man who hadn't been convinced remained unconvinced. And the "expert" decided to try again to sell him on the Guild.

They got together for another session and the "expert" really went out to work.

PATIENTLY, and in great detail, he went over the situation point by point, explaining carefully and persuasively why his colleague should join the Guild.

The other fellow kept saying "no" and he wouldn't change to "yes."

Finally the argument ended and the two men went their separate ways.

The fellow who opposed the Guild later told a friend about the session.

"We really went at it," he said, "and I believe that fellow had the best of it when it came to logic and reason.

"But I had him beat on superstition and prejudice." A.L.S.

Jewish Labor Committee Finds

Anti-Semitism 'Actually Tolerated' In Red Satellites

JEWS ABLE to survive the horrors of World War II are now being badly mistreated in the countries behind the Communist Iron Curtain.

This charge is made in a well documented report issued by the Jewish Labor Committee.

The foreword of the report—"Jews Behind the Iron Curtain"—says:

"This survey will show how the Communists and the Communist-dominated minority regimes, though loudly claiming to be the enemy of all anti-Semitism, have actually tolerated anti-Semitism among large sections of the population and within the state administrations; how they have sabotaged every decision aiming at the restoration of looted property to the original Jewish owners; how they have done and are doing everything possible to undermine Jewish community existence.

"DIFFERENT as may be the details, the over-all picture is everywhere the same:

"On one side: vigorous, active Jewish communities, displaying wonderful energy and creative power, building up under the most trying conditions entire networks of schools and cultural institutions, launching social movements . . .

"On the other side: Communist totalitarianism, extending its deadly grip to all aspects of community existence, destroying all life and vitality, all democratic activity, in whatever it touches.

IN ROUMANIA, the report says, "anti-Semitic tendencies among the people have by no means diminished" although the government's "official attitude" is hostile to anti-Semitism.

"Acts of desecration of cemeteries and a considerable number of rowdy assaults on Jews have taken place," the report says.

"Refugees from Roumania, reaching Austria, Germany and Italy in 1947 and 1948, were unanimous in declaring that increasing anti-Semitism had been the reason impelling them to leave the country.

"The government was lax in punishing anti-Semitic rowdyism; it was especially lenient to those responsible for the extermination of the Jews during the war.

"Members of the former reactionary, anti-Semitic government, such as Minister of Foreign Affairs Titulescu, were included in the government under the benevolent eyes of the Communists."

DEFEAT OF Hitler did not bring an end to anti-Semitism in Hungary, the report says.

"For the past four years," it charges, "Hungarian Jews have been constantly exposed to systematic persecution and outrage. Attacks on Jews and Jewish property have been a frequent occurrence.

"Scores of cases are on record of the violation of Jewish cemeteries and the mutilation of monuments erected to the memory of martyred Jews."

The portion of the report dealing with Czechoslovakia says cases of anti-Semitism in Bohemia, Moravia and Silesia have been "very rare" but that the situation in Slovakia is "substantially different."

The population of Slovakia, the report says, "was always inbued with anti-Semitism."

JEWS IN Bulgaria, the report says, have not been able to recover the property taken from them during the war "in spite of all official promises and a law on compensation promulgated by the government on Feb. 24, 1945."

The report states in numerous places that the "official attitude" of the Communist-dominated governments is in opposition to anti-Semitism but that such attitudes have little to do with the treatment accorded Jews.

"In Poland," the report concludes, "'purges' are being systematically put through among the population. 'Coordination' is being achieved with an iron ruthlessness.

"In various ways, politically conscious persons are being driven to repudiate their past and abandon their own personalities. The atmosphere is becoming more and more stifling.

"Those who can flee, leave the country. Their state of mind is clearly revealed in the letters they write once they get out of Poland. Here is an excerpt from one of them, dated Paris, Jan. 29, 1949:

"'This is already the second day I am in Paris, but I still have the feeling that somewhere in my room are hidden a pair of eyes and ears, which see and hear everything I do and think. Is it possible that nobody is really peering in? Is it possible that I am now free to write to my comrades and friends? I cannot believe it . . .'"

Rep. Steed Uncovers Anti-Labor Heat

HOW businessmen and bankers are "putting the heat" on Congressmen—particularly in connection with labor bills—has been exposed by Rep. Tom Steed (D., Okla.).

Steed made public a letter sent by Associated Industries of Oklahoma to a local businessman urging strong pressure on the Congressmen among "campaign contributors," "your employes" and "perhaps a banker or two."

Rep. Steed

The letter, addressed to W. P. Wood of Shawnee, Okla., was signed by E. J. O'Connor, executive vice-president of the industrialists' group.

It complained that "we are encountering great difficulty" in persuading Rep. Steed that he was elected by the votes of a "majority of the people" rather than by "the limited minority constituting the labor vote."

O'Connor also complained that Steed had been "a problem child" concerning his votes in the House Labor Committee and that he has "invariably" voted for liberal labor legislation.

"As you know, the Taft-Hartley repeal bill is back in this committee, and also the revision of the wage-hour law is being considered by this committee," O'Connor's letter continued. "Both of the measures vitally affect Oklahoma industry and the best information we are able to get from our Washington contacts is that Steed may have the deciding vote . . ."

THE Associated Industries letter "strongly" suggested "that you contact his personal friends, his campaign contributors and if possible get some of your employes to write him that they would like to have the labor legislation reported out that does not endanger the jobs or seriously affect the economy of his district."

"The two most important groups that could be persuasive would be the campaign contributors, and your employes, and perhaps a banker or two that have had some transaction with him in the past; but in any event, please lend all the help you can in straightening out his thinking on these labor matters.

"Your help in this matter may be the clincher, inasmuch as it appears to be that close; however, it's going to require an extraordinary effort to change him around."

STEED, IN a statement made in the House, said he had learned that O'Connor "had written other letters about other members of the Oklahoma Congressional delegation."

"This man has never even given me the benefit of his advice, so he is in no position to say I have been unfair to him. I trust all of us can find a more fair, decent and better source of advice in the discharge of our duties than the sort of thing exhibited here."

Quill Won't Run For N. Y. City Council

PRES. MICHAEL Quill of the CIO Transport Workers has formally announced that he will not seek another term as a New York City councilman.

Quill was elected to the Council on the American Labor Party ticket in 1937. He was elected again in 1943 as an independent, and for his present four-year term in 1945 on the ALP slate.

The transport union president broke with the ALP last year over the issue of a 10c fare on the New York subways, and criticized the party sharply when it joined the Wallace-for-President movement last year.

In making the announcement, Quill said that an increasing burden of work both from the TWU and from the New York City Council, which he also heads, made it advisable not to seek re-election to the city post.

A resident of the Bronx, Quill expressed thanks to that borough's voters for electing him in the past.

He said he hopes to continue to "serve them and all the people of our city by mobilizing the support of CIO for worthwhile candidates for public office" and for such legislative goals as "housing, full employment, education, welfare and civil rights."

Pegler To Testify

Westbrook Pegler, anti-labor newspaper columnist, has been subpoenaed by a House Labor subcommittee to apper in July.

L. A. Council May Sue To Get Building

The Los Angeles CIO Council has threatened to go to court, if necessary, to gain possession of the Council building in behalf of all CIO unions in the city.

Announcement of the reluctant decision to take the case to the courts was made by Albert Lunceford Council secretary, in a letter to the board of directors of the "Los Angeles CIO Building Corp."

The corporation was formed by representatives of a number of CIO locals shortly before the Council was reorganized some months ago. At the time of the reorganization, Council policies changed to support, rather than opposition, to national CIO policies.

Before the reorganization, a change in Council by-laws declared the building to be the property of locals then affiliated with the Council. A large number of locals in the city had dis-affiliated at that time from the Council in protest against its left-wing policies.

The corporation was formed by the few locals in the Council, and possession of the building was turned over by the old Council to the company.

In his letter to the corporation, Lunceford said the reorganized council wishes to settle the controversy without "protracted litigation" if possible. He suggested three possible plans for administering the building until the dispute is ironed out, with a view to saving expensive fees for a court-appointed receiver.

Lunceford said the Council is hopeful that unions controlling the building corporation will agree that the building should be given to the council as representatives of the entire CIO movement in the city.

If the corporation were to take such action, Lunceford said, it will "enable all of us to devote our energies and funds to genuine trade union matters for the people of all CIO trade unions in the area and not require us to dissipate them on such unnecessary controversies."

If the building is kept in the possession of just a few unions, however, "there is no alternative but for the court action to proceed," Lunceford warned.

5 Unionists Will Study In England

Five American labor unionists, including a member of the Wisconsin Legislature, will attend Ruskin College, Oxford, England, next fall, according to Dr. Harold Taylor, president of St. Lawrence College, Bronxville, N. Y., and chairman of the United States Committee on Ruskin College Labor Scholarships.

The Wisconsin legislator is Thomas G. Taylor, Racine, Wis., who is a member of Local 180, CIO Auto Workers, and attends the Univ. of Wisconsin. Other scholarship winners are:

Roger M. Dougherty, Washington, D. C., librarian at the George Washington Law School; member of Local 5, CIO Marine and Shipbuilding Workers.

Sara Greenberg, Detroit, Mich., employed in the research dept., CIO Auto Workers; member of Local 26, CIO Office and Professional Workers.

Roy McLean Zieman, Madison, Wis.; student, Univ. of Wisconsin, and member of Local 443, AFL teamsters.

George C. Allen, San Mateo, Calif.; student of San Francisco State College; member of AFL Watchmakers' Union Local 101.

This is the third consecutive year that these scholarships have been awarded by the Transatlantic Foundation. Funds for two of the scholarships have been donated by the Trades Union Congress, two by a fund administered by Foreign Minister Ernest Bevin, and one by Sir Robert Mayer, chairman of the British Committee of the Transatlantic Foundation.

Ruskin College, founded primarily to give a college education to British workers from industry, offers a curriculum directed chiefly to the social studies, especially history, economics and the theory and practice of government. CIO Research Dir. Stanley H. Ruttenberg is a member of the committee which made the selection.

Survey Shows Negroes Lack Medical Care

An appalling shortage of medical care among Negroes was disclosed last week in a report issued by the Committee on Research in Medical Economics. It concluded that the quickest way to make progress in solving the problem, which affects the white as well as the Negro population, is through national health insurance.

The report, drafted jointly by Michael M. Davis, chairman of the Committee on Research in Medical Economics, and Hugh H. Smyth, asistant director of special research, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, found four major contributing factors in the problem of Negro health. They were:

Inability of Negroes, with their low income status, to pay for medical care on the usual fee-for-service basis; shortage and maldistribution of physicians, dentists, nurses and hospitals; lack of health education to permit Negroes to utilize available personnel and facilities to best advantage; racial discrimination, which aggravates all the other factors.

Price-Fixing Charged

Atty. Gen. Clark has charged violation of the anti-trust laws in the production of plastic artificial eyes. License agreements with others to fix prices and restricting sales are among the charges. "People, especially veterans," according to Clark "should not be deprived of the latest developments" in the making of artificial eyes.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

In all the arrogance of its monopolistic wealth, the A.T.&T. has attempted to block the affiliation of its employes with the CIO. Various branches of the company have refused to recognize the democratically voted affiliation of CWA with the CIO. Reaction of the employes to this attempted dictation by the corporation was shown last week in the NLRB election conducted among 13,172 New Jersey telephone operators.

The vote for CIO was 8,892 with 1,612 against, despite all the corporation's propaganda efforts. This rank-and-file test should be clear evidence to the telephone monopoly that its employes recognize the need for CIO affiliation and for the additional organizing and bargaining power they have gained through CIO membership.

Robert C. Edwards, Organization Director CIO Chemical Workers, reports a victory among the employes of the big Sherwin-Williams Chicago plant. The vote was 535 for UGCCW-CIO against 465 for no-union. Sam Angelocci, Paul Stawicki, Chester Walczak and Albert F. Kukral assisted in the campaign.

Pres. Michael J. Quill and Secy.-Treas. Gustav Faber of the CIO Transport Workers report that the union won representation on the Tampa Transit Line, Florida, with the assistance of State Dir. Charles Cowl and members of the Southern Drive staff. The vote was 114 to 70.

SOUTHERN CAMPAIGN: Eight new election victories for the CIO Southern Organizing campaign have brought a large number of new members into the Union for the week just ended, Van A. Bittner, Director of Operation Dixie, announced.

Texas: Dir. Robert Oliver reports that the employes of the Texas Long Leaf Lumber Co. with plants at Trinity and New Willard, voted for affiliation with the IWA-CIO by a vote of 282 to 157. Oliver also reports the Packinghouse Workers-CIO were victorious in an election held at the Morrison Milling Co. at Denton by a vote of 15 to 7.

Virginia: Dir. Ernest Pugh reports that the Richmond Cedar Works employes Norfolk, Va., voted its collective bargaining rights to the IWA-CIO at a better than 3 to 1 margin. There are 366 employes in this plant.

Mississippi: Dir. Robert Starnes reports that a three way election in the Mac Smith Garment Co. Inc., at Gulfport gave the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America CIO, 331 votes, while the AFL received 210, and the management managed to scrape up 7 ballots for no union.

North Carolina: Dir. William Smith reports a victory for the CIO Textile Workers in the election held at the Royal Cotton Mill at Wakeforest where 245 workers are employed. Smith also reports 27 Indian girls employed at Pembroke Manufacturing Co., Pembroke, N. C., joined the CIO Clothing Workers.

Alabama: Dir. Carey E. Haigler reports the CIO Oil Workers were victorious in an election held at the Sinclair Refining Co. by a vote of 5 to 1.

Tennessee: Dir. Paul R. Christopher reports the employes of the Bowling Green Rubber Co. of Paris, Tenn., voted to affiliate with the CIO Rubber Workers by a vote of 31 to 26.

The writer just returned from the CIO Newspaper Guild convention in Columbus, Ohio. The Guild's victory in nation-wide election for Associated Press employes was reported in this column last week. This victory shows the determination of the delegates of this convention to carry on with increased vigor the organizing of newspaper men. It was a wonderful job well done. In the past year despite great difficulties the officers and members who have performed an excellent job are to be complimented for their accomplishments.

The action of the Senate on the Taft-Hartley repeal is sound proof that we need more organizing. The enemies of organized labor must be held accountable for the effort to shackle labor so that special interest groups can continue in their selfishness and greed. We must continue to build the CIO by getting many more members, activizing and educating them. This can and will be done. Let's go CIO! Organize the unorganized!

TVA's in the Black

Sen. George W. Malone (R., Nev.), after exhausting every other possible attack last year demanded an investigation of TVA's "cost allocation methods." Last week, one year later, the Federal Power Commission reported after extensive study that TVA's power production costs are less than its benefits. That's what TVA said all along.

SENATOR ROBERT WAGNER

Sen. Wagner Resigns, Murray Hails Record

RESIGNATION of Robert Wagner (D., N. Y.) from the U. S. Senate after 22 years of service brought forth a statement of the "most profound regret" from the CIO.

"Please be assured that labor in America will always remember you as one of its greatest friends," CIO Pres. Murray wrote to the man who sponsored the Wagner Labor Relations Act and a host of other New Deal legislation during the administrations of Pres. Roosevelt.

Wagner's resignation, made public a few hours after the Senate's vote on the Taft injunction amendment to the Taft-Hartley Act, had been rumored for some time. The veteran Senate liberal, 72 years old, has been sick for more than two years and has been confined to his New York home.

Gov. Thomas Dewey will appoint a successor until special elections are held in New York this autumn. The names of Herbert Lehman, former New York governor and later head of UNRRA, and of Robert Wagner, Jr., have both been mentioned as possible Democratic nominees to succeed the Senator.

Gov. Dewey told a press conference that he would not seek the Senatorial seat himself in the November vote.

MURRAY, in his letter, voiced on behalf of CIO membership "our warmest appreciation of your truly magnificent public service.

"As much as anyone who has ever served in public life, you have voiced the aspirations of the great body of working people," the CIO president wrote.

"You sensed the people's need for security, for protection from exploitation; and the long series of excellent laws which bear your name are testimony both to your unflinching devotion to liberal-minded legislation and to your high competence as a public servant."

Wagner was presented with the CIO Community Services Committee award for outstanding public service at a banquet last October. Too ill to be present, Wagner was lauded by leaders of many national unions for his help to America's working men and women.

In addition to sponsoring the Wagner Act, Wagner sponsored housing, health insurance, social security and civil rights bills. In the post-war years he fought hard for recognition of the state of Israel.

A year ago, just prior to the Democratic convention, Sen. Wagner spoke out for a platform that "would keep faith with the hopes of the American people" and his influence helped shape that platform into a liberal document.

UAW Man Heads Co-op

Al Rightley, who heads the CIO Auto Workers cooperative activities, has been elected president of the National Cooperative Mutual Housing Association. The federation of housing co-ops chose ex-Congressman Jerry Voorhis as executive secretary, and Ted Robinson. Chicago attorney who is a leader in co-op housing in that city as vice-president.

sponsor of the T-H repeal bill which the Senate rejected by a narrow vote, had a different idea about injunctions. Said he: "The injunction has proved itself to be an act against labor, it has caused all organized labor in the U. S. to stand wholeheatedly against it . . . If we repeal the Taft-Hartley law but adopt the Taft amendment, we shall only be shadow-boxing, for the Taft amendment contains by far the bulk of the Taft-Hartley law."

* * *

Sen. Douglas (D., Ill.) said that the injunction vote "indicates that the conservative wing of the Republican party and the Dixiecrats are in control of the Senate, and they are intent on maintaining an anti-labor law . . . The only thing left will be to transfer the fight from the Senate floor to the polls in 1950."

* * *

Sen. Morse (R., Ore.), who had sought on several occasions to find a formula to please both sides on the injunction issue, finally said the repeal bill, through amendments, had "become so anti-labor" he had no choice but to vote against it.

* * *

Sen. Humphrey (D., Minn.) waxed sarcastic about some of Taft's anti-labor arguments.

"The Senator from Ohio is proposing that we take two ineffective and unfair measures, by his own admission, and join them together—and by adding together two negative quantities, two unfair measures, what do we get? We get the millenium! We get the answer to the problem of labor-management national emergencies—according to the proposal of the Senator from Ohio."

* * *

Sen. Hoey (D., N. C.) said he favored the injunction method, "as a friend of labor and a friend of industry." Hoey's record leans more to the industry side, judging from the CIO News 1948 Voting Record.

Hoey voted four times as a "friend" of labor; voted 12 times as a "friend of industry."

* * *

Sen. Neely (W. Va.), never lost for words, came up with a sharp description of T-H. "There is a serpent in America's industrial Garden of Eden. That serpent is a rattlesnake. It is commonly called the Taft-Hartley law. Its mouth is filled with deadly fangs. The most lethal of these is the fang known as government by injunction."

Delaware Erases Little Taft-Hartley

Delaware's "little Taft-Hartley Act," enacted in 1947, last week was erased from the statute books.

Gov. Elbert Carvel (Dem.) placed his signature on a repealer of the state's anti-labor law and said he was "completing the pledge made by the Democratic party to repeal" the law.

The law was one of the most severe of all the state anti-labor laws placed on the books two years ago.

T-H Box Score

HERE'S WHAT CONGRESS has done (or has not done) so far this year on Taft-Hartley repeal:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

1. House Labor Committee recommended passage of Lesinski Bill, to repeal Taft-Hartley, restore and improve the Wagner Act.

2. Rep. Wood (D. Ga.) offered substitute bill, keep T-H and making it even more severe. Rep. Sims (D. S. C.) offered substitute for the Wood Bill in a measure not as favorable as Lesinski Bill, not as bad as Wood Bill.

3. House rejected Sims bill 211-183.

4. House, on May 3, approved Wood Bill, 217-203.

5. House, on May 4, "recommitted" the Wood Bill, 212-209, thereby sending legislation back to House Labor Committee. It's been there ever since.

SENATE

1. Senate Labor Committee recommended passage of Thomas Bill—identical with Lesinski Bill in House.

2. Sen. Taft (R. O.) proposed series of 28 "amendments," keeping almost all important features of Taft-Hartley Bill.

3. Bi-partisan group headed by Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) proposed series of compromise amendments. These provided that unions must bargain in good faith; guaranteed "free speech" to employers and unions; required employers as well as unions to file financial statements with the government; required both employers and unions to sign non-Communist, non-Fascist affidavits in order to use services of Natl. Labor Relations Board; provided for government seizure of company property, and of profits, in strikes deemed to be "national emergencies."

4. Senate approved, by voice vote, first four of Douglas compromise amendments.

5. Senate defeated Douglas seizure plan, 55-27.

6. Senate defeated Holland (D. Fla.) amendment, 54-37. This proposal would have inserted national emergency injunction provision into Thomas Bill.

7. Senate defeated, 46-44, the Lucas (D. Ill.) amendment. This would have removed injunction provision from Taft's injunction-and-seizure proposal.

8. Senate passed, 50-40, Taft amendment, providing injunctions with 60-day, rather than present 80-day effective period; plus government seizure of plants without seizure of profits.

9. Senate defeated, 53-41, Baldwin (R. Conn.) amendment to give federal law on union security precedence over state laws outlawing or limiting closed or union shops.

10. Senate passed, 49-44, Taft "package" amendment—retaining practically all of Taft-Hartley Act except the name.

11. Senate passed, 51-42, on June 30, the "Labor Management Relations Act of 1949" (Taft edition of Taft-Hartley Act) containing all the Taft amendments and referred it to the House of Representatives for action.

Guild, Jubilant Over AP Victory, Maps Organizing Drives

By AL ZACK

FLUSHED by a smashing victory over the Associated Press, kingpin of the newspaper industry, the CIO Newspaper Guild devoted much of its 16th Annual Convention in Columbus, O., to plans for future organizing drives.

By a nearly 6 to 1 vote, the Guild won systemwide collective bargaining rights for employes of AP, the U. S. Steel of newspapering.

In sweltering heat, the delegates dug into a week of work and, at press time, had:

Heard Executive Vice-Pres. Sam Eubanks charge that the American publishers were "mentally sick," as he detailed their "almost psychopathic reaction to any honest, well-reasoned criticism."

Heard Secy.-Treas. Ralph Novak report that the number of members in good standing had hit an all-time high.

Adopted, by a unanimous vote, a resolution lashing out at the "leaders of some CIO unions" for their failure to follow CIO policy. The resolution praised CIO Pres. Murray for his fight to drive "communists out of positions of leadership."

In a second resolution, the convention lauded CIO for its Marshall Plan policy and its support of the Atlantic pact. Further resolutions put the Guild on record as supporting the CIO's split with the WFTU and pledging support to Murray's leadership.

Laid plans for a strong, well-planned organizational drive, aimed at the giants in the industry.

Heard CIO Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood lash out at "dissenters who take their orders from the Kremlin."

Adopted a PAC committee report, which laid down plans for better PAC work on the part of locals and which observed that "every good Guildsman carries a PAC receipt and is a registered voter."

Voted to contribute $1000 to the Chicago AFL printers on strike since November, 1947.

HAYWOOD, praising Martin for his work for the ECA overseas, lauded the Guild as "a leader in organizing white-collar workers."

Detailing the fight ahead for telephone workers, Haywood predicted that the Guild and the "hello boys and girls" will march to even greater victories in the drive to organize the white-collar industry.

The CIO vice-president, flayed the "hoggishness" of private enterprise which has shown its "own disregard for the public weal" in the past. He said, "we intend to bring something human, something decent into industry." In just as bitter language, Haywood tongue-whipped those "who malign and try to stab Phil Murray in the back.

"They are either going to be in CIO or out," he thundered. "It's either going to be union or disunion . . . and we say it's going to be union."

Pres. Harry Truman, an invited guest speaker, was unable to come due "to the pressure of work," he reported in a telegram lauding the Guild and wishing it further success.

NOMINATIONS for the three top officers and 10 vice-presidents were made last Friday. Under the Guild constitution, election will be by national referendum.

Jacob Clayman, secretary-treasurer of the Ohio CIO greeting the 200 delegates, observed: "There is nothing wrong with the American press that couldn't be cured by the substitution of the ideals of the American Newspaper Guild for those of the American Publishers Association."

Becoming an "international Union" in fact as well as name, the Guild welcomed to the 16th Annual Convention delegates from Toronto, Canada, where the Toronto Star employes won Guild recognition this year.

To Banquet Chairman Perry Morrison of Columbus, Delegates Dennis Braithwaite and Joseph Beaule Beauclerc presented the "unofficial flag of Canada" to the ANG. Rub is, they explained, Canada has no official flag . . . is still debating what its national colors shall be.

$1,000 To ITU

The Guild convention voted to contribute $1,000 to the Chicago strike of the International Typographical Union, which has been going on for 20 months. All of Chicago's major newspapers are involved in the strike.

"HAD NOT the circumstances of life been otherwise, I should have been, and very happily so, a member of the American Newspaper Guild, Lewis B. Seltzer, editor of the Cleveland Press, told the convention.

"I would have fought just as vigorously as a member as you . . . have fought these past years for what you believe in," he said.

Calling on the Guild to continue its fight and not to relax in any way at all the vigilance and the belief in those things and those principles not yet accomplished but which should be accomplished, Seltzer affirmed his belief that the Guild can move reasonably in the direction of accomplishing these purposes.

"The Guild has fought an intelligent and a gallant fight to improve the conditions under which newspapermen and women of America have labored," he declared. And, he added, "I think those conditions needed improvement."

PUBLISHERS and editors should have exercised more insight than they did at the time the Guild came into being, Seltzer said, for the Guild has done American journalism a great service.

Some publishers and editors thought the Guild was a "dangerous organization" and that was a mistake from the point of view of management, he asserted.

"Management should have recognized the Guild for what it was," he continued, ". . . a reflection of the wish of the people, the average people, the men and women who are the bulk and the backbone of America," who only wanted what "others in other businesses were obtaining for themselves."

Seltzer then called upon the Guild and management to re-establish "in the interest of all of us something approximating that cordiality and warmth and understanding which existed many years ago."

Management ought to drop the kind of armed neutrality which has existed between itself and the Guild, he declared, and the Guild, which has achieved so much "with a minimum of strife, a minimum of disruption and a good measure . . . of sane and orderly prosecution" of its aims, should be "reasonable in its demands in the future, consistent with the economic conditions of any one year during which those demands are made."

Two of the Guild's top officers will be unopposed in the election referendum to be held later this year. They are Harry Martin, president, and Ralph Novak, Secretary-Treasurer. Sam Eubanks, executive vice president, will be opposed by Jack Deegan, secretary-treasurer of the New York City local.

Martin, in nominating Eubanks, made it clear that the three incumbents are running together as a team. He praised Eubanks' stewardship and urged his re-election.

Long Goal Reached: Guild Wins Bargaining Rights for AP on Nation-Wide Basis

The CIO Newspaper Guild has realized an ambition it held almost since its inception 15 years ago. It has won the right to represent the Associated Press employes on a nation-wide basis.

Collective bargaining rights were obtained through a consent NLRB election which the Guild won by a vote of 1166 to 212. With 1501 eligible to vote, this was the largest representation election in which the Guild ever participated.

"Major credit for this organizing achievement must go to the rank-and-file members of the AP organizing committee, led by seven hard working co-chairmen," said Sam Eubanks, Guild executive vice president.

The seven co-chairmen were: Mark Barron, dramatic critic; Hal Boyle, columnist, both of New York City; Arthur Edson, by-line writer, and James Marlow, columnist, Washington; Ben Price, Atlanta by-line writer; Bob Thomas, Hollywood columnist, and Felix Wold, Detroit labor by-line writer.

Thirty-five members of the committee met in New York last March in the first full-scale roundup ever held on AP to put the finishing touches to the organizing campaign. The membership recruiting drive was carried into every bureau, in person or by letters from the committee.

AP has proved a tough opponent ever since Morris Watson, now publicity director for the CIO Longshoremen and Warehousemen, was discharged because he was carrying on organizing activities in the New York City AP bureau.

The Supreme Court ordered Watson reinstated to his job in 1937. The Watson decision was one of five in which the Supreme Court upheld the NLRB and validated the Wagner Act which created the board.

Since 1945 the Guild has bargained on a national basis for all bureaus for which it held bargaining rights. Negotiations for 1948 were stalemated when the AP attempted to revert to bureau-by-bureau bargaining.

When AP handed out cost of living bonuses to all those earning $100 a week and refused to bargain for those making more, the Guild filed unfair labor practices. The charges were withdrawn in order to hold the NLRB election.

Job Decrease Hits Rubber

SHARPLY rising unemployment in the rubber industry will be a principal subject of discussion when the CIO United Rubber Workers executive board meets July 7.

"Reports from our locals throughout the country show that lay-offs and short work-weeks are steadily increasing," Pres. H. R. Lloyd declared.

"Our union will have to map out some plan to protect our membership from the hardship and distress which come from unemployment."

The URW board will also consider further action to back up the union's wage and pension program in the Big Four rubber companies—particularly at Goodrich, where strike votes will be taken in the near future.

"The board will take suitable action to put our union in a position to use all its resources so that we can reach an agreement with Goodrich before Aug. 25," Lloyd said.

"Our big need today is to bolster purchasing power and make jobs available for the younger folks who are being laid off," he added.

Nearly 100,000 rubber workers will be affected by the union's contract talks with the Big Four. Sessions with Goodyear open Aug. 8, and with Firestone at Cleveland on Aug. 16.

Story Of Hooded Violence Holds House Unit Spellbound

By GLORIA CAPLAN

A HOUSE Judiciary subcommittee last week got a whiff of the spirit of the new South when three young Alabama newspapermen—all in their twenties—related the story of hooded night riders and terrorism in their state.

All three have bucked threats against themselves to continue their expose of the lawless mobs. One, in the course of his sleuthing, was beaten by two men.

The six-man sub-committee plus the full committee's chairman Rep. Emanuel Celler (D., N. Y.), sat in rapt attention as the young reporters gave a blow-by-blow account of dynamiting, beatings, and cross-burnings they investigated. The sub-committee is headed by Rep. William Byrne (D., N. Y.).

Clancy Lake, city hall reporter of the Birmingham News, told the Congressmen that a grand jury hearing would be called momentarily in Jefferson County, which includes Birmingham. He predicted there would be "a whole batch of indictments by the time this is over."

Just a few hours after the hearing ended news wires carried the story that Judge J. Russell McElroy, of Jefferson County, had called a special session of the grand jury to investigate the mob violence.

MOST OF THE newspapermen's testimony dealt with five separate instances of night rides and floggings which occurred in Alabama since June 1. No arrests have been made in connection with any of the organized "visits," the witnesses said.

All the post-June 1 disturbances involved white victims. But in March three Negro homes were dynamited, they said, and there have been cross-burnings in front of Negro homes. In some instances, the witnesses named the Ku Klux Klan as the perpetrator of the crime; in others they said they didn't know.

First to relate the story of his investigations was Clarke Stallworth, Birmingham Post reporter, who was beaten himself while covering the outbreaks of violence.

Stallworth said he was asigned on June 20 to investigate some alleged Klan beatings in Dora, Ala., about 25 miles from Birmingham. The incident had occurred on June 3, he said, but for three weeks no word of it seeped into the press.

Stallworth was followed on the stand by Lake, who told of the Dora beatings and four other cases he investigated. The story of the Dora beatings as told by Stallworth and Lake:

AT ABOUT 11 p. m., on June 3, Mrs. Irene Burton, her two daughters, ages 16 and 18, and three men were sitting in the Burton living room when armed hooded figures entered the house, and at gun point herded them into cars outside. Mrs. Burton said the house was surrounded by about 150 hooded men.

About 25 cars were in the cavalcade which wound up a dirt road and stopped four miles away at a secluded wooded spot. During the ride, the younger daughter said the men made filthy remarks to her.

There Mrs. Burton was lashed with a heavy machine belt while her two daughters looked on.

Stallworth said the older daughter was flogged, but Lake testified she was only threatened. The second daughter had a noose placed around her neck and was threatened with hanging.

Troy Morrison and William Lowery were hauled out of the car by a rope; one end of the rope was thrown over a tree limb, and they were pulled to their tip-toes. Then they were lashed six times with the heavy belt, which they estimated to be six feet long. Morrison said blood was still streaming from his wounds when he reached home.

The third man was a cripple. When he told the hoodlums he could not bend over for his lashings, one hooded figure replied: "That's all right; lie down on the ground, and we'll beat your head in." The threat was not carried out however.

Asked what they believed to be the motive for the beatings, the men said they thought they were assaulted because they had been dating Mrs. Burton, a widow, and the two daughters. Mrs. Burton was threatened with hanging if she didn't move. The next day the three Burtons moved five miles away.

IN THE COURSE of his fact-hunting, Stallworth said a woman cab driver in Dora told him that a man at a nearby store wanted to see him about the Klan's activities.

"We're proud of the Klan," he said she told him. "It's the only law we have in Walker County."

At the store Stallworth found a man seated behind a desk in the rear. The reporter told him he was in search of information about the Klan. At that, Stallworth said, the man jumped up exclaiming: "Call me a Klansman, will you? you S. O. B." Then he struck Stallworth, the reporter testified.

Next, Stallworth said, he saw another man heading toward him with a wrench in hand. The three wrestled on the floor for some time. The first pinned him on the floor, Stallworth testified, and told the other to "give it to him." Just then Stallworth broke loose, knocked both men over the counter and ran out.

A few hours later he swore out a warrant for the arrest of his two assailants, who have since been released under $300 bond, Stallworth said. Trial is set for Aug. 1.

The witnesses said this incident is the only one in which arrests were made. They said the Walker County beatings—involving the three men and three women—have not been investigated by county authorities. Lake said the county sheriff was facing impeachment proceedings at the time, and that the chief deputy told him he understood the case just involved a minor beating.

Stallworth was the only victim who has filed a complaint, he said. Morrison, one of those flogged at Dora, said "What good would it do?" Stallworth related. For that reason, he said, Morrison filed no complaint.

Other incidents of hooded night riders in Birmingham and its suburbs were described by Lake.

One involved the dynamiting of three Negro-owned homes in a Birmingham section which had been zoned for whites. Two of the homes were recently bought by Bishop Green, of the African Methodist Church of Birmingham.

Shortly before the dynamitings, a Negro moved into one of the houses. He was immediately visited, Lake said, by a city employe who identified himself as a member of the Klan and ordered the residents to move. Not long afterwards the blasts tore about one-third of each of the three houses to bits.

LAKE SAID the vigorous investigation of the unlawfulness by the Jefferson County authorities was in sharp contrast with the apathy of officials in nearby Walker County, where little or no move has been made by officials to apprehend the hooded riders, he said.

Essentially the same story as that related by the first two reporters was told by Paul Trawick, young editor of the Jasper, Ala., Union News and radio commentator. He told also of numerous cross-burnings—one, he said described by police as a "kids' prank."

Throughout the testimony, Rep. Sam Hobbs (D., Ala.)—a committee visitor—attempted persistently to prove that Committee Chairman Celler had acted out of turn in inviting the reporters to testify in Washington. This failing, he sought to prove that Alabama, through recent passage of a ban on mask-wearing, is handling the problem of nightly terrorism adequately without need of federal help.

Retorted Rep Thomas Lane (D., Mass.): "They also have laws in Alabama outlawing assault and battery, haven't they?"

The sub-committee is studying legislation to provide stronger safeguards for civil rights and to make lynching subject to federal jurisdiction. Rep. Celler has introduced bills dealing with both objectives.

Ku Klux Klan Unmasked In Alabama; Enforce Law Rigidly, Says Folsom

By ROBERT CHRISTOFFERSON

THE MASK WAS ripped off the Ku Klux Klan in Alabama last week. Within minutes after its passage by the House June 28, Gov. James E. Folsom signed into law a measure to prohibit the wearing of masks in public.

The House passed the measure 84 to 4. It took only four minutes and came without a word of argument. The measure became law without even a comma changed since it was introduced in the Senate some weeks ago by Henry H. Mize of Tuscaloosa (scene of recent KKK parades).

Mize, the bill's author, is a young lawyer, a Univ. of Alabama graduate and World War II veteran. He helped prosecute Nazi war criminals by helping set up a war crimes trial branch for the Ninth Army while serving as assistant judge advocate in Germany.

Mize introduced the measure early in the session but couldn't get it up for passage. Then came an outbreak of violence by hooded mobs in and around Birmingham—and the Senate approved the bill after Governor Folsom had sent two special messages demanding speedy action.

The Klan lobbied openly against the measure. But two days before House passage the chairman of the Federated Ku Klux Klan, Inc., Dr. E. P. Pruitt of Birmingham, called on Klansmen to doff their visors, saying the time had come for them to unmask voluntarily.

William Hugh Morris, also of Birmingham, treasurer and director of the KKK, said Pruitt was speaking only for himself and that the Klan would continue its fight against the anti-masking bill.

Pruitt said the Klan would make a legal test to determine its legality.

After signing the measure Governor Folsom issued an executive order to law enforcement officers telling them to enfore it rigidly.

The law makes it a misdemeanor to wear a mask or similar disguise in public. Children under 16 are exempt on Halloween. So are adults taking part in Mardi Gras and other festive occasions. Violators can be fined $500 or sentenced to a year in jail.

The Alabama CIO Council fought for passage of the Mize bill. Secy.-Treas. Eugene M. Wells appeared before the State Legislature to urge its passage.

State CIO Dir. Carey E. Haigler was named a member of a permanent steering committee of 15 set up by Birmingham's "Committee of 500"—a group of church, civic, business and labor leaders who seek to bring to justice the hooded mobs that have been roving the Birmingham district.

Ford Unit Votes To Strike To Back Contract Demands

THE CIO AUTO Workers union has told the Ford Motor Co. it does not want the company's proposed job security offer "in exchange for withdrawal of its economic demands."

Meanwhile, negotiations continued with Ford, and the UAW presented to Chrysler Motor Co. the same proposals it has been pressing at Ford since discussions opened June 2.

FORD MOTOR CO. employes appeared ready to back up their contract demands with a strike if necessary, as first results of a company-wide vote were announced.

CIO Auto Workers Local 228 at the Mound Road plant in Detroit voted 3 to 1 for a walkout. Results in other locals were not announced as the CIO News went to press.

Ford's proposal was rejected in a letter from UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther to John S. Bugas, Ford vice president. Reuther recalled that on March 2 the Ford company had written a letter to the union in which the UAW was asked to forego its economic demands.

Reuther wrote that the reply to the March 2 letter "pointed out that Mr. Henry Ford, president of the Ford Motor Co., had on Nov. 17, 1948, publicly recognized the need of the Ford workers for high wages.

"WE FOUND it difficult at the time we received your letter of March 2 and we find it difficult now to reconcile Mr. Ford's public declaration with your plea to freeze for a period of 18 months the present economic status of the Ford workers."

(The UAW has been seeking a $100-a-month pension for employes over 60 years of age and with 25 years' service; a company-financed medical care program, and a cost-of-living pay increase.)

Reuther said in reply to the query in the Ford letter as to what agreement can be reached which will assure the largest number of steady jobs for Ford employes:

"Our answer is: by increasing the purchasing power of the Ford workers and all other workers so that they can buy the products of farm and industry.

"When you point out that certain industries are 'already affected badly,' it is not difficult to ascertain the reason. The textile and the shoe industries are depressed because insecure auto and other workers cannot buy garments and shoes with their present wages at the artificially high price levels.

"It is further apparent that the textile and the shoe workers will not be customers for Ford automobiles until they have their own purchasing power restored and increased.

"YOUR ANSWER to the question you pose is, in effect, to drag a healthy industry down into the same condition as the few others which in turn will drag other industries and the whole economy down with it.

"Fundamentally, what you claim to offer the Ford workers is job security in exchange for withdrawal of their economic demands. But the 'security' which you offer is counterfeit. It is something you cannot guarantee to deliver because it is contrary to the basic economic facts of life."

Both the Ford and he Chrysler contracts run until 1950, but have reopening clauses.

A Chrysler spokesman said that the negotiations with his company may be delayed despite the UAW's request that they be started June 28.

2 MMSW Aides Fined In Beating

TWO LOCAL officials of the CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers have been found guilty and fined $50 each for alleged assaults on two rival union representatives.

Judge Leon McCarthy, of Ansonia, Conn., City Court, found the two Mine-Mill officials guilty of beating Thomas J. Cooke and William T. Moriarty, who were destributing leaflets outside the American Brass Co. plant on May 27. The leaflets urged workers to join the Progressive Metalworkers Council of the CIO Shipbuilding Workers.

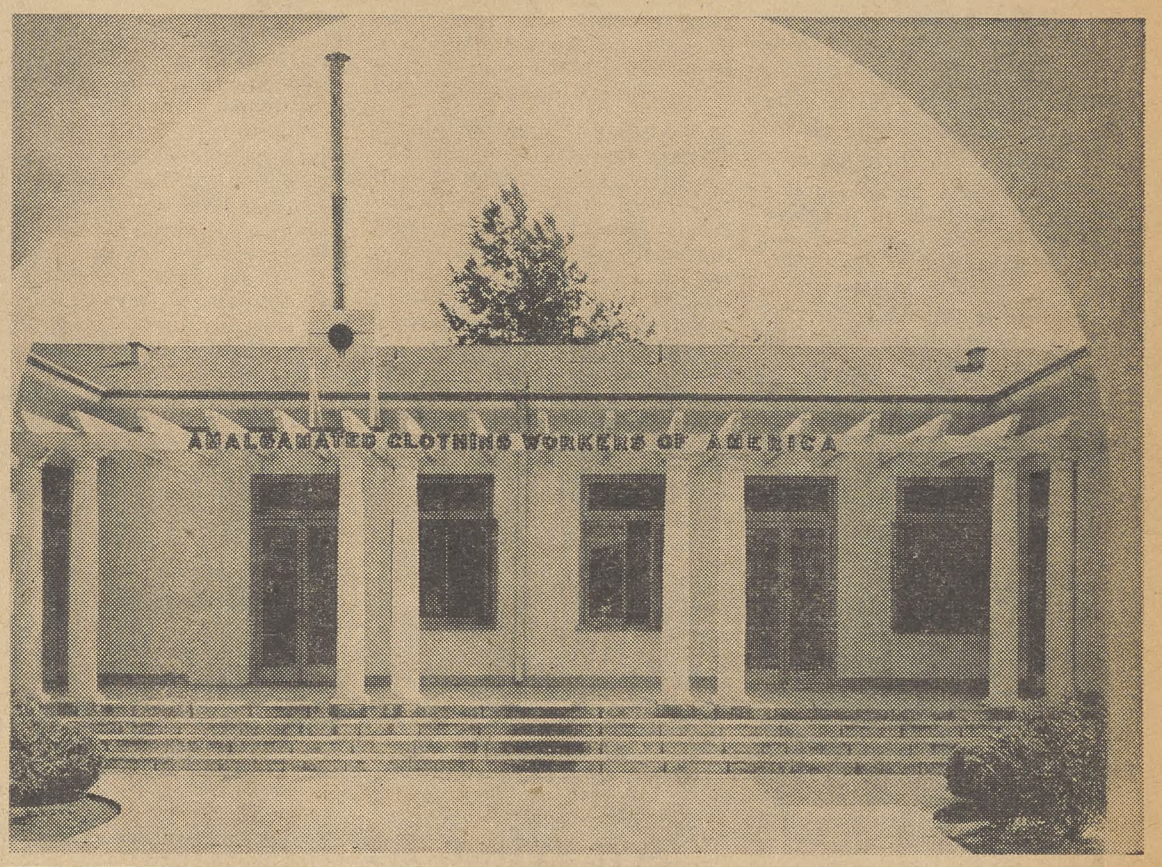
At the same time Judge McCarthy dismissed counter-charges brought by Mine-Mill against the two PMC representatives.

The two found guilty were John Rapuano, president of the Ansonia Mine-Mill local, and "Lefty" Chase, a shop steward of the same union.

Los Angeles Mayor Calls Sanitarium Aided By ACW

'Source Of Pride To Southern California'

NURSE SUPERVISING PATIENT'S occupational therapy work at City of Hope. This is an important part of the services the patients receive during their average stay of 18 months.



THIS BUILDING at the City of Hope sanitarium, near Los Angeles, was donated by the CIO Clothing Workers. This building contains the dining room and kitchen for staff members and visitors. At present eight ACW members or their relatives are patients at the sanitarium. Another building was donated by Local 4, ACW.

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

OUT IN California, not so far from Los Angeles, is a unique institution called the City of Hope. It's a tuberculosis sanitarium founded 37 years ago to administer the best medical service available to trade unionists and other low-income persons, on a free, non-sectarian basis.

The Amalgamated Clothing Workers, one of the CIO's older unions, along with other organized labor groups, played a major role in helping establish this institution at Duarte, Calif.—formerly known as the Los Angeles Sanitarium. ACW continues to make substantial contribution towards its upkeep.

Patients at the City of Hope come mostly from the ranks of organized labor. The average stay is 18 months, but a number have been there from six to eight years. In 1948, more than 110,000 hospital days of care were given free.

Many of these patients were from the ranks of the CIO Clothing Workers. At present eight ACW members or relatives of members are confined at the sanitarium.

AMONG THE modern buildings on the extensive grounds of the City of Hope are two structures contributed by the Amalgamated. One is a dining and recreation hall in a wing built by the national ACW. The other—the Dr. Moses I. DeVorkin Memorial Hospital—is the gift of the ACW's New York Clothing Cutters Union, Local Big Four.

Plans are also under way to add a Memorial Building in honor of Sidney Hillman, the union's deceased president, who was a warm supporter of the sanitarium and frequently visited it. On his last visit a short time before his death, Hillman said:

"Every time I visit the sanitarium at Duarte, I find changes and improvements, all in the interest of better service to the sick. It just goes to show what can be done if men and women take an interest in their sisters and brothers."

In November 1948, Amalgamated leaders in Los Angeles, headed by Joint Board Manager Jerome Posner took steps to start the Sidney Hillman Memorial fund for the City of Hope.

Mayor Fletcher Bowron of Los Angeles gave his hearty support to the plan. "The work being done at this long-term illness hospital has always been a source of pride to Southern California," he said.

"The addition of a Memorial Building bearing the name of America's greatest labor statesman, will add immeasurably to the great contribution of healing which is being built there."

THE CAMPAIGN was formally launched last March at a dinner attended by representatives of labor and management in the men's clothing industry from the West Coast and other garment centers throughout the country.

"We believe that it is only fitting to pay homage to this great labor statesman by founding in his name a national memorial to perpetuate his memory," said Morris Jackman, chairman of the sponsoring committee.

ACW Pres. Jacob Potofsky, who visited the City of Hope with a group of other officials from the union after the National CIO convention last November, called the sanitarium "one of the nation's outstanding medical institutions," which has carried on a "relentless and successful battle against tuberculosis."

"By virtue of its treatment and care, thousands of laboring people have been returned to their families, homes and jobs," he said. "This great fortress of healing deserves our continued and increased support."

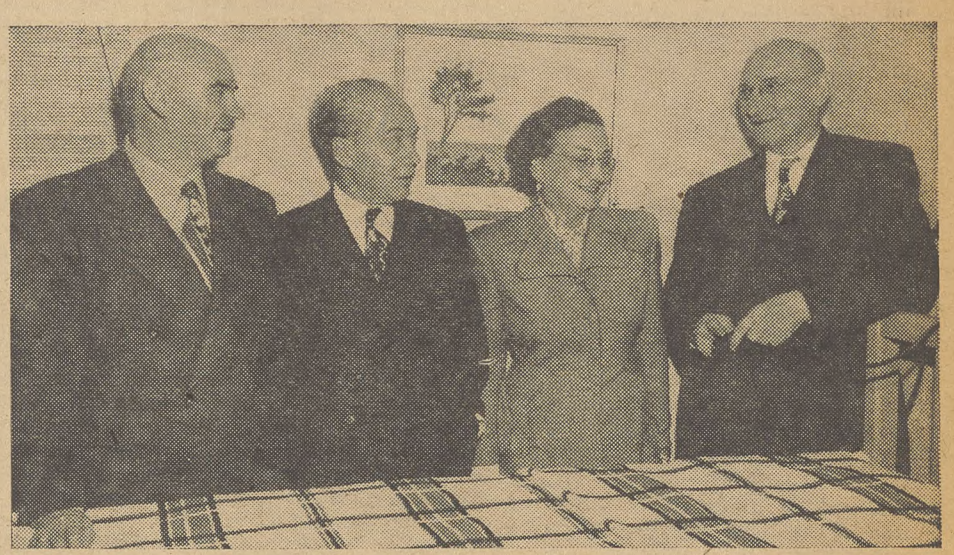
THE CITY OF HOPE'S patients come from all over the United States and a few from foreign countries. At present the institution has a bed capacity of about 300.

Established to care for victims of tuberculosis, the City of Hope now also treats those suffering from cancer and other major chest diseases. Through its extensive facilities for surgery, medical research, vocational rehabilitation and occupational therapy, the institution makes available the finest and most up-to-date scientific care to its patients.

The City of Hope's present annual maintenance budget is around $1 million. Daily maintenance cost per patient is $12.50 which, in addition to hospital care, surgery, and drugs, also includes recreation, vocational training, occupational therapy and educational courses.

Funds to maintain the sanitarium come directly from trade unions, from labor-management campaigns, and from more than a hundred City of Hope auxiliaries all over the United States.

THE 300 RESIDENTS of the City of Hope, victims of tuberculosis, and other major chest diseases require extensive and constant care. Here a doctor and nurse are shown checking cultures in one of the hospital's laboratories.



ACW OFFICIALS visit the City of Hope. L. to r., Jerome Posner, manager, Los Angeles Joint Board; Exec. Vice-Pres. Hyman Blumberg; Vice-Pres. Bessie Hillman; and Gen. Secy.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum.

ILWU Helping WFTU

DESPITE the severence of CIO ties with the Communist-dominated WFTU, the executive board of the Longshoremen and Warehousemen last week instructed the union's president, Harry Bridges, to attend WFTU-sponsored conference of maritime unions at Marseille, France, July 13-15.

It is doubtful whether Bridges will be able to attend the meeting. He is under indictment on a charge of perjuring himself in his application for citizenship. The Federal District court has refused his request to leave the country.

Apparently taking no chances that the ILWU would be unrepresented at the Marseille meeting, the union's board also elected one of its members, John Maletta, Seattle, Wash., as a delegate, and Secy.-Treas. Louis Goldblatt and 2nd Vice-Pres. Germain Bulcke as alternates.

THIS ACTION was taken in face of the following resolution adopted at the May meeting of the CIO Executive Board which Bridges attended:

"All members of the board who are unwilling to enforce the constitution and carry out the instructions of the conventions; and, between conventions, the decisions of the board, are called upon to resign.

"All unions affiliated with CIO who are represented in this board by members unwilling to (do the above) are called upon to insist upon the resignation of such representatives and to nominate successor representatives who are willing and will comply."

The CIO Board at the May meeting decided that "it shall be contrary to CIO policy for any affiliate, officer or executive board member of the CIO to have organizational relationships to the WFTU or any of its agencies."

New World Labor Unit Planned At Geneva

FORMAL plans for the creation of a new democratic international labor federation took shape last week, and a convention date has been set for about Nov. 10 in Europe.

Representatives of both CIO and AFL and of labor organizations in 33 other countries reached agreement June 25-26 at Geneva, Switzerland, to move ahead rapidly toward formation of the new group. Many of the organizations joining the Geneva conference had formerly been affiliated with the Communist-dominated World Federation of Trade Unions.

Speaking for CIO at Geneva were Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey; Michael Ross, director of international affairs; and John Brophy, director of industrial union councils. Carey and Brophy are expected to return to Washington in mid-July.

Ross will speak for CIO at a meeting of the preparations committee which is scheduled for London July 25. No exact place or date has been set for the new organization's constitutional convention, but press reports from Geneva indicated that it might start between Nov. 10 and 13. The CIO convention at Cleveland will probably not be over until Nov. 4.

Some 127 delegates attended the Geneva meeting, at which the decision to create the new international movement was taken, and they represented an estimated 43 million workers throughout the world.

DISPATCHES from the Swiss capital indicated that the high degree of harmony and cooperation between CIO and AFL spokesmen caused a big impression among the delegates from other nations.

Carey, according to press reports, told the delegates:

"We of the CIO come here in the spirit of international solidarity and we are in this work heart and soul."

Asked about possibilities that unions in other countries might try to exploit AFL-CIO differences for political reasons within the new federation, Carey said that "on this business there aren't any differences."

Secy.-Treas. George Meany of the AFL, noting earlier disputes between CIO and AFL on international labor problems, told the meeting that "for us there is no turning back to the past, which is finished and done with."

Carey pointed out that "Communist-dominated trade unions will find no welcome here," but he added that the new organization must be far more than merely anti-Communist. "We're here to create," he said.

PRESIDING at the Geneva meeting was Paul Finet, secretary of the Belgian Confederation of Labor, and Vincent Tewson of the British Trades Union Congress was made secretary.

A note of welcome was sounded to the meeting, held in the beautiful Swiss lakeside city, by Pres. Robert Bratschi of the Swiss Trade Union Federation.

"The new organization will be an organization of trade unions which are independent of the employers, but which, on the other hand, in their relations with the state, are equally free to reach their own decisions," he declared.

Discussing the split in the World Federation of Trade Unions which led to plans for formation of the new democratic organization, Bratschi said:

"The trade unions of Communist allegiance have not modified their aims and tactics since the second world war. It became ever more evident that they were seeking to use the WFTU as an instrument of their policy, and this line was particularly noticeable in connection with the European Recovery Program."

ONE FLURRY during the two-day meeting came when delegates from the Argentine General Federation of Labor, sponsored by the Peron government, walked out in protest against the seating of Jacinto Oddone, militant anti-Peron figure who is in exile from his country. Oddone heads the independent Union Action Committee of Argentina.

There seemed, according to a New York Times report, little inclination to keep the Peron group from leaving the meeting. The same dispatch said it was evident from many speeches that "the Argentine Federation probably would not be invited to join the permanent organization on the ground that it is not an independent labor movement."

Representatives of the Lebanon unions also sought to bar the Israeli delegation but lost their appeal. CIO Secy.-Treas. Carey supported the Israeli unions in the debate.

The new organization will be pledged to aid unions in underdeveloped countries, to work to secure world peace, to seek promotion of public welfare, to help rebuild war-devastated nations, and to promote full employment and higher living standards everywhere.

COUNTRIES represented at the Geneva meeting were: Argentina, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Brazil, Great Britain, Canada, Chile, Cuba, Denmark, France, Germany, Greece, India, Iran, Italy, Israel, Japan, Lebanon, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Panama, Dominican Republic, South Africa, Spain (exiled group), Sweden, Switzerland, Siam, Trieste, U.S.A., and Uruguay.

Vacations Begin For 350,000 ACW Member

Vacations with pay estimated at approximately $30,000,000 began last week for 375,000 members of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers, according to ACW Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky.

Workers in the clothing and allied industries under the Amalgamated jurisdiction will also receive an extra day's pay for the July 4 holiday.

ECA Cuts Dangerous —Murray

AMERICAN aid to Europe has helped stem the rise of Communism, and the recovery program should not now be hampered by "penny-pinching" economies, CIO Pres. Murray warned the Senate last week.

In a letter to Sen. McKellar (D. Tenn.) who heads the powerful Senate Appropriations Committee, Murray urged that the Economic Cooperation Administration be granted the full budget requested by Administrator Paul Hoffman.

"Whatever we can do to bolster the standard of living of European workers at the present time will strengthen the cause of free trade unionism and democracy in Europe," Pres. Murray declared.

"The stakes are too high to run the risk of endangering European recovery so as to save a billion dollars in 1950."

Pres. Murray said that with the advent of the Marshall Plan, "a definite turning point was reached" in the influence of Communists in both governmental and trade union organizations throughout western Europe.

"WHEREVER economics misery thrived in Europe, there communism increased its strength" in the post-war years, Murray reminded Sen. McKellar. After ECA went into operation, however, "the western European countries began to meet pre-war production schedules" and "non-Communist labor forces found it possible to support a constructive economic program independent of the Communists who opposed the existing governments."

"In Scandinavia, the Benelux nations and England, communism, although never a challenge to the over-all labor movement, received a severe setback this year in those areas where it had gained a foothold," Murray said.

"In the crucial countries of France and Italy, the Communists for the first time since the end of the war have been seriously challenged by new non-Communist labor federations. Much credit can be given to the Marshall Plan for providing enough economic revival to make this inmovement possible."

THE CIO PRESIDENT said that much remains to be done to strengthen democratic institutions in Europe. The new labor movements in France and Italy "are still precariously weak," he said, "and their success is dependent on the extent to which they can improve the economic conditions within their own countries."

"Any sizeable cut at this time" in ECA appropriations, Murray wrote, "would inflict hardships upon Western Europe's program for recovery" and might mean the difference between "increasing political stability and throwing the balance of power to the Communists" in some countries.

Recalling that the CIO has been among the most active supporters of the European Recovery Program, Murray described the aid program as a "constructive approach to world peace and to world prosperity . . . Those who recommend a cross-the-board cut in ECA's appropriations do so either from a misunderstanding of the program or because they are not interested in reviving Europe . . ."

Economic Outlook Says:

Federal Aid Only Way To Improve Nation's Schools

THE CIO Economic Outlook said last week that federal aid to education is the only method to improve the nation's schools and to "destroy the glaring inequalities in educational opportunity" throughout the country.

At the same time the Outlook—published by the CIO Dept. of Education and Research—derided as a "bugaboo" the criticism of opponents of federal aid to education that would result in federal control of schools.

"No responsible organization wants federal control of education," the Outlook said. "Congress is attempting to avoid this."

The Senate has passed a bill to grant financial aid to the states, and a companion measure approved by a subcommittee, (HR 4643), is awaiting action by the House Labor Committee.

Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) has introduced a bill to allocate $3 billion to states for school construction. The measure is being considered by a Senate Labor subcommittee. Several bills have been introduced in the House to provide funds for school construction.

"Many of our school systems suffer from unrepresenattive school boards dominiated mainly by business groups which are not representative of all groups in the community," the Outlook says. This type is more dangerous to the development of democratic schools than is the so-called federal control.

"Those who shout the loudest about the dangers of 'federal conrol' see little or no danger in 'business control' of our public schools."

THE OUTLOOK pointed out that hundreds of organizations, representing "a cross-section of American life," have endorsed the principle of federal aid to education. It listed "only a few"—including the Chamber of Commerce, the National Association of Manufacturers and the Daughters of the American Revolution—as opposed to the bill.

The Outlook recalled that a series of studies of American schools have shown "differences as great as 60 to one in the amount of money spent on educating children in various parts of the United States."

Differences between states run as high as 4½-1, the Outlook added, in terms of expenditures per pupil, and three to one in teachers' salaries.

"These comparisons of differences between states hide many of the inequalities within each state," the publication noted. Thus, city students and teachers are faring much better than those in rural areas; and 1945-46 figures reveal great inequalities on the part of Negro children in the 17 states and the District of Columbia which maintain segregated school systems.

FIGURES SHOW that $57.57 was spent on each Negro child in segregated schools, compared to $104.66 for each white pupil. Negro teachers in the same states were paid an average annual salary of only $828, while white teachers received $1,512.

"It is assumed that in these states much of the federal money will have to be spent in equalizing educational opportunities," the Outlook said.

The Outlook said that low salaries make it "almost impossible to recruit the kind of young people necessary for the teaching profession," and some 300,000 of our "best-trained" teachers left the profession during the war.

About half the nation's teachers were paid less than $2,400 in 1947-48, the Outlook reported, and only 8.8% were paid more than $4,000 a year. "Teachers' salaries have hardly kept pace with the increase in the cost of living since 1940," the CIO publication said.

Recalling that labor has always stood in the forefront of those seeking improvement and extension of the public school system, the Outlook pointed out that unions have felt in recent years that "in order to guarantee every child in the United States an adequate education, we must have federal aid to education."

Govt. Moves To Break DuPont Hold On GM, U. S. Rubber

THE FEDERAL government, filing civil suits against three of the country's leading corporations, has embarked on its most important anti-trust case since the Rockefeller-controlled Standard Oil empire was broken up early this century.

The suit, filed by Atty. Gen. Tom Clark, named the DuPont Company, General Motors and United States Rubber, which it described as "the largest single concentration of industrial power" in the nation.

It accused the defendants—among them, 128 members of the DuPont family—with "combining and conspiring" to violate the anti-trust laws in the "development, production, manufacture, distribution and sale" or articles produced by the three giant corporations.

The suit asked that the DuPont Co.—largest controlling interest in General Motors—be required to sell all of its stock in General Motors. It also called for court orders that members of the DuPont family be forced to sell all their stock in U. S. Rubber.

NAMED IN the suit were the three companies—DuPont, GM and U. S. Rubber; 128 individuals in the multi-millionaire DuPont family, including the three most prominent heads of the clan—Pierre, Lammot and Irenee; and the Christiana Securities Co. and the Delaware Realty & Investment Corp., described as personal holding companies for the DuPonts.

Members of the DuPont family own the two holding companies, which in turn control E. I. DuPont de Nemours. That firm holds the controlling interest in General Motors. The 128 individual DuPonts, related by either "blood or marriage" hold shares either in the Christiana or Delaware holding corporations, or directly in U. S. Rubber.

DuPont, General Motors and U. S. Rubber had combined assets of $4¼ billion dollars in 1947, made sales of over $5 billion and had net income after taxes of close to half a billion dollars in 1947, the government said. (Last year, General Motors alone made nearly that much in profits).

THE SUIT charged that the DuPont Co., GM and U. S. Rubber are forced by directives of the controlling owners to buy "substantially all" the products they need from among the three firms, thus freezing out other possible suppliers.

DuPont, it added, "controls the selection of officers and directors, as well as the policies, of both GM and U. S. Rubber." DuPont, it added, "forced" both GM and U. S. Rubber to expand their fields of production and to produce new products "for the purpose of enlarging the closed and guaranteed market" for the sale of DuPont products.

General Motors received "subsidization" from DuPont, the government suit charged, through "systematic secret rebates and preferential prices," and GM bought tires from U. S. Rubber also at "preferential prices."

The case against the three big corporations has been in preparation for two years, the Justice Dept. said. It probably will be in the courts for years to come.

Carson Stands Firm Under Brewster 'Inquisition'

DESPITE a bruising, table-pounding "inquisition" by Sen. Brewster (R., Me.), John Carson, Truman's nominee for the Federal Trade Commission, has refused to disown his liberal views.

Now Washington representative of the Cooperative League of the U.S.A., Carson has since 1918 been active in national affairs—first as a newspaper reporter, then as secretary and economic adviser to the late Sen. Couzens of Michigan. Later he was secretary of the U.S. Maritime Commission and Consumers Counsel for the Bituminous Coal Commission.

"I confess I am proud of some of these achievements," Carson told the Senate, Interstate Commerce Committee, which must pass on the Carson appointment. He listed his work as staff director for the LaFollette investigation of unemployment in 1926, drafted the first bill for a Federal Communication Commission, was active in drafting the law for a Federal Power Commission, and helped to develop the Securities & Exchange Commission.

The Federal Trade Commission, Carson said, "has always appealed to me because it offers an opportunity for remedial rather than simply punitive measures." He added that "I have always been in favor of, and sought, sound business competition."

Brewster sought to trap Carson by a series of courtroom-type questions.

He pounded first at a statement Carson made in 1945 as a witness at housing hearings, in which the FTC nominee had referred to the "death rattles" of "competitive profit capitalism" as beginning in 1929.

Carson explained that the statement came from a book by a distinguished Catholic priest.

Much of his belief that the people should be encouraged to do everything possible to help themselves, and that government institutions should be shaped with this as the primary objective, grew out of the unemployment investigation and the experience of 1929 and the depression, Carson recalled.

"Any of us who worked in the Senate Office Building in those days," Carson asserted, "will never forget the bands of angry men who roamed through the building uttering their threats." He related how, one night when the Senate was in session and he was on the floor with Couzens, Capitol officials came in and warned the Senators not to cross the plaza on the way to their offices, because of the crowd of unemployed outside.

"I am a little bit fearful of rising unemployment again," Carson added, "and that we may experience another situation as we had in 1929. I want to do everything I can to prevent it."

Leftist Quits Council

A belated echo of the rightwing-leftwing battle within the Minnesota CIO was heard when Rex Kildow, business agent of United Public Workers Local 515, resigned from the state executive board. He was the last remaining left-winger. Kildow also pulled the local out of the state CIO council.

Paper Mill Pact Hailed

THE CIO PAPER Workers last week reported that a new contract negotiated for the 1700 workers in the board mill and the box plant of the Consolidated Paper Co., Monroe, Mich., provides the highest average wages in the industry.

The hourly and the incentive base rates were both boosted five cents an hour. The average hourly take-home pay is over $1.90 an hour, including overtime, and the average straight-time hourly rate is about $1.70.

Other improvements include: hospital benefits boosted for $6 to $8 a day; incidental hospitalization expenses upped from $60 to $80; sickness and accident benefits increased from $12 to $21 a week; all employes who retire this year under the pension plan to receive the same Christmas bonus as the other employes.

The day the contract was ratified the company passed out vacation checks totaling $435,000.

UE Pension Plan 'One of the Best'

A new contract containing what local union leaders call "one of the best pension plans found anywhere in the industry" has been signed by Local 450, CIO Electrical Workers, with the Sperry Gyroscope Co. in New York City.

Besides the pension gains, the union won a $5 wage increase. Also included in the contract are sick leave, life insurance and disability and health benefits.

Paul Jennings, Local president, and Thomas Kitilson, secretary of the union negotiating comittee, said employes contribute about one hour's pay each week to the pension fund. At 65, after 25 years of participation, they receive a pension equalling 71% of their weekly pay. Weekly pay now averages $66 a week at the plant.

Some 4500 hourly and salaried workers are covered by the plan. The union is a right-wing local of the Electrical Workers.

Labor-Farm Councils Advocated in Michigan

Formation of a joint co-ordinating councils of industrial, agricultural and professional workers in each county or community has been urged by the Michigan CIO executive board as a means of furthering an understanding and appreciation of the problems confronting each group.

The councils should draw up specific plans for Farmer-Labor cooperation within their own community, or on a Statewide basis, such as established in county or state fairs, the board declared.

"There Once Was A Union Maid"

Twenty-seven Indian maids employed at the Pembroke Manufacturing Co., Pembroke, N. C., have joined the CIO.

The Indian girls are joining the wigwam of the CIO Clothing Workers. Their new affiliation was greeted with a ceremonial whoop of joy both on the part of the new members and the parent organization.

The girls are all full blooded Cherokees, a fighting line in its own right, which blended with the CIO's militant battle for rights for workers should prove a mighty tough road for any management inclined to hedge on the rights and wages of its employes.

SEAMEN KNOW they get fair treatment at hiring halls, one of which is shown here, but U. S. Circuit of Appeals in New York last week ruled that they are illegal under T-H. The CIO Natl. Maritime Union said that it will request a re-hearing. If that effort fails, the case will be appealed to the Supreme Court. Hiring halls replaced the "shape-up," where a seaman frequently had to bribe the foreman to get a job. Ship owners, too, are in favor of keeping the hiring halls. (See Page 12.)

T-H Action Urged By Truman

RADIO AND newspaper columnists are gleefully announcing to the world that chances for repeal of Taft-Hartley, or even any serious modification of it, are dead as a door nail for this session.

But that's not what the man in the White House (or the Blair House) thinks. Last week, Pres. Truman, still striving to carry out his campaign pledges and still confident that the people want T-H killed, expressed the hope that the House would come up with a measure that would accomplish that end.

The House two months ago recommitted the Wood Bill, which resembled the Taft Bill passed recently by the Senate. The House Labor Committee is awaiting the return to Washington of Chairman John Lesinski (D., Mich.).

Kenneth Douty

Douty Named To ECA Post

Economic Cooperation Administrator Paul G. Hoffman has announced the appointment of Kenneth Douty, Georgia State Director of the CIO Textile Workers, as labor advisor to the ECA mission to France.

At the same time, Hoffman announced the naming of Al Desser, of the AFL Ladies' Garment Workers, as deputy to Douty. The TWUA representative replaces Michael S. Harris, former Steelworkers' regional director, who has been appointed ECA mission chief in Sweden.

Douty had held the Georgia TWUA post since 1945 and takes the ECA post on leave. During the war, he served with the War Production Board and the War Manpower Commission. He is 39 and a graduate of Washington College, Md.

The CIO Screen Publicists Guild has announced that the Columbia picture "Lust For Gold" had been awarded the Guild's First Annual Award after close balloting among the publicists employed in the major motion picture companies in New York City.

Housing Bill Goes To Truman After Final Passage By Congress

Sen. Sparkman

Sen. Flanders

Rep. Javits

Rep. Buchanan

Rep. Spence

These Senators and Representatives played leading roles in the passage of the Truman Administration's housing bill. Sens. Sparkman (Ala.), Douglas (Ill.), and Reps. Helen Douglas (Cal.), Spence (Ky.), Buchanan (Pa.) are Democrats. Sens. Tobey (N. H.), Flanders (Vt.) and Rep. Javits (N. Y.) are Republicans.

Sen. Douglas

Sen. Tobey

Rep. Douglas

A VOICE VOTE in both houses of Congress put the administration's housing bill, as ironed out by a conference committee, finally through the Congress.

With the President's signature, expected as the CIO News went to press, the bill becomes law, and plans for the construction of public housing projects will get underway immediately.

CIO legislative representatives expressed disappointment, however, that an amendment, adopted in the House version, was dropped by the conference committee. The amendment would have assured slum dwellers displaced by a slum clearance program of receiving priority in the new project erected in that area.

The amendment was first proposed by the CIO and had the support of such groups as the Natl. Association for the Advancement of Colored People and other liberal organizations.

The CIO's leading role in pushing passage of the bill was repeatedly referred to throughout debate in the Senate and House by opponents of the measure. Similar credit was given the CIO by the Natl. Association of Real Estate boards in its anti-public housing literature.

Auto Dealers Indicted in Corrupt Election Practices Charges

A Federal grand jury at Detroit, which was studying illegal corporate contributions to Republican Party campaign funds in 1946 and 1948 has returned indictments against 11 Wayne County Ford dealers. Charged with making donations of $4,914 in violation of the Federal Corrupt Practices Act, the 11 dealers face possible maximum penalties of $5,000 fines for the corporations and one year imprisonment and $1,000 fines for the individuals.

Ask Court To Rescind Rent Boost

THE Massachusetts United Labor Committee last week asked a three-man federal court to kill a rent increase decreed for the Greater Boston area by Housing Expediter Tighe Woods.

Participants in the suit against Woods are the CIO, AFL, Railroad Brotherhoods, machinists and Americans for Democratic Action.

The increase, ordered last April, ranged from 2% to 17% on houses containing four or less units. It had been previously recommended by the local rent advisory board at a meeting attended by nine of the board's 16 members. Seven voted for the hike.

The labor group urged the court to declare the order illegal because it was based solely on a tax rise in the area. The 1949 rent law, it was argued, requires that general increases be based on a loss in net operating income, rather than an increase in any one cost item.

ANOTHER reason the increase was illegal, charged the complainants, was that the local board issued the recommendation without holding formal, open hearings.

Robert M. Segal, the committee's attorney, argued the case before the Emergency Court of Appeals in Boston. Working with him on the case are Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO general counsel, and Herbert Thatcher, of AFL counsel.

If the labor group wins the case, according to Goldberg, it would prepare the way for mullifying rent increases in other areas, principally Los Angeles County, where increases were predicated solely on tax rises.

In his reply to the complainants' arguments, Woods held that the intent of Congress was to "liberalize the adjustment provisions" for landlords.

Absent Because Of Funeral Rites

Last week, the CIO News, carrying key roll calls on the Housing Bill, listed Rep. John J. Rooney (D., N. Y.) as "absent" on both roll calls. "Absent" was explained as not voting, absent or paired. Rep. Rooney was paired in favor of the bill.

After we went to press we discovered that Rep. Rooney was necessarily absent because of the death of his mother. Rep. Rooney has consistently supported housing and other New Deal and Fair Deal measures.

Protest Jim Crow

A strong protest against the discriminatory policy practiced by the Grand Rapids (Mich.) Milner Hotel has been forwarded to hotel manager Edward Meilicke by Barney Hopkins, Michigan CIO Secretary-Treasurer. Hopkins also forwarded a copy of the resolution on hotel discrimination passed by the Michigan CIO Council. It was during the state convention last month that the Milner refused to house Negro delegates.

Steelworkers To Act On Big Steel's 'No, No...'

MOUNTING strike sentiment among steel industry employes brought the federal government into the dispute between the CIO Steelworkers and giant U. S. Steel.

Cyrus Ching, director of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service, summoned representatives of both sides to Washington for a conference in an effort to stave off a walkout.

Possibility of a strike erupted full blast when negotiations broke off after U. S. Steel's flat refusal to bend on any of the union's demands.

The Steelworkers immediately scheduled a July 12 session of its wage policy committee to discuss a plan of action for dealing with U. S. Steel's categorical "no." The conference will be held four days before the July 16 strike deadline set by the contract.

The giant corporation, after arguing since the start of negotiations that pensions aren't arguable, finally gave the union a crisp brushoff. Its answer to the union:

• "No" on wage increases: "We are convinced that no sound reasons justify an increase at this time."

(The union argues that the best way to avert a depression is to increase purchasing power through higher wages, thus setting off a chain of stepped-up economic activity—increased buying, increased production and increased employment.)

• "No" on pensions: "We propose that this issue of whether or not the contract can now be reopened by the union on this subject be presented . . . to the board of conciliation and arbitration for decision."

(Murray pointed out the company told the union it would consider such an opinion as advisory only.)

• On insurance: ". . . only on the express understanding that the cost of such insurance shall be divided equally between the companies and the participating employes."

(This type insurance plan was rejected by the union last year. The Steelworkers are insisting on a company-paid plan)

Having thus rejected all the union's demands, the U. S. Steel negotiators stalked out of the conference.

COMMENTED union and CIO Pres. Philip Murray: "The conferences are deadlocked. There is no hope, as I see it at the present moment, of a mutually satisfactory agreement being reached on any of the issues."

Murray, at a press conference, angrily accused the corporation of "failing to make a genuine effort to bargain for a new wage contract."

"In fact," he continued, "the corporation has made no genuine effort to do more than indulge in the slightest semblance of collective bargaining."

Whereas the corporation had demanded full details of the union's arguments in writing—and then asked a 10-day recess in which to study the documents, Murray said, the corporation failed to treat the union with similar consideration. All the union received was a simple verbal "no," he said.

The union head said that if there is a strike, 500,000 workers in 189 basic steel companies would be immediately affected. If the walkout dragged out over a long period, one million employes in 835 companies would be idle as contracts expire and plants shut down for lack of steel.

• • •

IN THE AUTO industry, where the Ford contract is up for complete re-negotiation and Chrysler's agreement is open for wages, the picture resembled that in steel.

Having just wound up a 71-day strike at the big Bendix Aviation plant at South Bend, Ind., the CIO Auto Workers received the first wave of refusals on wages, pensions, and insurance from the two companies.

Chrysler's cry, like U. S. Steel's, was that the union demands are not "subject to negotiation" under the present reopening. (Both pensions and insurance plans have been defined by the NLRB and the courts as a part of wages.)

Like U. S. Steel, too, Chrysler professed to be concerned about "preventing downward adjustments of cost" if it granted union demands. This concern for the consumer's pocketbook failed to touch the union too deeply.

"Certainly you and the Chrysler Corp. cannot be serious . . ." chided UAW Chrysler Dir. Norman Matthews in a letter to Robert W. Conder, Chrysler labor relations director, "when Chrysler is the only one of the major auto manufacturers which has failed in the past year to reduce the price of its cars."

At Ford the reluctance with which the company was approaching contract talks prompted UAW Pres. Walter Reuther to suggest to the company that "we curtail our correspondence course and get on with the practical job of collective bargaining."

Ford workers last week voted overwhelmingly to strike if no settlement is reached.

Responsibility Rests Entirely With U. S. Steel

PHILIP MURRAY, president of the CIO Steelworkers, made the following statement after U. S. Steel abruptly rejected all union demands:

The collective bargaining conferences between the United Steelworkers of America and the United States Steel Corporation have broken off. The responsibility for this rests entirely with the United States Steel Corporation.

From the very beginning of the conferences on June 15 the Corporation has failed and refused to bargain in good faith with the Union. Throughout the conferences the Union has made every effort to arrive at a mutually satisfactory agreement with the company. To this end the Union presented carefully prepared and documented reasons supporting its wage proposals. The Union furnished to the Corporation a mass of both oral and written evidence supporting its just demands. The Corporation has made no genuine effort to meet the Union's contentions on any of the wage proposals. In fact, the Corporation has made no genuine effort to do more than indulge in the slightest semblance of collective bargaining.

At the very outset of the negotiations the Corporation, through the medium of a prepared release to the press, expressed its prior determination to deny the Union's demands. Yesterday's statement by the Corporation is only a reiteration of the decision arrived at before the commencement of the negotiations.

This is not collective bargaining. The duty to bargain means good faith bargaining. Good faith means that the Corporation is obligated to negotiate with an open rather than a closed mind. Yet it must be apparent that in these collective bargaining conferences the Corporation throughout has had a closed rather than an open mind.

IN THE negotiations the Union, as part of its wage proposals, asked for reasonable pensions for the employes of the Corporation who reach retirement age. The Union asserted that the Corporation is morally, contractually and legally obligated to bargain with the Union on pensions as well as the other wage proposals made by the Union. In support of this position, the Union presented to the Corporation a carefully documented legal brief prepared by the Union's General Counsel and an exhaustive actuarial analysis prepared by Mr. Murray Latimer, an outstanding expert in the pension and social insurance field.

Mr. Latimer's analysis, in large part, is based upon U. S. Steel Corporation statistics. These reveal that this affluent Corporation is currently paying to its workers upon their retirement, at age 65, after years of devoted service, a miserly pension which averages less than $5.00 per month for each such employe.

This is the average pension. Many employes who have given a life time of service to the Corporation, in some cases as much as 50 years, receive no pension whatsoever. These are the plain and uncontrovertible facts presented by the Union to the Corporation. They have not, they cannot be denied by the Corporation.

The Corporation, likewise, has never answered the legal memorandum of the Union's General Counsel establishing beyond any doubt that it is the duty of the Corporation, both under the contract and under the National Labor Relations Act, to bargain with the Union, in good faith, on the pension issue.

In lieu of an answer, the Corporation now proposes that the issue of whether or not the contract can now be reopened by the Union on the pension subject be presented to the Board of Conciliation and Arbitration for decision. This is not a bona fide arbitration proposal.

The Board of Conciliation and Arbitration provided for in the contract between the company and the Union is, as a result of the Corporation's own action, not functioning at the present time. The Corporation several months ago requested and obtained the resignation of the impartial chairman of the Board, and he has not been replaced. Consequently, there is no impartial arbitrator functioning under the contract to whom the matter could be submitted.

Furthermore, the Corporation is not willing to submit the subject matter of pensions as such to arbitration. Its offer was restricted to the issue of its obligation to bargain on this subject. There is no occasion to arbitrate this issue since the Union has already established the duty of the Corporation both under the contract and under the applicable law to bargain on pensions as well as the other wage proposals made by the Union.

Finally, in answer to the Union's inquiry as to the meaning of its arbitration offer, the Corporation stated to the collective bargaining conference that it would not submit to the arbitrator the question of its legal obligation to bargain, but by its proposal merely seeks an advisory opinion from the arbitrator as to its contractual obligation. This further limitation on the Corporation's arbitration proposal labels the proposition to be the meaningless gesture it obviously is.

MR. LATIMER'S analysis likewise presents a reasoned statement supporting the Union's social insurance proposals. The analysis, which is based upon the Joint Fact Finding Report agreed upon by Union and company representatives, shows that the United States Steel Corporation today is contributing less than 1/5c per hour for social insurance benefits for its employes.

The proposal made by the Corporation to the conference yesterday contemplates that the Corporation will contribute an additional picayune sum of 2c per hour for social insurance benefits, but only upon the condition that the employes contribute a like amount. This is a shocking proposal.

The net effect of the Corporation's proposal is a wage cut to the employes of 2c per hour, since this amount would be deducted from the pay of the employes.

In addition, the Corporation proposes that although the employes would be forced to contribute to the cost of this insurance, the plan would be administered solely by the Corporation. No self-respecting Union could accept such a proposal.

DURING THE course of the conferences the Union presented an exhaustive economic brief prepared by its Research Department, demonstrating that the Steelworkers need a wage increase and that the industry can grant an increase without raising prices. The Union's analysis clearly showed that most Steelworkers do not receive enough wages to support themselves and their families, even in accordance with the minimum family budget prepared by an impartial government agency, the Bureau of Labor Statistics. The Union further demonstrated that a wage increase is imperatively required to support our economy and to prevent a repetition of the 1929 bust.

The economic case of the Union proved beyond any doubt that the industry can afford to grant a substantial wage increase without raising prices, and in fact can grant such an increase and reduce prices at the same time.

In the year 1948 the United States Steel Corporation amassed profits approximating $200,000,000 after Federal taxes. This is a record high. During the first quarter of 1949, the latest figures available, the United States Steel Corporation's earnings were at an annual rate approximately $256,000,000 after Federal taxes. At no time, even in the boom year of 1929, has the Corporation or the industry reached these fabulous and exorbitant profit levels.

"The Corporation made no attempt in the course of the collective bargaining conferences to rebut these figures. It purports to base its refusal to grant a wage increase on concern for the national economy. Yet the industry has demonstrated a callous disregard for the national economy by consistently increasing prices since the end of OPA, notwithstanding the warnings by the Union that such prices increases and the consequent inflation would operate to dislocate our economy.

MR. FAIRLESS' prepared statement of yesterday was deliberately designed to break off negotiations with the Union. The Corporation's representatives at the conference stated that it represented the Corporation's final position. This is an ultimatum to the Union.

Mr. Fairless himself at no time appeared or participated in the conferences. This is most unfortunate, since the Union was deprived of the opportunity to present its case to the Corporation's responsible head.

Under the circumstances I have no alternative but to convene the Wage-Policy Committee of the Union in Pittsburgh on Tuesday, July 12 and to report the situation to this Committee.

The Corporation, in view of its arbitrary and unreasonable stand, must take the responsibility for whatever may thereafter ensue.

Robert Nathan To Report on U. S. Economy

THE CIO WILL make public this week a report on the national economy prepared by Robert Nathan, the economist whose study recommending wage increases caused widespread discussion throughout the country two years ago.

The report will be given to reporters and commentators at a luncheon in Washington on Monday, July 11, at which CIO Pres. Murray, union officials and many government figures will be present.

The first "Nathan report" prepared for the CIO late in 1946 pointed to dangerous problems if corporation profits—then just starting their postwar rise— were permitted to keep going up.

Nathan argued then that high wage increases could be paid out of profits, without price rises. He said at that time that, on the average, industry could afford a pay increase of about 25c an hour.

PHONY CHAMPIONS

The Commies have been screaming for years—and often with considerable justification—about the manner in which civil rights are abrogated in the U. S.

They—to hear them tell it—are the champions of the downtrodden and the oppressed. They're the defenders of the Jew who can't get a room in a "restricted" hotel, the Negro who can't eat in a "white" restaurant, the Mexican who gets kicked around on his job.

This would indicate that the lefties are really champions of civil liberties, but there's an entirely different side to the matter.

Over the years, Catholic groups have been bounced around badly in some sections of the country. The Commies haven't defended these groups.

Socialists frequently have been deprived of their civil rights, but the Commies could never be bothered by that.

And the lads who follow the Stalinist line chortle with glee when Trotskyites get the short end of the stick in any wrangle involving civil liberties.

The reason is obvious. Catholics, Socialists and Trotskyites —although in entirely different categories—are among the groups which battle Communism at every turn.

But the matter goes much deeper than that. World Communism, as directed by Moscow, is based on a concept which leaves no room for real civil liberties.

LIBERTY FOR SELVES BUT NOT FOR OTHERS

The Commies are great advocates of freedom—freedom to take full advantage of the democratic processes in their effort to destroy democracy, freedom to use their civil liberties to deny liberty to others, freedom to persecute their political enemies and freedom to lie about those they dislike.

At the present time the U. S. Commies are engaged in a drive to sell the idea that the CIO leadership is engaged in a conspiracy to deprive certain of its affiliates of their freedom—their autonomy.

Their theme is that Philip Murray is a dictator and that he and a few cronies have decided to "purge" those who disagree with them.

It's as phony as most Commie campaigns—and for this reason:

One of the main issues involved is whether majority rule, as determined by conventions and executive board meetings, shall govern the CIO and its affiliates. The Commies contend majority rule—in this particular instance—interferes with autonomy.

Another issue is whether the Communist Party or the CIO shall determine the role that CIO affiliates play in the international field.

DON'T PRACTICE IT THEMSELVES

The Communist Party, like other hypocritical outfits, doesn't always practice what it preaches. A good example of this can be found in the methods the party employes in the conduct of its own internal affairs.

To be a good party member you've got to accept at face value anything the party big-wigs tell you—even if they told you something exactly opposite the day before yesterday.

One who deviates too often or too much from the party line is kicked out on his ear—but expulsion is not enough. A campaign of character assassination and persecution follows.

Champions of civil rights? Bah!

Right Fight, Wrong Tactics

Trampling On Civil Rights To 'Preserve' Democracy Doesn't Make Sense

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THEY WON'T admit it, of course, but many of the persons who lead this country's fight against "subversive" activities have done much to encourage the very things they profess to hate.

They say they are trying to preserve our democratic form of government, yet they have been hacking away steadily for several years at the very foundation-stones of democracy.

They are fighting Communists, so they say, but they consistently refuse to do anything about stamping out the breeding grounds in which the seeds of Communism grow.

They have trampled on civil rights and—on occasions—have stooped to totalitarian tactics in their professed battle against totalitarianism.

IF YOU WORK in Washington you can see at first hand the demoralizing effects of the careless and often cruel manner in which some members of Congress and others in government have tried to crack down on subversives.

The campaign has effectively silenced many officials and government workers who formerly spoke out boldly. Today they're afraid to voice liberal thoughts.

You hear more and more criticism of the Department of Justice and its FBI. Many who formerly referred with respect to FBI agents now term them "snoopers" or "Hoover spies."

There is a growing fear among public officials and leaders of organizations that their telephone wires are tapped and that their privacy is being invaded by the G-Men.

And the introduction of rumors and unsubstantiated accusations into court hearings has caused many persons to question FBI methods.

THE AVERAGE person now hesitates before he speaks out strongly against the tactics of those who say they're fighting the Commites—regardless of how bad the tactics may be.

The writer who blasts away at the House Un-American Activities Committee is likely to be suspected of Communist sympathies unless he has a long record of Red-baiting behind him.

If you plead for justice for a person charged with subversive activities you're likely to find yourself on the suspect list.

And, perhaps worst of all, is the growing tendency to say that our "Red menace" justifies use of police state tactics and the "temporary" abrogation of civil rights.

LET'S MAKE no effort to belittle the activities of Soviet Russia throughout the world and the Communist Party in the U. S.

But let's not belittle democracy either. It's a potent political philosophy that doesn't need to bow to any form of totalitarianism.

And let's face the fact that the best bulwark against Communism is the type of freedom that a real democracy provides.

Wouldn't our politicians and our newspapers serve the nation better if they put less energy into witch-hunting and more energy into making our democracy function more effectively?

Wouldn't it be a relief to hear radio commentators declare that "we must stamp out the slums, eliminate 'starvation' wages and abolish racial discrimination—for these things serve as the breeding ground for Communism?"

And wouldn't it be a good thing for us to use the ballot to get rid of the extreme leftists and extreme rightists who behave as if they're afraid our nation might achieve too much democracy?

British Civil Servants To Get Political Rights

APPROXIMATELY a half million British civil servants will soon enjoy full political rights, which are denied public employes in England as in the United States.

In this country, the Hatch Act curtails Federal employes' political activities.

Sir Stafford Cripps, the Labor government's chancellor of the exchequer—a job which includes supervision of civil service regulations, as well as coordinating Britain's economic planning—made the announcement.

He said that the government would soon put into operation the recommendations of a special commission of inquiry which has been studying the traditional bars to political activity by the government employes.

Changes in the regulations will permit 250,000 white collar workers and 200,000 manual workers to run for office.

Manual workers in some of the government departments already have political rights. No limitations have been placed on the political activities of workers in industries nationalized by the Labor government since it took office in 1945.

Several years ago the Labor government gave civil servants' unions the right to affiliate with the Trades Union Congress, which the Conservatives had denied them by law in 1927.

German Boy Says CARE Saved His Life

THERE WERE two places listed as "musts" to visit when Peter Jung, 16-year-old German lad, arrived in New York recently: the offices of the CIO Newspaper Guild, and the headquarters of CARE.

Young Peter had a special reason for his visits, his first to the U. S. His life had once been saved by a CARE food package donated by Guild members.

He recounted the story when he went to the Guild and CARE offices to present his thanks in person. Peter, whose mother is feature editor of DENA, a German news service set up by the U. S. Army in Germany, was rushed to an Army hospital with a ruptured appendix in April, 1948.

Army surgeons said that only the fact the family had received a CARE parcel the week before—as part of a Guild CARE campaign for needy European journalists—had saved his life, since it gave him sufficient strength to survive the ordeal. Later, two more CARE packages were cabled to help his recovery.

Peter arrived in the U. S. to rejoin his father, from whom the family had been separated while fleeing Nazi persecution early in the war. Jung found refuge in Italy, while his wife (known professionally as Harriet Wisser) and son were in Budapest.

After the war, Mrs. Jung was returned to Germany by the Army to help set up DENA because of her journalistic experience and long anti-Nazi record. She is also expected to come to the U. S. shortly, to make the reunion complete.

More Strikes in May

About 450 strikes were begun during the month of May—50 more than started in April. About 250,000 workers were involved, as compared with 175,000 the previous month, the Bureau of Labor Statistics disclosed. The unmber of man days lost rose from 1,800,000 to 3,200,000.

Spotted Company Man At Union Meeting

IT WAS one of those campaigns which make union organizers chew their fingernails and wonder if they are beginning to slip.

Conditions at the plant they were trying to organize weren't good, but they weren't exceptionally bad when judged by local standards.

Management had long practiced a mild form of paternalism but hadn't overplayed the "good godfather" act.

There were few unions in the region and only a small number of persons in the town had any real knowledge of organized labor.

AN ORGANIZER who had dealt with some of the country's toughest anti-union employers was placed in charge of the project.

He anticipated a bitter campaign and made his plans accordingly—and there's where he made a mistake.

His arrival in town was reported in the local weekly newspaper. The story—about two inches long—was on page 6 or 7 and merely said he was in charge of the local organizing campaign.

Neither the organizer nor the CIO was mentioned in the paper again until a date for an NLRB election at the plant was set—and then only a brief notice was carried.

THERE WAS a small group in the plant, part of a big chain, which was "red hot" for a CIO union, but most of them feared "something would happen" if they came out in the open and said so.

The workers were friendly. They talked freely with any organizer who called on them, but when urged to sign up they usually said:

"I haven't made up my mind yet. Maybe a union's a good thing and maybe it isn't. I'll let you know later whether I'll join."

After weeks of this the organizer wasn't sure whether there was any really strong sentiment either for or against the union. Finally, a bit in desperation, he decided to try holding a series of meetings for plant employes.

LEAFLETS announcing the first meeting were distributed at the plant. The workers, for the most part, glanced at them, stuck them in their pockets and walked away without comment.

About 40 persons—approximately a tenth of those employed at the plant—showed up for the meeting. Among them was one of the company's industrial relations "experts" from a town many miles away. He seated himself near the back of the room.

The organizer went into action. The small crowd listened politely but apparently with little interest.

After 30 minutes or so the CIO man decided he was getting nowhere and that it was time to shoot the works.

WITHOUT indicating he was changing tactics, the organizer said, "I was delighted to learn the company was so interested in this meeting that it sent one of its top men here to learn what was going on.

"Mr. ————, who's seated in the back of the room, is one of the best industrial relations men I know. He's interested in learning the facts—and that's why he's here.

"He has set an example that every employe at the plant should follow. I'm going to have another meeting here a week from tonight—and I believe Mr. ———— will agree with me that each employe owes it to himself to come and get the facts.

"I'm extending an invitation to Mr. ————to attend the meeting and I'm going to ask him now if he has anything to say."

The "expert" rose slowly to his feet, obviously embarrassed, and said, "I agree that every man in the plant should get the facts, and, er, I'm sorry that I can't be at your next meeting."

The next meeting was packed with plant workers—and within a few months they were under a good union contract. A.L.S.

Food Too Cheap If Farmer's Buying Power Cut

By HAROLD V. KNIGHT

North Dakota Farmers Union Staff Writer

CAN THE price of food be too cheap? After paying post-OPA prices for her weekly market basket the housewife would undoubtedly answer "No."

The question is not so simple. It goes to the very root of our economic system. It has a significant place in the history of the labor unions.

Back in the early days of unionism employers sought to keep food prices as low as possible—for the cheaper bread was, the less wages they had to pay to keep their workers alive. But the workers organized to get more out of living than food, and a pallet to sleep on.

Today the food budget of workers who enjoy decent wages runs around 20 or 25% of their incomes—although in hard times it may jump to over half their total pay.

OF COURSE, some short-sighted business interests may think that by beating down food prices, consumers will have more to spend on other things—but American prosperity has never been built by pushing down one group for the benefit of another.

Perhaps some wage earners believe that farmers and workers can never work together—except in times of emergency like the great depression — because farmers want high prices for food—and the workers want low.

This writer realizes that far too many farmers have that idea, although more and more are opening their eyes to the fact that when both have good purchasing power both groups prosper. When the income of one falls, the other follows. Statistical graphs show that has been true since 1900.

To say that workers want cheap food and farmers want high prices for food is oversimplication. Between what the farmer gets and the housewife pays at the supermarket, is what all the processers, transporters, handlers and other middlemen get. Often the retail price has no relation to what the farmer receives. The past year and a half wheat prices have declined more than a third—but bread prices have not come down at all—generally. If the farmers gave the wheat away, the price of bread would be only two or three cents less at the grocery store.

FARMING IS different than any other industry. When other industries produce more than they can sell at a price which they set, they close down. Workers know what that means. Five million farmers cannot turn production on or off like that. They take whatever is offered them on the market place. Even if producing a commodity didn't take months and years (as in the case of beef and fruits) and even if the size of production didn't depend on uncontrollable weather, five million farmers couldn't agree on reducing production—except as they use government.

That is just what they have done ever since 1933, when the first AAA was established. Through democratic elections farmers choose farmer committees to adminster a farm program. They have voted for marketing quotas to restrict production but they don't like to have to maintain scarcity to get a decent price.

Why restrict production when we know that a prosperous America (plus our fair share of the export market) means we can consume all farmers can raise?

That is the question Secretary of Agriculture Brannan raised when he proposed a new farm program to assure farm families a fair income for producing an abundance of food and fiber at reasonable prices to consumers. He proposes to use our government to underwrite this assurance, just as government underwrites minimum wages.

Food is too cheap if it cuts the purchasing power of the farmers who produce it.

What we all want is full, steady production—on the farm and in the factory. We can have it only if 140 million Americans can buy what is produced. Lower the buying power of either the consumers in the cities or the consumers on the farms and we've turned the corner down the old road toward depression. Full buying power means full parity. That is all parity means—a fair share of income. That means 100% parity—not 60% or 90%.

Summary Is Issued On Child Labor Laws

A new summary of State laws affecting the employment of minors under 18 years of age is now available at the Bureau of Labor, Washington 25, D. C.

A bulletin (No. 98) covers the more important provisions of child labor and compulsory school attendance laws for each State, the District of Columbia, Alaska, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico, as of January 1949.

A limited supply of bound copies of the Bulletins, "State Child Labor Standards" is available free upon request to national unions and union libraries.

Registration Campaign And State And Lo

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

NOVEMBER 7, 1950 election day in that fateful year, is 486 days off.

But, already, labor is moving to see to it that what the people voted for on Nov. 2, 1948, will be realized on Nov. 7, 1950.

Registration is the big drive right now, but there are these major objectives as of this year:

1. The crucial New York races for U. S. Senator, to fill the vancancy caused by the resignation of Robert Wagner (D.), and for the mayor of New York. There are numerous other municipal, county and state races in New York.

2. The bye-election in the 26th Congressional District of Pennsylvania, where Mrs. Robert Coffey, Sr., is running on the Democratic ticket for the seat made vacant when her war hero-son, Rep. Robert Coffey., Jr., was killed in an airplane crash.

3. The New Jersey election, where the governor and a good part of the legislature is to be chosen.

4. The keen race for the governorship in Virginia's primary, where the Byrd machine is facing its toughest fight.

5. A number of local races here and there.

All last week in Tennessee, that state's citizens were taking advantage of the first real permanent registration they ever enjoyed.

Provious to the recent legislative session, there was permanent registry only in such counties as Hamilton (Chattanooga) and Davidson (Nashville). Now, in such areas are Shelby County, weakened stronghold of Boss Crump, the method is law.

Last week, Tennesseenans could be registered in their own wards or precincts. After last week, they can get on the lists by going to the county courthouse. Since the poll tax system has been considerably revised, Boss Crump is going to find it mighty tough to rig elections.

Once registered under Tennessee's new law, you stay on the books until you move or die —another blow to tombstone "voters."

It does look as if the New Day for Tennessee—which began last year when the now U. S. Sen. Estes Kefauver (D.) and the now Gov. Gordon Browning (D.) lambasted Crump in the Democratic primary—is here to stay.

PACful of $1 is our goal

REGISTRATION is not yet a major part of the picture in New York State, where the big cities register during one week in October (10th to 15th, inclusive).

The big issue now is the fact that a mob of jobs have to be filled and that it will be quite a scramble to get proper candidates for them all.

In New York City, alone, voters will pick the mayor, five borough presidents, a comptroller, the president of council and a full council chosen on an assembly district basis. The exact number of council members will be determined by the number of registrants.

PAC Spots

Note to PACs everywhere: Your national organization has five new non-partisan spots for local broadcast. The subject: registration.

Since these are non-partisan, radio stations should accept them under public service and make no charge.

The spots can be obtained by writing the CIO Political Action Committee, 1346 Connecticut ave., N. W., Washington, D. C.

This year, New York City has dropped Proportional Representation after a number of years. The voters wiped it out in 1947, observers believe, because Communist "bullet" voting gave that party a representation far out of proportion to its membership.

The party in the last election elected two members of the 22-man council, far out of proportion to the party membership.

State CIO Pres. Louis Hollander and New York City CIO Pres. Michael Quill will spearhead the drive for registration. They are confident that this "off-year" election will bring out the highest registration and vote in history.

There will be elections of mayors in such important New York cities as Binghampton, Buffalo and Oswego. On a state-wide basis, in addition to the Senatorship, New York will elect several judges.

Random thought: When will New York City get rid of its archaic, year-by-year registration?

THE SITUATION in New Jersey is one that is being eyed closely by labor everywhere.

For, just a month or so ago, the voters of Newark chose a city commission of five, among whom was Stephen Moran, State PAC director and a member of the CIO Steelworkers. Another of the five is an AFL official. Which proves that PAC, in particular, and labor, in general, can do a good job in an off year.

The New Jersey vote is all the more important because it includes the governor—one of two to be chosen this year—the entire assembly and one-third of the legislature.

Paul Revere got on his horse
And started things a-humming
He cried, "Wake up and register,
Election time is coming!"

In addition, several cities, towns and communities will pick local governments.

PAC's indorsements have not yet been announced.

THE VIRGINIA situation has the voters really excited for the first time in many a year.

The air waves are filled with long and passionate addresses by both sides. Hundreds of local rallies are being held in preparation for the Aug. primary.

There are three candidates cutting ice in the campaign. They are: State Sen. John S. Battle, a Byrd-to-the-last-man; Former State Democratic Chairman Horace H. Edwards, who split with Byrd and is running independently, and Francis Pickens Miller, long a thorn in the Byrd side who has backing of many civic leaders.

Some political observers feel Miller's chances are enhanced by the possibility that Battle and Edwards will split the Byrd vote. But, three weeks before the primary, it's a tough bet.

Two CIO and two AFL members are running for the House of delegates and their efforts are being watched closely by political analysts.

PENNSYLVANIA'S 26th District is composed of three counties — Armstrong, Cambria and Indiana. Its largest city is Johnstown, scene of the famous flood.

The area abounds in soft coal mines and there are many steel mills.

Robert Lewis Coffey, Jr., son of a coal miner, and a miner himself, became an air cadet in 1939, won a comission, was chosen as a fighter pilot.

He served in Puerto Rico (where he met and married Eileen Mercado-Parra), Panama, ETO. He flew combat missions over Italy, Jugoslavia, France and Germany, was shot down on German airfield, evaded capture and worked with French underground, returned through German lines. Then he was assigned to Chile as military air attache.

He won the DFC three times; the air medal 27 times, the Purple Heart, Bronze Star; Orden al Merito, Chile, other decorations.

Coffey, Jr., himself had worked

Poll Indicates U. S. Is

A LOT OF political figures have been trying to prove to the world that the American people didn't really mean it last fall when they voted Fair Deal.

Well, a poll has been conducted by the New Brunswick, N. J., Daily Home News, the results of which indicate, as well as any poll can, that the voters meant it.

The Daily Home News, noting that many confusing answers were being given to its inquiring reporter, hit on the idea of what it called an "Experiment in Democracy." It submitted a number of questions to all citizens above 21 years of age in New Brunswick, an industrial town, and in Highland Park, a silk stocking suburb. William Michelfelder, of the paper's staff, was placed in charge.

The questions included several of local interest only, a seemingly non-controversial one on veterans' bonuses and those on housing aid, Atlantic Pact, Taft-Hartley repeal, Hoover report, health insurance and aid to education.

The Daily Home News has a reputation of being conservative. It has generally been Republican editorially, though last fall it did not indorse either Dewey or Truman.

IN THE 1948 Presidential election, here was the result:

This key state, beset by a stalemated State Senate but with a Democratic Governor, turns its attention this year to highly-important local issues. Key cities include (11/8):

A number of large industrial cities will have elections, including the largest, Detroit. In the Motor City, politicians are watching George Edwards, president of the City Council and a member of the CIO Auto Workers.

His chief opposition is Eugene I. Van Antwerp, incumbent. In the race, apparently to take votes away from Edwards, is Richard Frankensteen, former national officer of UAW, now a capitalist. The top two candidates will run off for the mayorality.

Other Michigan cities with elections include:

Dearborn, Jackson, Kalamazoo, Lansing.

Ohio

Last year was a year of victory for liberal forces in Ohio. Next year, they hope to crown that fight with a defeat of Sen. Robert A. Taft (R.,).

But, that goal for 1950 is not keeping Ohio's PAC and other liberal workers from doing their utmost in this year's civic voting. A lot of large cities are holding elections Nov. 8. They include:

Akron (where the overwhelming majority of city council are CIO members), Canton, Cincinnati (elects council by PR), Cleveland, Columbus, Dayton, Defiance, East Liverpool, Lorain, Mansfield, Marion, Massilon, Sandusky, Tiffin, Youngstown, Zanesville.

Pennsylvania

Most important vote here is that in the Congressional bye-election. But counties, cities, boroughs, townships, wards school districts and poor districts will pick a variety of officials.

Philadelphia's municipal election holds much of the attention. Spurred on by revelations of scandal in Republican handling of some offices, the Democrats

The Row Offices include controller, coroner and treasurer. Other city or county (Philadelphia is both city and county; an antiquated political system makes for duplicate offices) positions include judges and magistrates. The mayoralty is not at stake.

Pittsburgh also has a municipal election, but a mayor is included in the offices to be filled.

All Pennsylvania cities are choosing some municipal offices.

District of Columbia

It is hard to estimate how many of the 700,000-odd persons who live in the District have voting residence elsewhere.

But, there are many thousands who call Washington their home and who have no vote anywhere else. Under present law, they have no right to say who rules them. They can't vote for the resident of the White House (or the Blair House, either.)

Last week, a House District Judiciary Sub-committee was considering the Kefauver home-rule bill, which would give District residents the right to elect their own city council, which would give them at least a voice in their city affairs.

Key witnesses included representatives of the area's four daily newspapers. They were:

The Post: Philip Graham, publisher, who heartily indorsed the Kefauver bill, asking action at this session.

The Times-Herald: This member of the McCormick-Patterson axis was represented by Editor Frank Waldron, who seemed to think the whole thing was very funny.

The Times-Herald has been vaguely advocating a referendum of District citizens on whether or not they want to have a voice in their own affairs. The T-H (coincidence, eh?) didn't specify how such a referendum could be held. Waldron favored a constitutional amendment for Congressional representation, with no action on the councilmanic bill.

The Star: Ben McKelway, editor, favored the Kefauver bill, but said he was skeptical if it would work without Congressional representation.

The News: This Scripps Howard paper was represented by a working newspaperman, Milton Berliner, reporter. He said the News "doesn't want to delay action any longer by taking up more of your time." In other words, the News liked the bill.

Main objection of some District residents to home rule is that it would give Negroes a vote in that segregated town. Visitors from abroad are always startled that people would sacrifice their own right of voting just to keep others from using the ballot.

But, it looks as if this time the District is heading toward becoming really the Capital of a great democracy.

At various intervals within the next few months, PAC will launch registration drives in the states, cities, counties, wards, precincts and blocks.

A magnificent job was done in 1948, PAC says, and a better job must be done in 1949 and 1950.

News lets you draw your own conclusions).

Truman carried New Brunswick 9954 to 6139, which means he got 61.8% of the vote in a campaign in which he made T-H a major, if not the issue.

In the News poll, those voting favored T-H repeal by a margin of 60.6%.

Almost no change there.

Now, take Highland Park, the Silk Stocking District. In 1948, Truman had 41.9% of the suburb's votes. In the News poll, 40.7% of the voters favored T-H repeal.

Almost no change there.

Newsweek Magazine, which has done such things before, chose to use the News' poll to prove that voters were against the Fair Deal. Newsweek was wrong again.

Newsweek ignored—or didn't even figure it out—the fact that there was a variation of only 2.4%.

On other issues of the Fair Deal, there were at least two surprises. Both New Brunswick and Highland Park favored Federal housing and aid to education.

Only Fair Deal measure rejected—by adding in Highland Park's votes—was health insurance, on a narrow margin of 3616 to 3540. New Brunswick favored the insurance plan, 2612 to 2318. Which again indicates the power of the AMA lobby.

Counting

In the New Brunswick poll, preliminary sorting of ballots was done by journalism students of Rutgers U.

Final tabulation was under the direction of Dr. George Gallup.

Russian Historians Denounce Roosevelt; Is Line About To Change Again?

MEMO TO Communists in the U. S. (Those who haven't yet skipped bail as stowaways.)

You'd better stop crying for a return to the "policies of the great Franklin Delano Roosevelt." Ever since the death of that great President, it has been the practice of Commies and their don't-like-to-pay-dues pals in the so-called Progressive party to attack anyone not agreeing with them as being "anti-Roosevelt."

It was a very convenient gag.

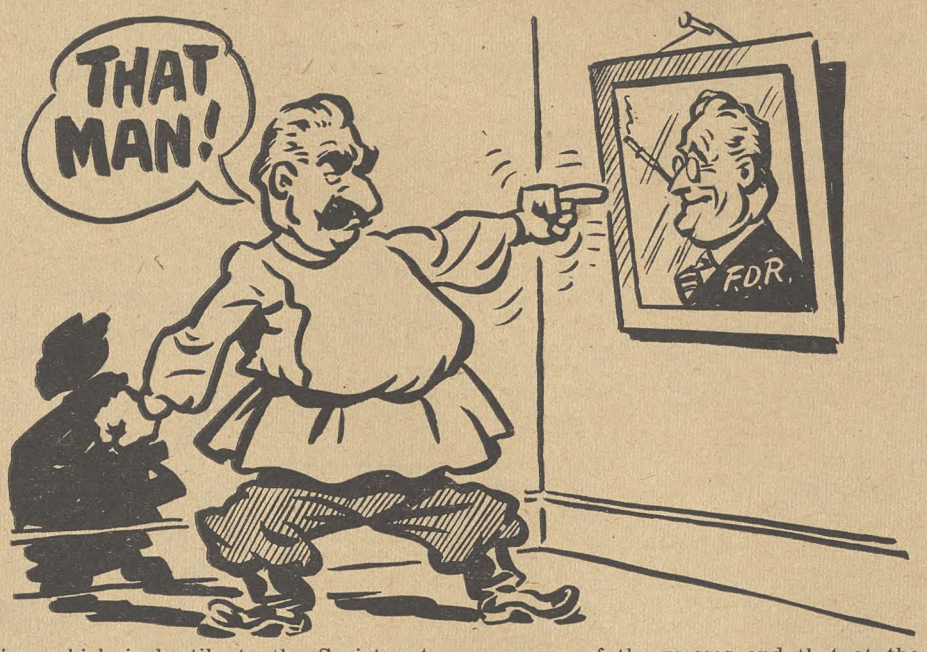
Now, however, The Word has come from the Mother Country, which is the only place The Word can come from. It looks like the line's going to change.

Last week, a United Press dispatch from Moscow, labeled "delayed in transmission," appeared in American newspapers. Why the dispatch was held up by censors was (as usual) not explained, but once it was released, the contents reported by the correspondent become The Word—or the Party Line to you. (However, the dispatch was held up only two days.)

The dispatch reports a meeting in mid-March of the Russian Historical Institute, which the UP explains is a part of the Academy of Sciences. The institute's March meeting was reported in the magazine, "Problems of History."

There was the usual amount of soul-searching. No less than 25 speakers—all fearing that they themselves might be in the same boat someday—took the floor, genuflected towards Stalin and denounced the sins of "cosmopolitans" among Russian historians.

All were attacked for "rootless cosmopolitanism and preaching national nihilism which is hostile to the Soviet outlook."



Webster's dictionary defines nihilism as "primarily the doctrine that no reality exists; more commonly, a doctrine which denies, or is taken to denying, any objective or real ground of truth." Look who's calling names!

Now, to get back to FDR. Prof. Zubok was singled out as one of those who made too much of the U. S. Zubok, cried his critics, "distortedly interpreted Roosevelt's so-called New Deal."

Zubok, they shouted on and on, "entirely ignored the fact that all of Roosevelt's efforts to solve the problem of class collaboration was done under the pressure of the masses and that at the same time Roosevelt was safeguarding the interests of monopolistic capital."

It wouldn't be the first time the Commies have changed their line against FDR. In 1940, to them he was a "warmonger" and they let it be known in no uncertain terms that "the Yanks are not coming." A day in June, 1941, changed that abruptly.

America just can't get a break from the Russians. Another "cosmopolitan," one Prof. Zuzwich, was accused of telling the Diplomatic Institute—it was a "falsification of history," comrades—"that the turning point in the Second World War occured as the result of the American invasion of Italy."

Of course, loyal USSR historians know that the Kremlin, with its crystal glass, knows more about world history than "amateurs" such as Arnold Toynbee.

And the worst enemy of the Kremlin's brand of truth is "bourgeois cosmopolitanicism." It's especially dangerous, says the magazine, "Problems of History," because it is an "ideological weapon of international reaction against socialism and democracy and is an ideological screen for the strivings of American imperialism toward world domination."

The U. S. and Britain were lumped together as simply terrible because they had "recruited" the "dregs of White Russian emigres, cosmopolitans and falsifiers like Prof. Struve, vicious enemy of the Russian people, and the disgusting renegades Vernadsky, and Karpov."

(The UP dispatch quoted Moscow as saying Struve is a professor in England. There is also an Otto Struve, Russian-born astronomer at the University of Chicago. George Varnadsky is Yale Russian history professor.)

Prof. Zubok had a pretty tough time of it from his historical comrades. "Assuming the position of bourgeois objectivism," they declared, "he undertook the defense of the traitor of Marxism and Leninism, the opportunist Earl Browder."

Another Russian paradox. Browder is American agent for official Russian books, including, no doubt, history books. He was expelled from the party some time back, but says he feels he is still part of it.

And what happened to the professors who committed the grievous sin of "cosmopolitanism"? The magazine, "Problems of History," says most, just like Shostkovitch, have admitted their "errors."

And what of academic freedom, which the Commies in the U.S. shout so loudy for—and temporary imperil? A.R.

Morse Blasts 'Big 5' In Hawaiian Strike

REPERCUSSIONS continued to jolt the nation's capital last week from a strike 5,000 miles away—in the Hawaiian islands.

In Hawaii, Harry Bridges' Longshoremen were still locked in battle with the "Big Five"—the business combine which has an iron grip in the islands. Their strike, for a 32-cent an hour increase on the waterfronts to bring stevedore pay rates close to parity with the West Coast, entered the ninth week. The Hawaiian rate now is $1.42 an hour as against $1.82 at Pacific Coast ports.

A governor's fact-finding board recommended a 14-cent increase, but the union rejected it as inadequate and reiterated demands for arbitration. Stevedoring companies remained silent on the board's report, but steadfastly refused arbitration.

In Washington, more lawmakers charged the Bridges' strike was a plot to put over "Communist rule" in the land of aloha and for that reason opposed granting statehood to Hawaii.

SENATOR Wayne L. Morse (R, Ore.), who has had many a battle with Bridges in the past, this time took the floor of the Senate to slug the "Big Five" of Hawaii for their intransigent attitude against arbitration.

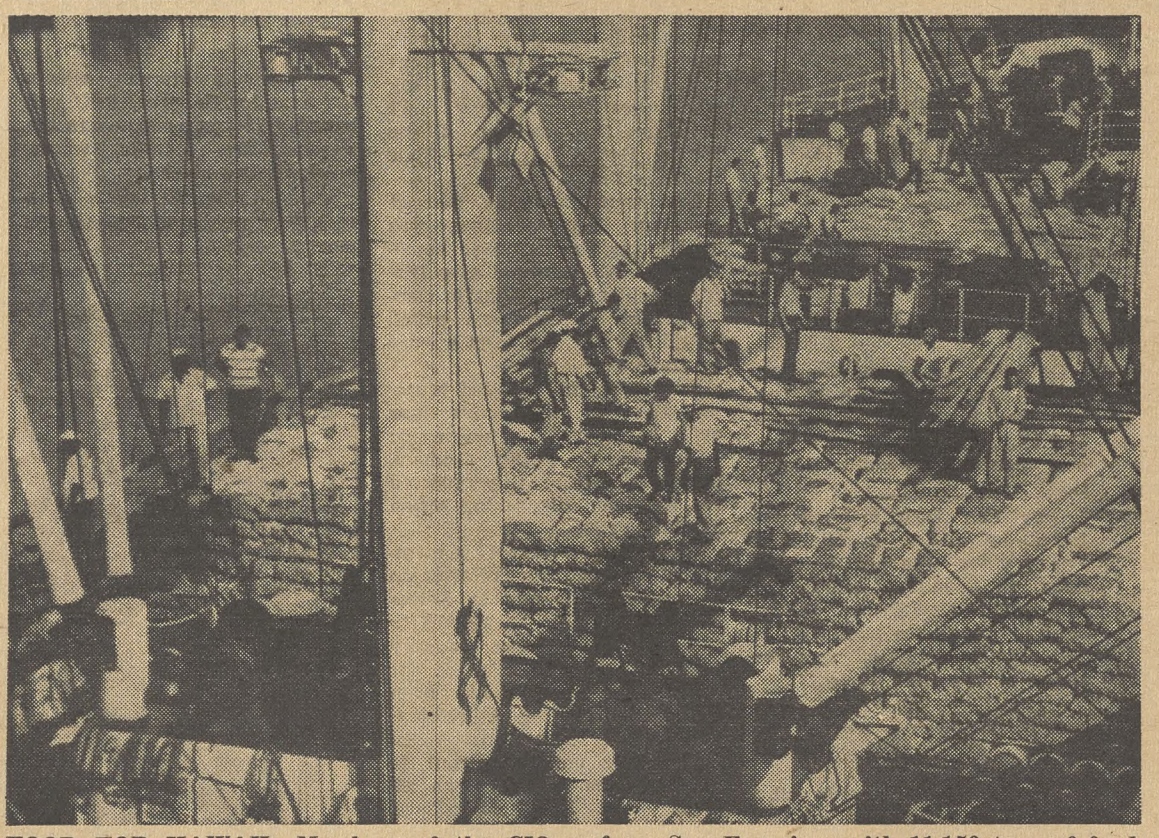
"The Big Five are spending huge sums to propagandize the American people that arbitration in the Hawaiian dispute would be Communist tactics," he said. "Did Senators ever hear anything more nonsensical than that?

"What the Big Five want to do is break the union and win the strike. They want the United States on their side of the table by way of an injunction.

"In the interest of the suffering human beings of Hawaii, I say that the struggle ought to end. Instead of the jungle law of economic force now raging in Hawaii the President should appeal to both sides to accept arbitration."

Governor Told Cops Not Needed

Intervention by State police would serve to break the strike of the AFL Ladies Garment Workers Union at the Gossard Company, Ishpeming, Mich., Secy.-Treas. Barney Hopkins of the Michigan CIO Council wrote Gov. G. Mennen Williams. The Ishpeming City Council requested the intervention of the police.



FOOD FOR HAWAII: Members of the CIO Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, on strike since May 1, unload a freighter in Honolulu as a relief measure. The ship arrived from San Francisco with 11,150 tons of food, estimated the biggest food cargo ever hauled in the Pacific. Union offered to arbitrate, but employers refused.

NLRB Rules Foremen Don't Speak For Firm

A METHOD OF providing legal immunity to employers whose foremen spout anti-union statements has been outlined by the Natl. Labor Relations Board.

The "out" for bosses is to post notices saying that foremen and supervisors are not authorized to state the company's policy on unions. Then all such statements can be held to be "unauthorized" and the boss has protection in any future NLRB case involving such threats.

This doctrine was spelled out by the NLRB in a case involving an AFL teamsters' local at Tulsa, Okla. The employer—the Beatrice Foods Co.—posted notices in the plant naming only a few top management officials who were authorized to speak for the company on its labor relations policies.

The supervisors then spread stories through the plant that jobs would diminish and there would be no promotions if the union won a foothold. The Board held that this was "unauthorized" talk

COMMENTING ON the case, CIO General Counsel Arthur Goldberg declared:

"This is another indication of the Natl. Labor Relations Board's apparent desire to go far beyond even the anti-labor provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act itself.

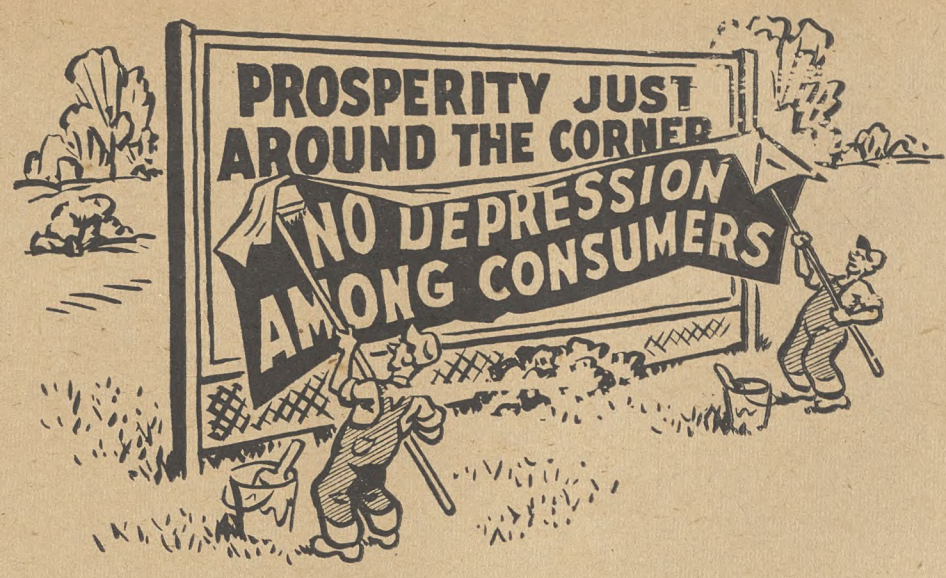
"The decision to absolve the employer in the Beatrice Foods case runs counter to all the realities of labor-management relations. The NLRB is trying to pretend that Edgar Bergen does not speak for Charlie McCarthy; that supervisors are voicing only their own personal anti-union attitudes rather than those of the company.

"Workers will not be fooled by such nonsense from the NLRB. It is high time that the NLRB stopped its desperate search for new anti-labor weapons to place in the hands of employers."

"Good Times" Over For Millions

By STANLEY RUTTENBERG

Director, CIO Dept. of Education and Research



REMEMBER THE ole "Prosperity Just Around the Corner" headlines of 1930? Some new ones—1949 version—cropped out a few days ago.

"No Depression Among Consumers," said Business Week. "Consumers' Buying Plans for the Year Indicate a Record Market for New Autos and Homes," echoed the Wall Street Journal.

These and other happy headlines were stimulated by a superficial glance at the latest Federal Reserve Board "Survey of Consumer Finances." But before we conclude that the slump is just a mirage, that millions of families loaded with spending money are ready to buy us back into prosperity, let's take a good, hard look at the FRB report itself:

1. Yes, the Survey did say that more families are planning to buy more houses, autos, and television sets in 1949 than 1948. But the interviews on which the findings were based were all completed in the first 10 weeks of 1949 before the slump was widely felt.

The families with the brightest spending plans told the interviewers they were banking on continued good times in 1949 and lower prices. But, in the four to six months since the plans were made, "good times" have vanished for several million families while the cost of living has hardly been dented at all.

According to the Survey, two to three million families planned to buy houses in 1949 and wanted to spend about $7,000 each for them. Actually, new housing starts in 1949 are lagging 14% behind last year.

Production of television sets is now being cut back from peak levels for lack of customers. It is estimated that 2.5 million sets of a potential 3.5 million output will be sold this year.

Only automobile production is still booming; 3.6 million to 5.1 million families planned to buy new cars in 1949, the Survey said. To keep the auto workers fully employed throughout the year the top figure must be reached. But rumors of a production slide-off at the end of the summer are already coming out of Detroit.

The authors of the FRB report, unlike the headline writers, have not gone completely overboard. They carefully hedge their findings in these words:

"The volume of consumer purchases in a given year reflects developments and contingencies not known to buyers at the beginning of the year when the Surveys are made."

Even in prosperous 1948 the Survey found that three-quarters of the families who had not come through with their earlier spending plans cited "insufficient income" or "too high prices" as the reason.

In 1949 "developments and contingencies" are playing havoc with the plans of millions of American families.

2. Even if the auto, housing and television industries were booming during all of 1949, which they apparently will not, the Survey showed declines in other parts of the economy.

Early 1949 consumer plans for the purchase of furniture, radios, refrigerators and washing machines were under 1948 levels, according to the Survey, despite the increased production capacities of these industries. This falling demand, together with the slumping sale of textiles, clothing and other soft consumer goods, clearly signalled a downward business trend.

Full employment and prosperity end when consumers no longer can buy the total output of our industries. A continuing boom in only two or three industries can slow down a recession; of themselves they can't maintain the entire economy in prosperity.

3. The FRB report reveals some significant figures which highlight the problem of keeping America's 50 million families on top in the race to buy back the tremendous potential output of American industry:

In 1948, although prices continued to rise, only half of our families increased their incomes; 20% earned less than the year before. In all 53% received incomes under $3000.

Sixty-five per cent of all families reported their financial condition unchanged or worse than in 1947, but nearly half the families receiving over $7500 said they were better off in 1948. (More than half the new cars bought last year went to the one-seventh of the families making over $5000.)

In 1948 15 million families spent more than they earned and consumer indebtedness rose substantially.

By the beginning of 1949, 14.5 million families had no liquid assets at all — in U. S. bonds or bank accounts. The average holdings of families who still had savings went down further in 1948.

As we slide into a slump of unpredictable depth, it is hardly true that there is "No Depression Among Consumers." On the contrary, it is the inability of American families to buy, at the prices asked, that brings on the slump.

CIO policies are aimed squarely at the need to raise consumer purchasing power so that America's great capacity to produce can be matched by continuing purchases by all American families.

400,000 More Become Jobless In One Month

THE BUREAU of Census last week reported a 400,000 increase in its unemployment figures from May to June — to an estimated total of 3,788,000.

The number of unemployed, as reckoned by the Census, is the highest since February 1942, the agency said. Many labor and government economists believe the Census figures are very conservative, and that unemployment may be considerably higher than the official estimates.

At the same time the Federal Security Agency reported that "continued claims" for unemployment insurance averaged 2,046,000 during June.

The compensation payments were 60% greater than at the beginning of 1949 and about double the November 1948 level.

The Federal Security Agency report showed that new claims for unemployment compensation had dropped about 17,000 from the May level of 342,365. On the other hand, it noted that 750,000 unemployed workers have been looking for jobs for four months or more.

PARTICULARLY bad centers of joblessness were noted by the government in New England, California and South Carolina.

Throughout the country as a whole, about 6% of the people covered by unemployment insurance are now receiving payments. But in Rhode Island, 22.1% — more than one person in five — is getting jobless compensation. In New Hampshire, the number stood at 12.6%; Maine, 11.3%; Massachusetts, 10.6%; California, 9.8%; South Carolina, 8.5%.

While jobs were falling off in industrial areas, work was increasing in farm areas. The total number of jobs rose about a million from May to June, to 59,619,000. About three-quarters of the job rise was accounted for directly by higher farm employment.

UAW Opens 2d Radio Sta.

UNION-OWNED radio stations will lift the "iron curtain" that big business in the U. S. has erected to cut the American people off from the truth about our economic and political life, Pres. Walter Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers predicted. Reuther spoke at the opening of the UAW's second FM broadcasting station—WCUO in Cleveland.

He said that WCUO and WDET, the UAW's Detroit station, are "just starts. We want to tie WDET and WCUO in with other liberal and labor stations in order to work toward the development of a national network," he declared.

Other speakers included Cleveland's Mayor Thomas A. Burke, Secy.-Treas. Charles Lanning of the CIO Rubber Workers, Ohio CIO Council Secy. Jacob Clayman and Lorain, Ohio, Council Secy. Steve Caruso.

Probers Told Oil Firms Boost Unemployment

BIG OIL COMPANIES are fleecing the American public by charging inflated prices for gasoline and fuel oil.

These companies are throwing thousands of American seamen out of work by transferring more and more of their tankers to foreign flags.

The charges were made to the Senate Banking and Currency Committee by Hoyt Haddock, legislative representative of the CIO Maritime Committee, which speaks for some 160,000 licensed officers, seamen and allied workers. The Senate committee is probing the oil industry.

Haddock said that 40,000 American seamen have been thrown out of work since the end of the war because oil companies transferred many of their tankers to foreign flags, notably Panama.

"Yet despite the lower costs obtained by evading American labor standards and avoiding American taxes," Haddock stated, "the oil companies have been fleecing the American consumer."

AS ONE example, Haddock cited the Gulf Oil Corp., which he said within recent weeks has laid up three American flag tankers in the Philadelphia area, throwing 150 American seamen on the beach.

"Unemployment is so serious in the maritime industry that the average seaman is waiting two to three months for a job, and many licensed officers have been unemployed for more than a year," he declared.

"The Standard Oil Co., of New Jersey has more tonnage under foreign flags than it has under the U. S. flag," Haddock told the Senators. "Of the 111 ships chartered in addition to owned tonnage by Standard Oil of N. J., only 45 fly the U. S. flag.

"The Overseas Tankship Corp., 50% owned by Standard Oil of California and 50% by the Texas Co., has the largest fleet of tankers flying the Panamanian flag and has other extensive foreign flag fleets."

HADDOCK suggested that the committee investigate the earnings of the various foreign affiliates of oil companies and the tactics they use in bringing earnings into this country with the minimum payment of taxes.

Standard Oil of New Jersey's Panamanian-flag tanker subsidiary, the Panama Transport Co., Haddock said, had earnings of $15 million accumulated in Panama since 1944.

"Early this year the Panama Transport Co., declared a $20 million dividend to the parent company," he declared.

"As a result of this device Standard Oil of New Jersey was able to avoid the wartime tax rate of 80% and higher and to bring its wartime and postwar profits into this country when the tax rate is approximately 38%.

"In brief, Standard Oil of N. J. chooses when, where, and how much taxes it should pay."

MEBA Voting On Agreement

Members of the CIO Marine Engineers Beneficial Association began balloting by mail last week on ratification or rejection of an agreement between the steamship operators of the Atlantic and Gulf coasts and the union.

The MEBA reported that most locals on the Atlantic and the Gulf coasts have rejected the agreement by voice vote, because it does not contain provision for the hiring halls such as in the West Coast pact.

Non-ratification will be the signal to re-negotiate before Aug. 15, end of the 60-day period allowed for balloting by the Federal Mediator.

Be 'Clear' Unions Told

Unions should strive to make their program and policies plainer to the community at large, Vice-Pres. Leland Beard of the CIO Federation of Glass Workers told a conference held recently at the University of Illinois.

The one-day conference on current problems of labor and community relations was conducted by the University's extension division with a five-man panel representing labor, farm and industry groups leading discussion.

Beard pointed out that "you can't divorce" labor and the community. The two should be a cohesive body to better the community, he said. "There should be an understanding of our side so the community will understand what we're striving for."

President's State Sets Example For Congress; Legislature Repeals Little Taft-Hartley Act

LABOR didn't have to cry "show me" at Pres. Truman's Democratic Party in his home state of Missouri.

The State Legislature, with both houses Democratic, has repealed the State's "Little Taft-Hartley Law" and thereby has shown an example to the National Congress.

Missouri's 12 Democratic Congressmen all voted "right" on T-H repeal. The lone Republican Congressman and the two Republican Senators voted "wrong."

Republicans in the Missouri Senate staged a desperate all-night filibuster against the repealer, hoping the Democrats would fold in the heat wave which was gripping the capital city. The final vote was 18 to 12 for repeal. In the House it was lopsided.

Good news for labor comes also from Wisconsin. There, the State Senate killed a bill which would have outlawed the closed shop.

The present Wisconsin law is under labor attack, however, since it requires a three-quarter majority vote of workers before a closed shop contract can be signed.

Bad news comes from Ohio. There, the Senate, with six Democrats going back on their party's platform pledges, killed an FEPC bill which had already passed the House.

From Delaware, comes the inside story of how the Legislature killed the state's Little T-H. It's quite a story.

Delaware voters indicated that they wanted the measure—about the worst of the state anti-labor laws—repealed when, last November, they elected a Democratic governor who had promised to erase it.

But, the state's districting laws resulted in a one-vote Republican majority in both houses of the state legislature—18-17 in the House, 9 to 8 in the Senate.

This January, four GOP members of the lower house voted with the Democrats for repeal. But the "Labor" Committee of the Senate bottled up the measure.

Finally the Senate, by a 9 to 8 vote, brought it to the floor. At this point the duPont controlled lobbyists went to work. Failing to break the pro-labor Senate majority, the lobbyists "put the heat" on the Republican members of the lower house, reunited them, and had them vote 18 to 17 to "recall" the bill.

THE SENATE, however, refused to send the measure back. But, State Senator James S. Evans, Wilmington, chairman of the Labor Committee, pocketed the official draft of the bill and slipped it to the Republican clerk of the House.

When the Senate demanded its return the House refused, and took the position that without the original bill in its possession the Senate couldn't take final action on it.

The Senators, however, wrote out a "duplicate bill," passed it, and sent it to Gov. Elbert N. Carvel. He promptly signed the "duplicate," in the presence of representatives of the state AFL, CIO and the railroad brotherhoods.

Harvard Offers Course For Union Representatives

AN INTENSIVE 13-week course for union representatives will be held at Harvard University, Sept. 14 - Dec. 9, under the Trade Union Fellowship Program for 1949.

Purpose of the course is to provide training for executive responsibility, and to help union officers play more useful and important roles in the labor movement. The program is aimed not to train technicians, such as economists, statisticians, or labor editors, but to deal with actual policy questions and decisions which confront the union leader in his day-to-day work.

It deals with organizing activities, negotiating and administration of agreements, presentation of problems to government agencies and arbitrators, relations with the comunity, etc.

The trade union fellows are selected by the union which sends them. No man or woman is admitted to the course unless he or she is sent by a union as its representative.

The fellowship program was launched in 1942 as a result of a suggestion from several labor leaders and after consultation with union officials throughout the country and with officers of Harvard University.

SINCE THE first classes were started in September 1942, 65 unionists — 59 men and six women—have taken the course. CIO unions which have sent students include the United Steelworkers, Textile Workers, Electrical Workers and Transport Serpice Employes.

A number of CIO officials have led conferences on collective bargaining, held twice a week during each course, with a guest prominent in the field of industrial relations.

Among the CIO conference leaders were: L. S. Buckmaster, then president of the United Rubber Workers; Pres. Joseph Froesch, Glass Workers; Secy.-Treas. David McDonald, Steelworkers; Clinton S. Golden, ECA Labor Adviser, formerly vice-president of the Steelworkers; Pres. Ralph Helstein, Packinghouse Workers; Pres. O. A. Knight, Oil Workers; Vice-Pres. Herbert Payne, Textile Workers; Pres. Jacob Potofsky, Clothing Worokers; Pres. Walter Reuther, Auto Workers; and Pres. Willard Townsend, Transport Service Employes.

The program is under the direction of a committee composed of three faculty members, with the aid of an advisory committee made up of union officials from the CIO and AFL who consult periodically with the faculty.

UNIONS SENDING representatives pay the expenses of the trade union fellows. The tuition is $400. Each union makes its own arrangements with the representative it sends for other expenses involved.

Information about participation with the program may be obtained from Prof. James J. Healy, executive director, Littauer Center, Harvard University, Cambridge 38, Mass. Applications for the course opening Sept. 14, must be filed no later than Aug. 1.

Course To Be Given In Co-op Organization

The sixth annual Cooperative and Labor Institute will be held at the School for workers in Madison, Wis., Aug. 14-21. The Institute is for union people who plan to take a leading part in the development of co-ops, either as full-time organizers or as voluntary workers. It is conducted by Rochdale Institute.

Classes and discussions will center around such subjects as "Why Should Labor Be Interested in Co-ops?", "What the Co-op Movement Is All About" and "How to Organize and Get Going."

Cost of the course, including room, board and tuition, is $35. For further information write Rochdale Institute, 941 Howard St., Detroit, Mich.

Five Guildsmen Win Fellowships

Five of the 12 recipients of the Nieman Fellowships announced last week by the Nieman Foundation of Harvard Univ. are members of the CIO Newspaper Guild. The Guildsmen are:

Murrey Marder, Washington Post reporter and unit Guild chairman, who as a Marine combat correspondent took part in fierce fighting for the Munda airport in the Solomons; Max R. Hall, labor reporter on the Washington AP staff; Donald J. Gonzales, diplomatic reporter for the United Press in Washington; Richard J. Wallace, Jr., political writer on the Memphis, Tenn., Press-Scimitar (Scripps-Howard), who has taken part in many campaigns against Boss Ed Crump; and William German, copy desk slot man, San Francisco Chronicle.

'Backbreaker's' Job Is Not As Tough As You Think

IF YOU ASKED a man what his job was and he said he was a "backbreaker" you might be startled or puzzled. Just what is a backbreaker?

According to the Dictionary of Occupational Titles issued by the Federal Security Agency, it is a laborer in the ore refining industry who breaks the crust formed on the surface of electrolytic bath in aluminum reduction pots.

A new edition of the job dictionary, the second, contains some 22,000 definitions of occupations, along with more than 40,000 titles by which the jobs are known. It is a complete revision of the first edition published in 1939.

Altogether the new edition defines and lists titles of occupations in about 250 industries. Atomic energy, for obvious reasons, is about the only industry not included.

THE U. S. Employment Service of the FSA has included at least 85% of the jobs common to our economy. In addition to the job of backbreaker, many other unusual, queer sounding jobs are listed. For example:

Horser-Up: this job calls for hanging hides over saw horses.

Pulpit Man: not a preacher. He works in a rolling mill. The enclosure he works in is known as a pulpit.

End Man: he has nothing to do with minstrel shows. He works in the iron and steel industry.

A Kiss Machine Operator is exactly that, according to the dictionary. The job calls for feeding a machine which wraps candy kisses.

Obsolete and duplicate definitions of jobs which were in the first edition are eliminated in the new dictionary. A new method is used in presenting job definitions. It eliminates many cross references to jobs and greatly simplifies the use of the dictionary as an aid in job classifications, employment counseling and placement of workers.

LOCAL OFFICES of the public employment service use the job dictionary in coding employers' job openings and classifying them, in coding job applicants' occupational experience, and in reporting various kinds of labor market information.

More than 75,000 copies of the first edition are now in use by industrial firms, government agencies other than the public employment service, including the armed forces, labor organizations, schools and colleges and individuals.

The Dictionary of Occupational Titles, the most comprehensive publication in its field, can be purchased from the Superintendent of Documents, Washington, D. C., at $3.50 for Vol. 1; $2 for Vol. II.

Fishbein Didn't Stay Muzzled

Dr. Morris Fishbein, for years the American Medical Association's leading spokesman, didn't stay muzzled long.

The "quiet please" sign was hung on Fishbein at the AMA's annual convention in Atlantic City in June, after the fight on health insurance was taken over by the advertising firm of Whitaker & Baxter, who are spending the $3,500,000 collected by AMA in $25 assessments from each doctor in the nation.

At that time, Fishbein was rudely stripped of his many editorial jobs on AMA publications, and it was made clear that until his retirement took effect he was not to engage in public discussions of anything except non-controversial questions.

However, by June 29 the doctor was back in the spotlight—this time with a talk to the Natl. Association of Accident & Health Underwriters at Cleveland. It is clear, he insisted, from "studies of history that every nation which begins by nationalizing medicine ultimately nationalizes most of its public services and utilities."

Don't Send Me Flowers; Help Unionists Overseas, Says Victor Reuther

Victor Reuther's room at Ford Hospital, Detroit, has been loaded with flowers sent in a steady stream by union friends during the weeks he has been lying there recuperating from the attack made upon his life in May.

From now on there will be fewer flowers, but some extra CARE packages that might not otherwise be sent, will go to needy families overseas. For Reuther, education director of the CIO United Auto Workers, has sugggested that UAW members, instead of sending flowers to him, use the money to send CARE packages abroad.

Staff members of UAW Region No. 3, Indianapolis, in response to Reuther's request, recently sent an $11 check to CARE to be used to send two of CARE's new $5.50 "Thrift" food packages to a workers school in Frankfurt, Germany.

The packages will be distributed to needy students at the school, a labor institute where young trade union members are trained in collective bargaining procedures and the philosophy of a free and democratic labor movement.

The National CIO Community Services Committee, 1776 Broadway, New York 19, N. Y., one of CARE's 25 member agencies, urges all CIO unions and members to support the campaign to send CARE packages to needy trade unionists overseas.

IWA Wins Legal Bout With Canadian Rebels

AN EIGHT-MONTH fight by the CIO Intl. Woodworkers of America to thwart a secession move in British Columbia is approaching a successful conclusion.

The secessionist group, known as the Woodworkers Industrial Union, was headed by Harold Pritchett, one-time IWA president; Ernie Dalskog and others.

The IWA efforts were crowned with success when the B. C. Supreme Court recently handed the union's B. C. District Council a check for $139,941, after the WUI consented to a judgment ordering the money returned to the district council.

This money was the district's strike fund. Dalskog refused to tell where the strike fund was hidden until he had served 27 days in jail.

The court also ordered restoration to the council of all office furniture, equipment, supplies, records, etc.; payment by the WUI officials of the IWA's legal costs, estimated at $7000.

These costs will be assessed against Dalskog, Pritchett, Hjalmar Bergren, John Frobers, Bert Melsness and Don Barbour.

THE FIGHT is not over. IWA is claiming in outstanding lawsuits another $60,000, which represent the money and properties of B. C. locals.

The decision of the court was issued while Council Pres. Stewart Alsbury and local 1-217 head, Lloyd Whalen, were in the midst of what Alsbury termed "very difficult negotiations" with Forest Industrial Relations.

The legal battle for the recovery of the strike fund was the main action in lawsuits begun by IWA immediately after the secession move was started by Pritchett and others last October.

The secession move was vigorously attacked by IWA convention, which met that month at Portland, Ore. For more than two hours delegates paraded to the microphone to denounce the action of the secessionists.

ONE RESOLUTION adopted by the convention asserted that the district offices and other posts held by Pritchett and his companions were vacated and authorized IWA's international officer to move in, pending the election of new district and local officers.

Another resolution declared that Pritchett and his associates have "by their words, deeds and acts resigned from membership and office in the IWA and its affiliated locals." This resolution declared that vast majority of the B. C. lumber industry workers desire to remain with the IWA and called on the union to take the necessary steps to make it possible for them to carry on in its ranks.

One resolution was adopted unanimously and only one dissenting vote was cast against the other.

Fly Blasts FCC Ruling

The American Civil Liberties Union last week added its voice to the protests against the decision of the Federal Communications Commission to permit radio stations to editorialize.

ACLU informed members of Congress that it was urging the FCC to reinstate its prohibition of editorializing on the air as contained in the Mayflower decision.

A memorandum was prepared by James Lawrence Fly, former FCC chairman and now vice chairman of the ACLU Radio Committee. It said that the ACLU is committed to the principle that a broadcaster who "holds a license to serve the public interest — as distinguished from newspaper and magazine owners —cannot be permitted to editorialize, to harangue the public with his own private views and thus to turn the public's own powerful mechanism of free speech into an organ to serve the broadcaster's private aims."

THE ACLU statement asserted that it did not regard broadcasters as "second-class citizens," or that their voices should not be heard on the air.

"We are content to have Mr. David Sarnoff (head of the Radio Corporation of America) and Mr. William Paley (head of the Columbia Broadcasting System) as persons and repsonsible citizens, heard on occasional forums and public discussions as often as other equally responsible citizens. But they should appear as private citizens, just as other citizens do," ACLU said.

To suggest that radio owners will "continue to tolerate other views on the air is to rely upon the hope of beneficent tyranny," the statement said.

"The most impressive tyrants may well be in our smaller cities where there are only one or two stations, and in cities where the only radio stations are owned by the single newspaper interest in that area. In such places, the FCC can have no semblance of practical power to require a vague standard of fairness."

Assailing the FCC reversal of policy as confused, the ACLU said that "its vague requirement of fairness is unenforceable."

Pay In North 'Protected' By Dixie Drive

"THE UNORGANIZED plant in the South is a loaded pistol at the head of the organized plant in the North," Director George L. P. Weaver of the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination told the sixth annual race relations institute at Fisk Univ., Nashville, Tenn.

"The CIO's southern drive is the most effective way to protect the high labor standards achieved in the North," Weaver said.

"A critical analysis of the broad national problems of labor has shown us that certain Senators and Representatives in the South must become ex-Senators and ex-Representatives. We must aim at all political levels, locals, state and national."

Weaver said that the "sure route for achieving racial equality in the South was to raise economic standards by putting purchasing power in the hands of the workers", and to "make intelligent utilization of the ballot in the hands of the workers."

I won't eat Wilson Ideal Dog Food or any other Wilson meats

Wilson & Co., does not bargain fairly with its employees . . . .

DON'T BUY WILSON

Packing Union Calls Wilson & Co. 'Unfair'

"DON'T BUY Wilson & Co. meats!" That is the urgent plea to America's shoppers from 7000 Wilson employes.

The 7000—members of the CIO Packinghouse Workers—walked a picketline three months last year only to return to an intensified company campaign of mass firings, speedup, attempted union-busting—and still no contract.

While the union slugs it out with Wilson, the three other giants of the industry—Armour, Swift and Cudahy—are watching to see which way the wind blows. If Wilson manages to stay out from under a master contract, UPWA leaders say, it will be only a matter of time before the other big packers—all under nation-wide contract—adopt the Wilson formula.

In at least one respect Wilson's campaign has already failed—in its efforts to push the UPWA off the premises.

AFTER FIRING 400 union members, including most of the leaders, and setting up company unions at each of seven plants, Wilson then called for NLRB representation elections.

The company claimed it didn't know whom the workers wanted to represent them at the bargaining table, even though the solidarity of the workers during the long strike had left little reason for doubt.

When the ballots were in, UPWA won easily at all seven plants—and by majorities as high as 16 to 1.

Thus forced by law to follow up the elections by bargaining with the certified union, Wilson has since been meeting with UPWA representatives. But the union spokesmen say the sessions can't be called collective bargaining. "From our meetings with company representatives," said one union official, "it is clear that Wilson intends to break up the national organization of their employes as a first step toward driving the union from their plants."

THE UNION'S charges of unfair labor practices against Wilson are scheduled to have a hearing before the NLRB July 19. The complaint charges the company with unlawfully breaking its contract during the national meat strike.

The union, however, is not hitching its victory hopes to the NLRB's ultimate decision. Too many unions have disintegrated while waiting for the NLRB to get around to their case, union leaders say.

UPWA is pinning its hopes on the employes' solidarity and on the public's cooperation with the "Don't Buy Wilson & Co. Meats" campaign. "Organized labor particularly," said UPWA Pres. Ralph Helstein, "can hit Wilson where it counts — right in the cash register."

That's one way, Helstein added, that the buying public can help thousands of workers from slipping back into the "Jungle" — author Upton Sinclair's word for the inhuman conditions in the meat packing industry not so very many years ago.

Guild Parley Set For D. C.

THE CIO Newspaper Guild convention, just before winding up its convention in Columbus, O., took these two important actions:

1. Assailed the Ku Klux Klan as un-American. The resolution, offered by a Southern delegate, was adopted unanimously.

2. Selected Washington, D. C., as its 1950 convention city after being assured by several hotels that there would be no discrimination against Negro delegates.

The convention also nominated these candidates for office, to be chosen at a referendum in September (* denotes incumbent; candidates designated "pro" are pro-administration; those designated "anti" are anti-administration):

President: Harry Martin, Memphis (* pro), unopposed.

Secretary-Treasurer: Ralph Novak (* pro), Detroit.

Regional Vice Presidents: Charles Leveroni (pro) vs. John Wright (anti), both Boston; 2. Philip Price (* pro), Washington; 3. Adolph Rahm (* pro), St. Louis, vs. Myron McGeehan (pro), Indianapolis; 4. Al Dipman (pro), San Francisco, vs. James Quick (pro), Bakersfield, Cal.; 5. Victor Leo (anti), New York City.

(Raymond Kuhn, Bay City, Mich., and Forrest Williams, Seattle, both anti, were eliminated as candidates from regions 3 and 4 respectively on roll call votes.)

Vice presidents at large:

Pro — Chandler Foreman (), Chicago; Milton Lapine (), Cleveland; Joseph Collis (*), Wilkes-Barre, Pa.; Zula Ferguson, Los Angeles; Bemcq Price, Atlanta.

Anti Jack Rarick, Los Angeles; Robert Stern (*), New York; James D. Hartshorne, Cleveland; Martha Matthews, Detroit; Dillard Stokes, Washington.

Organizationally Speaking

CIO Reg. Dir. George DeNucci reports that in a Union Shop election held at the Hercules Trouser Co., Wellson, Ohio, the workers voted 261 to 2 in favor of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers. Intl. Rep. Nelson Joseph was in charge.

George Brown, Director of Organization IWA-CIO, announces that in an election held at the Packing Material Co., Baldwin, Mich., the workers voted 46 to 0 in favor of the IWA-CIO.

Pres. Harry Sayre of the CIO Paperworkers reports that in an NLRB election held at the Metallic Casket Co., Atlanta, Ga., the workers voted 144 to 93 in favor of UPA-CIO. Rep. A. W. Callaghan was in charge. The following union security elections have also been won by UPA:

Wilson-Jones Co., Chicago, Ill., 863 to 12; Papercraft Corp., Pittsburgh, Pa., 143 to 1; Kalamazoo Stationery Co., Kalamazoo, Mich., 205 to 96; Hawthorne Paper Co., Kalamazoo, Mich., 93 to 13; Monroe Paper Products Co., Monroe, Mich., 166 to 6.

CIO Reg. Dir. Michael Livoda reports that in a union shop election held at the Cudahy Packing Plant in Denver, Colo., Local Union No. 85, where Local 85, CIO Packinghouse Workers, have a contract, the workers voted 278 to 3 for the union shop. Approximately 290 were eligible to vote. Local officers Dave Martinez and Pete Valko assisted by Intl. Rep. Charles Waltripp handled this election.

Paul E. Miley, Director Region 2A UAW-CIO, announces that the UAW won an election at Pittsburgh, Pa. plant of Allis Chalmers, by an overwhelming vote of 1594 for UAW-CIO, and 61 for no union. Dominic Dornetto, Charles Schultz, assisted by Intl. Rep. Lewis Strickland brought about this victory.

After fifty years of failure in the telephone field, the AFL Brotherhood of Electrical Workers are now playing the A. T. & T. and Bell System's game by trying to prevent the telephone workers from achieving the recognition due them by the company. This recognition has been denied the workers by the company because they voted to affiliate with the CIO.

The IBEW was offered a place on the ballot, which it refused to accept. Now this organization is playing a "dog in the manger" policy. I resent this unwarranted anti-union conduct of the IBEW. I am happy to report the telephone workers are not falling for the IBEW line.

The CIO is backing the telephone workers to the fullest extent, and establishing a great industrial union, not a multiplicity of crafts that offer class "B" memberships. All workers belonging to the CIO have full membership. Our unions everywhere can be relied upon to support CWA-CIO in resisting all efforts of any interlopers of failures on the part of the companies or any other group.

President Murray's call for PAC action in last week's edition of the CIO News can be realized by organizing the unorganized so that we can bring into the fold many more workers, educate and activize them. The CIO can greatly increase its political activity by increased effort on our part to organize the unorganized.

U. S. Appeals Court Rules Against Hiring Halls

A TEST OF THE legality of maritime unions' hiring halls under the Taft-Hartley Act will probably go up to the U. S. Supreme Court this fall.

A Circuit Court of Appeals in New York ruled against the union last week and held that T-H's section on union security bars operations of the union-controlled hiring halls. In doing so, it upheld an order of the Natl. Labor Relations Board requiring the Natl. Maritime Union to stop requesting the hiring hall in its demands for a new contract covering Great Lakes companies.

Similar orders affecting NMU hiring halls on the Atlantic and Gulf Coasts are now pending in the circuit courts.

The NLRB maintains that the hiring halls "discriminate" against employment of non-union workers. The union pointed out that the hiring halls have been a major cause of improved employment and stability on the waterfronts, and that they have given each worker fair and equal share of available employment.

Herman Cooper, NMU attorney, said he would ask the court for a re-hearing of the case. Failing to get it, the union will appeal the case to the high court.

The NMU and other maritime unions have pointed out that operation of the hiring halls will be strongly defended.

The NLRB has promised that it will attempt no enforcement of its decision pending final outcome of the case. The hiring hall clause came under fire when it was written into the NMU's 1948 contract, and the NLRB order against it was issued last summer.

In a recent agreement signed with east coast shipping firms, the company agreed to continue the hiring hall until the courts have finally decided the issue.

Carey Declares:

Only 'Free' Unions Welcome In New International

A PREPARATORY Committee to work out plans for the formation of a new democratic international trade union confederation meets in London July 25.

The Committee, with 15 members, was instructed by a conference at Geneva, Switzerland, June 25-26, to draft a constitution and program for the new international organization; to submit them to "such bona fide trade union organizations throughout the world as would in its opinion qualify for membership"; and to plan an international labor meeting during the latter part of November to formally establish the new group.

Attending the Preparatory Committee is Michael Ross, CIO director of international affairs, and the AFL is represented by Irving Brown, its European representative. Also on the Committee are democratic trade union organizations in France, Italy, Great Britain, Australia-New Zealand, Asia, Africa, Latin America, the Benelux nations, Scandinavia, western Germany, and the international trade secretariats.

IN A SPEECH at the Geneva meeting, where plans for the new federation were crystallized, CIO Sec.-Treas. Carey said the group's task will be to create an international of "free trade unions — a vigorous, dynamic, progressive international, democratically organized and operated —an international conceived in liberty and devoted to justice and peace.

"Communist - dominated trade unions will find no welcome here," Carey added.

"This decision is brought about not by our objections to Communist doctrine, strong though they be, but rather by the amply proven fact that in Soviet Russia, trade unions are completely dominated by their government, and outside the Soviet, Communist-dominated unions are without real autonomy. They are merely instruments to further the interest of the Communist Party and that foreign power. In short, they cease to be trade unions.

"But simply being anti-Communist is no 'open sesame' to this organization we are here to create.

"Those trade union groups which exist solely through the will of, or which are controlled or dominated by governments, political parties or other forces outside the trade union movement, will find no place here.

"Our purpose is to create a partnership of trade union centers and organizations, a partnership whose objective will be to mobilize the free trade union forces throughout the world."

SIMILAR VIEWS were expressed by Arthur Deakin, a leader of the British Trades Union Congress.

The new organization, Deakin said, must be world-wide, it must "give the greatest freedom to its affiliates" and it must "deal with perfect freedom with those questions of industrial welfare which so vitally affect the lives of the workers of the world, and particularly with problems arising in backward areas."

Deakin indicated his strong belief that the organization should be democratically operated and un-dominated.

"Representation on the governing bodies of the organization is very important," he said, "and it must provide that both large and small trade union centers have a full measure of representation, with domination by none. There must be no power politics."

Course Announced in Industrial Hygiene

A new type program for training experts in industrial health has been announced by the Harvard Univ. School of Public Health. Dr. J. S. Simmons, Dean of the School, stated that the program organized to meet the increasing demand on the part of both labor and management for more effective methods of conserving the health and efficiency of industrial workers.

Courses of the postgraduate program will be open to all qualified physicians but preference will be given to those who have had experience in industrial medicine. Successful candidates will be awarded the newly established degree of Master of Industrial Health.

Removal of 20% Tax In Furs Requested

Immediate removal of the 20% federal excise tax on furs was requested in a petition with more than 100,000 signatures presented to Congress by the Furriers Joint Council of New York and the Joint Board Fur Dressers and Dyers.

The Fur and Leather Workers Union declared the tax on furs is a major cause for the decline in the sale of fur garments and has resulted in great hardship on workers thrown out of jobs by the decline.

CIO Doesn't Back Barden Measure

The "Keep Your Eye on Congress" box for the past two weeks has incorrectly listed the CIO as supporting HR 4683, Rep. Barden's bill for Federal Air to Education.

The CIO has in fact been supporting seven other bills concerning aid to education: HR 400, 814, 1144, 1218, 2873, 2880 and 2939. These, together with the Barden bill, are now under consideration by the House Committee on Education and Labor.

The national CIO has taken no position on whether funds should be used, in the aid program, for parochial or other types of non-public schools. The national CIO has voiced belief that the issue should be left up to the individual states to determine their own policy on these matters.

This principle is incorporated in the House bills supported by the CIO and in S. 246, passed by the Senate several weks ago.

Fulton Lewis, Jr., Loses Another Sponsor

Adolph Kunsmiller, president of the American Natl. Bank of Denver, said the bank had decided to stop footing the bills for Lewis' broadcasts in the Colorado city "because of the controversial nature of some of the opinions expressed by Lewis."

Lewis, who strongly supported the Republicans in the 1948 election, also tried to "do a job" on Rep. John Carroll, liberal Democratic Congressman from the Denver area. Lewis has lost sponsors in other cities.

300 Workers Fatally Hurt In 3 Months

More than 300 workers died from injuries received on the job and 93,000 were disabled for one or more days during the first quarter of 1949, reports the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

Nearly two million man-days were lost during the quarter by these injured workers, representing an estimated value of $19 million in wages at current levels.

The average injury-frequency rate for all manufacturing establishments reporting in the first quarter was 6.5% below that of the preceding quarter and 18.4% below the average for the first quarter of 1948.

Vol. XII | WASHINGTON, D. C., JULY 18, 1949 | 82 | No. 28

AN IMPORTANT report on the state of the nation's economic health and the ability of industry to grant pay increases was made last week by Robert R. Nathan (right), one of the country's leading economists, as several CIO unions made preparations for possible strikes. Attention centered on efforts of the Steelworkers to win higher pay, pensions and company - financed insurance. Shown with Nathan are CIO Pres. Philip Murray and Cyrus Ching, head of the Federal mediation service. Typical steelworkers are shown in upper photo. (See Pages 3, 6-7).

Rents Decontrolled On 9300 Homes Each Day

UNDER THE pressure of the real estate lobby, and with the help of Housing Expediter Tighe Woods and the local-option provision of the 1949 rent law, rent controls are coming off rented dwellings at the rate of 9300 a day.

The figures came from the Housing Expediter's office, which at the same time tried to minimize the extent of the decontrol flood. Few big cities are affected, they said.

But in Nebraska, including the city of Omaha with its 287,698 population, there are no controls, and tenants are arcused to fever pitch to have them put back again. Taking advantage of the local option clause, the Republican-dominated state legislature recently voted to remove the state from federal ceilings.

The story of Dallas, Texas (population 294,734) offers a good example of what happens when controls come off.

In Dallas, largest city yet affected, decontrol action of the city council placed hundreds of tenants in a panic.

THE CIO, AFL, Americans for Democratic Action, Negro Chamber of Commerce and Young Democrats have joined together in fighting for restitution of the ceilings. Meanwhile, they're doing what they can to advise tenants of their rights and to give aid in eviction cases.

W. Don Ellinger, president of the Texas State CIO Council, said the Dallas Tenants Rent Committee, of which CIO is a part, has been deluged with calls and letters from tenant victims of exorbitant rent rises.

Some rent increases are as high as 300% and many have been served on tenants with as little as 24 hours' notice and with no consultation, the Tenants Committee informed Mayor Wallace Savage.

The committee's letter to the mayor was written seven days after controls were lifted. Enclosed with the letter was a list of 61 tenants who had already reported new increases to the committee.

One of those listed was R. I. Dausch, whose landlord upped the rent on three furnished rooms and bath from $52 a month to $123. The owner of 13 houses—three rooms without bath—upped the rent for his shanties from $4.16 a week to $12. Another tenant, Cecil C. Hall, is now charged $100 on a unit which formerly rented for $37.50.

ABOUT 100 EVICTION suits were pending in the courts seven days after the city was decontrolled.

In its letter to the mayor, the committee recalled that the head of the landlords' association in Dallas had testified before the City Council that his organization "would be responsible for seeing that rents did not run away in Dallas and submitted to you signed pledges from hundreds of landlords promising fair treatment and landlord-tenant consultation about rents.

"We appeared before you and submitted the facts on the acute housing shortage and tried to convince you that rent decontrol would be disastrous for the tenants of Dallas. Despite the figures and the evidence, you decided to believe the landlords' promises instead of the facts."

The letter termed the situation a "catastrophe for the working people" of Dallas.

"If you have any program to suggest to stop this avalanche you have loosed, we pledge our cooperation," the letter concluded. "If you have no such program, you are admitting that the tenants are the forgotten men of 1949."

Bus Drivers Strike N. Y. Firm

Protesting the dismissal of four union mechanics, 2200 CIO Transport Workers walked off their posts as bus drivers and mechanics for the New York City Omnibus Corp. As a result, all 21 of the company's bus lines, which carry some 925,000 passengers daily, are at a standstill.

Negotiations to end the strike are being conducted in the office of Theodore W. Kheel, impartial chairman for the city's transit industry. As the CIO News went to press, TWU Pres. Michael Quill predicted the walkout would spread to the Fifth Avenue Coach Corp., owned by the same company, if no immediate settlement is reached.

O'Dwyer Decision Spurs Hope of New York Liberals

HOPES for a liberal victory this fall in New York State took a decided jump upwards last week on the announcement by Mayor William O'Dwyer that he would be a candidate for reelection.

O'Dwyer's announcement came after he had several times refused to run again. His refusals did not faze New York City CIO Pres. Michael Quill, State CIO Pres. Louis Hollander and others, who kept on bringing pressure on O'Dwyer. CIO-PAC Dir. Jack Kroll also praised O'Dwyer's decision.

With O'Dwyer's decision, District Attorney Hogan, who had announced for mayor, withdrew in the mayor's favor and decided to run again for prosecutor. He was elected four years ago with bi-partisan support.

It is expected that former Gov. Herbert H. Lehman will now announce for U. S. Senator in the race to fill the seat of Robert F. Wagner (D.,) who resigned recently because of ill health.

New York Democrats and other liberals are going ahead with their plans in the expectations that the Wallaceite Labor Party will do everything it can to bring about a Republican victory by putting up candidates against the Democrats.

Quill said, "we'll win despite the efforts of New York's most reactionary party, the Labor Party." Quill was elected to City Council on the ALP ticket, but has broken with that party in loyalty to CIO policy.

Quill has announced he will not run again for municipal council.

Spurning Labor Hurts Fund Drives

A sharp drop in contributions in community drives often goes along with a tendency to ignore unions and approach workers through their employers, notes the New York State CIO Council in a report on community activities.

The report, released by Pres. Louis Hollander and Secy-Treas. Harold Garno of the Council, tells of the growing participation of CIO unions in community affairs.

CIO unions in the state have given millions of dollars a year to various community chests, national drives for health and welfare projects and for foreign relief and reconstruction, declares the report.

Left-Wing 'Secessionists' Are Beaten In TWU

INTERNATIONAL Officers of the CIO Transport Workers Union last week thwarted an alleged left-wing attempt to lead between 8000 and 10,000 airline employes from the union.

The struggle, which began at the union's convention in Chicago last December, came to a climax in Miami and New York City.

The left wing was defeated at the Chicago convention. Their one remaining stronghold was Miami Local 500, where the leadership was such that CIO Pres. Philip Murray several weeks ago called on TWU to clean up the mess.

TWU Vice. Pres. William Grogan was named as administrator by the union's international executive board and was sent to the Florida city. He was not only armed with Murray's statement and charges brought against Local 500 by TWU Pres. Michael Quill.

The fight centered around an alleged shortage of $18,000 in the funds of the local treasury. Grogan reported he first asked Local Secy.-Treas. David Frazier to turn over the local's office and the records to him.

MET WITH a refusal by Frazier, who said he wanted to consult the other officers and the membership, Grogan obtained a court order restraining the local officers—Pres. Philip Scheffsky, Frazier and special Rep. Armand Scala—from continuing in office and ordering them to turn over all books, records and funds to him as administrator. Scala succeeded Charles Smolikoff, who was fired at the Chicago convention.

Scheffsky turned over the paper to Grogan, but the $18,000 was still not in the hands of the international union last week.

The scene shifted to New York City, where a meeting of representatives of airline locals was called, TWU said, by Pres. Barnard Murphy of Local 501, Jackson Heights, and chairman of the Airline Autonomy Committee, which TWU refuses to recognize.

Learning of the meeting, Grogan flew back to New York. Grogan appeared shortly after the session started, stuck his foot in the door, and refused to leave.

When he was permitted to speak, three of the leaders from Miami withdrew and Grogan confronted the 14 remaining with his appointment as administrator of Local 500 and Quill's charges against the Local.

(Scheffsky was not present. The three from Miami were Frazier, former Local 500 Pres. M. L. Edwards and Executive Board Member Henderson. The following other air transport workers' locals were represented: New York, Chicago, San Francisco, Washington, D. C.; Fort Worth and Los Angeles.)

A HEATED argument ensued. Grogan finally read the Florida injunction against Local 500's officers.

The meeting recessed for three hours. At the final session which lasted more than 20 hours, officers of 16 of the 20 locals of TWU's Air Transport Division rejected an application for the reinstatement of officers of Local 500.

Quill has gone to Miami to continue with the legal proceedings against Local 500 officers. He said that a "thorough investigation also will be initiated to recover some $18,000 of unions funds that are missing. The Miami group maintained that $9,000 was held in a special corporation but this leaves another $9,000 unaccounted for."

Grogan said: "The local delegate completely disavowed any purported secession plans through individual statements of their desire to remain in TWU and subscribe to TWU and Natl. CIO policy. The result bears out my prediction that when the local delegates were confronted with the fact behind the international executive board's action concerning the Miami local, they could hold no sympathy for the discredited officers."

Clark Would Jail Trust Violators

JAIL SENTENCES for violators of the anti-trust statutes might make for better observance of the statutes by monopoly businessmen, Atty. Gen. Tom Clark has suggested.

Testifying at hearings conducted by the special anti-monopoly investigating committee headed by Rep. Celler (D., N. Y.), Clark complained that federal judges don't seem inclined to hand out sentences in anti-trust cases.

Clark, first witness at the hearings of the new committee, said he would bring in recommendations in the near future for a strong anti-trust program. One point in such a plan, he said, would be repeal of the Reed-Bulwinkle Bill.

That law, passed by the 80th Congress over Pres. Truman's veto, allows the railroads to get together to fix rates.

". . . But can you beat the hours"?

CWA Asks End Of Discharges

THE CIO Communications Workers of America have asked the Federal Communications Commission to step in and prevent telephone and telegraph companies from bluntly dismissing employes due to changes in service or techniques without severance pay or retraining in another job.

Representing 320,000 telephone workers, CWA urged the FCC to withhold approval of changes in service until the company makes some provision for the workers about to be dismissed.

Severance pay asked by the union would range from six weeks' pay for workers with one year's service to 60 weeks for workers with 15 years' service.

Just previously CWA Pres. Joseph Beirne charged the Bell System with making "all-out" efforts to destroy the union. Latest example, he said, is AT&T's abrogation of 37 existing CWA contracts covering two-thirds of the union's membership.

In all these cases the company has petitioned for new NLRB elections. The first, held in New Jersey, gave CWA a 5-to-1 victory. Three cases are now pending before the Michigan NLRB and will constitute a test of the legality of Bell's tactics.

Pres. Truman's Plan Brings Steel 'Truce'

By GLORIA CAPLAN

A RELUCTANT 11th hour change of mind by the steel industry's "Big Three" warded off a walkout 10 hours before the deadline, thus handing Pres. Truman a major victory in his efforts to prevent a steel stoppage without invoking the Taft-Hartley Act.

Some 550,000 CIO Steelworkers poised for a midnight walk off the jobs last Friday, when first Republic and Bethlehem Steel Corporations and then U. S. Steel wired Truman of their willingness to participate in his 60-day truce plan.

Negotiations between the union and U. S. Steel (which sets the industry pattern) broke off July 6 with the company's refusal to grant any concessions. "From the beginning of negotiations," CIO and Steelworkers Pres. Philip Murray charged, "U. S. Steel has failed to bargain in good faith."

Alarmed at the impact a strike in badly-needed steel might have on the nation's economy, Truman stepped in with the proposal that work continue under present terms of the contracts, while a Presidential - appointed fact-finding board investigated and made recommendations.

The "recommendations" suggestions didn't appeal to the "Big Three" corporations. While the union and several smaller steel concerns accepted the truce, U. S. Steel, Republic and Bethlehem wired their rejection on grounds that the President was not utilizing the T-H Act. Under T-H, fact-finding boards haven't the power to make recommendations.

A second plea from Truman to the three corporations brought the suggestion that the President limit the proposed board to "fact-finding" and remove its power to recommend a settlement.

The suggested change in the character of the board was turned down by Truman, and the walkout seemed inevitable, when the three companies sent a third wire to the President—this time in acceptance.

DISPLAYING a "concern" for the workers which he had previously concealed, U. S. Steel Pres. Ben Fairless said: "We do not wish, if it can possibly be avoided, to have our production of steel stopped and our employes deprived of the opportunity to work . . . with attendant hardship to the communities . . ." The corporation's opposition to the board's making recommendations was unchanged, he said.

The wire from Republic Steel was similar, but carried one further note—a hint at higher steel prices if the union wins a wage increase. Both the union and economist Robert R. Nathan have presented detailed figures showing that steel profits are so enormous as to permit both a wage increase and a price cut at the same time without making a sizeable dent in the net income.

The steel union is asking a substantial wage increase, an insurance program and a pension plan.

On wages, U. S. Steel said unequivocally "no." The union had argued, and the Nathan study showed that the steel worker in 1949 is making only 7.3c an hour more (in terms of real income) than he was 10 years ago.

ON INSURANCE, the corporation turned down the union's plan, but offered to contribute 2c an hour per worker for such a plan, if the worker would contribute a like sum. Murray termed the two-penny offer "picayune," said it would constitute a 2c wage cut for each worker and noted that the giant corporation now contributes less than 1/5c an hour for social insurance for its employes.

On pensions, the corporation refused to agree that the subject was arguable; suggested the question of whether it could be taken up be presented to the industry conciliation board. Although the corporation called it "arbitration," it told the union, it would consider the board's opinion "advisory" only. The proposal, Murray therefore charged, was not "bona fide." Besides, the board is not in existence, since the company months ago obtained the resignation of its chairman.

HERE ARE the events leading up to the steel crisis:

July 6—U. S. Steel Corp. rejected the union's demands for a pay increase, a pension plan and an insurance program. With negotiations thus broken off, Murray called a meeting of the union's wage policy committee for July 12.

July 7—Cyrus Ching, Federal Mediation & Conciliation director, attempted to avert a walkout by inviting U. S. Steel and union representatives to a July 11 meeting in his Washington office.

July 11—A final meeting in Ching's office failed to budge the corporation from its refusal to compromise.

July 12—The union's wage policy committee, in open meeting with the press attending, voted to strike those steel companies with which no agreement was reached by July 16, strike deadline set by contract. At the same time the union released the Robert R. Nathan report on the financial ability of the industry to pay substantial increases.

Meanwhile, after conferences with Ching and Presidential Assistant John Steelman, Pres. Truman wired the union and six major steel companies his proposal for staving off a walkout at least for 60 days. The recommendation: That work continue under the present contracts for 60 days while a Presidential fact-finding board investigate the dispute and make recommendations. The board's recommendations would not be binding.

U. S. STEEL, Bethlehem and Republic quickly turned down the strike-averting proposal, as they had in 1946 when the President made a pre-strike recommendation. They objected, the companies said, to the President's plan to go outside the Taft-Hartley act to settle the strike.

Hitch was that the companies, presumably feeling on shaky ground, objected to granting a board the power to make recommendations which might substantiate the union's position. A T-H fact-finding board could only report facts of the dispute.

Meanwhile, a number of smaller companies wired their acceptances to the President. Among them were Jones & Laughlin, Youngstown Sheet & Tube, Wheeling, Colorado Fuel & Iron, Pittsburgh Steel, Continental, Copperweld and Portsmouth.

July 13—The union wired its acceptance and announced it would strike only those companies which refused to abide by the President's plan. ". . . we will continue work under the terms of the collective bargaining agreements now in effect for a period of 60 days from July 16, 1949, with respect to those companies who likewise accept your proposal and agree to continue operations . . . and to appear before the board," Murray wired.

July 14—Truman wired the industry's "Big Three" a second plea, this time chiding: "Surely you are not afraid to have your side of this dispute examined in the public interest." He rejected the corporation's objections to his plan with the reminder that the President can invoke the T-H provisions only when the national health or safety are in peril. A steel strike would have to go on a long time before such would be the case, he said.

"It is obviously more sensible to attempt to prevent such an interruption before it starts, than to wait and have the Government step in after a prolonged interruption has reached the point where it does imperil the national health or safety," he said.

CYRUS CHING, meanwhile, continued his peace-making efforts by urging 50-odd smaller companies to accept the fact-finding plan.

A number of Representatives and Senators, too, were much concerned about the situation.

Rep. Franklin D. Roosevelt Jr., (D., N. Y.): . . ."There is the moral law which says that men in the position of Mr. Fairless (U. S. Steel president) cannot act selfishly, but must act for the good of the country as a whole . . ."

Sen. Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D., Wyo.) and Francis Myers (D., Pa.) both urged the steel corporations to accept the President's proposal.

Rep. Harry J. Davenport (D., Pa.) accused the industry of being "determined to plunge the nation into a period of strife and strikes that will inevitably result in bloodshed and depression."

Nathan Says Steelworkers Don't 'Share Appreciably' In Profits

THE STEEL industry could grant a 30c hourly wage boost and not notice a cut in profits: the amount would equal what the industry is saving in lower costs of raw materials this year, Robert Nathan says. He goes on:

The industry could grant a 10c hourly raise, and, operating at only 80% of capacity, still net the same record-high profits it harvested last year.

The industry could grant a 20c hourly increase—and, if operating at 90% of capacity—net twice as much as it did during the war.

These conclusions on the wealthy steel industry's ability to grant a 1949 wage increase were reached by nationally-renowned economist Robert Nathan. To get the facts on the steel industry's economic picture, the CIO Steelworkers retained Nathan to make an economic study.

Last week the report was made public. Page after page and chart after chart described the fabulous profits of the 19 leading steel producers. "Unconscionable" profits—was how Nathan described them, if they continue at the present rate.

Everything about the steel industry is gigantic—its costs, its production, its profits, and even (as Nathan occasionally points out) its misrepresentations. The lay observer, confronted with millions of dollars at every step in the report, could only get an idea of what it was all about by comparing the industry's past millions with present millions.

Nathan concluded that the industry could—and should—pay substantial wage increases and cut prices at the same time. He based this on these major findings:

1. The industry's production over the past 10 years has reached unprecedented levels.

Example: Steel prices were raised more than was produce 15 million tons more than it could in 1939.

Example: Modernization and replacement of obsolete equipment have resulted in much greater efficiency and hence lower costs.

2. Costs are lower, prices higher than before the war.

Eample: Steel prices were raised more than was needed to offset higher labor and materials costs.

Example: Steel prices were raised more than was and fuel oil, all important raw materials in steel productions—fell sharply the first half of this year. They fell enough to pay a 30c hourly increase. But the industry didn't cut its prices accordingly.

3. Net Profits in steel increased far more rapidly than those in manufacturing in general.

Example: From 1946 to the end of 1948, profits of all manufacturing corporations nearly doubled; in steel, they increased three-and-one-half-fold.

Example: In the first half of this year—with profits of most industries going down—steel profits rose to new pinnacles. At that rate, the industry this year will net $800 million—far above 1948 and 2½ times the wartime average. This year's first quarter profits constituted a 15% annual rate of return on investment.

(With 6 to 8% generally considered very good, that 15% ain't exactly hay.)

4. Despite the industry's unparalleled prosperity, the steelworker has "not shared appreciably in the profitability of the steel industry."

Example: While each steelworker's productivity per hour rose 50% between 1939 and 1949, the buying power of his hourly pay increased only one-seventh.

Example: Steelworkers' real hourly earnings increased only 14% over the past 10 years, while the industry's return on investment, adjusted for price changes, zoomed 165%.

Example: Steelworkers' real wages went up much less than wages in manufacturing in general. But the Steel industry's profits rose much more than manufacturing profits as a whole.

Long before the Nathan report was released, the steel union negotiators had argued similarly with company representatives. In its brief to the corporations, the union said:

"It is obvious that U. S. Steel Corp. and the Industry can grant the wage increase so needed by Steelworker members—and they can do so without raising prices. All of the basic steel companies can, within the present cost-price-profit framework grant substantial wage increase out of present profits margins without reducing profits to an unfairly low level. They can even do so while, at the same time, lowering steel prices."

The Nathan report later made the same point.

And no spokesman for the industry has yet disputed it.

Shift In Income

". . . in 1948 wages and salaries of leading steel companies totaled less than 35% of sales, whereas in 1946 they had been more than 41% of sales . . . These divergent trends clearly show a substantial shift in the share of the income of the steel industry from the wage earners to the owners in the postwar inflationary boom." — Robert Nathan.

Unchanged Prices

"Material and labor costs have fallen almost 15% in the last six months, yet bar steel prices have remained virtually unchanged. This pattern can certainly not be characterized as a healthy adjustment."—Robert Nathan.

Who's Laughing?

Like many Republican newspapers, the New York Daily News was caught laughing at the wrong time.

The day the last three steel company "holdouts" capitulated to the President's 60-day truce proposal, the News carried a lead editorial headed "Steel Outsmarts Harry."

". . . We think they're smart to give Harry the thumbs-down—a good deal smarter than Harry was when he made this attempt to bypass Taft-Hartley."

Who's laughing now, News?

Likely Inference

"It is difficult to resist the inference that the steel corporations have reported their profits contrary to normal accounting procedures in order to obscure their actual size."—Robert Nathan.

More Profits?

"Historically and currently the steel industry has resisted price declines. There is no basis for confidence that failure to increase wages in the steel industry will have any other effect than to add to its already huge profits. In other words, the windfall of lower costs will merely augment already swollen profits."—Robert Nathan.

NO, NO, NO -- THEN YES

The 'Big Three' of the steel industry arrogantly climbed up on a high horse last week and then climbed right back down again.

As a result, a major strike was averted or postponed and the way was paved for possible settlement of an important economic dispute on the basis of facts.

The maneuvering was really something to watch.

U. S. Steel, the giant of the industry, acted as if there was only one meaningful word in its collective bargaining vocabulary—and that word was "no."

The big corporation said "no" to the CIO Steelworkers' request for higher wages, "no" to a discussion of pensions and "no" to a company-financed insurance plan.

This led to a deadlock in negotiations, which was followed by mounting strike sentiment on the part of the steel union. It soon became obvious that the industry was likely to be shut down.

Into the picture stepped the Federal government—and then President Truman came forth with his proposal. He asked the Steelworkers to remain at work for at least 60 days while a fact-finding board with power to make recommendations studied the situation.

The union said "yes" and agreed to continue work at plants which agreed to go along with the Truman plan. U. S. Steel gave forth with a resounding "no" and told the President he should use the Taft-Hartley Act, with its injunction feature.

The industry didn't present a solid "no" front, however, and the "Big Three" did a last-minute flip-flop.

The arrogant defiance of the President, obviously prompted to a large degree by political motives, collapsed like a punctured balloon.

CONTROVERSY NOT SETTLED

The off-again, on-again actions of U. S. Steel, although a victory for Truman, didn't settle the controversy between the steel industry and its employes. The industrial giants said "yes" only to the President—not to the union's demands.

The "truce" means union members will continue to work for 60 days while the Presidential board investigates.

Neither the union nor the industry will be compelled to accept the board's recommendations, but they obviously will have considerable effect on settlement of the controversy.

One thing, at least, has been demonstrated and that is that it's not necessary for the government to "crack down" with an injunction when somebody starts shouting "national emergency."

The board's findings—if based on well known facts—will show the steel industry in an excellent position to grant the union what it asks.

It indeed will be interesting then to see whether U. S. Steel has learned to say anything other than "no." ★ ★ ★

U. S. MONEY FOR FRANCO'S SPAIN?

There has been a move on in Washington for some time to get Congress to include the Spanish dictatorship in our nation's program of relief and rehabilitation for Western Europe.

The Senate Appropriations Committee recently approved a grant of $50,000,000 to the Franco government.

This not only is unusual, in the light of our efforts to encourage democracy throughout the world; it's a bit like digging up Hitler and Mussolini and giving them our blessing.

Everywhere You Turn It's Politics

What People Earn, How They Live Greatly Influenced By The Ballot

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THERE'S A definite and close connection between the buck you give to PAC and the bucks you get—or don't get—in your pay envelope.

There is a close tie between the way the nation votes and the manner in which its people live.

Business and industry have been aware of this for years—and they've taken full advantage of it.

Not until PAC was created did labor begin to give wide recognition to the fact that politics and economics travel hand-in-hand.

Unfortunately there are still many persons in the labor movement who do not fully understand or appreciate the relationship of the ballot to their own standard of living.

LET'S START out with a simple example—a town served by a large private utility firm which charges exceptionally high rates.

The firm operates under a franchise which permits no competition. Its officers and principal stockholders throw around a lot of political weight—and, so, the utilities commission doesn't order lower rates.

Two courses are open to the consuming public. Through political action the people can get a new and fair utilities commission or they can establish a municipal power plant.

In a similar manner, the people can control, regulate or break up monopolies of all types.

NOW LET'S take a look at minimum wages, their relation to all pay scales and the manner in which they're set.

The worker earning $1 or more an hour may be inclined at present to express only an academic interest in efforts to get the 40c minimum wage increased to at least 75c.

But, if hard times start moving in on us the unrealistic 40c minimum will undercut or at least tend to undercut all wages.

A Congress dominated by persons friendly to Big Business will try to keep the legal minimum wage as low as possible. A Congress friendly to labor will boost the minimum.

And thus we have another clear-cut example of the relationship of politics and economics.

THERE WAS a time when the housing problem was considered by most persons to be purely economic—but that's not true today.

Private enterprise failed to clear the slums and provide low-cost dwelling units which could be purchased by average persons under private financing plans.

It was necessary for the government to step into the picture—and control of government policies is determined by political action.

Nobody who knows what goes on in Washington would suggest that the real estate lobby fought public housing so bitterly merely because there was some vague principle involved. The stranglehold of the industry on the housing field was the thing involved.

THE AMOUNT withheld to pay your income tax, the charge imposed on you for water and sewage service, the kind of school your children attend and the type of roads you drive on are determined to a large degree by political action.

So are the type of fire and police protection you receive, the kind of health services your state, county and city provide.

All of these things and many more—every one of them subject to political influence—have a direct bearing on your paycheck.

The Taft-Hartley Act and state anti-labor laws partly determine the effectiveness of unions in fighting for economic gains.

The tax policies worked out by Congress help determine the price and profit policies of industry.

And when you look at it this way it seems that a buck for PAC is really a small but extremely worthwhile investment that every CIO member should make.

ACW Launches Union Label Campaign

THE CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers' executive board last week launched a half-million dollar campaign to promote union made men's and boys' clothing.

ACW is determined to eliminate the last remnants of non-union products in the men's apparel industry. The union will use, it was announced, the general and labor press, radio, national magazines and all other modern promotional techniques to acquaint American trade unionists and consumers generally with the advantages of purchasing Amalgamated union label goods.

ACW Pres. Jacob Potofsky announced that Vice Pres. Charles Weinstein of Philadelphia is in charge of the campaign.

The union said great dependence will be placed upon local trade unionists and consumer committees in all industrial towns and cities. It is planned to have these committees visit their local department and clothing stores to urge the sale of apparel bearing the label. Potofsky and Weinstein said:

"The Amalgamated union label is a guarantee that a garment has been made under decent wage and working conditions in a hygienic well-ventilated factory where modern methods prevail.

"It is a further guarantee that in each price bracket the article of clothing is the best money can buy in terms of quality and workmanship.

"The Amalgamated union label is a guarantee against the return of the sweatshop of notorious memory. It is an effective safeguard against the few chiselers who still seek to undermine standards laboriously built up over the years and make the un-American industrial jungle a substitute for enlightened union-management relations."

Court Over-Ruled By Congress

A bill which "over-rules the Supreme Court" and bars longshoremen from collecting back overtime pay, rode through the House last week on a 207-52 vote.

Mobilized against it were a group of New York Congressmen who charged the bill would "take money right out of the pockets of the longshoremen." Rep. Lynch (D., N. Y.) described it as "one of the greatest injustices that could be done to workingmen."

The bill, already passed by the Senate, now goes to the White House for Presidential approval or veto.

The bill (HR 858) was introduced after the Supreme Court last year upheld the right of a group of longshoremen—most of them in the New York area—to sue for collection of back "premium overtime" pay.

An Amusing Case Of Mistaken Identity

THE FELLOWS were sitting around a small hotel room late one night, talking about the trials and tribulations of being union organizers.

Newcomers to the game—men who hadn't yet gone through the mill—were complaining about the cool treatment they had received in the town in which they were working.

"Aw, this is nothing," said a veteran. "Folks around here are a bit cool, but they're really not too unfriendly. They don't curse you when you walk down the street.

"And we've all got hotel rooms, haven't we? Why, I can remember back in the early days when a CIO man couldn't get a room in a decent hotel in many towns."

HE TOLD ABOUT his experiences, some of which had been rather unpleasant. Others did likewise.

Finally, a CIO publicity man, who had dropped into town for a couple of days, said:

"I know what you guys are talking about because I recently had an amusing experience along that line."

The hotel situation, he continued, was "really tight" and he had been moving from one place to another for weeks because of a five-day limitation on rooms.

"I finally got into a clean little hotel which had a bunch of clerks extremely unfriendly to labor unions," he said.

"I really got the frigid treatment when they learned I was working for the CIO."

WHILE AT THIS hotel, the CIO man said, he was working with a photographer for a national magazine on an illustrated story about organizing activities.

"We got an organizer whose first name was Truman to help us arrange some shots and we went to work," he said.

"That photographer took enough pictures to fill a whole magazine but he still wasn't satisfied. He wanted some more. I got tied up and suggested he contact our organizer friend.

"I didn't hear from either the photographer or the organizer during the rest of the day.

"And when I went to the hotel to clean up for dinner one of the clerks asked me in a rather nasty manner how much longer I intended to keep my room. I gave him an evasive answer and went on my way."

THE PUBLICITY MAN said he "slipped out" of the hotel about an hour later, ate dinner, then went to a movie.

"Then I walked around town for an hour or so because I had a feeling they were going to toss me out when I went back to the hotel," he continued. "I was trying to think up some good arguments for them.

"Finally I headed for my room. I rushed through the lobby—you know, like I was on an important mission—barged up to the desk and asked for my key.

"The clerk greeted me like a long-lost brother—and I nearly fainted."

The clerk handed him his key and then said: "I have a very important message for you. Mr. ——— from the Saturday Evening Post called and said for me to be sure and tell you the pictures you and Mr. Truman had lined up had worked out fine."

"I never did tell the clerk that the photographer wasn't talking about President Truman—and I stayed around that hotel until I got ready to move," the publicity man said.

How To 'Bargain'—In Ten Easy Lessons!

Murray Sees New World Labor Unit Taking WFTU's Place

THE NEW democratic international labor federation, which CIO is helping to build, "will be a powerful influence for economic and social improvement."

That's the prediction of CIO Pres. Philip Murray, writing in the July issue of the magazine United Nations World. (The magazine is a privately-owned publication, and has no ties with the United Nations; it specializes in articles on foreign relations.)

The new organization, Murray indicated, will fill a place which the World Federation of Trade Unions should have done: to serve as a movement "responsive to the needs and aspirations of democratic workers."

The CIO, Pres. Murray wrote, withdrew from the WFTU "more in sorrow than in anger."

"I take no personal pleasure from this inevitable split between the democratic and Communist unions of the WFTU," he said, "any more than other Americans have rejoiced at the major disagreements which have marked the history of the United Nations itself.

"The world's problems—including its labor problems—might be closer to solution had the Big Three unity of the wartime period carried over into the post-war years. But unity must be based on faith and some harmony of purpose."

THE WFTU, Murray recalled, was created in 1945. At that time it "symbolized the high hopes of workers everywhere that the post-war world would offer a favorable climate for the development of unity and peace among all peoples."

"It was the insistence on the part of the Russians and their labor allies that the WFTU adhere to the letter and the spirit of every tenet of Cominform faith" that led to the split, early this year, in the WFTU and the exit of the democratic unions from that organization.

Nevertheless, the CIO was right in joining the WFTU at the time of its creation, Murray pointed out, and "we had soberly balanced the chances of success and failure."

"We tried to appraise the effect on Communist thinking of the tremendous, heroic war effort of the Russian people," he said. "We wanted to meet the Russians halfway, in the belief that some of their suspicions and mistrust of the free unions of the non-Soviet world would be dissolved by close working contact with us in a cooperative effort for building a better world.

"I am still convinced that the attempt, unsuccessful though it proved, was worth the effort. Without it, the present atmosphere—bad as it is—might have been even worse."

Progress

Progress is being made toward formation of the new democratic international labor body which Pres. Murray discussed in his article in the United Nations World.

A preliminary conference of interested unions was held at Geneva, Switzerland, on June 25-26, and a formal decision to create the new organizatoin was taken by the more than 100 labor spokesmen present. Secy.-Treas. Carey headed the CIO delegation at that meeting.

An arrangements committee meeting will be held in London late this month, to set a date for an international constitutional convention. It will take place in Europe between Nov. 10 and Nov. 30.

MURRAY PRAISED the efforts of the late Sidney Hillman for devoting "his great talent and energy" to the promotion of a world labor movement; and of Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey for carrying on since Hillman's death "a major portion of this difficult, and often exasperating, assignment."

"Mr. Hillman strongly expressed the CIO's viewpoint" when the WFTU was being created, Murray added, "that the world organization would prosper so long as it closely adhered to its trade union functions, and that it would inevitably create unsurmountable difficulties if it permitted itself the luxury of engaging in international politics."

But Communist political influences were injected into the WFTU, particularly after the Cominform "adopted its militant policy of hostility to the western democracies." WFTU headquarters became a fountainhead of propaganda against the European Recovery Program.

BY REFUSING to concern itself with the success of the ERP, the WFTU cut itself from its biggest field of work—even though its constitution and resolutions called for economic recovery plans in war-torn areas.

"With the WFTU hostile to the ERP program and aloof to the needs of the workers, the democratic unions were forced to establish their own committee to handle ERP functions," Murray said.

"Thus, the ERP Trade Union Advisory Committee came into being; and out of the cooperative activities on ERP problems there arose the desire for a new international organization responsive to the needs and aspirations of democratic workers.

"That new organization is now in the process of construction. It will succeed."

Nathan: Wage Increases Definitely In

AT CIO LUNCHEON: Pres. Murray and Secretary of Labor Maurice Tobin talk things over at CIO luncheon where Nathan economic report was made public. Numerous high government officials attended.

"WAGE INCREASES are definitely in the interest of both labor and business and especially in the interest of the nation."

That was the key conclusion reached in an elaborate and thoroughgoing economic report which Robert Nathan, one of the country's leading economists, has prepared for the CIO. In 1946 he prepared a similar study of the country's economic health for the CIO.

The 1949 report was made public at a luncheon sponsored by the CIO and attended by members of the Washington press corps, Senators and Congress, members of the Cabinet and other high government officials.

CIO Pres. Murray, introducing Nathan, told the gathering at the Mayflower Hotel in the nation's capital that "events of the last three years have proven the brilliance and correctness of Nathan's earlier diagnosis"—that wages could be lifted without price increases, and that further profiteering would lead to inflation and distress.

In the 1949 report, Nathan took issue with false optimists and members of the "do nothing" school of thought.

"There's nothing healthy in an economic adjustment which brings unemployment to millions of workers, bankruptcy to large numbers of small businesses and widespread curtailment of standards of living," Nathan warned. "Yet that is exactly the direction of what is taking place."

"No firm indications that a major depression is imminent" can be seen, the economist said, "but what is unmistakably clear is the definite downward trend prevailing throughout the economy."

A SWITCH IN time saves nine, Nathan warned in effect: Either take steps now to halt the recession or be faced with the need of more serious problems and remedies later on.

"Now, while production and personal income and profits are still high," his report concluded, "moderate action can bring good results."

The national interest requires, the report declared, "that all necessary steps be taken promptly to stem the decline in business and initiate an upward trend in production and employment.

"Neither the adjustments to date nor the outlook for the next few months offer substantial assurance that the recession will be short and mild. It is neither necessary nor desirable to resign the country to the risks involved in a do-nothing approach."

The key to ending the recession is a major increase in buying power, Nathan said. Buying power can be lifted either by higher wage payments, by lower prices or by both.

"But prices have not come down substantially," the report showed. "If somehow consumers were so organized as to be able to sit down collectively with management and lower prices, gr have been achiev

About Nathan

Bob Nathan, who prepared the report for CIO, is one of the country's leading economists.

During the war, he held a number of key government jobs: head of the Planning Committee of the WPB, later deputy director of the Office of War Mobilization & Reconversion when Supreme Court Chief Justice Fred Vinson headed that agency.

His 1946 report for CIO caused much debate and considerable criticism from business writers—most of whom misinterpreted his arguments.

situation Results From Gree

CIO Pres. Philip Murray's comments on the Nathan report and on the nation's price-profit-wage situation:

Approximately three years ago we met tother at a similar luncheon to discuss grave economic problems which were then confronting the American people. At the time of our meeting in 1946, the nation was suffering from the cancerous growth of an unchecked inflation. At that gathering, we examined the evil effects upon the families of the country of runaway prices and extortionate profits—and the CIO presented a practical program to stop this dangerous trend.

Today, largely because this program was rejected and the unholy post-war inflation was allowed to run its course, new and critical economic problems beset the nation. In the last nine months industrial production has fallen almost 15%; unemployment has doubled, and millions of additional wage and salaried workers have been reduced to part-time employment. Meanwhile the cost of living remains almost at peak levels.

This is a matter of grave concern to the CIO.

The present situation is the direct result of shortsighted and greedy business policies. It is the direct result of the callous disregard of the national welfare by the trusts and monopolists. . . .

Abundance is within our grasp, production is once again headed downward. We cannot—we must not—indulge ourselves with mere pious expressions of hope about the "inevitable readjustments" and do nothing. It is imperative that we pursue our clearcut obligation to raise

A 'Must' Book

The Nathan Report—formally known as "A National Economic Policy for 1949"—is a 52-page book studded with economic charts and tables.

It's a "must" document for anyone who wants to know what's happening to the American economy and what must be done to improve it.

Copies of the Nathan Report are being sent to national unions, city and state CIO councils and regional directors.

Individuals or groups wishing copies of the Nathan Report may buy it for $1 a copy. Send your order, together with $1—preferably by check or money order—to the CIO Publicity Dept., 718 Jackson Place N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

To the business community, Nathan recommended a four-point anti-recession program:

1. Wage increases, wherever possible, and through peaceful collective bargaining.

2. Business should institute "price cuts on many fronts, even with higher wages . . . Higher volumes of production and sales at moderate profit margins must be preferred over low volume with high profit margins . . . Higher wages and lower prices are still good business practice."

3. Reductions in cost through new techniques and devices and "sharing of the benefits of increased mechanization and efficiency with the workers."

4. Support of government economic programs.

To organized labor, Nathan suggested "aggressive" bargaining where industry's current profits and reserves make wage increases feasible; increasing productivity and demands for sharing in the fruits of more efficiency; and support of constructive governmental economic policies.

In his discussion, Nathan commented that "it is not surprising that the post-war inflationary boom has come to a halt." Under prevailing conditions, he said, "it was sure to arrive sooner or later."

Where are we in the summer of 1949? Nathan's figures indicated these facts:

1. Employment of production workers in key industries is down 7.2% from last year.

2. Prices paid by consumers have fallen only 3% from August 1948 peak of the post-war inflation.

3. Savings are increasing — BUT they're being accumulated by people in the top income brackets.

4. Personal income, though still high, is falling off. The decline has been "primarily" among workers and farmers. Average hours of work per week is about 38½, the lowest since pre-war.

5. Corporation profits, though declining, are still "very high." Average returns on investment were running at "more than 12% during 1948.

6. Business activity is being supported by government spending—despite all those wails from industrial leaders about the need for "economy." Without this government help "business conditions would be much more adverse."

7. Investment in new plants is falling off—and the "rate of increase in investment cannot long continue to exceed substantially the rate of increase in consumption." But dollars spent for investment tripled between 1946 and 1949, while dollars for personal consumer goods rose only about 25%. There's a big gap between the two rates.

8. Industry, instead of cutting prices, has preferred to "cut production and employment."

the incomes of the American people in order to insure the consumption of our great potential abundance.

To do less is to invite depression, despair, and the destruction of the hopes and aspirations of the American people.

Today, although reckless business policies have turned the direction of our economy downward, wise and immediate action can reverse this trend before further damage is done. The government must not evade its plain obligations to take effective steps to support the economy and to prevent the scourge of unemployment. Business, too, through the medium of collective bargaining, must provide much-needed wage increases which will help to supply the purchasing power which is the indispensable foundation for the economy in this critical period.

Three years ago the CIO engaged Robert R. Nathan, one of the nation's most competent economists, objectively to appraise the problems of our economy and set forth policies which were essential in order to preserve full employment, maximum production, and a stable and expanding economy. The events of the last three years have proven the brilliance and correctness of his analysis.

Because of our manifest concern with the state of the national economy, the CIO has again asked Mr. Nathan and his associate economic consultants to undertake a complete analysis leading to a national economic policy for 1949. . . .

Survey Reveals Wide Misconception Of Marshall Plan In ERP Countries

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

A RICH UNCLE with a flock of poor relatives may have some doubt as to what his nieces and nephews really think of him. They may treat him very politely, thank him for favors, even kow-tow to him, but underneath they may fear, dislike and distrust him.

Take the people in the family of the Marshall Plan countries, for instance. What do they really think of wealthy Uncle Sam?

Offhand you'd think it would be a pretty hard job to find out, but the Common Council for American Unity has taken a stab at it. Results of a survey on the subject made under the direction of Henry Lee Munson has just been issued by the Council under the title "European Beliefs Regarding the United States."

Aim of the survey was "to secure information as to what beliefs in the different countries of Europe most seriously hamper better understanding of the United States," states a foreword. The findings are presented "as being of importance to any program designed to further international good will and understanding," and "are not intended as exact percentage representations of European opinion."

Sources of information included a questionnaire answered by more than 1,700 qualified observers of opinion in European countries; letters from Europeans to Americans, together with interviews and comments on the questionnaire; and published material including government and private reports.

IN THE EXTENT of its coverage, the survey outpolls all other polls. Elmo Roper and his associates helped prepare the questionnaire which contains 45 queries on such subjects as labor, government, foreign policy, press, radio, and motion pictures in America; the Marshall Plan and opinions of the American as an individual.

Only three questions concern organized labor directly: Is American labor dominated by Big Business? Is it free to work for its own interests? It is controlled by the Government?

Six out of ten people in the ERP countries believe that American labor is free to work for its own interests, and one out of ten believe that U. S. labor is controlled by the government.

Questions on the Marshall Plan showed that one out of four people in the ERP countries believe the Plan is a scheme to promote American domination of European industry; two out of ten think its aim is to promote reactionary policies in Europe; one out of three believe it is solely a political weapon against Russia; six out of ten regard it as a plan to aid Europe by promoting economic recovery.

Two out of ten think the plan aims to force American products on Europe, resulting in loss of jobs for Europeans. Two out of 10 believe it is just another loan which must be repaid, and again two out of 10 think it unlikely the plan will be continued after this year.

QUESTIONS on American National Policy indicated that one out of three people in ERP countries think it is dominated by "Wall Street," two out of ten think it is determined by labor, and six out of ten believe it is determined by the will of the majority expressed through free elections.

Other questions revealed: That the French are less convinced than any other European people that freedom of the press exists in the U. S.

Beliefs most seriously hampering understanding of the U. S., in the order of their importance, were found to be these:

1. Our foreign policy is too changeable. The U. S. is inexperienced in diplomacy and confused as to purpose.
2. Americans are too materialistic. Half the people of Western Europe believe this.
3. Big Business, or "Wall Street" is the dominating factor in forming American national policy.
4. Persecution of the Negro. "You have democracy except for the Negro," was a frequent comment.
5. The U. S. is endangering future peace by rebuilding a strong Germany.
6. We are trying to force the American brand of capitalism on Europe.
7. The American press, radio and motion pictures are controlled by Big Business for selfish purposes.

THE COMMON Council for American Unity which issued this extensive 135-page report on European beliefs about America has been working for 30 years with American nationality groups.

The present survey grew out of the conviction that the 35 million Americans born abroad or who are the children of foreign-born parents are potentially, "among the most influential ambassadors of the U. S. today."

During the war, the Council urged these millions of Americans of foreign birth or descent to send information about American democracy to their relatives and friends abroad. In the Spring of 1948, it sponsored a Letter-to-Italy campaign, and now is planning an intensive drive to encourage foreign-born citizens to aid in correcting foreign misconceptions about the U. S.

The Council which has headquarters at 20 West 40th St., New York 18, N. Y., is sponsored by a group of well-known Americans. Included among the 39 sponsors are Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Sen. Frank Graham, Pearl Buck, Albert Einstein, Robert F. Wagner, Thomas Mann, and other notables.

Earl G. Harrison is chairman of the Board of directors, and Read Lewis is executive director.

Carey Tries To Clear The Air

TOO MANY Europeans think of America as "exclusively the land of cowboys and Indians, of cops and gangsters, of Hollywood stars and Wall Street bankers—especially Wall Street bankers."

As a result, too many Europeans forget that "above all else, America is a land of people who work in the mines, in the mills and the offices and on the farms. This is the America that counts."

These were the sentiments of CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, voiced at a Town-Meeting-of-the-Air session in Paris. The program was recorded in the French capital on July 5 as part of a round-the-world series, and it will be heard in the U. S. on Tuesday night, July 19, over the ABC network.

Subject of discussion was how the U. S. and France can cooperate to establish a stable and prosperous Europe. On the program with Carey were Milton Katz, deputy director for ECA in Europe; Eve Curie, famous scientist; and Claude Bourdet, editor of a liberal Paris paper.

"We cannot expect to create a stable and prosperous Europe if the U. S. walks blindly into another depression," Carey declared, or "fritters away its strength in the kind of desperate reaction which prevails in the present American Congress. An America which cannot reach its own goals of economic and social justice cannot long provide either material or moral aid to the rest of the world.

"Secondly, many French and other European workers have swallowed a lie about the nature of American democracy, a lie which must be finally and completely repudiated—the lie of distorted stories about American life.

"Thirdly," the CIO secretary declared, "we of America and you of France must together seize the opportunity presented by the Marshall Plan to lay the economic foundations of a better life.

"The American labor movement supports the Marshall Plan because it represents a practical tool for building a prosperous and progressive Europe.

"We don't want to perpetuate the old structures of wealth and luxury in the midst of poverty and squalor and insecurity. We believe in the unity of Europe—but not the kind of unity represented by the Churchills and the Raynauds.

"For political unity which is not based on an intelligent and farsighted economic program, on a higher standard of living, is merely a sham and an illusion."

Rhodes Urges Postal Raises

THE U. S. POST Office is going in the red again this year. It will have a big deficit, in spite of the tremendous business it does. Is this because it is not run efficiently?

Certainly not, Rep. George M. Rhodes (D., Pa.) says indignantly. The Post Office, he declares, "is the biggest and most efficient business in the world."

Yet thousands of its employes are notoriously underpaid. That big deficit is held up to them to prove that the government can't afford to increase their pay. What's the trouble?

Rep. Rhodes, who has introduced a bill (HR 2522) calling for a $650 annual salary increase for postal and other civil service employes, has some bitter things to say on the subject of the government's failure to pay its workers a decent wage.

He contrasts the bill passed recently by the House boosting the salaries of department heads, in some cases as high as $10,000 a year, with the lack of interest in his bill.

"A $10,000 increase is more than three times as much as the total salary of low-bracket government employes," he says. "Think that over. The $10,000 is an increase—the total salaries run up to $25,000. The Director of the Budget who disapproves my bill will enjoy a $10,000 raise."

One of the things that's wrong is the unfair attitude about who should get the benefits of "this welfare state," Rep. Rhodes told a House subcommittee in a statement on HR 2522 and several other bills to relieve the financial plight of postal employes, which he also introduced.

"I HEARD many publishers testify that the Post Office should be considered a public service," Rhodes told the House Committee. "It did not disturb them that it was in the red, even though a few publishers admitted receiving a salary of $50,000 and $100,000 a year.

"Surely, if we can subsidize $100,000 salaries for publishers and not worry about the red ink—what reasonable argument can be given against paying a postal employee, who now gets a $40 per week take-home pay, a few dollars more.

"The Post Office Dept. also subsidizes propaganda organizations which use the franking privileges of members of Congress. They flood the mails with tons of material that must count up to millions of dollars. It seems that those who talk most about economy frequently permit the use of their names for that purpose.

"The economy spirit is more visable when proposals are made to give the fellow that distributes this propaganda a few cents more for his work.

"I am of the opinion that with the proper kind of accounting and in frying out some of the fat, the Post Office Dept. would be able to pay all its employes a decent salary and still keep in the black. It might also be able to modernize its equipment and look forward to a badly needed building program.

"The nation is spending a lot of money to fight Communism. Too many of us fail to realize that the most effective method in opposing Communism is to wipe out its breeding places, and such conditions which make the soil fertile for the seeds of Communism to take root.

"IN THE House last week, one of the members said that to pass the top salary increase bill would play into the hands of the Communists.

"There can be some truth in that statement if after what was done last Friday, we reject legislation which would give a small measure of justice to the hard-working people in postal and federal employment.

"Keep in mind the growing numbers of unemployed. The best way to curb this danger is by getting money into the hands of little people who will spend it for their everyday needs. The benefits of this legislation will go to many thousands of low-income workers but it also helps to strengthen the economy.

"When we begin to think a bit more liberally, reasonably, and realistically about the little fellow, we'll be doing a thousand times more to strengthen the nation against Communism than all the witch-hunts, loyalty tests, and all the millions spent on investigations put together."

Carey Replies To H. Ford, II

THE QUEEN ELIZABETH, largest of the transatlantic liners, arrived in New York last week with 2166 passengers and a lively debate on the merits of wage increases for American workers.

Henry Ford II, back from a business trip to Europe, opined that wage boosts would be a "great mistake." Ford, obviously not having had time to read the Nathan Report on the national economy, said wage increases would mean price increases.

(Nathan pointed out that in many industries wage hikes could be made while prices are reduced and profits held steady.)

CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, back from a meeting of the new international labor federation at Geneva, took issue with Ford in an interview with ship reporters.

"The only way to bring about a buyers' market is to assure adequate purchasing power," Carey pointed out. "This does not apply now becauce of high prices. It is possible, as the whole history of Ford indicates, to provide increasing standards of wages, lower prices to the consumer and at the same time to give a better product to the market.

"Substantial wage increases can be given now by American industry and at the same time consumer prices can be reduced," he added.

Referring to the Geneva meeting to set up a new democratic labor group, Carey hailed the "complete agreement on all major questions" between spokesmen of both CIO and AFL who attended the sessions.

Reuther Program Backed By UAW

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

IT'S A tremendous union, the CIO Auto Workers.

It has more than 1,000,000 members in automobile, aircraft, agricultural instrument and other fields.

And, it has two Congressmen among its members.

They are Reps. Thomas H. Burke (D., O.) and James V. Buckley (D., Ill.).

At the UAW's 12th convention last week in Milwaukee, Tom Burke was, for the 12th time, sitting with Local 12's 65 delegates as a representative of the Spicer Manufacturing division of that local. He is the first Congressman to serve as delegate to a CIO convention.

Burke, a founder of UAW, heard and saw many interesting things at this convention. Among them:

OFFICERS: The re-election of UAW Pres. Walter Reuther and his slate (which got Burke's vote) by landslide margins.

Reuther defeated W. G. Grant, Ford Local 600, 8021 to 639. Secy.-Treas. Emil Mazey won over James Lindahl, Packard Local 190, 8045 to 513.

Emil Mazey

Vice Presidents Richard Gosser (7776 votes) and Jack Livingston (7863) went in for the second time, defeating William H. Johnson, Local 600 (875) and John DeVito, Local 45 (558). Burke made Gosser's nominating speech.

In 1947, Reuther received 5593 votes over De Vito and another candidate who received a total of 338 votes. The same year, Mazey beat George Addes, then incumbent, 4833 to 2599.

The Reuther caucus won all 19 regional directorships. The latter and the four officers comprise the union's executive board. A Reuther backer, James Craig, was re-elected trustee.

PRESIDENT: Because of pressure of business in Washington, Burke missed the first day of the convention and had to read Reuther's opening address.

Burke nodded approval, as he read, of Reuther's stand on the nation's economy:

"We have all the tools in America to conquer human insecurity. We have the resources and everything.

"It is a question of whether the people are going to use them or whether we are going to be blocked by the powers that be in Wall St.

R. Gosser

"The conflict in America is between two kinds of planning. It is privately planned economic scarcity by companies for profits or publicly planned economic abundance for the people."

Convention adopted strong bargaining program.

MURRAY: CIO Pres. Philip Murray, scheduled to address the 2011 delegates, had to cancel with regrets because of the crisis in steel negotiations.

"Might I convey to you and through you to your delegates my heartfelt appreciation for splendid spirit of cooperation you and your organization have so consistently manifested toward me," Murray wired Reuther.

Burke joined in the ovation which greeted Reuther's pledge that the UAW would back the Steelworkers, of which Murray is also president, to the fullest in that union's fight with Big Steel.

Another roar of approval swept the large hall in Milwaukee's Municipal Auditorium when Reuther assailed left-wingers for their attacks on the anti-Taft-Hartley campaign waged by Murray and other CIO officers.

Reuther strongly defended the CIO tactics. He also denounced left wingers for what he called a "campaign of slander" against Murray in the Mine, Mill situation at Bessemer, Ala.

FDR, JR.: One of the feature speakers at the convention was Tom Burke's House colleague, Rep. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr. (D., N. Y.). The young congressman startled political bosses this spring by running as an independent and defeating Tammany's bid in a by-election.

He lost no time in telling the delegates exactly what he thought of U. S. Steel for its adamant stand against the CIO Steelworkers and against Pres. Truman in the present steel crisis.

The delegates cheered to the rafters when FDR, Jr., escorted by Burke, arrived at the hall. They cheered even louder when he said he felt more like a "brother" than a guest. "I am not only glad to be here; I belong here."

COMMUNISTS: One of the resolutions which pleased Burke most was one attacking "the Communist Party's program of disruption" in the labor movement. The resolution recounted CP assaults on Murray, Reuther, CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, CIO Vice Pres. Emil Rieve and others.

It urged "withdrawal of certification of those CIO affiliates who have failed to organize the workers within their jurisdiction . . . creation of CIO organizing committees in each of these important fields preliminary to the issuance of a new certificate of affiliation . . . to provide a home within CIO for those organized workers in these fields who have been betrayed by CP line leadership."

A minority resolution, which also attacked Communists but which left out the recommendations, was offered.

J. Livingston

"I say the CIO is being sabotaged. These fellows have got to make up their minds. They can't be half in the CP and half in the CIO. They have got to make up their minds to get either completely in the CP or completely in the CIO," said Reuther.

The majority resolution passed with only a few "noes."

EMOTION: There were few dry eyes in the hall when Walter Reuther introduced to the delegates "a fellow that I have been very close to for a long time both in the work of this union and in a family kind of way."

The "fellow" was Walter Reuther's brother, Victor, UAW educational director.

Victor, like Walter, was the victim of a would-be assassin, who seriously wounded Victor with a shotgun while he was sitting in his home. The younger brother came to the convention just a week after leaving the hospital, where his right eye was removed and where he was treated for a number of injuries. (See picture.)

Said Walter: "I say for myself and the fellow I am going to call upon, we are more determined than ever that the fight in America that we in UAW symbolize, that all of us symbolize, must be carried on."

Said Victor, still shaky from the hospital: "Just as we are known for our friends, we are also known for our enemies. And just as we take pride in our many friends, I think we can take pride in the character of our enemies.

"Where you find the champions of bigotry and hatred and intolerance, where you find the vested interests, where you find individuals and organizations who are bent upon stamping out freedom or who foster totalitarianism, there you will find enemies of our union.

"They tell me I'm going to be o.k. Of course, I am sort of a rebuilt job. I am not quite hitting on all eight cylinders yet, but I will be around."

After a standing ovation, Mazey urged immediate passage of a resolution demanding that the FBI enter the investigation of the shootings of Victor and Walter. (Walter still carries his arm in a sling more than a year after he was shot.)

REGIONS: One of the most heated floor fights was over a proposal to break Region 4 into two regions. One region, the new 4, consists of Illinois, Iowa and Nebraska. The other, 10, would consist of Wisconsin, Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, Wyoming and Montana.

Proponents argued that the old Region 4 was too big geographically and had too large a number of members for proper servicing by one regional director. Opponents claimed that the present system was more effective.

On a show of hands, Reuther declared the motion carried.

Some delegates shouted for a roll call, but when Reuther asked for a show of hands on whether or not a roll call would be held, nowhere near the necessary 33⅓% of the delegates held up their hands.

A UAW roll call takes more than four hours.

The vote then was counted, table by table, on a show of hands. The motion carried, 980 to 753.

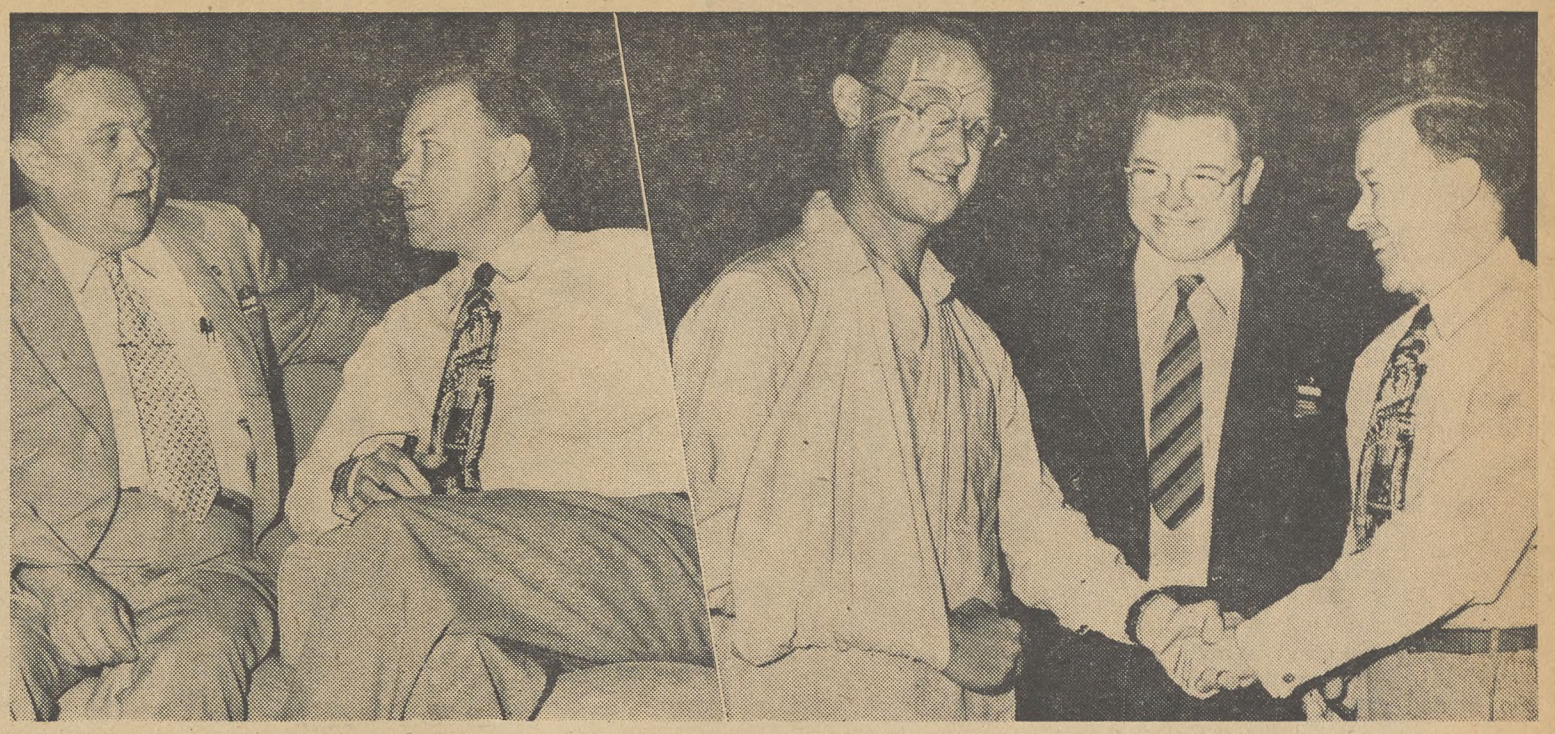
ORGANIZATION: CIO Vice Pres. and Org. Dir. Allan S. Haywood told the assemblage: "We want increased purchasing power, not higher prices; we want more organizing, more political action, less Communism and more unionism."

PAC: Dir. Jack Kroll reminded delegates that ballots are the only things politicians listen to.

CWA: Joseph Beirne, president of the CIO Communications Workers, said "CWA has received every tangible aid from CIO in its drive against A.T.&T."

OSCAR V. MARTIN

Delegate from Local 689, Port Huron, Mich., grew this beard as part of that town's centennial celebration, coming up soon. Many of Port Huron's males did the same.



GENTLEMAN FROM OHIO: Rep. Thomas H. Burke (D., O.), a delegate to the CIO Auto Workers' Convention, chats with UAW Pres. Walter Reuther during the sessions. Burke, long a supporter of Reuther, was a delegate from Local 12.

BROTHERS: Victor Reuther, UAW educational director, makes his first public appearance since he was shot by a would-be assassin. With him are his brothers, Roy, of the UAW staff, and Walter, president of the union.

Dividends

Pres. Reuther revealed that UAW now has at least one share of stock each in the 68 companies with which it has contracts.

"We want a peep behind the iron curtain," he said. He also said that the stock cost $1918.07 and that already $129.80 has been paid off in dividends.

Murray Tribute

At one point in the UAW convention, Pres. Reuther joined with the DeSoto quartet at the main microphone and sang "Murray Is Our Leader, We Shall Not Be Moved."

Editorial Judgment

UAW Secy.-Treas. Emil Mazey revealed to the delegates that the Detroit News refused a request of the UAW that, for security reasons, it not publish the news that the UAW had purchased an armored car for Pres. Walter Reuther. This was before Victor Reuther was shot.

The car, bought over Pres. Reuther's heavy objections, was purchased after consultation with "the best police and security authorities of the nation," Mazey said. He declared the Detroit News, "in my opinion, is carrying on the most devastating attack on our union of any paper in the country."

Food Union Will Sign Affidavits

THE CIO FOOD and Tobacco Workers' executive board has directed its international officers "to comply with the legal requirements for utilization of the Natl. Labor Relations Board," which would include signing T-H non-communists affidavits.

FTA president is Donald Henderson, who is one of a group of left-wing leaders who voted against the majority on a number of issues at the May meeting of the CIO executive board.

These included action calling for the resignation of board members who do not follow CIO policy, and for withdrawal of the CIO from the World Federation of Trade Unions and participation in a new democratic world labor group.

The FTA executive board voiced its continued opposition to T-H, and warned local FTA unions not to comply except after written consultation and on the written approval of the international officers of the union.

Reasons given for the decision to sign the T-H affidavits included the changes facing the labor movement because of falling employment and because of "a sellout by the present Congress and the Truman Administration." The board's resolution said:

"Finally, the right-wing National leadership in CIO at last month's executive board meeting adopted a 'rule or ruin' policy toward progressive trade unionism in the United States. They have made raiding an official policy of the National CIO."

Hits Use Of Name

The use of legitimate names with which the Commie sponsors of the Bill of Rights Conference Committee has sought to hide the Moscow rule of the committee was revealed as partially fraudulent in a complaint registered by Pres. Clarence L. Palmer of the Utah CIO Council.

Palmer, finding his name listed as a sponsor of the conference, wrote Clark Foreman, executive director:

"I wish to inform you that I at no time gave any individual or person the right or authority to use my name in any connection with the said conference and I hereby request your withdrawal immediately of my name from any and all literature put out by your organization."

JOBLESS: Symbolic of the rapid nationwide growth in unemployment is this long line of jobless pay applicants in front of the Indianapolis, Ind., unemployment compensation office. The nationwide picture last month: 3,800,000 were completely jobless; 9 million were working parttime, and 500,000 were temporarily laid off from their regular livelihood.

Liberal Examiners Victims Of NAM Squeeze

DESPITE vigorous protests, the United States Civil Service Commission is going ahead with plans which would load the government's trial examiner register with lawyers approved by a group of NAM-minded lawyers.

The Commission several months ago named a "panel of consultants" to screen trial examiners on the staffs of a number of government agencies, including the Natl. Labor Relations Board, and to set up a register of "qualified" examiners for future hiring. The trial examiners act as judges in administrative hearings conducted by the government agencies.

Head of the consultants' group is Carl McFarland, a counsel for the Natl. Association of Manufacturers, and two other of the five members were conservative past presidents of the American Bar Association. In their first recommendation, they threw out many highly experienced examiners, including several at the NLRB with long records.

Charges against some of the NLRB examiners who were ordered "disqualified" indicated strongly that they had been drafted by Robert Denham, NLRB trial examiner, and by Gerard Reilly, former NLRB member now drawing down high fees as a big business lobbyist in Washington.

Of 14 NLRB examiners originally disqualified, the panel changed its mind on two. Four others were approved, but at grades so low as to discourage any government agency from keeping them on the staff.

Eight others were given a chance to appeal to the Civil Service Commission's Board of Appeals and Review—but only on five-day notice, and without enough time to prepare a full case. The Board's decision has not yet come down.

LAWYERS FOR the trial examiners in a dozen government agencies have asked the Civil Service Commission to throw out the McFarland committee's work on grounds of bias and prejudice.

Meanwhile the Civil Service Commission, which had put the McFarland recommendations on ice when the storm of protest first broke, changed its position last week and reinstated the federal register of trial examiners.

Government officials who have access to the list noted that while many experienced trial examiners were not included, a number of corporation lawyers — closely connected to Civil Service officials or to McFarland's committee—were high on the list.

One of these is William Duncan of Raleigh, N. C., a one-time associate of Willis Smith, a member of the Civil Service Board of Examiners. Another is Abbott Sellers, a brother of McFarland's law partner; and several of his friends and associates stand high on the list.

Washington lawyers believe that unless the Civil Service Commission is over-ruled, the NAM clique will have gained effective control of jobs in the trial examining sections of the important U. S. agencies.

Fair-minded examiners with experience will be out of jobs, and lawyers "safe" from an NAM standpoint will be hired in their places.

17 Indicted In Floggings

SEVENTEEN persons have been indicted by an Alabama grand jury on charges of flogging people while they were masked. If convicted, the 17 would be subject to imprisonment for one to 10 years.

Some were also charged with burglary and illegal boycott. The boycott charge meant driving customers from the restaurant of a man who had incurred the Ku Klux Klan's enmity.

Fifteen of those indicted have been arrested. Two are said to be out of the state.

At the same time the grand jury and Deputy Circuit Solicitor were attempting to force Hugh Morris, state director of the Klan, to turn over Klan membership lists. Morris was jailed for contempt of court when he refused.

These Jefferson County indictments are the first in the outbreaks of mob violence which began last spring. No suspects have been apprehended in other Alabama counties where floggings and night rides occurred.

Truman Calls For Action To Shake Off Recession

A REPORT ON the economic state of the nation, which in many respects was in agreement with the conclusions of the CIO's own Nathan Report, was sent to Congress last week by Pres. Truman.

Pres. Truman noted that New Deal and Fair Deal programs during the past few years have given the economic machinery of the country a basic strength which was lacking 20 years ago.

"Our position would be even stronger if we had taken adequate steps to control the inflation between 1945 and 1949," the President reminded Congress.

The President also noted that "there is nothing healthy" about falling employment and less production—and he called for affirmative action to shake off the recession.

"Businessmen have a great opportunity to maintain production and sales volume by adjusting prices downward," Pres. Truman told Congress. "The only ultimate source of sustained profits is sustained employment and purchasing power.

". . . While price reductions are desirable, they should not be obtained at the expense of wage cutting. Management and labor, through collective bargaining, should seek agreements which recognize that the benefits of improved technology and productivity should be reflected both in the wage structure and in the price structure."

While withdrawing an earlier request for $4 billion in new taxes, the President asked for higher estate and gift taxes, as the CIO has long requested; a 75c minimum wage; improved unemployment benefits; extension of unemployment job benefits; and a strongly improved social security.

Housing For Ohio

Real estate lobbyists in Ohio got a drubbing when the legislature by landslide majorities enacted legislation authorizing public housing. The measure overrides State Supreme Court decisions which had the effect of prohibiting public housing projects in the state. The Senate last week passed the measure, 26 to 2, following previous passage by the House.

"I'm just resting from comfy shoes."

Rubber Union Plans Big Defense Fund

THE CIO RUBBER Workers' executive board has voted creation of million dollar fund to back the union's campaign for wage increases and pensions and has mapped a program to combat unemployment.

The board also called on Ohio labor "to unite with farmers and others who believe in equal justice under the law to drive Sen. Robert A. Taft from public life in the 1950 elections."

The fund, to be known as a "special Economic Defense Fund," will be made up of voluntary contributions from the members. The board asked the union's 180,000 members "to donate at least one dollar per week" until the wage-pension program is won.

Full-time officers and staff members of the International were urged to give five dollars a week to the fund.

The voluntary fund drive is necessary, said the board, because "the strike and defense fund of the International Union is not strong enough to provide sufficient material aid to our members in Goodrich, Armstrong Cork and other plants and systems if they are forced to go on strike."

The board pledged "full support of the international union to the workers and local union officers in the Goodrich, Armstrong Cork and other plants and systems" where locals are campaigning for the union's 25c hourly increase and $100 a month pension program.

THE PROGRAM to combat growing unemployment called for:

Immediate granting of the union's wage and pension demands.

Extension of the six-hour day with no reduction in pay.

Elimination of area wage differentials.

Prohibition of union sanction for overtime in plants where workers are laid off.

Creation of unemployment committees in local unions.

Enactiment of the Brannan farm program and the Economic Expansion Act of 1949, as well as immediate starting of an emergency public works program.

Adjustment of the federal tax structure to shift the burden from low-income groups, increase and extension of unemployment insurance benefits.

Increase of the minimum wage from 40c to $1 an hour, and amendment of existing work-week legislation to make the standard work-week 30 hours.

The Taft blast was part of a resolution condemning failure of the 81st Congress to repeal the Taft-Hartley law.

"The evil genius who masterminded the reactionary strategy to defy the 1948 election mandate was Sen. Taft," the board statement said.

The board also urged union members "to step up their political action efforts this year and next so that labor's power at the polls may be fully expressed throughout the country."

Workers Laid Off, Others Speeded Up

Although some 25,000 workers in the rubber industry were laid off during the six months ending May, 1949, production showed little or no change, the Rubber Workers' executive board reported.

"In short, while workers are being laid off, those still at work are being compelled, through various means, to increase output," the board said.

"This has been accomplished largely through rate-cutting with its accompanying speed-up. In addition to the thousands affected by unemployment, many more thousands of our members are suffering from short weeks with income insufficient to maintain their families at an American standard of living."

'Lust For Gold' or 'Tell-Tale Heart'

The CIO Screen Publicists Guild has bestowed its first annual award on Columbia's picture "Lust of Gold" as having the title that best describes the motion picture industry. The award, which is Dale Carnegie's "How to Win Friends and Influence People," was chosen in close balloting by the Guild members.

Runners-up in the referendum were "The Great Sinner," "Scene of the Crime" and the projected Twentieth Century-Fox "This is Where I Came in," which was declared ineligible because it has not been released.

The Guild and the Screen Office and Professional Employes Guild, Local 109, are engaged in a controversy over renewal of contracts. A number of film producing companies are involved in the dispute.

Circuit Court Hampers CIO In Five States

UNION efforts to win justice in cases of unfair labor practices by employers are being thwarted in the southern region by hostile court actions, a survey of recent court decisions has revealed.

In 1948 the Natl. Labor Relations Board took 11 cases to the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals at New Orleans for enforcement of orders against employers.

Only one of the 11 orders was enforced by the court.

Four other orders issued against employers by the NLRB were substantially modified. Another case was returned to the NLRB for further evidence.

Five of the NLRB orders were set aside by the U. S. court in New Orleans—and in three of these the court departed from usual practice by not even stating its reasons for voiding the Labor Board's order against an employer.

There were five other cases in the New Orleans Circuit Court brought by the Labor Board and involving "Taft-Hartley" cases against employers. In three of them, the court supported the NLRB and in two others it sent the cases back for more evidence.

The Fifth Circuit Court's jurisdiction covers the states of Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Texas and Florida.

The area—in which it appears increasingly difficult to win a contested enforcement order against an employer—is the scene of intensive CIO organizing activity, and of much opposition from corporations.

Cases Adjusted

Substantial progress has been made in eliminating job discrimination in Philadelphia, the Fair Employment Practices Commission has reported on completion of its first year's work. Out of 204 complaints of discrimination, 155 cases were adjusted. The rest are under consideration.

Extension Of 52-$20 For Ex-GIs Is Urged

THE CIO regards termination of unemployment compensation for World War II veterans on July 25, this year, as "welching on a promise" by the U. S. Government.

Meyer Bernstein, CIO veterans' representative, thus wrote Sen. Claude Pepper, (D. Fla.), chairman of the veterans' subcommittee of the Senate Labor Committee. (A subcommittee has approved S. 1741, an extension bill.)

Payment of $20 for 52 weeks is provided under the GI Bill, for a period "not later than two years after discharge or release or the termination of the war, whichever date is later."

The 80th Congress decided that in the case of this section of the GI Bill the war would be terminated July 25, this year.

Bernstein urged approval of either S 1972 or S 1741 which would extend payment of unemployment compensation beyond the July deadline.

(For a comparatively few veterans, who reenlisted between Oct. 6, 1945, and Oct. 5, 1946, under the provisions of the Recruitment Act of 1945, payments of the unemployment compensation will continue.)

BERNSTEIN SAID that when veterans came home at the end of the war, CIO urged them to return to work immediately and not to use up their unemployment compensation.

That was the position, he said, that was taken also by Gen. Omar Bradley, then Veterans Administrator, who on several occasions referred to unemployment compensation as "money in the bank" to be drawn upon only in case of an emergency.

Veterans, generally accepted that advice, Bernstein said. Of 15 million servicemen eligible for benefits, only 815,000 had exhausted their full benefit by April 30, 1949. Approximately 7 million drew nothing at all, and just under 8 million received an average of 18.9 weeks.

Bernstein said that cancellation of the unemployment compensation "weakens the faith of the ex-serviceman in the honor of his government."

Now is the time, he said, that veterans need unemployment compensation because joblessness is on the increase.

Aid To Franco To Be Fought

Administration supporters in the Senate will seek to overturn the action of the Appropriations Committee in trimming 10% off the European Recovery Program budget and in earmarking $50 million for Franco's fascist government in Spain.

In trimming the ECA budget, the Appropriations Committee knocked $569 million off the rock-bottom figure requested by Pres. Truman. Farm bloc influence was noted in the Committee's action, which barred ECA from cutting any of its farm purchases, despite the overall reduction in funds.

Sec. of State Dean Acheson took a dim view of the Senate group's action to make the $50 million available as a loan to Europe. He indicated that the Spanish government is a poor risk, and that there are many better ways of spending the money.

President Truman expressed strong disapproval of aid to Spain.

Utility Spurns Mediation

THE DETROIT Edison Company's refusal to accept a state mediation panel's recommendation may result in a strike by 4700 Utility Workers.

The five-man commission was appointed by Gov. G. Mennen Williams last month when 10 weeks of negotiations on a new contract broke down. Labor representative on the commission was UWUA Pres. Fisher.

Under the state's Bonine-Tripp (little Taft-Hartley) law, the commission has 30 days in which to investigate a public utilities labor dispute and make recommendations. If either party rejects the proposal, a 10-day period of negotiations must follow. If no agreement results, the State Mediation Board then conducts a strike vote among the employes.

The commission's recommendation that the company grant a 3% wage increase, with a 5c hourly minimum raise, and a modified union shop was bluntly rejected by Detroit Edison. The company is refusing to grant any wage rise on the grounds that workers don't need one. It has remained adamant in its opposition to the union shop demand as well.

The 10-day interim period expired last Saturday. Company negotiators refused to budge an inch, according to Fisher. Next step will be a state-conducted strike poll.

Whether there will be a strike or not is in the company's hands, Fisher said.

"Throughout negotiations the union has continually made concessions, he explained. "Certainly there will be no further concessions on our part."

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

George Brown, Director of Organization, CIO Woodworkers, reports that in an election at Ahonen Lumber Co., Ironwood, Mich., the workers voted 43 in favor of IWA-CIO, 32 for no union.

Thos. J. Gallagher, Director of Organization, CIO Shipbuilding Workers, reports that in an NLRB election held at the Scovill Manufacturing Co., Waterbury, Conn., the workers voted as follows: IUMSWA (PMC) 1949; AFL 555; no union 440.

CIO Reg. Dir. Loren J. Houser reports that Branch 35, United Stone & Allied Products Workers, in a union shop election held at the National Tile and Manufacturing Co., Anderson, Ind., won by a vote of 95 "yes" to 76 "no." There were 189 eligible to vote.

CIO Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler reports that in an election at the Cell Form Co., Clearwater, Calif., URW-CIO was victorious. The vote was URW-CIO 47 to 10 for no union. Field Rep. E. E. Spencer was in charge. DeShetler also reports that the CIO Shoe Workers were victorious in a Union Shop election at the California Shoe LTD's, Los Angeles, Calif., by a vote of 55 to six.

A four year battle by the United Shoe Workers of America against the Craddock-Terry Co., in Lynchburg, Va., has been concluded with the successful signing of a contract including a substantial list of benefits for 2,000 workers, it is reported by USWA Secy.-Treas. James J. (Scotty) Mitchell.

The company's resistance to the union had included defiance of the Natl. Labor Relations Board as well as a series of court tests. The successful outcome brightens the union's prospects of organizing four other Virginia shoe plants. This campaign was directed by CIO Dir. Ernest Pugh and his assistant, Alex McKay. The Shoe Workers also won a representation election at the B&W Shoe Co., Webster, Mass., by a 2-1 vote among the 100 employes. The election was conducted by Michael Flarherty under the director of Territorial Rep. Angelo Georgean.

Pres. Martin Wagner of the Chemical Workers reports a successful 146 to 4 vote at the Universal Expiration Co., Jefferson City, Tenn. The electing was conducted by Intl. Rep. J. R. Nichols.

The writer, along with Pres. Joseph Beirne of the CIO Communications Workers attended the Auto Workers convention in Milwaukee, Wis. The convention overwhelmingly repudiated the attacks upon CIO policies and the CIO officers.

By probably the largest majority in the history of UAW, the officers, headed by Pres. Walter Reuther, were re-elected. Beirne and I addressed the convention and presented the story of the telephone workers, and called for continued support of the telephone workers by UAW. Reuther urged that this support be given to the telephone workers.

The convention was typically UAW, although there was less tension evident than in an previous convention. The factionalism was reduced to a minimum.

Cowan To Senators:

'Social Justice' Calls For 75c Minimum Wage Law

LEGISLATION to boost the minimum wage from 40 to 75 cents will be brought up on the floor of the Senate after final action is taken on the pending North Atlantic treaty, Sen. Scott Lucas, Democratic floor leader, announced last week.

President Truman included the wage legislation as one of the 11 recommendations made in his mid-year economic report to Congress, which he explained to the public in a nationwide radio address on July 13.

The vital need for increasing the minimum wage to 75 cents and other proposed amendments to the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 are discussed in a report recently submitted by Sen. Claude Pepper (D. Fla.), for the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

The amendments are embodied in S. 653, which has been indorsed by the CIO. Nathan Cowan, National CIO legislative representative, last week urged the Senators to vote for S. 653 "without crippling amendments."

Cowan told the Senators "that ordinary humanity and elementary social justice require a minimum wage of more than 75c an hour. In the light of the amazing technological and scientific advances we have achieved in American industry, it is simply intolerable that we permit workers to be paid less than a subsistence wage."

In the Senate Committee's report on the proposed amendments to the 1938 Act, three basic reasons are given for raising the minimum wage to 75c at this time:

1. It will give desperately needed help to workers in the lowest paying segments of our industries. "From this point of view, the committee's proposal represents an act of simple economic justice to approximately a million and a quarter workers," the report stated.

2. It will "enable the Fair Labor Standards Act more effectively to accomplish its objective of eliminating unfair competitive labor practices."

3. It "will bolster purchasing power against recession and provide an improved basis for maintaining employment stability."

The report declared that the 75c minimum "is justified not only because it meets a vital need in improving the wages and living standards of the lowest paid of our working population but also because it is economically feasible at this time.

"A 75c MINIMUM wage will mean a direct increase in the total payroll for employes now subject to the Fair Labor Standards Act of less than one per cent. This increase will result in an improvement in the leveling of living of about 1¼ million workers now subject to the Act.

"While the statutory increase is from 40 to 75c, the actual increase in most instances will be substantially smaller for the vast majority of these workers who are now earning more than 60c an hour.

A second proposal for amending the 1938 FLSA submitted by the committee redefines "oppressive child labor" and reveals a curious loophole in the present law.

As the law now stands, a parent may agree to the employment of a child under 16 in an occupation declared to be hazardous to children between the ages of 16 and 18, although a child over 16 cannot be employed in such an occupation.

A third proposed amendment recommended by the Senate Committee would extend coverage of the minimum wage and overtime provisions of the Act to a limited number of additional groups, including some workers in the dairy industry and certain employes engaged in packing, canning, storing, drying or otherwise preparing fruit, vegetables and other food products for market.

Alabama Assembly Passes One-County T-H Over Veto

By R. CHRISTOFFERSON

A "LITTLE Taft-Hartley Act" applying only to one county was passed by the Alabama Legislature over Gov. James E. Folsom's veto on July 12.

The bill was maneuvered through the Legislature by use of the time-honored custom of "senatorial courtesy"—the practice of allowing local bills to be passed without oppositoin.

A number of legislators broke with the "local courtesy" practice and fought to sustain the governor's veto, but they were not enough. The bill was overridden in the Senate, 26 to 6, and in the House, 58 to 10.

Although actually there did not seem to be much sympathy for the bill in the two Houses, the legislators refused to kill it fearing retaliation on their own "local courtesy" bills.

Father of the measure was Senator Bruce Henderson, big wheel in the Alabama Farm Bureau and known for his anti-labor record,—and the bill applies only to his own Wilcox County, establishing Wilcox as the strongest anti-labor county in Alabama.

Before it becomes law, it must pass a referendum vote of the citizens of Wilcox County, but this remains as only a formality because Henderson is reputed to carry the 1500 voters in Wilcox in his pocket.

THE BILL applies only to businesses in intra-state commerce. It sets up numerous restrictions on unions, some so binding as to virtually nullify labor organizing attempts in Wilcox County, a predominantly agricultural and timber section in South Alabama's Black Belt region. Henderson is owner of a huge plantation.

Henderson told the Senate the "improper balance between industry and agriculture" in his county hurts its economy. He claimed the measure was designed to attract industry to Wilcox. Labor spokesmen, however, said Henderson was more interested in keeping industry away so as to perpetuate his hold on the county's politics. He is a veteran of three terms in the State Senate.

In the House, Wilcox County Rep. E. T. Harrison openly admitted the bill was patterned after the Taft-Hartley Act. Rep. H. J. Busby, Montgomery labor union member, asked Harrison why the bill was needed with the Taft-Hartley Act still on the books. Harrison replied that in case of T-H repeal, "the people of my county still want to be covered by that type of legislation."

UNDER QUESTIONING, Harrison admitted there are no unions operating in his county. "Then this is a law to regulate unions and there are no unions in your county," one legislator sarcastically commented.

Henderson's bill sets up a "labor czar" just like its big brother, the Taft-Hartley Act. It invests the circuit judge with arbitrary powers in interpreting the meaning of the act and administering it. It gives him powers like those of the National Labor Relatoins Board in dealing with intra-state union-management matters.

The new law requires filing of non-Communist affidavits, union constitutions, by-laws and financial reports with the clerk of the circuit court before the union in question could use the services of the circuit judge in obtaining collective bargaining certification.

Governor Folsom vetoed the bill on the grounds that it was unconstitutional and "class legislation." He warned it would set a dangerous precedent. In his veto message he said:

"During recent years the State of Albama has achieved an excellent record in its prevention of industrial strikes. Each succeeding year the number of strikes and the loss in man hours have steadily decreased.

"The accomplishment of this record by a state which has refrained from punitive and vindictive legislation against trade associations convinces me that such class legislation as contemplated . . . would be unwise."

ADMINISTRATIVE attempts to get the lawmakers to request the State Supreme Court for an advisory opinion as to the bill's constitutionality were defeated as the governor's veto message came up for vote.

Secy.-Treas. Eugene M. Wells of the Alabama CIO Council declared labor believes the bill to be "completely unconstitutional." CIO, AFL and the Brotherhoods united to fight the measure.

Wells called the method used by Henderson a "unique" way of passing anti-labor legislation. "To my knowledge," he said, "it has never been tried before." He expressed fear that Henderson's success might open the door for "wholesale introduction of anti-labor bills applying to individual counties only."

So far this session no general anti-labor bills have come up on the floor of either chamber. Legislators for the most part have been friendly toward labor. Numbers of them expressed regret that they had voted for Henderson's bill but said they had to do it because of the "local courtesy" principal involved.

ACW Home Project Near Completion

The new cooperative housing development of the CIO Clothing Workers in New York City is well on its way to completion. Two housing projects, based on cooperative endeavor by the tenants, are under construction—one in the Bronx, the other on the Lower East Side.

The first of four buildings in the Bronx project will be ready for occupancy Sept. 1. Another is expected to be finished early in 1950, and the other two are planned for early construction. There will be 1500 apartments in the four-building development.

The CIO News

Vol. XII WASHINGTON, D. C., JULY 25, 1949 82 No. 29

A GREAT MAN is gone from CIO ranks. Workers the nation over are mourning the death of Van A. Bittner, director of the CIO Southern Drive, vice president of the CIO Steelwokers, member of the CIO executive Board, organizer of scores of thousands of mines, packinghouse, steel and other workers in many states. See Page 3 for Bittner's Obituary.

Steel Fact-Finding About To Begin

RECOMMENDATIONS of the three-man steel industry fact-finding board appointed by President Truman are likely to have great influence on the outcome of collective bargaining involving several million workers this year.

The board begins hearings July 28 on the CIO Steelworkers wage dispute, and is scheduled to report to the President by Sept. 1. The two sides will then have two more weeks in which to bargain over the board's recommendations before the 60-day truce expires. The recommendations will not be binding.

Members of the board include Chairman Carroll R. Daugherty, Northwestern University economics professor; Samuel I. Rosenman, New York attorney and former adviser and "ghost-writer" for Pres. Roosevelt; and David L. Cole, Paterson, N. J., labor relations adviser.

Composition of the board was such that few people were ready to place bets on the character of the recommendations that would come from it. The cautious, Big Business newspaper, the Wall St. Journal, guessed "the board probably will recommend a wage boost."

The board's hearings will be held in New York City in the now-famous federal courthouse on Foley Square, scene of the current Communist trial and of the late Alger Hiss trial.

BOTH THE UNION and the 60 steel companies involved have eight days in which to present their cases.

The hearings will be preceded by a two-day hearing on procedures. At the regular hearings, the union will be represented by Murray, Steelworkers and CIO General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg, Robert R. Nathan, former government economist and others.

The union is asking a wage increase, a pension plan and an insurance program. On each demand the industry, led by U. S. Steel, turned thumbs down. A wage increase, it said, would be "inflationary," and it claimed a pension plan is not arguable during the current contract reopening. It offered 2c an hour toward an insurance program, which would have to be equally financed by the employes.

Steelworkers and CIO Pres. Philip Murray termed "Big Steel's" negative attitude disgraceful, accused it of failure to bargain in good faith from the start, then called together his 146-man wage policy committee.

The committee then voted to call a strike if no agreement were reached by the contract deadline, July 16. Then Pres. Truman and Mediation & Conciliation Dir. Cyrus Ching hurriedly got into the act.

Ching called the disputants to his Washington office for a negotiating meeting. Nothing gave. He then talked it over with the President and Presidential Assistant John R. Steelman. A proposal to both parties resulted.

Truman suggested that work continue under present terms of the contract until a fact-finding board could hold hearings and make non-binding recommendations. "Big Steel" said no. It didn't like the "recommendations" part. Accordingly, until the 11th hour, U. S. Steel, Republic and Bethlehem refused to accept the truce. Then, suddenly, they wired Truman of their reluctant acceptance.

SHORTLY AFTER appointment of the steel board, negotiations between the CIO Electrical Workers and General Electric were recessed indefinitely at the request of the union. UE negotiators said the recess was to permit them to report back to their locals.

The CIO Auto Workers, meanwhile, went into daily, all-day bargaining sessions with Ford. Headed up till now by the union's Ford director, Kenneth Bannon, the UAW negotiating committee was expected to include UAW Pres. Walter Reuther by the end of the week.

The UAW has asked the state Mediation Board to conduct a strike vote among the Ford employes. The poll is required under the state's "little T-H" law. Negotiations have been marking time since June 2. The Ford contract expired July 15 and has been continued on a day-to-day basis.

Like the Steelworkers, the UAW is seeking a wage boost, pension plan improvements and an insurance plan.

Closest thing to an offer from Ford so far was a proposal that there be no economic changes for the next 18 months—except for an up or down adjustment each six months according to the Bureau of Statistics cost-of-living index. This was briskly turned down by the union.

IN SUPPORT OF its pension and insurance demands, the CIO Steelworkers last week released a lengthy report on such plans written by Murray Latimer, insurance consultant.

The report traced the history of employe pensions at giant U. S. Steel since 1901. At that time, Andrew Carnegie created the Carnegie Relief Fund by donating $4 million worth of Carnegie Steel Co. bonds. Out of this pensions were paid employes who became incapacitated after 15 years continuous service. In 1908 the average pension was $14.18 a month, and it could be withdrawn for poor behavior or other reasons.

In 1931, although the corporation had provision for a pension plan on the books, Latimer estimated the chances of a worker getting one as being approximately .0000001.

In 1940, the plan was amended to make eligible only employes who earned more than $3000 a year. Until 1947, Latimer stated, the average steelworker was not eligible to participate. Those now participating must contribute—and can then look forward to a pension of about $7.50, if participation began at age 51 and about $13.20 if he joined at 41.

"With trifling exceptions, members of the United Steelworkers who are eligible to join the U. S. Steel contributory pension plan have decided, with obvious justification, that such trifling pensions are not worth the bother of making contributions and the consequent diminution of current take-home pay," he said.

The report estimated that some 1600 persons have retired because they reached 65 or because of disability—without receiving a pension.

For those who did receive pensions, the average amount, as of May of this year, was $9.33 a month.

Latimer's plan then proceeded in some detail to outline a plan for adequate pensions and for death, sickness, accident, medical care and hospitalization insurance.

Bus Strike Ends

CIO Transport Workers in New York City voted last week to accept Mayor William O'Dwyer's peace proposal to end a seven-day strike against two private bus lines.

The walkout began on the New York City Omnibus Corp. line on July 15 in protest against the company's dismissal of four union mechanics. Failing an agreement, TWU members on the Fifth Avenue Coach Co. walked out a few days later. The two companies are jointly owned.

O'Dwyer's proposal, which won a 1237-to-496 acceptance by the TWU membership in closed balloting, provided that:

- The dispute over the dismissals be submitted to arbitration. This would place the issue in the lap of Theodore W. Kheel, the industry's impartial chairman.
- The union's demands for a new contract, including a 21c hourly wage boost, be settled by an arbitrator to be appointed by the Mayor if the union and company fail to agree on one.

Settlement of the contract dispute alone with the dismissals controversy removes the threat of a strike over contract demands on Aug. 1. The two companies so far have rejected all union demands, insisting the contract be extended without change. TWU Pres. Michael Quill urged a "yes" vote.

CWA Is Winner

The CIO Communicatcns Workers of America has won the first round—and probably the entire bout—in its tangle with the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. over CWA's bargaining rights.

The five-man Natl. Labor Relations Board has thrown out the company's petition for a representation election among employes of the Michigan Bell Telephone Co. Michigan Bell, along with all Bell affiliates whose empoyes are represented by CWA, asked the Board for a poll to determine whether the employes still wanted CWA to represent them after the union entered the CIO. The union affiliated with CIO after a nationwide referendum of the membership favored the action 2-to-1.

The NLRB is now expected to toss out 34 similar petitions filed by other Bell affiliates. Some 220,000 CWA members are involved in these bargaining suits.

In the Michigan decision, the Board ruled that the company's case was "barren of any evidence that the affiliation of the CWA with the CIO has had any effect upon the structure, functions or membership" of the Michigan local union.

"There has been no schism in these unions; and no other labor organization intervened in this proceeding to challenge their representative status," the board said.

During the months May, June and July, the petitioning companies have impounded an estimated $1,320,000 in union dues through the check-off. If the rest of the petitions are dismissed, as expected, the amount will have to be sent to the union.

Timken Settled

Some 3250 CIO Steelworkers voted to accept a Timken Roller Bearing Co. proposal and return to work.

Timken employes in five Ohio cities had been on a two-week vacation, and, in the absence of a contract settlement, were considering going on strike rather than returning at the end of the holiday.

The offer accepted by the employes provided an "as-is" extension of the contract for one year with a reopening in 90 days on pay rates, pensions and an insurance program. This would permit observance of the industry's 60-day truce, and would allow time for a wage pattern to take shape within the industry.

Bittner 'Didn't Know Meaning Of Fear'

By ALLAN L. SWIM

VAN A. BITTNER was a man who, literally, gave his life to the trade union movement.

When he died last Tuesday at a Pittsburgh hospital after being ill several months, the nation lost an ardent and colorful fighter for human rights.

There were two Van A. Bittners

Before becoming editor of the CIO News, Allan L. Swim worked under Van A. Bittner as public relations director of the CIO's Southern organizing drive.

—the one the public knew and the one known only to a small group of intimates.

To the public he was a rough-and-tumble fighter when he needed to be, and a suave, peaceful compromiser when the occasion called for it.

To his intimates he was that and much more. He was a fellow who always stuck with his friends, a man deeply interested in the nation's youth, an avid reader of good books, a lover of good music and plays, a close follower of athletics.

Bittner had almost become a legendary figure by the time he undertook one of his most important assignments—that of directing the CIO's Southern organizing compaign back in the summer of '46.

When veteran unionists got together to swap stories about the "tough days," Van Bittner's name usually came into the conversation.

He was the fellow, one of them would say, who "had so many injunction charges against him down in West Virginia that he'd have spent 100 years in jail if they'd made the charges stick."

Another would tell about the time Bittner posed as minister so he could get into a coal mine region around which mine operators had posted armed guards.

"He didn't know the meaning of fear," another would say.

ONE STORY, over which Bittner chuckled when it was mentioned, concerned the time he slipped away from his "bodyguards" and went for a late evening stroll in a mining region where the operators had declared "open season" on union organizers.

One of the men assigned to keep him from getting shot or beaten finally caught up with him and declared, "Say don't you know better than to walk alone here at night?"

Bittner calmly replied, "I'm not walking alone; I'm walking with God."

The disgusted miner then said, "Maybe you are but I'll bet that if one of you gets shot it won't be God."

Bittner, a Lutheran, wasn't a church-goer but much of his philosophy was based on the life of Christ. He frequently used illustrations involving religion to drive home his point.

AT A PRESS conference in Atlanta several years ago a reporter who condoned racial segregation began questioning Bittner in great detail about the CIO's policy regarding Negroes. Finally Bittner snapped at him:

"You can say in your paper that if Negroes are good enough for God they're certainly good enough for the CIO! Now let's talk about something else!"

Although few persons knew about it, Van A. Bittner was responsible for a large number of young men from mining regions obtaining college educations.

He arranged for athletic scholarships at leading colleges and universities for some of the country's leading football players of recent years.

Bittner was a man of great patience—a man who believed a person should be willing to devote years to anything that was important and right.

To illustrate his point with impatient young organizers he often told about being stationed for several years in a West Virginia town "before anybody would openly speak to me on the street."

Years later, when West Virginia was well organized, Bittner became one of the state's most potent political figures although he never ran for office. He once turned down appointment to the U. S. Senate for an unexpired term because, as he said, "I'm going to devote my life to my union."

And he did devote his life to the union movement—all but the first 11 years of it.

Bittner was only 11 years old when he went to work in the mines of Pennsylvania. He joined the United Mine Workers after he received his first paycheck.

At the age of 16 he became president of his own local union. He was elected a district vice president at 23 and became district president three years later.

When Bittner was 31 he began organizing miners in West Virginia, Tennessee and Alabama. He spent 18 years in West Virginia, nine of them as president of UMW District 17.

He served as a member of the Appalachian Wage Conference from 1933 to 1941.

At the start of the CIO's first campaign to organize mass production workers, Bittner became organizing director in the Great Lakes area. He was in charge of drives that brought thousands of steel, farm equipment and packinghouse workers into the CIO.

Bittner took pride in the fact that he was able to obtain a high school education although he began digging coal when only 11 years old.

He was the first coal miner's son in the Bridgeport, Pa., area to be graduated from high school.

In 1942 Bittner was elected assistant to Pres. Philip Murray at the first constitutional convention of the CIO Steelworkers and as a member of that union became a member of the CIO Executive Board.

Pres. Roosevelt appointed Bittner to the National War Labor Board in 1942. He served until the end of 1945.

In the spring of 1946 he was selected national director of the CIO Organizing Committee. At the time of his death at the age of 64 he still held that position and was a vice president of the Steelworkers.

BITTNER WAS ROUGH — and Bittner was gentle.

Without any qualms, he could hurl insults at a Congressional committee which he considered determined to harm the union movement. He could be as tough as any employer who ever decided to fight unionism.

He was the polite gentleman, too. Reporters who had never seen him in a rough-and-tumble battle frequently remarked that he acted more like a minister than a labor organizer. And on a number of occasions he spoke to church congregations and religious organizations.

Bittner, although blind in one eye, could read an entire newspaper in about the time required for the average person to read a single column.

This ability made it possible for him to keep abreast of current events regardless of heavy schedules.

Occasionally he would read as many as two books in one evening.

FEW WASHINGTON reporters will forget the day back in the spring of '47 that Bittner appeared before the Republican-controlled Labor Committee of the 80th Congress to argue against passage of the Taft-Hartley Act.

There weren't many friends of labor on the committee—and a majority of committeemen were obviously out to "do a job" on Bittner.

Bittner was on the stand all morning, all afternoon, all evening. He stood off their attacks. He beat down their anti-labor charges—and he wound up by telling the committee frankly that he didn't think they had enough knowledge or enough common sense to write a decent labor law.

It was a day that exhausted the Congressmen, the reporters and the spectators.

But Van Bittner walked off the stand, after hours of bitter dialogue, as fresh as a daisy!

He was a man who loved a good battle when he was fighting for unionism.

Some of the battles in which he was involved resulted in death or serious injury to men working with or under him. He often said that "I've seen much more than my share of violence. Unfortunately, many men have had to give their lives to build this labor movement of ours."

WHEN HE assumed the directorship of the CIO Organizing Committee he expressed the hope to associates that "we've passed into an era in which unions can be organized without organizers being beaten or shot."

To friends who pressed him for information about his knowledge of music, Bittner occasionally would say:

"Well, I ought to know a little about it; I used to play a cornet in a union band."

Not long after that, one of his top organizers in Georgia was brutally beaten. Bittner paced up and down his office for a few minutes after receiving the report and then declared:

"I can see this isn't going to be any Sunday School picnic. Well, I guess it's all part of the game—the bad part. I hope to live to see the day when employers will realize that unions are here to stay."

Van Bittner still felt that way when he died.

Because he was a shrewd organizer, he often was able to work out schemes to circumvent violence planned by employers. One of his favorites consisted of sending into a town from 12 to 30 of the largest organizers on his staff. After they made a "show of strength" they would return to their usual posts and the two or three men remaining would encounter no trouble.

"There are few employers who hire thugs to beat up organizers unless they feel sure they can get by with it," he would say. "All you have to do is convince them they won't get by with it."

Those who knew Bittner best probably were most impressed by his loyalty to his subordinates as well as to his superiors. "If he's on your side he'll back you to the last ditch," men who worked with him frequently said.

Bittner believed strongly in placing responsibility on others. When he placed an assistant in charge of an organizing project he expected him to use his own judgment—to run his own show. Those who failed on assignments were given a second and a third —and sometimes a fourth—chance to make good.

"There's a place in the union movement for every man and woman who believes strongly in unionism," he once said. "When I assign a person to a job and that person fails I think I'm partly to blame. So I find a different assignment—and I keep on trying until the person succeeds or until we're both convinced some assignment outside my jurisdiction would be better."

BITTNER WAS known to thousands of persons throughout the entire country. He had many friends. Some of them were wealthy and politically powerful. Most of them were industrial workers.

The two friends about whom he talked most frequently were Philip Murray, with whom he was closely associated for many years, and President Roosevelt, whom he joined frequently for "bull sessions" when the latter was in the White House.

Through Bittner's office flowed a steady stream of well known and virtually unknown persons. It was not unusual for him to spend as much time talking with an aged Negro coal miner from Alabama as with a prominent judge from Illinois. He was more impressed by a man's thoughts and by his work than by his background and position.

Bittner was a prolific storyteller, a lover of good food, a careful dresser. He liked to travel by automobile, didn't object to long train rides but rebelled when associates tried to get him to accompany them on planes.

Even after he had reached his 60's men many years younger complained of the pace Bittner set for them and himself. On many occasions he would get up at 4 a. m., breakfast hurriedly with several of his assistants, ride in a car for 200 miles, make a two-hour speech at a mass meeting and then return home after dark.

Those of us who worked for or with Van A. Bittner knew him as a man of many talents—a man who believed democracy was the hope of the world and that the union movement was the backbone of democracy.

Our sympathy—and the sympathy of thousands of others—goes to those who survive him—his wife, daughter, father, brother and two grandchildren.

Murray Statement

CIO Pres. Philip Murray's statement on the death of Van A. Bittner:

"Even though we realized Van Bittner had only a slight fighting chance for the past several weeks, still his death is a great shock to all of us.

"The loss to the labor movement of one of its pioneer leaders of the 20th Century is equally the loss to the nation of a true humanitarian. His whole philosophy of life was that through unions our democracy can be made to function better, not alone for the membership, but for the entire nation his whole concern was for America and its people.

"A leader of the labor movement, Van Bittner was generally acclaimed as the greatest organizer of our time.

"I bespeak the feeling of the Steelworkers and the entire CIO in extending to his family our deepest sympathy in their great loss."

Carey

CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey's statement:

"The members of the American labor movement have suffered an irreparable loss in the passing of Van Bittner.

"The indebtedness of trade unionism to his untiring work, leadership and idealism can never fully be appraised. Van Bittner was an inspiration to countless young CIO leaders whose loyalty and respect for him increased constantly.

"To me he was more than a personal friend of many, many years; he represented an ideal of self-sacrifice, devotion and achievement which cannot be forgotten."

Haywood

Statement of CIO Vice Pres. and Organization Dir. Allan S. Haywood:

"The millions of members of organized labor have lost a true friend and loyal worker in the death of Van A. Bittner.

"In the long period of his services to labor, Van Bittner served with unswerving loyalty and a deep devotion to the cause of his fellow men. From his boyhood, he knew the struggle and heartaches of workers and he never lost sight of the goal he set for himself—a goal of aiding them in improving their lot in life.

"The gains of labor to which Van Bittner contributed so much will stand as lasting tribute to his services.

"Those of us who worked with him for many years feel the loss of our loyal associate as well as the loss of a considerate and steadfast friend."

Did Their Job Well

Two men who fought unceasingly and effectively for human rights have waged their last battles.

They were Van A. Bittner, an outstanding labor leader, and Frank Murphy, a U. S. Supreme Court Justice. Both died last week after long and faithful service.

These men fought for humanity on different planes. One was a unionist, the other a lawyer, politician and jurist. Both were hard fighters. Both were liberals. Had they been privileged to work as a team they undoubtedly would have had little difficulty pulling together in the same harness.

Both men leave behind them monuments to their memories that are more impressive than all the statues their admirers might erect.

Murphy will be remembered for his record of giving aid to the "underdogs" when he was Mayor of Detroit and Governor of Michigan—and for the fine concept of justice he displayed as a member of the nation's highest court.

Bittner, if history is recorded correctly, will be listed as one of the really great fighters for the thing which he himself sometimes called "human dignity." His work made life easier and more pleasant for millions of American workers.

It is logical, we believe, that we in the CIO should be touched more deeply by the death of Bittner than by the passing of Murphy.

We often saw Van in action—at conventions, at mass meetings, at Congressional hearings and out in the field where unions are organized.

We saw him give to his job more time and energy—and more genuine devotion—than anybody could have logically demanded of him.

Words — no matter how well chosen — cannot adequately describe the unique role Van Bittner played. But many unionists for many years to come will use many words in an effort to do so.

And this in itself will be a real tribute to a man who gave his life to the labor movement. ★ ★ ★

NO REASON FOR DELAY

Really—when you stop to think about it—isn't it ridiculous that the 40c-an-hour minimum wage which went into effect before the war remains unchanged despite inflation and the heavy increase in the cost of living?

Some people, of course, argued that there was no need for increasing the minimum as long as nearly everybody was working and almost nobody was getting paid as little as 40c.

That was a weak argument and—anyhow—it isn't applicable to present conditions. Unemployment has been on the increase for a number of months and there has been wage cutting here and there.

There hasn't been any good reason during the past few years for Congress to turn down suggestions that the minimum wage be increased. There is even less reason now.

An immediate increase to at least 75c and an eventual increase to $1 would serve to bolster our sagging economy. Passage of legislation to bring this about shouldn't be delayed.

Aside from the national economic aspects of the minimum wage there is a very important human aspect.

A person earning only 40c receives only $16 a week if working full time—and many Americans are working only part time.

That's sweatshop pay!

And it's less than most states pay in benefits today to those who are unemployed.

'Welfare State' Tag Is Phony

Opponents Of Fair Deal Have Merely Hung New Name On Old Campaign

By ALLAN L. SWIM

QUITE A FEW editorial writers and politicians have been blasting away lately at President Truman's "Welfare State" program.

They have been holding up the economic difficulties of Great Britain as an example of the bad things that would happen to the U. S. if Congress enacted the Fair Deal.

At first glance it appears that they have a new campaign. Closer inspection, however, shows they have merely hung a new tag on the old drive to prevent passage of badly needed social legislation.

To hear them tell it, their only objective is to keep the nation from turning to socialism or something akin to it.

Perhaps that motive prompts some of them, but there's more behind their campaign than meets the casual eye—much more.

LET'S EXAMINE the record a bit and see if we can learn whether the anti-"Welfare State" lads are basing their campaign on facts.

Great Britain, under a labor government, would naturally be one of the "bad examples" they would cite—if Britain happened to be in trouble.

Britain is in trouble—but her difficulties weren't caused by social legislation. They began before the opening of the last war—when labor wasn't in political control — and they have been mounting ever since.

A Tory government and the absence of "Welfare State" legislation wouldn't alter Britain's economic position noticeably. She'd still be in trouble.

Let's not forget that all of Europe—not just those countries which have labor governments—are facing serious economic and rehabilitation difficulties.

THE "WELFARE STATE" opponents oppose nearly all of the legislation which the CIO and other liberal groups indorse.

Their argument is that we're trying to destroy the "free enterprise system," put business out of business and bring about greater government "interference."

They object to the use of tax monies for projects designed to aid the bulk of the people when they're having economic troubles.

They're opposed to expanded social security, realistic unemployment compensation, higher minimum wage and health insurance.

But they've long been in favor of "Welfare State" projects which help business directly.

THE AVERAGE editorial writer isn't shedding any tears over the big subsidy the government makes to the publishing business through the Post Office Department.

They're not crying about the subsidies to the airlines which carry mail or about the use of tax funds to build and expand airports.

They're conducting no campaigns against those cities which use tax money to erect factory buildings which are made available at little or no cost to corporations which will move branches into them.

There's no hue and cry from them about the tax money required to repair highway damage caused by heavy commercial trucks.

ALTHOUGH THEY don't openly admit it, the thing to which the "Welfare State" opponents object most strongly is the trend started by the New Dealers of placing more emphasis on human rights and less on property rights.

They seem to think it's OK to extend government aid to corporations but object to government aid to individuals.

They oppose government regulation of Big Business but approve increased government control of labor.

They sometimes seek to justify their position by declaring, "What's good for business is good for the people."

We in the CIO think that the people — all the people — should come first and that what's good for them should certainly be good enough for business.

Murray Hits Rankin On 52-20

CIO Pres. Murray has called upon members of Congress to "break through the iron curtain" imposed by Rep. John Rankin (D. Miss.) on the House Veterans Committee. Murray called for immediate extension of the unemployment compensation provisions of the GI Bill of Rights.

Assailing Rankin's "dictatorial control over the House Veterans Committee" and his refusal even to order hearings on the bill before the Committee, Murray urged Congressmen to sign the discharge petition to bypass the Committee.

The CIO president recalled that government officials had told veterans not to draw on their unemployment funds right after discharge, if possible, but to hold it as a reserve in a time of lower employment opportunities.

With the present provisions due to expire July 25, Murray said the issue involves "the honor of Congress against the obstructionism of Representative Rankin."

Murray noted that less than one veteran in 16 has used up the benefits that Congress had made available when the law was passed in 1944.

On July 19, according to press reports, Rankin, chairman of the House Veterans Comittee, announced that his committee would not approve any such measure even if the Senate should pass its bill.

Murray assailed Rankin's "ultimatum to members of the House Veterans Committee that they will not be given an opportunity to vote on whether or not they want to restore to veterans—benefits promised during hostilities. Most of the major veterans' organizations are backing these bills.

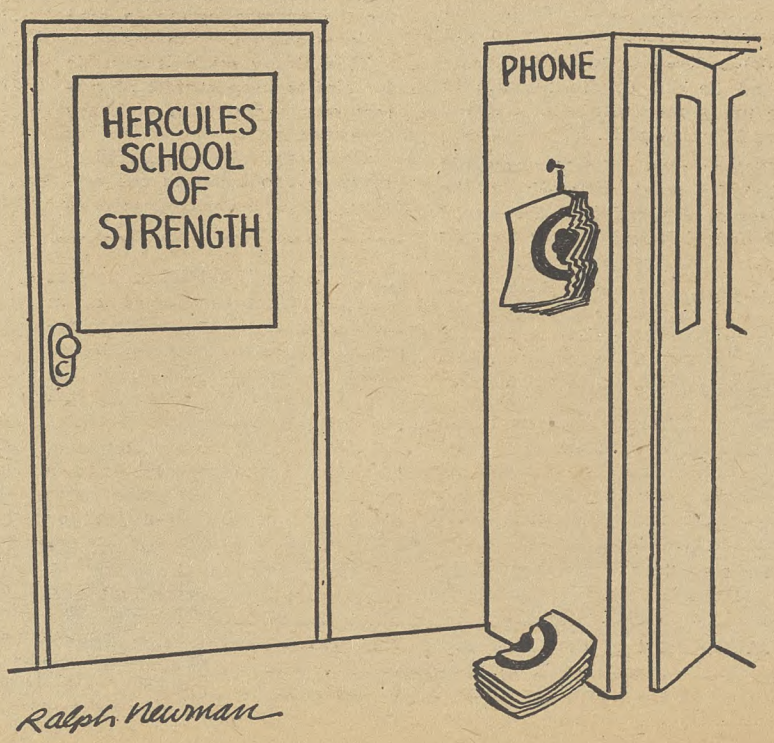
"The Congressman from Mississippi is opposed because he is against anything that is of value to men who work for a living. It is no secret that Rankin feels $20 unemployment compensation is more than many of his constituents deserve, even though they might have given up their security and risked their lives in defense of their country.

"By his dictatorial control over the House Veterans Committee, John Rankin has demonstrated himself to be the veterans' worst enemy. He acclaims himself as the friend of the veteran, but at the same time bottles up all of the measures which veterans really need."

"Most veterans went directly back to work following discharge from the armed service," Murray added. "They were told by responsible leaders, including General Omar Bradley, then Veterans Administrator, that their entitlement to unemployment compensation was like money in the bank and that they ought to save it for a time when jobs might become scarce. We are now in such a period.

"Jobs are scarce in many fields, and more than 4,000,000 men and women are unemployed. The 80th Congress passed a bill which cut down the eligibility period. It is up to the 81st Congress to redeem the assurance to GI's at the height of the war.

"The issue is: the honor of the Congress against the obstructionism of John Rankin."



This Is A PACage —So Give A $1

They Read About It Minutes Later

A GROUP of Washington correspondents were shooting the breeze one evening at the National Press Club.

After they had swapped "inside information" about who was trying to put the skids under whom in official circles the conversation swung around to labor unions.

This led eventually to a discussion of union newspapers. One opinionated reporter declared that "the labor press stinks!"

A Guild member took up the challenge and the boys went at it hot and heavy.

Finally one of them said, "There are good labor papers and bad ones—just like they're good dailies and bad ones. My criticism is that they're not enterprising enough."

THIS CAUSED one of his friends to tell this story:

A union organized the employes of a large firm after a long and sometimes bitter campaign. The local labor paper played an important role in the membership drive.

Management stalled for months before entering negotiations with the union—and then another battle began.

Management at first said "no" to almost all of the union's proposals. Then over a period of weeks—agreement was reached on one point of the contract after another.

Eventually there was agreement on everything but wages. On this the management refused to budge an inch.

The union wanted a 10c increase. Management offered 3c.

Negotiations recessed for two weeks and during this period the labor paper ran two stories about the "mounting strike sentiment" resulting from the company's refusal to grant a 10c raise.

The local dailies, taking their cue from the labor weekly, also ran stories about "mounting strike sentiment."

The union, taking its cue from the weekly and dailies, called a special meeting at which members voted unanimously for a resolution empowering its executive board to call a strike "if necessary to bring about a fair settlement of our wage dispute."

The union was in a poor position to strike and knew it—so the resolution was little more than a threat.

But officers of the company didn't know this was true. So they took their cue from the weekly, the dailies and the resolution.

WHEN negotiations resumed, management immediately offered a 5c raise. This was increased to 8c, then to 9c and finally to 10c.

The contract was signed. Negotiators breathed sighs of relief and shook hands with each other.

A union officer, unnoticed, moved to a window of their second-floor meeting room and lowered and raised the shade quickly.

Two men, with copies of the local weekly paper under their arms, started across the street after receiving the "shade" signal.

As the negotiators stepped out on the sidewalk the "news boys" began shouting:

"Strike Averted! Union Wins 10c Raise! Read all about it in the labor Journal."

Dumbfounded management representatives were never told that half the papers the "news boys" displayed—the bottom half of their stack—carried a headline saying:

"Union Calls Meeting To Discuss Strike Action." A.L.S.

Keyserling Gives Recipe For Full Employment

Following are excerpts from the address to the CIO Auto Workers convention made by Leon Keyserling, vice chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers:

The New Deal of Franklin Roosevelt gave this country an increasing appreciation of the importance and necessity of humanistic progressive liberal government in the interest of all the people.

He broke down for all time that wall which divides the government from the people and made the people realize that a government program is not something separate and distinct from what the people do in industry and do in labor but it is the people themselves, the people themselves acting through their government to protect their interests as a whole and to solve those problems which they cannot solve alone.

But let us admit that there was one problem we did not solve in those earlier years—the problem of full employment.

We were faced in our economic system with a house that was already on fire, and while many necessary and urgent steps were taken to put that fire out successfully, we were interrupted in the task of moving on to a permanent full employment economy.

That is the challenge of today, and as we face that challenge we must recognize that there has grown up an increasing number of those who believe as against those who disbelieve in a full employment economy,

NOW, WHAT are the issues in that fight? What is a full employment economy? A full employment economy is one in which the great industrial resources, the great labor resources, the great material resources of the country are used in the interest of all the people constantly to increase and improve their standards of living.

And who are those opposed to a full employment economy? They break down into two groups. First, there are a few who do not want to see it done because they feel that unemployment makes it easier for them to deal with the labor force, that restrictionism makes it easier for them to maintain profits than a full employment economy,

But more important than that, because those small groups have been beaten before and can be beaten again, we must fight old and outmoded ideas.

We must fight the idea that a small recession every now and then is natural and is a normal course of readjustment.

'A Few Facts'

Says Leon Keyserling:

"Let me give you just a few facts about what a full employment economy can mean over a few years' time.

"In 1932, during the depths of the depression, we had a total national product of about $40,000,000,000,. We have figured out that over the next 10 years, on the average, starting with a national product of more than $200,000,000,000 now, we can average a $40,000,000,000 higher annual national product than we have ever achieved before.

"That would mean that over a period of 10 years in the aggregate our national product would be $400,000,000,000 more than if we stand still and $200,000,000,000 greater than if we allow the vicious circle or cycle of recession and depression to fall down upon us again."

What are the things we need to do to achieve a full employment economy? This divides into the things that you can do through your government, into the things that the government, in the interests of all the people needs to do, and the things that you and others can do in collective bargaining, in wage policy, in price policy, and in economic policy generally.

LET US look at the government first. What is the first thing that we, the people, need to do through our government to achieve a full employment economy? We need to define the size of a full employment economy. We need to set goals—we need to set goals for national income, we need to set goals for standards of living, we need to set goals for housing and we need to set goals for education and for health and for other vital matters.

And we need to set out the national laws and policies to help to achieve these goals. And as we start to do that, what do we find? We find those timid people or those reactionary people who say it can't be done.

The answer is that the real resources of the people are not in dollars and cents, but in the brawn and brain of the people who work in our economy, and in our national resources, and that there is a loss in economic values and in human values when people are unemployed, when people are under-housed, under-nourished or under-educated.

It is by building up these fundamental resources that we add to the strength and to the security of our economy and that we can move forward over the next five years to a national income in real terms of $300,000,000,000 which is set forth as a goal in the Economic Report.

ADA Maps Full Work Program

By GLORIA CAPLAN

WITH THE nation's economy moving downhill as the unions and Pres. Truman predicted three years ago, almost everyone was rushing to the fore last week with prescription in hand.

Despite the unhappy memory of the Big Depression and the shadow of another, Big Business spokesmen and their Congressional buddies continued to offer the same course which nationally-known economists say led to the '29 bust.

Industrialists were vociferously complaining about a "shrunken market," but none stepped forward to correct the situation by placing more buying power in consumers' hands.

Typical of this approach was that of U. S. Chamber of Commerce Pres. Herman W. Steinkraus, who advised workers to "forego" wage demands this year. Although statistical information pointed to only slight reductions in prices in the past few months, the C. of C. head took a glance at newspaper advertisements and concluded that the country is witnessing a general lowering of prices.

Steinkraus' statement was in reply to the Robert J. Nathan report, made for CIO, which demonstrated the feasibility of substantial wage increases, coupled with price cuts, in some of the largest industries.

In addition to asking workers to skip raises this year, Steinkraus urged them to help management obtain "greater efficiency" so it might cut prices.

The Nathan report had noted whopping big increases in efficiency in steel and other industries—but no corresponding price declines resulted.

MEANWHILE, a star-studded group of Fair Dealers got together in Washington last week to blueprint a course back to full employment.

The all-day conference was sponsored by the Americans for Democratic Action, and brought together such persons as Leon Keyserling, vice chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers; Sen. James Murray (D., Mont.), who has just introduced an "Economic Expansion bill"; Rep. Andrew Biemiller (D. Wis.), a sponsor of the bill in the House; Labor Secy. Maurice Tobin; Connecticut Gov. Chester Bowles; Sen. Hubert Humphrey, ADA chairman; numerous labor leaders; some small business men — and even a Metropolitan opera star—Lawrence Tibbett.

It was a hard-working session, broken only by a luncheon and a small amount of small talk that accompanies luncheons.

The 70 participants were clearly alarmed. To them the fact of 4 million jobless, 9 million others working part-time, and numerous others temporarily laid off was no sign of "healthy readjustment."

Speaker after speaker demanded that something be done—now. All accented the "now."

Most unusual feature of the conference was the virtual non-existence of disagreement. When a resolutions committee submitted at the end of the day a lengthy document containing a detailed course of action for government, business and labor, it was a synthesis of all the thinking expressed earlier at the meeting.

Substantially the same point of view had been voiced by the labor representatives as by the businessmen. Economists Louis Bean, of the Agriculture Dept., and Keyserling voiced in different words the same point of view as the Metropolitan baritone and the CIO leaders.

THE CORE of every speech was "How to get purchasing power back up and keep it expanding?"

Passage of the Murray bill, it was agreed, would go a long way, but alone would be insufficient to solve the problem.

Sponsored by 18 Senators and a number of Representatives, the bill would do the following:

- Require states to meet certain minimum standards for unemployment compensation and would extend GI unemployment benefits under the GI Bill of Rights.
- Through incentives and assistance to private business, it would encourage industrial expansion. Among these methods would be stronger methods of combating monopoly; government-guaranteed loans; accelerated amortization; and aids to foreign investment by assisting underdeveloped areas.
- Establish a bi-partisan commission to investigate federal, state and local tax policies.
- Advance planning for resources development and public works; provides for loans to states and their subdivisions for such programs.
- To assist areas hardest hit by unemployment, the government would channel its contracts or loans to these places. Public works programs — either federal, state or local—would be financed by an Unemployment Emergency Reserve Fund. All work would be done at prevailing — rather than substandard—wages.
- Provision is made for the retraining of workers and assistance to move from one area to another where employment is more abundant.

Most of the points in the bill are advocated in the CIO's economic program and in the ADA full employment resolution.

Although the general objectives of the bill were applauded by CIO spokesmen, some of its provisions and omissions were criticized.

Emil Rieve, CIO vice president and administrative chairman of the CIO Full Employment Committee last week took issue with the provision for accelerated amortization, which he termed "unwise" and said could be used to further monopoly.

Rieve also suggested the various lending powers contained in the bill be tightened. As now drawn, he said, it would offer inducements to non-unionized areas at the expense of organized areas. In addition, Rieve criticized the section on unemployment compensation as inadequate. He said only a national system could meet the nation's needs. The bill only sets up "minimum standards" for states.

The ADA resolution on full employment mentioned the Murray bill and the Brannan farm program as "The two most important steps which we can take at once."

Highlights of some of the speeches:

RIEVE: (Unable to attend, his speech was read by George Weaver, director, CIO anti-discrimination committee.): "You simply cannot take four or five million people, put them on the shelf, and tell them that they are being readjusted. They won't stand for it and they shouldn't stand for it."

BOWLES: "I am glad to be able to say that already top people in our government have taken forthright steps to insure our economic health and prosperity. Pres. Truman's message on the economic situation was particularly gratifying."

SEN. MURRAY: "I submit that the most dangerous type of disloyalty and subversion can be found among those who work toward scarcity instead of abundance, who regard booms and busts as inevitable and oppose the objective of a sustained expansion in the American economy."

Finance capitalists, monopolists and "Economic Bourbons" were specifically mentioned.

KEYSERLING: " . . . I believe in action rather than drift . . . The end objective of our economy is to improve standards of living and to spread those improvements more widely over the whole population . . . We cannot have full demand for what we produce without higher levels of mass consumption, particularly among middle and low income groups."

HUMPHREY: "All we need are six or seven new Senators and 15 to 20 new Congressmen—constructive-minded ones, those that know we're living today—and you won't have to worry about the President's program."

DON MONTGOMERY, CIO Auto Workers economist: "The only source of wealth is production. If it takes a government deficit to save us from wasting $20 million in lost production a year, then that's economy—not waste."

By the time everyone had had a chance to digest the ideas advanced throughout the day, the resolutions committee had a full employment resolution drafted.

Adopted unanimously — with even the hearty consent of the businessmen present—was a program calling for wage increases, where they can be absorbed without price rises; the Brannan farm program and the Murray economic expansion bill; inceased and improved unemployment, old age, and disability benefits; federal public works and federal contracts pinpointed on areas most hit by unemployment; repeal of wartime excise taxes, and other tax reforms; better weapons for "removing monopolistic road blocks to private investment."

The program looked very much like the CIO's and like the President's. But not many people had any illusions about its chances for passage in the 81st Congress.

CIO Board Program Recalled

ECA Cut Hit By Carey

THE CIO IS "unalterably opposed" to an 11% cut in funds granted to the Economic Cooperation Administration, Sec.-Treas. James Carey has bluntly notified Congress.

In a letter to members of the Senate, the CIO official voiced opposition not only to the proposed budget cut but to the "haphazard manner" in which the Senate Appropriations Committee decided to make the cut in funds.

"We are likewise opposed to the proposed $50 million fund earmarked for Spain," he wrote.

"We consider that particular instance of earmarking an exhibition of irresponsibility and a disregard of the history of the entire program since Sec. of State Marshall proposed it in June, 1947.

"In our judgement," Carey added, "this is no time to upset the formulas of mutual assistance and cooperation which the participating nations worked out for themselves to our satisfaction."

CAREY'S PROTEST on behalf of CIO came shortly after ECA Administrator Paul Hoffman had warned the Senate, in a lengthy and detailed letter, that the European Recovery Program would be seriously jeopardized if the Senate follows the lead of its Appropriations Committee.

One of Hoffman's major gripes was against a clause inserted by farm state Senators requiring ECA to buy a fixed amount of farm products for distribution abroad, regardless of need.

Such a provision, if adopted, would play right into the hands of Soviet propagandists, Hoffman pointed out. The Russians have been maintaining that the purpose of ECA is to "dump U. S. surpluses into western Europe" in order to disrupt the economies of those nations.

Hoffman was equally sharp in his criticism of the Appropriation Committee's action to take $50 million out of the ECA appropriation for use as a loan to Franco Spain.

He said such a move at this time would be "inappropriate and unwise," and if Congress were to decide formally that Spain should come under ERP, "we should first request that Spain herself develop a recovery program just as we have insisted that the participating countries develop their recovery programs."

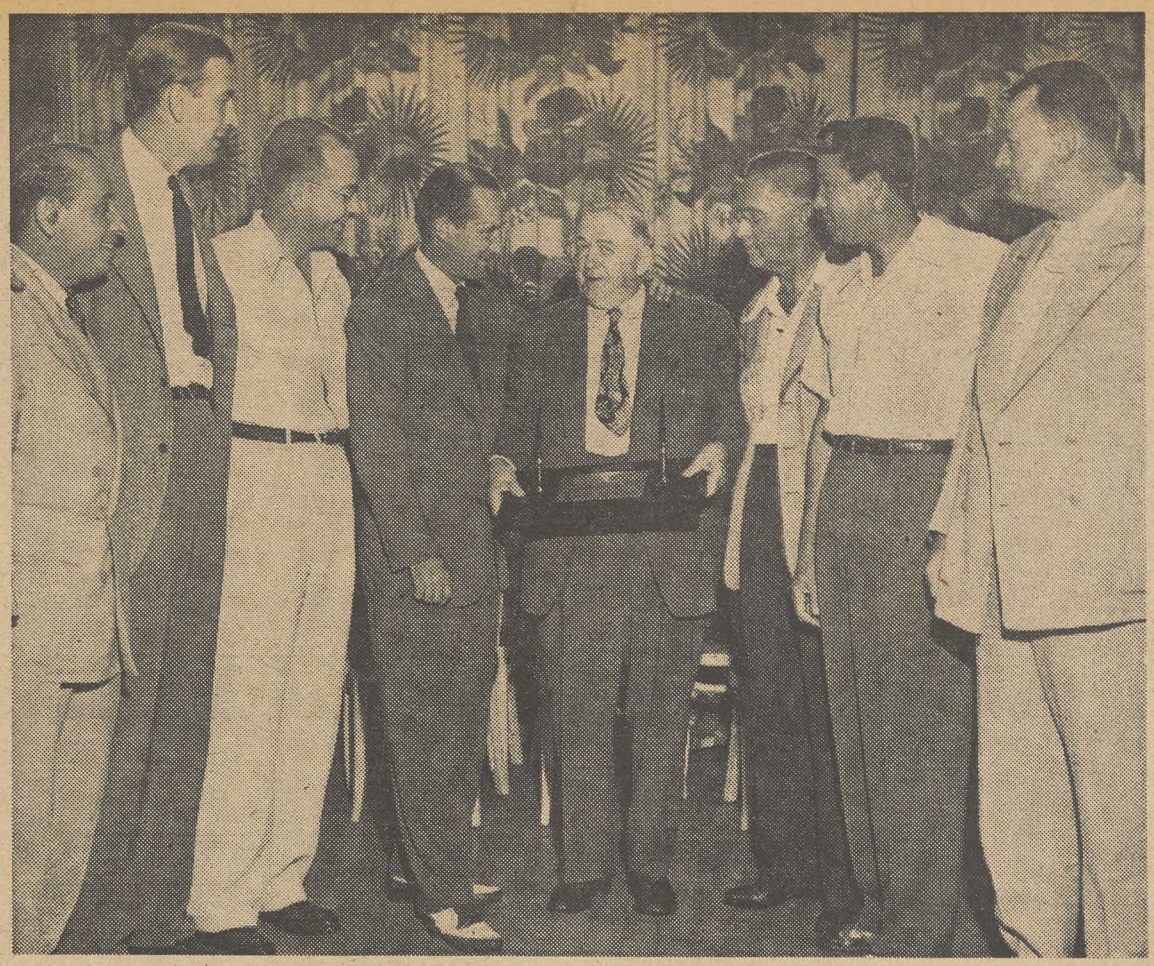
CAREY, IN HIS letter to Senators, emphasized that CIO's position was not based on "hearsay or conjecture." "We are constantly in touch with the labor movement in the participating nations which are giving their wholehearted cooperation in making the program effective."

The ECA appropriation has already passed the House of Representatives, in an amount less than requested by Pres. Truman but sufficient to be approved by ECA officials. The 11% cut was added by the Senate group to the cuts already made in the House.

ECA appropriations are apt to be on the Senate floor this week, following ratification last week of the Atlantic Pact.

Ox Roast

The Port Cities CIO Council, Grand Rapids, Mich., will hold an ox-roast on Labor Day.



HONORED: Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice president and director of organization, holds a desk set presented him by members of the CIO Telephone Workers' Organizing Committee, which has merged with the CIO Communications Workers. Left to right are: Oscar Jager, Carlton Werkau, CWA secretary-treasurer; Tommy Jones, CWA vice president; CWA Pres. Joseph Bierne; Haywood; CWA Vice Pres. Jack Moran (former head of TWOC); Robert Creasy, president, American Union of Telephone Workers, CWA, and CWA Vice Pres. John Crull. The inscription on the desk set praised Haywood—"our buddy"—for his work in bringing about the merger of the two telephone workers' unions.

Nathan 'Scares' Big Biz; He Refutes Criticisms

IT WAS TO BE expected and certainly did happen.

Big Business and its economists spent most of last week "answering" the Nathan economic report prepared for the CIO.

The study, written by Economist Robert R. Nathan, concluded that a lot of profit-swollen industries could and should grant sizeable wage increases and cut prices.

Such action, Nathan concluded, would allow industry to continue making decent profits—and it would be the only means of quickly heading off a more serious recession.

With unemployment spreading, action—both by government and by industry—was clearly in order.

But Big Business seemed only to be saying: "Sit tight and everything will be all right."

• Newsweek magazine for instance, complained that labor and industry were locked in a "noisy debate" which could only cause further economic jitters. Millions of workers out of jobs or working part-time didn't agree with the Newsweek piece.

(Newsweek showed its "impartiality" in an article about the steel wage dispute: "Legally and logically Big Steel's position was unassailable," the magazine said.)

• The financial editor of the New York Times shook a wagging finger at labor's audacity in asking for higher pay and greater buying power.

(The Times writer got himself all mixed up on the facts. He claimed the Nathan report referred to the auto industry's ability to pay higher wages; it didn't. He said the report was biased against the auto industry because Nathan had been retained by the auto union; in fact, Nathan was retained by the CIO and by the United Steelworkers.)

FIT TO PRINT?: The New York Times carried the story of Robert Nathan's economic report, made for the CIO, on page 18, with a one-column headline. The report advocated wage increases to help the national economy.

The New York Times carried the story of the Chamber of Commerce's reply to the Nathan report on the top of page one, with a two-column headline. The Chamber's reply argued that labor should not ask for wage increases.

THE PRINCIPAL Big Business answer to the Nathan Report came from Pres. Herman Steinkraus of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States.

The Chamber urged labor to forego wage increases this year. It had also railed against labor's wage demands in 1946, 1947 and 1948.

The Chamber argued that wage increases would be followed by price increases, and added that that's "especially so, since today we face the added handicaps of business falling off, prices going down and profits tumbling." How falling prices prove that wage increases would increase prices was not explained.

Keynote of the C of C report was that if unions hold up on wage boosts, business will soon pass on savings in the form of lower prices. Steinkraus even went so far as to urge businessmen to cut their prices.

But there was no assurance that prices would fall very fast or very far. Nathan, in his report, noted that in theory falling prices would be preferable to rising wages—but he said that the last few months have shown few price reductions of any significance.

TALKING TO A meeting of the American Veterans Committee in Washington, Nathan charged that the Chamber of Commerce president was "completely evasive of the fundamental issues facing our economy."

Referring to Steinkraus's appeal to let things take their course, Nathan said: "If that's business' most constructive program, then God help us."

On the other hand, he said, wage increases this year would probably come out of super-profits, since the economic situation makes consumer price increases difficult. That process, he continued, builds buying power, stimulates demand and offers a way to keep the recession from developing into depression.

Blast Move In Senate On Power

THE CIO HAS protested to all members of Congress that the "action of the Senate Appropriations Committee cutting apropriations for transmission lines from government dams and inviting privately owned utilities to take power from the busbar is an outrage against the American people."

The protest was made for CIO by John Brophy in his capacity as chairman of CIO's Regional Development Committee.

Members of the Senate have a chance to "kill a proposed steal of public power" by the private utility lobby, Nathan Cowan, CIO Legislative Director, declared, commenting on the Committee action.

"The fight for public power that was begun in the thirties by Pres. Roosevelt, Sen. Norris and Speaker Rayburn — when they launched TVA, the Rural Electrification Administration and passage of the Holding Companies Act—is being fought over again by the private power lobby," Cowan charged.

Effect of Committee's action and who would benefit:

1. Central Valley Project (Shasta Dam), Cal. Beneficiary: Pacific Gas and Electric Co.

2. Anderson Ranch Dam, Idaho. Beneficiary: Idaho Power Co.

3. Colorado-Big Thompson Project, Cal. Beneficiary: Public Service Co. of Colorado.

4. Canyon Ferry Project, Mont. Beneficiary: Montana Power Co.

5. Fort Peck Dam, Mont. Beneficiary: Montana Power Co.

6. Hungry Horse Dam (Bonneville Power Administration), Mont. Beneficiary: Montana Power Co.

7. Southwestern Power Administration. Beneficiary: Texas Power and Light and others.

8. Southeastern Power Projects, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Florida, Georgia, Alabama, Tennessee and Kentucky.

Reversal In NLRB Gained

A UNANIMOUS reversal by all five members of the Natl. Labor Relations Board of a previous order affecting bargaining units in paper mills and paper bag plants has been issued in a case involving the CIO Paperworkers and the Oakmont, Pa., plant of the U. S. Gypsum Co.

The amended Labor Board decision orders an election at the mill and bag plant, including in the bargaining unit all disputed job classifications excluded from the unit in the earlier decision issued in January. The disputed classifications now in the bargaining unit are machine tenders, head beatermen, head loaders, bottomer operators, tubar operators and inspectors.

The company's contention was that employes in these classifications were supervisory under the law. The union maintained that such employes were included in all major paper industry bargaining agreements and to uphold the company's viewpoint would create a precedent that could creat chaos in labor-management relations in the industry.

The Paperworkers appealed from the NLRB's original decision and was assisted by the AFL Brotherhood of Papermakers in a rare example of joint-action in such cases. AFL Papermakers Pres. Paul Phililps testified in the appeal hearing in Pittsburgh along with UPA-CIO Pres. Harry Sayre and employes of the company. The attorney in the case appeared on behalf of both unions.

The five members of the NLRB, in the amended decision, stated that exclusion of the disputed classifications would establish one supervisor for every three employes and "would constitute a set-up at sharp variance from the usual practice in the paper industry."

Movie Hero Is Ex-CIO Member

Hundreds of Americans are daily seeing "Home of the Brave," which has been hailed as an outstanding contribution to better race relations.

But, members of Local 2534 of the CIO Steelworkers have an extra reason for seeing—and applauding "Home of the Brave."

That's because the actor cast in the main role, that of a Negro soldier, is a former member and leader of the local, which represents workers at the Standard Steel plant, Hammond, Ind.

The ex-Steelworker is James Edwards, who was chairman of the grievance committee at Standard. There, he also worked closely with Norman Harris, District 31 representative, in winning a new wage contract which had to be argued before the War Labor Board.

Edwards, who served three years as an infantry captain in the 92d Division, studied dramatic art at a Chicago school while working at Sandard. The firm later dismissed him for a minor infraction of company rules.

While an arbitrator upheld the firing, that discharge turned out to be a lucky break for Edwards. An uncle in New York urged him to try Broadway. He won a good role in "Deep Are the Roots," a stage hit. Hollywood scouts liked his acting and he was given a part in "The Set-Up," a prize fight film. Next came "Home of the Brave," which is winning rave reviews and drawing capacity crowds all over the U. S. Last week, it was shown in two Texas cities and not an incident marred the presentation.

Jimmy Fidler, Hollywood columnist, predicts that Edwards will win an "Oscar" for his acting of the role of GI Peter Moss.

UN Hails CIO Aid To Children

SEC'Y-Gen. Trygve Lie of the United Nations warmly thanked the CIO for aid given to needy children abroad through the UN's Intl. Children's Emergency Fund. In a letter to CIO Pres. Philip Murray, Lie said:

"I wish to express to you my personal thanks and satisfaction that you have recognized the vital urgency of supporting UNICEF. Its accomplishments among the most pitiful victims of war have been extraordinary and its task is by no means finished.

"It is gratifying to us in the United Nations to know that this important American group has joined again in the great effort toward peace.

"Please extend my felicitations to your membership."

IN HIS REPLY, Murray said:

"I am sure it will be a source of deep satisfaction to the members of the CIO to know that their contribution to the work of the Intl. Children's Emergency Fund is being recognized by the United Nations.

"It is of great importance for us to continue our assistance, through governmental as well as through voluntary channels, in behalf of the needy children of the world.

"It is my understanding that the contribution of $30,000 made recently by the Natl. CIO Community Services Committee is the largest single voluntary contribution made to date to the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund.

"We are proud of that fact, and we shall continue to work with you in the great effort toward world peace."

Swedish Gal Shows Us A Thing Or Two

Auburn-haired Helga Johannson, Sweden's only woman union treasurer, came to this country to learn about American trade unions, but so far her new trade union friends have learned even more from her.

At a Washington luncheon given in her honor by the CIO Government Workers' Union, Miss Johannson last week evoked a room full of gulps when she casually remarked that Sweden's government workers and factory workers are 100% organized. (An estimated 6 to 10% of American government employes are organized.)

What's more, she told her listeners, government employes work under union contract and have the right to strike. There is, however, machinery for settling differences peacefully during the life of the contract, which includes an arbitration board.

In this country under the sponsorship of the Economic Cooperation Administration, Miss Johannson will visit America's big industrial centers, take in the West Coast, then return to Washington, D. C., before sailing home in September.

The Swedish labor leader is treasurer of the Swedish Union of Civilian Employes in State Defence Industries. In addition, she serves as vice chairman of the Women's Advisory Council to the Swedish Confederation of Trade Unions.

Last year, Miss Johannson said, her union passed up a wage increase "in order to help stabilize the economy.

"But we said we would insist on the increase if prices were allowed to go up." Sweden, however, still has price control, so the cost of living has remained fairly steady.

Feller On CIO Legal Staff

Appointment of David E. Feller as assistant general counsel of the CIO and of the CIO Steelworkers has been announced by Arthur J. Goldberg, general counsel.

Feller has most recently served as chief law clerk to Chief Justice Fred Vinson of the U. S. Supreme Court. Prior to that he was an attorney in the Office of Alien Property, Department of Justice.

He is a graduate of Harvard College and of Harvard Law School. After graduation from law school, he lectured in law and economics at the University of Chicago Law School. He served for 3½ years in the Army in the Pacific Theater, both with the infantry and with military intelligence.

Feller, 32, is married and has one child.

Thomas Harris is Goldberg's other assistant.

Beat Blow at FEPC

The House Labor Committee, by an 18 to 7 vote, has rejected a parliamentary maneuver that would have killed FEPC legislation at this session.

The committee then voted, 19 to 6, to take a final vote next Friday on the measure, which is sponsored by Rep. Adam Clayton Powell (D., N. Y.).

DAVID FELLER AND ARTHUR GOLDBERG

Cook Union Proud It's Left Wing

By WILLIAM A. MILLIS

"IT IS MY prediction you will walk out this hall proudly wearing the left-wing badge as a badge of honor."

President Hugh Bryson of the CIO Marine Cooks & Stewards made that prediction to 200 delegates as the union's Third Biennial Convention opened in San Francisco last week.

That prediction was carried out in the following days as delegates of the 7000-member union denounced national policies of CIO, accused leaders of several CIO Internationals of "selling out" on Taft-Hartley repeal and wage bargaining, and charged National CIO leaders with attempted "Dictatorship" over affiliated unions.

Highlight of the convention was unanimous approval of a resolution on autonomy, which charged in part:

In the last couple of years, the top leadership of the CIO began to depart from the original principles on which the organization was founded. In 1946 restrictions were imposed on local and state industrial union councils.

The majority of the CIO Executive Board and the top leadership of The CIO remained silent while the autonomous rights of such unions as Farm Equipment, Mine-Mill, Electrical, Public Workers, Office Workers and others were violated by other CIO affiliates engaged in the "cannibalistic" practice of raiding.

At the Portland Convention, Pres. Murray served notice that jurisdiction of certain international unions would be turned over to other unions, and finally, at the May 16, 1949, meeting of the CIO Executive Board, the autonomy of all national and international unions was officially rescinded.

THE RESOLUTION also likened the Communist-line minority in CIO ranks to American Revolutionary leaders in 1776, quoted from the U. S. Declaration of Independence, and charged CIO "policy is in violation of all concepts and traditions of American Revolutionary history."

The convention also declared: "The issue as we see it is whether or not our membership will determine the policies under which we operate, or whether those policies will be handed down to us by a few power-hungry labor bureaucrats in Washington, Pittsburgh and Detroit."

(Pres. Murray has his office as CIO President in Washington; his office as Steelworkers' President is in Pittsburgh. Detroit is the home office of Auto Workers' Pres. Walter Reuther.)

The delegates also fully indorsed actions of Bryson as member of the CIO Executive Board and authorized a campaign for "preserving the autonomous rights of CIO members."

Only debate on a resolution came on an amendment by delegates Harry Press and James Kiernan, proposing any future action by MC&S for secession from CIO be submitted to referendum. Bryson attacked sponsors as the union's "most deadly enemies," linked them to Harry Lundeberg of AFL Sailors' Union of the Pacific. The amendment received the vote only of two sponsors. There was however, no disagreement on the "Autonomy Resolution" attacking CIO.

Report to the convention of Bryson and Sec'y.-Treas. Eddie Tangen, plus action of committees, indicated convention approval of these pending resolutions:

1. Reaffirming support of World Federation of Trade Unions and denouncing CIO's withdrawal.
2. Accusing CIO National Maritime Union President Joseph Curran of "sellout" in recent East Coast agreement.
3. Strongly attacking the Marshall Plan, Atlantic Pact, U. S. Foreign Policy and saluting "The New China."
4. Continued backing of Wallace third party. (Bryson is president of the "Independent Progressive Party" in California).
5. Backing Hawaiian longshoremen's strike.
6. Setting this wage goal: "As long as our members need more wages, we will fight for wage increases to the limit of our bargaining power."

LOCAL POINT of the convention itself and the three-day "pre-convention conference" was an unrestrained attack on other CIO unions and their officials, particularly on NMU.

Three San Francisco members of NMU were barred from the convention, according to Charles Abar, acting field patrolman. They were Abar, C. Deroussett and James Drury, field representative of the Northern California CIO Regional Office.

Convention speakers included: Grant Oakes, FE President, who charged national CIO Executive Board members "are really representative of monopoly corporations within the labor movement"; Rep. Vito Marcantonio, (ALP, N. Y.) speaking by phone, who denounced "so-called leaders of labor who are crawling abject on their bellies" while, he charged, the Truman "program of $24 billions for empire abroad means reaction at home and enslavement for labor" and Richard Lynden, President, San Francisco CIO Council: "It is a sorry business when a national union instructs its unions to carry out instructoins contrary to the wishes of its membership."

There was no election of officers this year.

Steelworkers' Courses

The United Steelworkers of America-CIO will sponsor its third annual labor institute for members in the Chicago and St. Louis areas this month and next at the University of Illinois.

Taft Never Changes:

His Golf Drives Down Middle Or To The Right Of Links

By REP. SIDNEY R. YATES

Member of Congress from the 9th Illinois District. The following is part of a regular news letter sent out to his constituents.

The Housing bill provoked one of the great struggles of this Congress. The closeness of the vote truly indicated the explosive nature of the feelings of the members on this vital issue. It was therefore to be anticipated that the bitterness of the conflict would seek an outlet outside the legislative chamber.

In the days immediately preceding the French Revolution, members of the parliament of France, the Estates-General, frequently settled their differences with the dueling sword.

Today, members of our Congress are not nearly so homicidal. While tempers may flare upon the floor, and blows may be struck in rare moments of irrepressible anger, the dueling sword is passe as a means of legislative persuasion. But the desire for satisfaction persists, and so the Republicans challenged the Democrats. The weapon? Golf clubs. We accepted the challenge.

The tournament was held at the Burning Tree Country Club, a beautiful course which has been carved out of the Maryland forests. The day was dull and rainy, a perfect setting for such serious business. My teammate was Rep. George Smathers (D., Fla.), and opposing us were Rep. Earl Wilson (R., Ind.) and Sen. Robert A. Taft (R., O.).

I enjoyed my match with Taft very much. I had never met him before and I wondered whether his golf game would at all reflect his political philosophy. I was amazed by the close parallel.

We were scheduled to tee off at 1:30. Promptly at 1:30 Taft walked to the tee. He was dressed in khaki shorts, a faded blue T-shirt and an old fishing hat with a green sun visor. Like the knights of old, he wore a battle standard. This was in the form of gray woolen socks with green elephants knitted in. His fishing hat was reversed with the sun visor to the back of his head, which prompted the remark from one of the spectators that he seemed to be intent upon looking behind him, rather than where he was going.

From the opening drive, the Senator was rarely in the rough. His shots were down the middle of the fairway about 150 yards and invariably when he was not in the center, he would go to the right. Only rarely did he hook to the left. He acted as score keeper and he knew the number of strokes I had taken on each hole even before I told him.

He carried an umbrella, which was useful because of the intermittent rain, and as we walked along he generously offered to share it with me. I brought a quick smile to his face with the statement that this was the closest I had ever been to his position.

Taft is a determined man. When he putted, he would watch the ball roll toward the cup in a semi-crouched position, with his hands on both knees as though he were insisting that the ball go in. Strangely enough, more often than not it did go in. The Senator is an excellent putter.

He was trapped just once when an approach shot, destined for the green, kicked almost at right angles into a trap. I had pitched close to the hole so that a birdie was inevitable and I felt I had won. Undaunted by his apparent defeat, however, the Senator blasted out and sank a long putt to tie me. My feelings, I am sure, were comparable to those of Sen. Scott Lucas in the recent Senate labor fight when he almost carried the Senate on his anti-injunction provision, only to find Taft coming up with sufficient votes to defeat him.

I beat the Senator and Smathers won from Wilson. We contributed to the final score of 30-6 by which the Democrats won the tournament, but I was not surprised by this victory; the Southern Democrats had finally joined with us against the Republicans.

Distortion A La Hearst

HEARST'S Chicago Herald-American has even attempted to use CIO Pres. Philip Murray in its fight against striking AFL printers.

A guest column written by Murray for Victor Riesel, syndicated columnist, appeared in the Hearst paper and was prominently advertised on the front page. The newspaper boasted that labor leaders "write for this newspaper."

Informed of the Hearst tactics, Murray wired John J. Pilch, president of the Chicago Typographical Union:

"I am extremely sorry that Chicago Herald-American employed underhanded tactics in exploiting guest column I wrote for Victor Riesel. My article was supplied to syndicate which handles Riesel column without my being informed there was any possibility it would be used in newspaper against which your union has waged a valiant fight.

"Tactics used by Herald-American in effort to convince public your battle is not endorsed by CIO and by me personally are inexcusable."

Wage-Hour Talks Due In Senate

DEBATE ON A bill to lift minimum wages to a 75c-an-hour level starts in the Senate this week, after a series of long delays in both branches of Congress.

The Senate bill lifts the present 40c minimum to 75c, provides for tightening of present loopholes in the Wage-Hour law's child-labor section, and makes a few additions to present coverage.

These coverage improvements, however, are far less than those recommended by CIO at hearings earlier this year. They would apply principally to a few groups of dairy workers and some employes of food processing plants.

Last week, CIO Legislative Director Nathan Cowan asked the Senate to pass the bill (S. 653) without crippling amendments, pointing out that it is intolerable to allow workers to be paid "less than a subsistence wage."

The wage-hour bill picture in the House is more complicated. A bill embodying most of the improvements sought by labor was approved some time ago by the Labor Committee, but has been in a Rules Committee pigeonhole for months. Later Chairman John Lesinski (D. Mich.) introduced a flat 75c bill without any coverage changes, but his proposal has not been approved by the Labor Committee.

It is understood that a bill resembling the Senate measure may soon be considered in the House Labor Committee.

Murray Hails Gov. Bowles

Congratulations on achievements of the Connecticut legislature were forwarded to Gov. Chester Bowles last week by CIO Pres. Murray.

Bowles, Fair Dealer and one-time OPA administrator, was elected last year with strong labor support.

"Your record of achievements during the last session of the Connecticut Legislature demonstrates that our confidence in your leadership in the State was fully justified," Murray wrote.

Murray cited measures dealing with housing, safeguards against evictions, ending of segregation in the National Guard, improvement in state mental hospitals, and beginnings of the reorganization of the governmental machinery.

"It is to be regretted that the reactionary Republican majority in the Connecticut House of Representatives obstructed enactment of the legislation which you recommended to improve the unemployment and workmen's compensation laws," the CIO president told Bowles.

"I know that your vigorous leadership in the last several months will insure you the continued support not only of the membership of the CIO in the state, but also of all similarly enlightened citizens who believe as we do in sound, progressive state government."

Help PAC Really Do It In '50

HE'S NOT A young man—as baseball players go. But, at age 30 he's the leading batter and base-stealer in the big leagues.

He's rather quiet. But, when he wants to say something, he says it in unmistakable terms.

Last week, Jackie Robinson, first Negro ever to crash the big leagues (with Brooklyn of the Natl. League) came to Washington, just to show up that voluble "spokesman" for the Negroes, Paul Robeson.

Jackie didn't want to come, especially since he had been invited by the discredited House Un-American Activities. But, he seemed sick and tired of Robeson's repeated attempts to link the entire Negro population with the Communist Party Line. He seemed sick and tired of Robeson's repeated statements that Negroes would never carry arms against Russia.

Said Robinson to the committee: 'I don't pretend to be any expert on Communism or any other 'ism'. Going to college at the Univ. of California at Los Angeles, helping to fight a war with about 10,000,000 other fellows, trying to break into professional baseball and then trying to make good with the Dodgers and trying to save some money for the time when my legs lose their spring—all this together with my family life has been enough to keep me busy without becoming an 'expert'—except on base-stealing or something like that.

"But you can set me down as an expert on being a colored American, with 30 years of experience at it.

"And just like any other colored person with sense enough to look around him and understand what he sees, I know that life in these United States can be mighty tough for people who are a little different from the majority—in their skin, color or the way they worship God, or the way they spell their names."

HE HAD been asked to "express my views on Robeson's statement in Paris to the effect that American Negroes would refuse to fight in any war against Russia because we love Russia so much."

"I haven't any comment to make except that the statement, if Mr. Robeson actually made it, sounds very silly to me," he said. "But he has a right to his personal views and if he wants to sound silly when he expresses them in public, that's his business and not mine.

"Most Negroes—and Italians and Irish and Jews and Swedes and Slavs and other Americans—would act just as all these other groups did in the last war. They'd do their best to help their country stay out of war; if unsuccessful, they'd do their best to help their country win the war—against Russia, or any other country that threatened us."

Of his own race, he said further: "This isn't said as any defense of the Negro's loyalty, because loyalty that needs defense can't amount to much in the long run. And no one has ever questioned my race's loyalty except a few people who don't amount to very much."

Robinson's statement, which he read into the record, was written by himself, with the aid of his pretty wife. They had met while at UCLA.

He had a note of warning: "One thing the American public ought to understand, if we are to make progress, is the fact that because it is a Communist who denounces injustice in the courts, police brutality and lynching, when it happens, doesn't change the truth of his charges."

HE WOUND up his testimony by saying:

"I can't speak for any 15,000,000 people any more than any other person can, but I know that I've got too much invested for my wife and child and myself in the future of this country and I and other Americans of many races and faiths have too much invested in our country's welfare, for any of us to throw it away because of a siren song sung in base.

"I am a religious man. Therefore, I cherish America where I am free to worship as I please, a privilege which some countries do not give. And, I suspect that 999 out of almost any thousand colored Americans you meet will tell you the same thing.

"But that doesn't mean that we're going to stop fighting race discrimination in this country until we've got it licked. It means that we're going to fight it all the harder because our stake in the future is so big.

"We can win our fight without the Communists and we don't want their help."

As he finished, someone in the audience said a fervent "amen."

Jackie Robinson had gotten up at 5:30 A.M. to travel from Brooklyn to Washington for his appearance. He went home and played his regular stint that night at second base against the Chicago Cubs.

The Brooklyn Dodgers won, 3-0. Robinson rounded out a good man's day (1) by walking, stealing second, going to third on an overthrow, then stealing home and (2) smacking out a triple.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Organized labor suffered two great losses within the week. On Saturday, July 16, the news was flashed that A. F. Whitney, President, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen died of a heart attack. He had been president of that organization for over twenty years. President Whitney had at all times cooperated with the CIO, in strikes and political action. He served his organization well and the Brotherhood loss will be the loss of the entire labor movement.

Midnight, July 19, the sad news came that Brother Van A. Bittner had died. He was Vice-President of the Steelworkers and a member of the CIO Executive Board. He was also national director for the Southern Organizing Drive, in which his organizing activities were second to none. Brother Bittner did much to organize the West Virginia Miners, as well as steel and packinghouse workers.

He, himself became a union man when he went into the mines at the age of 11 years. He never lost his faith in the common man, and he championed the cause of unionism everywhere at all times. We shall miss Van, labor has suffered a great loss.

In his spirit, as he would want it, we must carry on organizing the unorganized!

Another shock was the death of Frank Murphy, Supreme Court Justice. At the time he took office as governor of Michigan, the gigantic General Motors strike began. It was he who refused to call out the militia against the workers. He suggested that the matter be settled around the conference table, his suggestion was spurned, but later, the writer was one of those who sat in on the conference at Lansing, Mich., when GM decided to recognize the United Automobile Workers. This was a tremendous victory for the then new, small, but fighting auto workers. Mr. Murphy later had the distinction of becoming a member of our Supreme Court.

May their souls rest in peace—and their lives be an inspiration to the rest of us to carry on the good fight for human freedom and human rights.

Willam E. Thornton, new president of the Shoe Workers, reports a most gratifying election victory at the Selby Shoe Co. plants in Portsmouth, Ohio, and Ashland, Ky.

The 2500 workers have been on strike 10 weeks over the company's refusal to bargain in good faith. An election was demanded by the company when the AFofL Boot and Shoe Workers attempted to take advantage of the situation and claimed representation. It was a clear attempt to smash the srike. The workers were faced with a barrage of newspaper advertisements and wild radio attacks in the customary techniques of strike-breaking. Despite the strike-breaking attack, the Selby workers stood by their CIO Union by a vote of 1,569 to 621.

Secy-Treas. James J. (Scotty) Mitchell of the Shoe Workers reports another election victory at the B & W factory in Webster, Mass., where the vote was two to one for CIO among the valid votes of the 100 employes.

Alexander Hieken, ANG-CIO representative, announces that in an election held at the T. B. Butler Publishing Co., Tyler, Texas, the ANG-CIO won by a vote of 11 to 3.

Philip Kaiser In Labor Post

Philip Kaiser has been named by Pres. Truman as assistant secretary of labor in charge of international labor affairs.

Kaiser, 36 years old, has served as head of the international division of the Labor Dept. for some. The assistant secretaryship has been vacant for nearly two years.

Kaiser, well known to CIO officials, is a graduate of University of Wisconsin and was a Rhodes scholar. Prior to working in the Labor Dept., he served with the Federal Reserve System, with the Board of Economic Warfare and the State Dept.

Labor Law Is Topic At Duke Institute

Key problems in the field of labor law will be discussed by 14 outstanding experts on the panel of North Carolina's first Institute on Labor Law, Duke University July 29-30, Charles H, Livengood, Jr., of Duke, chaiman, has announced.

Among the labor law authorities to participate will be William S. Tyson, Solicitor of Labor for the United States; David C. Sachs, Chief Law Officer, National Labor Relations Board, Region V; Irving J. Levy, General Counsel for the United Automobile Workers (CIO).

No Civil Liberties Issue Seen In Harry Bridges Case

THE GREATER Los Angeles CIO Council and the California Natl. CIO-PAC have refused to join the defense of Harry Bridges on the grounds that there is no civil liberties issue involved.

Bridges, president of the CIO Longshoremen's Union, has been indicted on charges that he perjured himself when he denied membership in the Communist Party in applying for American citizenship.

The Los Angeles and PAC actions were taken separately, but the language of the resolutions was identical except for names of the organizations.

"We are opposed to the deportation of any person because of his political beliefs," the resolution said, "If Bridges is found guilty of perjury, he must accept the punishment which will be leveled against him for perjuring himself.

"However, the question of the perjury charge must be separated from the civil liberties question involved in Bridges' alleged political beliefs and whether he should be deported because of them."

The resolution further stated, "perjury is perjury whether it be for the purpose of obtaining an automobile license or falsely obtaining U. S. citizenship. Under American law, unlike the Soviet system, Harry Bridges is presumed to be innocent until proven guilty. Therefore the Greater L. A. CIO Council goes on record in its determination to make absolutely sure that Bridges gets a fair trial."

As to contributions, the resolution declared: "We believe it unnecessary and unwise to establish any committee for the purpose of raising funds. In the previous Bridges case, the national CIO agreed to underwrite the financial costs of the legal defense. Despite this, California local unions were asked to contribute funds for which no factual accounting has been made to the local unions involved."

William Lawrence, ILWU regional director for Southern California, had asked the L. A. Council to back Bridges. The roll call result was 48,047.66 in favor of the non-support resolution and 19,131.64 against.

There was a split in the delegation from Lawrence's own local, ILWU 13, San Pedro. Two delegates voted against Bridges. Only eight of the 27 delegates from Local 13 attended, though the Bridges issue headed the agenda.

UAW Board

Region 1. Norman Matthews and Michael F. Lacey; 1A Ed Cote and Joseph McCusker; 1B. William McAulay; 1C. Donnel Chapman; 1D. Leonard Woodcock; 2. Ray Ross; 2A. Patrick O'Malley; 2B. Charles Ballard; 3. Ray Berndt; 4. Pat Greathouse; 5. Russell Letner; 6. C. V. O'Halloran; 7. George Burt; 8 Thomas J. Starling; 9. Martin Gerber; 9A. Charles H. Kerrigan; 10. Harvey Kitzman.

Ross, O'Malley and Kitzman are new to the board. The latter represents a newly-organized region.

2 Candidates Are Quizzed

A 25-point questionnaire, covering "virtually every major state issue in which the people are interested," has been sent to New Jersey Gov. Driscoll and State Sen. Elmer Wene by the State CIO.

Harry Kranz, CIO legislative director, said the CIO-PAC will withhold an indorsement in the gubernatorial campaign this year until replies by the two candidates to the questions are appraised at the next PAC meeting, probably next month.

Three of the questions deal with the "caucus rule" in the Senate and Assembly and ask if the candidates would support "the writing of Senate and Assembly rules that any bill must be brought out of committee to the floor for debate and action on the petition of one-fifth of the legislature.

"Please, that's enough, Senator, he only wants your order."

Model T (aft)

Statement by CIO-PAC Director Jack Kroll:

Sen. Robert A. Taft's leadership of the group opposing ratification of the Atlantic Pact is another sordid exhibit in the case of Senator Taft versus the people.

It constitutes a reversion to that mental isolation which led Taft to declare there was no danger from Hitler a few months before we were plunged into war. It is the same as that mental isolation that led Taft to oppose each and every measure that enabled us to meet the challenge to our democracy in the last war. It is the same mental isolation that Senator Taft displays on crucial domestic issues.

On this issue, as on many others, Taft and the representatives of the Kremlin are playing the same game, seeking to plunge us into a depression from which the only escape is war.

We cannot afford Model T thinkers like Taft. We cannot afford mental isolation any more than we can afford physical isolation.

As a citizen of Ohio, I feel sure these facts of life will be brought home to Taft in the not to distant future. (P.S. The Senate, luckily, ignored Taft and O.K.'d the pact, 82-13.

Legislative Gains Achieved Over Odds By Calif. PAC

MORRIS ZUSMAN, head of California Natl. CIO-PAC, reports some gains, against heavy odds, in the legislative field.

Gains he listed included:

1. His group has been recognized as the legitimate voice of CIO in Sacramento, the state capital. This is considered a blow to the State CIO council, which has defied national CIO policy.

2. A close working relationship has been established with other labor groups, an important advance for next year's elections.

3. A series of anti-union bills were killed off through hard work.

4. An additional $20 millions in benefits were authorized through improvements in workmen's compensation, disability insurance and unemployment insurance programs.

Zusman accused the followers of the Communist Party line of being responsible for the defeat of the Collins FEPC bill. "By their so-called mass demonstrations, they killed the Collins bill," Zusman said.

ALP and Liberals Desert Fair Deal

THE POLITICAL picture in New York City, usually a beclouded one, has been stirred up by these recent developments:

1. Despite the outstanding record of Fair Dealer Mayor William O'Dwyer, the American Labor Party has decided to put up for mayor Rep. Vito Marcantonia, and the Liberal Party has backed a so-called Fusion ticket, composed mostly of Republicans.

2. A wide-open split between Marcantonio, who is chairman of ALP, and ALP City Councilman Eugene P. Connally.

The lineup for mayor now will be: O'Dwyer, Newbold Morris, (Fusion), and Marcantonio. The Communists have indorsed Marcantonio.

A MONTH OR TWO ago, Connally announced he was running for the ALP nomination for Manhattan borough president. It seemed as if he had it sewed up with no opposition when Marcantino suddenly announced he was running Ewart Guinier, of the CIO Public Workers, against Connally.

Connally issued a statement which said in part:

"In an endeavor to prevent my nomination as Manhattan borough president, the opposition has resorted to a shocking and ugly maneuver. Rep. Marcantonio is responsible for injecting a racial issue into the ALP. Although my record for more than 20 years shows that I have been in forefront of the fight for the Negro people, as well as of other minorities, the Marcantonio group has undertaken to fight my candidacy by using a Negro against me in an outright racial appeal.

"The Negro people will bitterly resent the unscrupulous use which Marcantonio, and his willing tool Guinier, seek to make of them. Negro leaders will speak out against their indecent conspiracy. They will not tolerate the announcement by the Marcantonio group of a policy whereby the Negro people will oppose a white candidate who is worthy of their support simply because his opponent is a Negro.

"Now, about Guinier. He is an officer of UPW. I was the only city official who took an active part in the fight of the Sanitation Workers, I paraded with them in their City Hall picket line.

"I introduced virtually all of their legislation in the City Council, so much so that they hailed the bills I put in as constituting a 'Sanitation Workers' Magna Charta.'

"Yet, Guinier, who knows all that, opposes me. As a Negro, he should understand the racial basis of his opposition. But, leaving that aside, how can he as a trade unionist undertake to do so?

"I want to appeal to all decent-minded people to repudiate the shameful tactics of the Marcantonio group which seeks to make such disgraceful use of a racial issue."

MEANWHILE, Pres. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers denounced the alliance of the Liberal Party with the Republicans in opposition to O'Dwyer. He said such opposition was "contrary to the best interests of the city, the state and the nation."

Rieve saw the tieup as "clearly the result of personal spleen on the part of certain politically-minded elements within the Liberal Party."

He declared O'Dwyer has "earned by every criterion" the support of CIO and AFL.

Names

Typical name-calling hurled at Eugene Connally by Rep. Vito Marcantonio:

"Unprincipled, opportunistic . . . a sham . . . dictatorship by a minority . . . disgusting . . . outrageous distortions . . . he says 'I'm no red-baiter, but . . .'".

And some hurled at Connolly by Ewart Guinier:

"Anti-Negro, anti-Marcantonio, anti-Wallace, pro-O'Dwyer renegade from ALP."

TWU Asks CAA To Hold Up Use Of Radio Telephones

AIRPLANE passengers may not know the difference, but the radio men say it's plenty.

That's why they asked the U. S. Civil Aeronautics Administration last week to hold up, for reasons of safety, permission for substitution of radio telephone equipment for radio telegraph on United Airlines planes winging between the west coast and Hawaii.

The radio officers voiced their views in a letter sent to CAA Administrator Delos Rentzel by Hugh States, member of the Transport Workers' Union's Airline division and chairman of the Air Safety Committee set up by the radio operators. A similar letter was sent to Sen. Edwin Johnson (D., Colo.), head of the Senate Interstate Committee, by CIO Legislative Director Nathan Cowan.

"Flight radio officers are seriously concerned by the definite hazard to passenger and crew safety involved in supplanting of tested radio telegraph plane-to-shore and plane-to-ship service by radio telephone service," he said.

CAA's action in allowing United Airlines to remove radio telegraph service and install radio phones was taken without consultation with the radio men "whose own experience is greatest in this field," States wrote.

Reports from Pacific flying men, States added, "describe serious breakdowns in communications on flights where radio telephone service has already been authorized.

"These reports indicate planes have been out of contact with shore stations for long periods of flights, due to static, fading and other conditions.

"These planes, using radio phones, are thus completely isolated, whereas use of radio telegraph permits constant and efficient contact not only with shore stations but with other planes and surface vessels along the route."

Murphy—A Fighter For People

THE NATION — and especially its millions of workers—are mourning the death of Supreme Court Justice Frank Murphy, one of America's great liberals.

Murphy died in his sleep on July 19 at a Detroit hospital, where he had gone for general treatment. Death was caused by a heart attack.

Statements expressing regret over the passing of the Supreme Court Justice poured into Detroit from men in every walk of life.

President Truman said Murphy's court decisions "were ever tempered with a deep sense of justice and righteousness, and an abiding love for his fellow man."

Supreme Court Chief Justice Fred Vinson noted that in his "repsect of the rights of his fellows, Justice Murphy was never deterred by criticism, either past or prospective."

CIO Pres. Philip Murray, who had come into frequent contact with the late Justice when he was governor of Michigan between 1936 and 1938, said:

"His greatness as a judge was a reflection of the qualities which distinguished his entire career in public office—his compassionate understanding of the problems of the people of America and his unswerving devotion to the dignity of the individual and to the safeguards by which that dignity is preserved in a free society."

UAW Pres. Walter Reuther noted that Justice Murphy always "retained his humility and sense of dedication to the needs of this nation's laboring millions."

Recalling that Murphy had attained high public office in the depression, and the pressure of "tested men to the breaking point"—Reuther said he was "never found wanting."

MURPHY, A deeply religious man, filled a wide variety of public offices.

First elected mayor of Detroit in the early '30s, he was almost at once confronted with the misery and distress of depression in one of the cities most seriously affected by unemployment. Frank Murphy felt the burden of the depression, and the pressure of reactionaries who felt that the jobless were "idle bums" who should be left to starve.

Murphy dug into the city's treasury to feed the hungry and to give at least some minimum care to the families of jobless workers. He was berated by the business community for "coddling the unemployed," but the people loved him—and returned him to office.

In 1933, when Pres. Roosevelt's administration began to make relief funds available to cities and states, some of the pressure was removed. That year Murphy accepted appointment as high commissioner of the Philippines—a post in which he did much to help the Filipino people improve their conditions and move towards self-governing democracy.

Back to Detroit in 1936, he easily won election as governor of Michigan—an office he held during the great sitdown strikes of 1937, when auto workers — organized for the first time by CIO —sat down at their jobs to win recognition and improved conditions.

Again Murphy made himself unpopular with the big business interests; he refused to use the militia to drive thousands of workers out of the plants. Frank Murphy was looking for a fair and bloodless settlement of the dispute—and he flatly warned the people of Michigan that if they wanted someone to "shoot the workers out of the factories" they'd have to get another governor.

In 1938, Roosevelt appointed him attorney-general of the U. S., and he promptly resumed the war against corruption with indictments which led to the smashing of corrupt political machines in Kansas City and New Orleans.

ELEVATED TO the Supreme Court in 1940, Murphy proved once again that the nation's highest tribunal was no ivory tower above the battle between reaction and progress. As a Justice he voted invariably to protect the rights of individuals, while siding with the right of the government to control powerful economic forces that might work against the people's interest.

Thus Justice Murphy, though a Catholic, voiced the right of the Jehovah's Witnesses, an intensely anti-Catholic group, to freedom of speech and of religious practice. An intense foe of dictatorship, he voted as a member of a five-man majority to emphasize the right of a fascist speaker to voice his views.

Whitney Dies; Head of BRT

LABOR ALL over the world is mourning the death of Alexander Fell Whitney, president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen.

Whitney, who had spent the day working in his Cleveland office, died suddenly last week of a heart attack, He was 76 and had been considered to have been in excellent health.

The BRT board chose William Parker Kennedy, Canadian-born and a one-time brakeman, as Whitney's successor. Kennedy had been general secretary-treasurer. He will serve as president at least until Sept. 1950, when the BRT convention will elect officers.

A. F. (as he preferred to be called) Whitney headed 214,000 BRT members in 1145 lodges. On May 23, 1946, he and Alvanley Johnston, head of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, brought on a two-day national railway tieup when they refused to accept arbitration offers accepted by 18 other rail labor unions.

Pres. Truman then went to Congress and asked unsuccessfully for the right to draft railway strikers. Whitney and Truman split widely, but, last year, Whitney came to Truman's aid in the campaign and cooperated with PAC and the AFL in political action.

A. F. WHITNEY

Whitney began his rail career as a "candy butcher," selling fruit and candy from a basket on trains. He then became a brakeman.

His earliest recollection of becoming interested in unions was when railroads would fire him and then rehire him so they could avoid giving him the raise accruing to him because of service. In 1896, he joined the BRT at Eagle Grove, Iowa.

One of his surviving sons is Brig. Gen. Joseph L. Whitney of the Air Forces.

Memorial Fund

District 3 of the CIO Packinghouse Workers has set up a memorial fund honoring Lee Simon, late UPWA farm-labor relations director.

The fund, to be awarded each year, will go to the college senior writing the best essay on the health and working conditions of packinghouse workers. Simon, a member of the CIO Newspaper Guild, died early this year.

Vol. XII WASHINGTON, D. C., AUGUST 1, 1949 82 No. 3(

Steel Signs T-H Affidavits

THE CIO Steelworkers have reluctantly decided to sign the non-Communist affidavits of the Taft-Hartley Law.

When T-H was passed, Steel and CIO Pres. Philip Murray declared he would only sign the affidavits if directed to do so by his Steel board. He declared that his record as an anti-Communist was well known.

In deciding to sign the affidavits, the Steel board, meeting in New York, assailed the coalition which, in the 81st Congress, has refused to carry out the mandate given by the people last fall when they elected Pres. Truman and a Democratic Congress.

The union pledged "its entire membership under Pres. Murray's leadership to complete this undertaking" of eventually repealing T-H.

The board pointed out that the Steelworkers' constitution "provides that no member shall be eligible for nomination or election or appointment to, or to hold any office or position or to serve on any committee in the international union or a local union or to serve as a delegate therefrom who is a member, consistent supporter, or who actively participates in the activities of the Communist Party or of any Fascist, totalitarian or other subversive organization which opposes the democratic principles to which our nation and our union are dedicated."

Assailing the affidavits as "an unconstitutional invasion of the political freedom of unions, union members and union officials," the board directed "the international officers and such officers of the various local unions as may be designated by the international officers to file the non-Communist affidavits required by Section 9(h) of T-H."

The international officers all have filed their affidavits with the Government. The union had already filed the financial statements required under the act, despite the fact that the Steelworkers have for years made public financial statements.

THE OTHER CIO unions were in the news last week concerning affidavits. They were the Food and Tobacco Union and the Furniture Workers.

FTA officers voted to sign the affidavits. FTA Pres. Donald Henderson, a leader of the bloc which has opposed CIO policies at board meetings and elsewhere, then resigned and was named "National Administrative Director."

FTA Organization Dir. John Tisa became acting president, retaining his other post.

Henderson reiterated his opposition to CIO policy.

The Natl. Labor Relations Board voted 4-1 a policy statement that it is not compelled to judge the veracity of a properly-executed non-Communist oath. The action came in the case of Max Perlow, vice president of the Furniture Workers, who resigned from the Communist Party in order to sign the affidavit, but declared he still believes in the principles of the CP.

House Votes Anti-Poll Tax; Senate Action Unlikely

THE HOUSE last week, for the fifth time, passed a bill outlawing the payment of poll taxes as a prerequisite to voting.

The measure, first of Pres. Truman's civil rights aims to get by either chamber, won by a vote of 273 to 116. The latter vote included 92 Democrats and 24 Republicans.

The chances of the bill passing the Senate at this session are considered slim, in view of the Dixiegop victory in the drive by the Administration to change the Senate rules and eliminate cloture.

Filibusters by Dixiegoppers killed the poll tax bills in other Congresses.

Only seven states still have poll taxes—Alabama, Arkansas, Mississippi, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia. The recent Tennessee legislature virtually killed future payment of poll taxes, since it set up a permanent registration system. There are moves in South Carolina and Virginia to end the tax.

The debate on the issue was hotter than the heat which gripped Washington, D. C. Rep. John Rankin (D., Miss.) denounced the CIO and Pres. Philip Murray. Rep. Harry Davenport (D., Pa.) rebuked Rankin.

House Roll Call On Anti-Poll Tax Bill

*Following is the roll call by which the House of Representatives passed the anti-poll tax bill, 273-116. For the bill were 151 Democrats, 121 Republicans and one American Labor. Against were 92 Democrats and 24 Republicans. In the roll call, the symbol "R" means a right vote, in the CIO's opinion. "W" means a wrong vote; "PR" means paired right; "PW" means paired wrong; "G" means a general pair; "A" means absent; * means voting "present." Vote was on July 26, 1949.*

Murray Calls Steel Industry:

'Sanctimonious Racketeers... Provocateurs, Prevaricators'

By GLORIA CAPLAN

"THERE THEY sit over there, looking—holier than thou—the most sanctimonious band of racketeers I ever saw in my life—and I don't care whether you object or not!"

From a calm, deliberate, analytical beginning, CIO Steelworkers Pres. Philip Murray angrily concluded his first day's presentation before a Presidential fact-finding by hurling the above charge at steel industry representatives seated across the room from him.

The charge was stricken from the record when industry representatives objected to it. Then Murray suggested inserting the terms "provocateurs and prevaricators," which also were stricken from the record.

Murray then explained to the three-man board, meeting in New York, that a long chain of industry actions has ruffled his usually calm demeanor.

After a succession of company "noes" to union demands, stalling and doubletalk, there had been a statement by industry representatives after final bargaining talks attacking "the integrity of the president of this organization in the most nauseating fashion imaginable," Murray explained.

PHILIP MURRAY

As he arrived at the Court House in New York City.

"They were the first to indulge themselves in that kind of rot," he said. "So if I've said something here in a spirit intended to convey the impression I don't feel too good about them, I hope the board is not offended."

THE FIRST day's hearing was taken up by Murray, who presented the union's case for a wage increase, pensions and an insurance program, and by Arthur J. Goldberg, the union's general counsel, who discussed the legal and contractual obligations of the companies to bargain on pensions.

It was expected that the union would require a total of five or six days to present its case. Others expected to testify for the union were Robert Nathan, well known economist, Murray Latimer, authority on pensions, and Otis Brubaker, the steel union's research director.

The industry reported it planned 34 presentations to the board. Rebuttals would follow.

The union is asking for an immediate wage increase of 12½c an hour, 11.23c an hour set aside for pensions and 6.27c an hour for social insurance. This would mean a total outlay of 30c, or 23.36c if taxes were taken into consideration.

Murray traced the history of the industry's refusal to bargain in good faith since the 1930's, noted that it had led to the 1937 Memorial Day massacre at Republic Steel's South Chicago plant and implied that the industry's attitude had changed only slightly since then.

The steel industry, he said, could afford a wage increase of 30c, and by operating at 90% of capacity, still make a larger profit than in 1948.

While steel profits rose 3½ times, workers' real wages increased only 14% since 1939, he said.

"The conclusion obviously must be that the exorbitant profits extracted by the steel industry is at the steelworkers' expense as well as consumers," he said.

A TRACE OF disgust crept into Murray's voice as he noted that Board Chairman Irving S. Olds of Republic Steel, who opposed pensions for workers, will receive a $63,815 annual pension, and that U. S. Steel Pres. Ben Fairless will get an annual pension of $70,323.

"They're the industrial statesmen—they're the fellows who say it's nice for me to get it, but to hell with the other guys! Excuse the language," he said.

"The time has come for the industry to stop treating its machines better than its workers!"

(U. S. Steel pays 1/5c per hour per worker for insurance, he said.)

Goldberg cited case after case of court and NLRB decisions designating pensions and insurance as part of wages.

"The question I asked the steel companies is, 'Are you denying our right to say, 'Pay me a 30c increase, allocable as follows—15c now and 15c later'?" Goldberg said.

"I never did get an answer to that."

Labor's Pal

Rep. Walter Horan (R., Wash.), bitter opponent of public power and the Columbia River Valley bill, has emerged as one of labor's most vigorous "defenders."

On May 3, Horan found a new argument against CVA—it is "an anti-labor bill." Anti-labor, he says, because it "authorizes—buts does not require—the corporation to bargain collectively with its laborers."

(Actually, no federal bill requires the government to bargain collectively, and this is one of the few which specifically authorizes the proposed authority to do so.)

In the Congressional Record of the same day there appeared Horan's vote in favor of strongly anti-labor Wood bill.

Wins High Post

Jacob Friedes, grievance director, Local 20, CIO Public Workers, was elected to the highest elective position a federal civil service employe can attain by a near 4 to 1 vote at the Veterans Administration District Office, New York.

Friedes was elected as employe representative to the Efficiency Rating Board of Review which has jurisdiction over approximately 1400 Federal Civil Service Employes.

Friedes captured 508 votes, a plurality of 370 votes over the next candidate, Anthony Polito, of the American Federation of Government Employes Lodge.

Gausmann To ECA

Appointment of William G. Gausmann as labor information officer for the United Kingdom ECA Mission has been announced by Administrator Paul G. Hoffman.

Since January 1948, Gausmann has been editor of Labor Press Associates, a news service for trade-union papers. He is one of three labor editors who recently toured Marshall Plan countries to observe the effects of the European Recovery Program. He is a member of the CIO Newspaper Guild.

Fights Excise Taxes

Rep. Abraham Multer (D., N. Y.), has urged Congressmen to sign a petition, No. 6, to discharge the Ways and Means Committee from further consideration of his bill, HR 2324, in order to bring it before the House for consideration.

The bill repeals wartime excise taxes upon retail sales of furs, jewelry, cosmetics and luggage.

"Explain to me again, dear, about inflation—can you give me a concrete example?"

Labor Dept. Sets New Steel Minimum Under Walsh-Healey Over Loud Protests Of Industry Spokesmen

STEEL manufacturers who want to sell their products to the government won't be able to beat competitors out hereafter by paying cut-throat wages.

Under a new determination by the U. S. Dept. of Labor, steel and iron manufacturers working on government contracts will have to pay minimum wages of $1.23 an hour in the Northeast, mountain and Pacific Coast states, $1.19 in the seven mid-western states west of the Mississippi River—plus East St. Louis, Ill.—and $1.08½ an hour in the Southern states.

The new rates, issued under the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act, replace outdated minimums of 45c to 62½c an hour, set 10 years ago.

The Walsh-Healey Act requires the Secretary of Labor to determine the minimum wage to be paid for work on government contracts. That rate must be the minimum prevailing in the industry in the area. The Labor Dept. is now amending these minimums for the first time in 10 years. Of the five new determinations made so far, steel is the highest. The woolen and worsted industry is next with a $1.05 minimum.

WITH ONLY minor differences, the new Walsh-Healey minimums for steel are the figures requested by the CIO Steelworkers.

Industry representatives fought the higher minimum, claiming that under present economic conditions, it would injure the industry, that extensive unionization in the industry made it unnecessary, that it would hurt "small business."

The industry, however, did not question the union's data demonstrating the prevailing minimum wages.

Said the Labor Dept. in its determination: "These data were not seriously questioned at the hearing and it may be assumed in the main that they accurately reflect the true conditions in the industry."

The Labor Dept. concluded that the industry's arguments "must be considered as being without sufficient merit to warrant withholding the issuance of an amendment to the existing determination for the iron and steel industry."

COMMENTED Philip Murray, CIO and Steelworkers' president:

"Secy. of Labor Maurice Tobin is to be congratulated for his statesmanlike action in fixing new prevailing minimum wages in the iron and steel industry. The Secretary's action carries out the purposes of the law, namely, to forestall possible government support of employers who pay substandard wages.

"The last determination made for the industry under the Walsh-Healey Act was in 1939—a few years after the organization of the Union. At that time, minimum rates established varied from 45c per hour for common labor in the South to 62½c per hour in the Northeastern and North Central states. The union can justly claim credit for the substantial gains since 1939."

That Tax Again!

After the House of Representatives last week had finished voting on a certain measure we said to ourselves:

"That's not new, that's the way it was eight years ago—and six years ago—and four years ago—and two years ago."

In fact, we said, it's getting a bit monotonous and we hope it will not have the same ending this year.

The thing which prompted all this talking to ourselves was passage by the house—for the fifth time in 10 years—of a measure outlawing the poll tax as a prerequisite for voting.

On four of these occasions the Senate refused to follow the lead of the lower chamber.

An important matter of states' rights is involved, according to those Senators who have bitterly assailed federal poll tax action.

Maybe so, but there's an even more important matter involved—and that's a matter of democracy.

Frankly, we don't give a hang about the process used to get rid of the poll tax bar to fuller participation in elections. If Congress does it, it's OK with us—and it's OK with us, too, if the states do the job.

At the speed with which some states are moving, however, many of our young voters will die of old age before they can vote free—unless the Senate reverses its previous position.

Indications are that there will be no reversal this session unless a lot of the folks back home—and elsewhere—build a lot of hot fires under their Senators.

Arguments Are Old And Phony

Every time the poll tax issue comes up in Congress the anti-repealers trot out the same old arguments — and they're just as phony today as they were when given their first airing on Capitol Hill.

One of their principal arguments goes this way:

"The states have a right to determine the manner in which their representatives in Congress are chosen."

In theory that may sound reasonable, but in practice such a rule places too much power in the hands of too few people.

As the situation now stands, 51 of the 96 Senators come from regions of the country which contain only 17% of its population.

And, furthermore, some of the individual Congressmen in non-poll tax states are elected by 20 times as many votes as are cast for winning Congressmen in some of the poll tax states.

Yet when it comes to enacting legislation for the entire nation, one vote in Congress counts for just as much as any other vote.

The poll tax is used successfully to limit voting, and let's make no mistake about it.

The tax is discriminatory because it is used to discourage voting among groups within the lower income brackets.

It is used to manipulate elections; political machines with money can "buy" elections through the purchase and distribution of poll tax receipts.

In some regions the poll tax is used effectively to keep Negroes from the polls.

The matter of poll tax repeal is one of interest to the entire nation. Those who question this should remember that the Southern end of the Dixiegop coalition is resting firmly in the poll tax camp.

Commies Practice 'Thought Control'

Party-Liners Expected To Carry Out Policies They Don't Help Make

By ALLAN L. SWIM

FOR A dozen or more years I've been slugging it out with the Commies at various spots around the country and not once during that time did I ever hear one of them criticize Russian policy.

This in itself is nothing short of amazing—and it's important, too, because it illustrates the blind allegiance of party-liners to policies which they do not help determine.

For all practical purposes, the Communist Party practices the "thought control" which the lefties always profess to hate.

As a result, a good party member can swing from one side of a fence to another at a minute's notice without any pangs of conscience.

The method of handling those who won't willingly follow the twisting party line is simple. They're kicked out of the party.

FOR YEARS the American Commies have been trying to sell industrial workers and others the phony idea that communism and democracy are synonymous.

They're strong advocates of the democratic processes as long as they can use them to their own advantage. They're particularly fond of the right of free speech because it provides them with an opportunity to undermine democratic freedom.

They never explain to those they're seeking to convert that the Communist Party has an all-powerful "high command" composed of the 14-member Politburo and the 72-member Central Committee.

When the Politburo and Central Committee say "frog," Commies all over the world jump.

And if they don't jump in the right direction at the right time—without asking questions—they're through as party members.

MANY PERSONS believed until shortly after the end of the last war that the Communists were an asset to the American labor movement.

Their militancy and their willingness to do the "dirty" jobs around union headquarters—such as turning out leaflets late at night—impressed those who didn't know the score.

It wasn't unusual to hear a good, solid America say, "I don't approve of that guy's politics, but he's really a good unionist. He never misses a meeting and he'll take any committee assignment he's given."

It wasn't until U. S. and Soviet policies clashed that many persons began to realize that the Comies sought not to aid but to completely capture the labor movement.

They sought to make the CIO their chief base of operations in this country.

THE CIO has done a lot of housecleaning during the past couple of years—and there will be some more of it between now and the end of 1949.

It's safe to predict that the lefties will get the beating of their lives at the CIO's Cleveland convention this fall. The Commies know this—know they're on their way out as a factor in determining trade union policy in the U. S.

However, that doesn't keep them from doing all the damage they can. It doesn't keep them from engaging in slander and the thing at which they're most adept—character assassination.

And the amusing thing is that they're screaming loudest about something they claim to champion but do not practice—democratic action.

MORE LIGHT and less heat is needed in dealing with the party-liners in the labor movement and elsewhere.

Their own record condemns them—so let's look at the record more often.

The Communist Party of the U. S. is not "just another political party." It is a branch of an international organization operated with an iron hand in Russia by the 84 persons who make up the Politburo and the Central Committee.

The fact that there's no democracy within party ranks certainly doesn't equip the Commies as champions of democratic action.

Their record since the end of the war has been completely bad. There is no place for them in the labor movement as long as they're subservient to the Commie "high command."

TVA Projects Here To Stay -- Smith

PUBLIC enterprises such as the spectacular and successful Tennessee Valley Authority are here to stay and more of them are on the way, Anthony W. Smith said last week in an address at the University of Michigan.

"TVA is significant as our first experiment in integrated regional development," Smith stated in his talk on the Role of Government in Resource Conservation, the sixth of a series of summer lectures on Natural Resources in World Affairs.

Smith, assistant director of the National CIO's Dept. of Industrial Union Councils, is an authority on conservation of natural resources, and represents the CIO on matters dealing with the subject.

In summing up the lessons of TVA, Smith made these points:

1. Similar agencies in other areas should be developed and given complete and exclusive jurisdiction over the construction and operation of all facilities on the river, including flood control structures, hydro-power dams and distribution lines, irrigation facilities and navigation.

2. Valley authorities should be held strictly accountable for developing and operating their river facilities in a way that will conserve the other resources of the region such as forests, soil, game, fish, etc.

3. The authorities should be given the power and required to make their own positive and independent contribution to the protection and development of these related resources, through economic and technical assistance for soil, forest and wildlife conservation.

4. Our regional management must relate itself to sound social objectives such as the decentralization and diversification of industries and cities.

"This means extensive public control over private enterprise," Smith said, "but control in a field in which private business has shown its unwillingness or inability to respect the public good."

In his discussion on the waste of our forests and soil and the need for a sound program to prevent this, Smith said that "it is part of our American folk-lore that every citizen is free to go to hell in his own particular way, but I think we are getting tired of the notion that he is entitled to drag the rest of the country with him."

He warned that "unless action is taken on both forests and soil, this Republic is open to serious assault from within and without. Our timber resources as they stand are probably not sufficient to enable us to fight another war."

"The American people have the ability to work together democratically through their government," he declared in conclusion. "We ought to roll up our sleeves and get to work along that line."

"Jarvis, I said I wanted steel, s-t-e-e-l!"

He Rode Mighty High, And Then --

YOU SPEND months looking for the solution to a mystery and then—sometimes—somebody hands it to you on a silver platter, so to speak.

That's the way it was in the case of Congressman X, whose name used to be carried frequently in headlines throughout the country.

The story is revealed here because two old friends who formerly worked closely with each other many miles from Washington got together for lunch the other day at one of the capital's famous old restaurants.

After transacting a little piece of political business the two began engaging in one of those "Say, what happened to _____?"

Finally—Congressman X was brought into the conversation.

SAID ONE friend to the other, "I'll bet you'd be interested in the story Congressman X told me right here in this restaurant just before he retired from public life.

"The story has an important labor angle to it."

"I'd sure like to hear it," replied the other.

But before we get to the story let's review a bit of the record of Congressman X.

He came to Washington without a lot of fanfare and was generally considered just an ordinary cog in a big legislative machine until appointed head of a new committee the House established.

This assignment proved to be the springboard to notoriety.

CONGRESSMAN X soon learned that there's nothing like a sensational investigation to get your name in the headlines.

The fact that some of his investigations backfired didn't seem to bother the Congressman. He went right ahead, and he seemed to be in his glory when he put on the pan persons with well known names.

Champions of civil right became annoyed and then angered by the Congressman's behavior. They charged he was a disgrace to the House.

Among the groups which disliked Congressman X most were the trade unions.

DOMESTIC investigations lost their headline appeal after the Jap attack at Pearl Harbor.

This meant Congressman X was no longer in the limelight. He, like almost everybody else, pitched in to help win the war.

He knew his way around Washington and he knew how to pull strings that counted. And he pulled them.

He was credited with playing a leading role in obtaining a large number of wartime industries for his state, which was a good position to handle them.

Later Congressman X announced he was ill and would not run for re-election.

CONGRESSMAN X, said the man telling the story at the restaurant, "told me he wasn't going to run for office again because he cut his own political throat with his war activities.

"Where war industries were located there were many workers—and where there were a lot of workers there were trade unions.

"The unions didn't like the Congressman and he knew it. He figured he'd be defeated if he ran for re-election—defeated by the unions for which he was indirectly responsible. So he retired."

And that, one old friend told another, was why Martin Dies of Texas, once chairman of the House un-American Activities Committee, returned to private life.—A. L. S.

DON'T LOOK NOW -- BUT!

Bowles' Headaches As Governor

BEING THE liberal governor of an important state is no bed of roses.

Chester Bowles, former OPA administrator, stepped into the governorship of Connecticut last November by a margin of 2225 votes. He's been working hard ever since—and in a recent issue of the New York Times Magazine, he looks back on six months in office. They've been pretty hectic.

Chester Bowles has had three major problems:

1. He's a Democrat; the state Senate is Democratic; but the state House, giving heavier representation to small towns than to large cities, is staunchly Republican.

2. A lot of conservatives who complain against the federal government's acting in the people's interest, say such matters should be left to the states. But in Connecticut, they're equally opposed to the state's taking action, either.

3. Connecticut's state machinery looks like something created by Rube Goldberg. Bowles found he had 108 state agencies, and more than 800 administrative officials directly responsible to him. In addition, 16 of his chief commissioners were Republicans, hold-overs from the days when the GOP controlled the state lock, stock and barrel.

"While many of them are able men, I sometimes feel that this is rather like trying to run General Motors with a board of directors provided by Chrysler," Bowles commented in the Times article.

But the basic difficulty for a Democrat in the Connecticut state house is the "rotten borough system."

"Under this system," Governor Bowles writes, "every town, however small, which was incorporated before 1850, can send two representatives to the House. Since in Connecticut almost all the small towns have been overwhelmingly Republican since the Civil War, and since they vastly outnumber the cities, the House always has a guaranteed Republican majority.

"LET ME give you an example . . . Connecticut's five biggest cities have roughly 35% of the population, but of our representatives to the lower House, they elect less than 3% . . .

"The two representatives from Hartford, which has a population of around 170,000, can be outvoted two to one (and usually are) by the two Republican representatives from Union, which has a population of 290, plus the two representatives from Colebrook, with a population of 620 . . .

"When the Republican party loses a Connecticut state election, its leaders know in advance that they can retreat into their fortress in the House of Representatives and fight harassing guerrilla warfare from this impregnable position."

Chester Bowles is a man who doesn't like too much centralization of government in Washington.

"Critics of liberal government," Bowles wrote, lash out at centralized authority in Washington. They "use this argument as a means of killing off progressive proposals, such as social security and public housing.

"The fact that they fight such proposals just as hard on the state as on the federal level, makes me suspect that their real objection is not to centralized federal power but to liberal legislation, wherever it may be proposed."

"OBVIOUSLY we can't accept the suggestions of the conservatives that we solve the dilemma by the simple expedient of ignoring the problems themselves," Bowles continues. The states must settle down to accept their share of the job—but with the best of will they can't handle the problem, he says, "unless their democratic machinery is geared to represent accurately the will and intent of that citizenry."

Bowles is settling down to do that job, and he's made considerable progress. But it's a job, he quickly adds, that "requires patience—and the understanding that clean, competent liberal government cannot be achieved overnight, in Connecticut or anywhere else."

Oil Union Hero

Hammond, Ind., mmbers of CIO Oil Workers Local 210 are hailing OWIU charter member Herb Owens as a hero.

Owens was on duty with a cleanout crew at the Cities Service East Chicago refinery. Stanley Rokowski, an AFL insulator working for Magnesia Metals Co. on a contract job at the plant, fell from the furnace platform and was lying on the ground under a wall of flames, suffering from a compound fracture of his right ankle.

Owens, disregarding his own safety, rolled under the flames and pulled Rokowski to safety.

Plenty To Learn At CIO Schools

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

IT WAS A peaceful and lovely spot at New Windsor, Md., where one of the CIO's six regional summer schools was held the week ending July 23.

Some 40 students, guests and members of the staff brought chairs out of the classroom after supper and sat around in a semicircle on the smooth green lawn, talking quietly as they waited for Ben Stong of the Farmers Union, guest speaker of the evening, to give his talk on the need for mutual understanding between farm and labor people.

One of the most interesting things about CIO schools is that the students make up a cross section of workers in outstanding industries in a given area.

The New Windsor school was typical in this respect. The students there were a varied group, representing unions in many of the big mass production industries in the four-state area from which they came.

There were glass, chemical, utility and clothing workers from West Virginia; steel, paper, brewery and electrical workers from Pennsylvania; dock, paper, steel and wood workers from Virginia; telephone, paper and other workers from Maryland.

IT SEEMED strange, in the cool, tranquil atmosphere of the Church of the Brethren Center where the school was held, to listen to stories of the hot, noisy plants, shops and docks where the students spend their working days.

Jobs such as that described by Gordon Hoffman, furnaceman at the Electro-Metallurgical unit of the Carbide & Carbon Co. at Boomer, W. Va., where the intense heat sometimes seemed about to melt a man down along with the metal alloy, were hard to realize as you sat in cool comfort under the great century-old trees on the campus lawn.

But it wasn't the heat on the job so much as the fear of unemployment that bothered Hoffman. He said that two months ago about 700 of the plant's workers were laid off and still haven't been called back. Hoffman, who is married and has two small children, has worked at the plant for 10 years. He is a member of Local 89, Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers.

Then there was Melvin Scott, member of Longshoremen's Local 978. He works as a trimmer, loading coal on the Virginia Coal Pier at Norfolk, Va., a hard and dirty job. His chief worry was short work. He said that for the last six months he hasn't worked more than 16 hours a week.

One of the women students, young and pretty Jane Wright, member of Paper Workers Local 693, who works at an envelope manufacturing plant in Richmond, Va., told of speedup and layoffs, particularly among older women.

Mrs. Hazel Shaffer, member of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers Local 347, Morgantown, W. Va., said she had worked in the same clothing shop for 19 years.

WILLIAM GROSS, Paper Workers Local 111, also had a record for long employment, having worked as a linotype operator for the Afro-American newspaper in Baltimore, Md., for 23 years.

D. A. Cavallaro, secretary-treasurer of Shipbulding Workers Local 1044 in Clarksburg, W. Va., who is now employed in a State liquor store, held the age record among the students. He came to America from Italy in 1899 when he was 18.

Cavallaro, who has six grown children, three of them married, spoke with great pride of his life in America and of his union.

These are a few of the students of diversified race, nationality, age and jobs who attended the New Windsor school. The anti-discrimination policy of the Brethren Center, which the organization believes in living up to, made it possible for Negro and white members to room, eat and study together, as they do at other CIO schools.

STAFF MEMBERS at the Maryland school included George Guernsey, Stuart Brock, Jane Mandel, Frank Fernbach (USA-CIO) and Carla Meyerson, all from the National CIO office; Nat Goldfinger, research and education director for the Paper Workers; Harry Boyer, Pennsylvania CIO president; Brownie Lee Jones, Southern School for Workers; Henry Shipherd, Philadelphia, PAC; Harry Shugaar, National Labor Service, and Paul Swaity, Labor Education Project, St. Louis, Mo.

Max Kampelman, assistant to Sen. Hubert Humphrey, and Stong were the visiting speakers.

THREE OF THE CIO's regional summer schools have now been held. Two midwestern area schools, were also held earlier, one at Boone, Iowa, June 5-11, and another, run in cooperation with the Indiana and Kentucky CIO Council, at the University of Indiana, July 24-30.

Coming up in August are three more to be held in Wisconsin, Missouri and Colorado.

A large number of other summer schools sponsored by CIO internationals and state councils all over the country, brings this year's list of CIO institutes and education conferences up to more than 50.

The CIO's two largest unions, the Steelworkers and the Auto Workers, lead in the number of schools scheduled. The USA has arranged for 15 one-week special summer programs held in cooperation with universities and colleges, members of whose faculty serve as instructors.

Schools sponsored by USA were held earlier this summer at Columbus, Ohio; at the Universities of Indiana, Utah, and Kansas; three at Penn State College, and at Rhode Island State College. A number of others are coming and September.

Dir. Stanley Ruttenberg of the National CIO Education and Research Dept. and Guernsey estimate that the total number of CIO members attending summer schools this year will run well above 5000.

All phases of union activity are covered in courses, workshops, and discussions held at the CIO schools. Methods of political action are also stressed at most of the summer courses, in anticipation of labor's concern with the 1950 elections.

Slap On Wrist

Wisconsin's Supreme Court found Senator Joseph R. McCarthy (R. Wis.) guilty of violating his "solemn promise to support the constitution," yet turned down a petition of the state board of bar examiners to have McCarthy disbarred from practising law.

In a bitter 1946 campaign, McCarthy nosed out Senator Robert M. LaFollette Jr. for the Republican nomination to the US Senate. He conducted the campaign while serving as a state judge. In doing so, he violated his oath of office, which required him to resign from the bench while running for Senator, the board of bar examiners pointed out.

Utility Lobby Perils Public Power

By GLORIA CAPLAN

ONE OF THE neatest squeezeplays in a long time took place on Capitol Hill about two weeks ago while most of the audience had its back turned.

A simple pass from the hefty private utilities lobby to a Senate Appropriations sub-ocmmittee to the full commitete—and, almost before the full committee itself knew it, the public was out—at least for the time being.

If Congress okays the play, it will mean just one thing: the government hereafter will be building and operating giant dams and power stations for the exclusive benefit of the already-fat private utility companies. This is a bonanza the utilities have been fighting for years to get their hands on.

By the simple expedient of knocking $20 million out of the Interior Dept's. appropriation—in strategic spots—the sub-committee succeeded in handing over to a not-too-wakeful full committee a bill right out of the utility lobby's mold. Without scrutinizing the bill too closely, the full committee approved it in one night.

Members of the sub-committee were: Sens. Hayden (D., Ariz.), Thomas (D., Okla.), O'Mahoney (D., Wyo.), McCarran (D., Nev.), Chavez (D., N. Mex.), McKellar (D., Tenn.), Ellender (D., La.), Wherry (R., Neb.), Gurney (R., S. Dak.), Cordon (R., Ore.), Reed (R., Kan.) and Young (R., N. Dak.). Leaders of the assault were Thomas and McKellar The latter has perennially kept his knife sharp against the Tennessee Valley Authority.

The Interior appropriation had already been approved by the House as requested by the department.

AFTER hearing the utility companies' witnesses, the Senate sub-committee did some whittling where the companies said it would do them the most good.

In effect, the committee's action would prohibit the government from selling its own power to anybody except private utilities. Most of the money knocked out of the bill was for the construction of transmission lines.

The battle over these transmission lines is the core of the current battle between the government and the private utilities.

Originally, the utilities used every weapon at their command to prevent the government from building multi - purpose dams. When this battle proved futile, and when they realized what a boon the dams could be to them, they aimed their guns elsewhere.

Now the power lobby's energy is concentrated almost entirely on blocking government construction of transmission lines which would carry the power from the power station near the dam to the community.

The utility companies' idea is to let the government spend millions for construction of a costly dam and generators, power from which would then be turned over lock, stock and barrel to the private companies.

IT IS EASY to see the result of such practices. The government is required by law to market and distribute the power in the public interest—make the power available as widely as possible and as cheaply as possible. When the government operates its own transmission lines, this is a sample process. But when a private company has the monopoly, it can sell to whomever it pleases—and very often it doesn't please.

GENERATORS AT TVA PICKWICK LANDING DAM

Furthermore, it is difficult—practically impossible — for the government to ascertain whether the company is charging fair rates or not. When a private concern "hooks on to" a government power station, it is obviously obtaining power at a tremendous saving. Under the government contract, the company is required to pass the saving onto the consumer.

However, extremely complicated bookkeeping makes it virtually impossible for the anyone to know whether the rates are "fair" or not. One such study by the government—to determine fairness of a company's rates—has been in process 10 years—and is not yet completed. Meanwhile, consumers are paying rates believed to be excessive.

A still further objection to the "busbar" contract—one which permits the private company to hook its transmission line to the government generator—is that private utilities seldom build lines large enough to carry the dam's full power capacity. Thus much of the project's potential is wasted.

The big gap between the government's philosophy of power and that of the private interests is responsible for another disadvantage of private transmission lines. The government, when it markets the power, operates on the theory that its duty is not only to satisfy a demand economically and efficiently—but that its duty is to stimulate demand.

Thus, the Tennessee Valley Authority, for instance, brought power to the people before there was an accumuated demand. Once the lines were brought to the community, hundreds of farmers—who never before envisioned the "luxury" of electricity in their own homes, or of owning electrical appliances and machinery—found it within their means.

Industries, which would never otherwise have considered locating in the area, came, when they learned cheap power was available. The government had taken the lead, and people clamored for electricity. The area prospered.

PRIVATE companies operate just the opposite. They usually build only after the demand has accumulated and often they remain so far behind, that there is usually a shortage. No risk is involved in such operations, as a result, and areas are prevented from growing and industrializing at a rate that otherwise would have been possible.

Small wonder, then, that the power lobby fought doggedly to have even the faintest aroma of government transmission lines erased from the appropriation bill. Here are examples of how closely the Senate Appropriations Committee heeded the utilities' pleas:

In testimony before the Senate sub-committee:

• Langston Ashford, representing the Arkansas-Missouri Co., said:

"The particular appropriation which we oppose is one for $3,-169,000 to build a 154-kilovolt line from Norfolk Dam to Essex, Mo."

Request granted.

The Facts

Here is why the people want public power—and why the private utilities don't:

ELECTRICITY RATES

City	Residential rate per 100 kwh	Industiral rate per 100,000 kwh
BOSTON (private power)	$4.92	$1912
ATLANTA (private power)	3.10	1371
CHATTANOOGA (Public power)	2.50	1010
TACOMA, Wash. (Public power)	1.70	635

• D. C. McKee, president, Empire District Electric Co.:

"My appearance here today is in opposition to the proposed transmission lines requested by the Southwestern Power Administration, and particularly I am appearing in opposition to a $10 million expenditure out of the total of $30 million proposed to build the proposed lines designated in the Administrator's report as the Missouri group."

All Missouri items eliminated.

• Hamilton Moses, president of the Arkansas Power & Light Co., inserted in the hearings record some tables showing what the power companies thought the bill should permit and prohibit.

All suggestions followed exactly in bill except for two small appropriations for substations opposed by the companies.

• "The requests for funds for these lines (Shasta, Tracy, West Side) should be denied again."

They were deleted.

• Kinsey M. Robinson, president, Washington Water Power Co.:

"I want to object to the . . . Kerr to Anaconda Mont., transmission line . . ."

The committee cooperated.

There will be a lot of Senators, including many Southerners who have learned the value of public power from TVA, who'll be fighting tooth and nail to patch the bill up when it reaches the floor.

And when the bill gets to a House-Senate conference committee, the Senate "surgeons" will have some angry Congressmen to cope with.

One will be Rep. Mike Kirwan (D., Ohio), who has waged a determined fight for public power.

The power lobby has powerful friends in Congress, and it has a lot of money. Aside from McKellar, already mentioned, there is, for instance, Rep. William M. Whittington (D., Miss.), who is president of the Mississippi Flood Control Association, a lobby for contractors; vice-president of the Nat. Rivers & Harbors Congress, a registered lobby whose purpose is to fight MVA and CVA; and holds down at the same time the position of chairman of the House Public Works Committee.

There is a severe national shortage of electric power.

• Last winter the Pacific Northwest saved its power link from complete breakdown by voluntary rationing—after the companies had refused new customers, cut off power for heating homes, and cut down power to existing plants, while refusing it to proposed new industries.

• Last winter the largest electric company in upstate New York had to cut major users by 15%.

• Last winter 72 million pounds of aluminum were lost and half a plant was idle all year in Arkan- 10 to 20% power cuts; factories sas for lack of power.

• All last winter, California had daylight time; sometimes irrigation pumps had to be cut off for lack of power.

• Many areas are losing industry and suffering severe unemployment today because power is either insufficient or too expensive.

We can thank the powerful power lobby and its friends in Congress for all those unnecessary hardships.

CIO members throughout the country are availing themselves in ever greater numbers of the new CARE "Thrift Package" in aiding their friends and relatives abroad, it was announced by Leo Perlis, executive director of the CIO Community Services Committee.

He has made a general check-up of recent CIO contributions to the far-reaching aid program to needy trade unionists abroad carried on by the CIO-CSC.

Reductions in wholesale food prices have enabled CARE to offer this new package for guaranteed delivery in 11 European countries at the price of $5.50. CARE will continue to carry its big 22½-pound $10 food parcel, which was recently increased in content value, Perlis stressed.

In addition, however, he pointed out "the new CARE 'Thrift Package' makes it easier for American workers who are now beginning to feel the temporary recession in their own take-home pay, to continue their individual aid work either in the form of contributions to the CIO-CSC or in form of a package sent to a designated address."

Like CARE's other food and textile packages, the CARE $5.50 "Thrift Package" can be ordered for guaranteed delivery in Austria, Belgium, Czechoslovakia, Finland, France, Great Britain, Greece, the Western Zones of Germany and all of Berlin, Italy, the Netherlands and Norway, either through any CIO local union, through the CIO Community Services Committee, 1776 Broadway, New York 19, or directly through the CIO Consultant, Labor Section, CARE, (Cooperative for American Remittances to Europe, Inc.,) 20 Broad Street, New York 5.

Harry Bridges:

Ignores CIO Policy, Takes WFTU Post

THE CIO Executive Board, meeting in Washington in May, adopted an international labor resolution which stated this clear policy:

"The board, having heard a full account of World Federation of Trade Unions developments, indorses the action of its delegation to the WFTU executive bureau and hereby formally announces the disaffiliation of CIO from WFTU.

"Consequently, it shall be contrary to CIO policy for any affiliate, officer or executive board member of the CIO to have organizational relationship to the WFTU or any of its agencies."

Despite the clarity of that language, Harry Bridges, president of the CIO Longshoremen's union, accepted the presidency of the WFTU's newly created Intl. Union of Seamen and Dockers. Immediately after that was announced, the CIO Marine Cooks and Stewards joined the outfit.

Bridges, who is under indictment on charges that he perjured himself in declaring he had never been a member of the Communist Party, did not attend the WFTU meeting in Marseilles, because the U. S. Government denied him a visa.

However, he accepted the new post most gratefully.

P.S.—He is a member of the CIO Executive Board.

HARRY BRIDGES BEFORE SENATE COMMITTEE

THE U. S. Government isn't the only one with whom Bridges is having an argument. At a meeting of his own ILWU local—10 in San Francisco—he moved and won support of the meeting that the California edition of the CIO News be barred from the local's meetings.

Said Bridges in his motion:

"Moved, that we condemn this sheet as disruptive and purveyor of false information and go on record against distribution of it within union meetings."

In a speech, Bridges said that the California edition "never in any way supports the union" and is "consistently working against the interests of the Longshoremen and its elected leadership."

William A. Millis, longtime leader in the CIO Newspaper Guild and editor of the California edition, wrote Bridges "I wish to protest emphatically this latest attempt to suppress the edition—a newspaper which has upheld and promoted the economic interests of all CIO affiliates in its year of publication—and to request that this letter be referred to the membership of Local 10 for their consideration."

The California State CIO, which has refused to follow CIO policy, also banned the edition from its convention.

Millis sent Bridges two sets of clippings from the edition. "The first clippings are from last fall, and should serve to refresh your memory on how the CIO, its national and regional officers and the edition were of considerable assistance to the striking members of ILWU and other maritime unions," Millis pointed out.

He also showed Bridges some instances of the edition's support of ILWU:

- A story listing CIO Pres. Philip Murray's "full and official support" to the maritime union. That indorsement was echoed by the California National CIO-PAC, which follows CIO policy, and by Northern California CIO Reg. Dir. Tim Flynn:

(Flynn was named to his post after Murray removed Bridges from it for refusing to adhere to the CIO policy he was pledged to follow.)

- Another story quoting Flynn as accusing the waterfront employers of refusing to bargain and seeking to break the unions. Flynn declared "the CIO—the entire CIO—will give these workers all the support we possibly can."
- An item stating that the California Natl. CIO-PAC had given full support to the maritime unions at the same time it pledged aid to the Oil Workers—who follow CIO policy—also on strike.
- An item stating that the employers had refused an ILWU offer to work Army cargoes.
- A story which began "The U. S. Army's effort to break the strike was abruptly halted after Murray appealed to Secy. of the Army Royall."
- An appeal from Flynn to waterfront employers to begin bargaining immediately with the union's duly elected officers. (The employers were demanding that Bridges get out of the picture.)
- The news that CIO Vice Pres. and Organizational Dir. Allan S. Haywood and his assistant, R. J. Thomas, had joined in the reopened negotiations and that the CIO was prepared to underwrite the coast longshore contract.

"This demonstrates," Millis wrote, "that the edition consistently supported the interests of the members of your organization during the tough strike."

The second set of clippings were for the period of the last three months, after Millis had been named editor of the paper. They proved that the edition had given support to the ILWU.

MILLIS WENT on: "The truth and accuracy of these reports and of all news stories in the edition, have never been challenged. I believe they demonstrate convincingly to all fair-minded members of Local 10 that the edition consistently has published reports supporting the trade union interests of members of the ILWU, just as it has done for all affiliates of the CIO.

"Naturally, I can understand that the international president of your organization, disagreeing violently with the actions and policies of CIO, would seek to suppress any newspaper which truthfully reported such developments to CIO members in California.

"Such an attempt to suppress the edition was made at the international convention of your organization, and now, with phony charges, it has been continued in your local union.

"The record of the CIO News of supporting the legitimate union interests of all members of CIO, entirely apart from the political interests of some of its officers, is detailed in the clippings.

"That record I am ready to present to any impartial investigating committee of qualified newspapermen to judge the accuracy of the serious charges which, by the action of the Local 10 membership meeting, have been directed not only against the edition, but against the CIO."

The incident followed soon after the Los Angeles CIO Council and the California Natl. CIO-PAC declared that there was no civil liberties issue in the indictment of Bridges.

Aids Workers In Congress

HE'S PROUD of the fact he used to be president of a CIO Auto Workers' local—and doesn't hesitate to tell you so.

He's Rep. James V. Buckley (D. Ill.). For three years, he was head of Local 714, UAW, which represents the General American Transportation Workers, Chicago, makers of busses.

He recalls his many meetings with UAW Pres. Walter Reuther and UAW Reg. Dir. Pat Greathouse and is extremely happy over their reelection at the UAW convention.

Buckley has been both an employer of union labor and a union man. For years, Buckley Bros. built low-cost housing in Chicago. "We never had a strike and had perfect relations with union construction men," Buckley recalls. When the war came, house-building fell off almost to a zero, so Buckley decided he could help his country by working in a plant. As soon as he started, he joined UAW and became an officer shortly thereafter.

Rep. J. V. BUCKLEY

Because of his background, it is not surprising that one of his interests in the House is the question of pay and working conditions for federal employes.

As a member of the Committee on Post Office and the Civil Service, he also is promoting bills that would do these things:

A. Give veterans of World War II benefits identical with those extended to veterans of War I in the postal service. These would give credit for military service time in determining postal salaries.

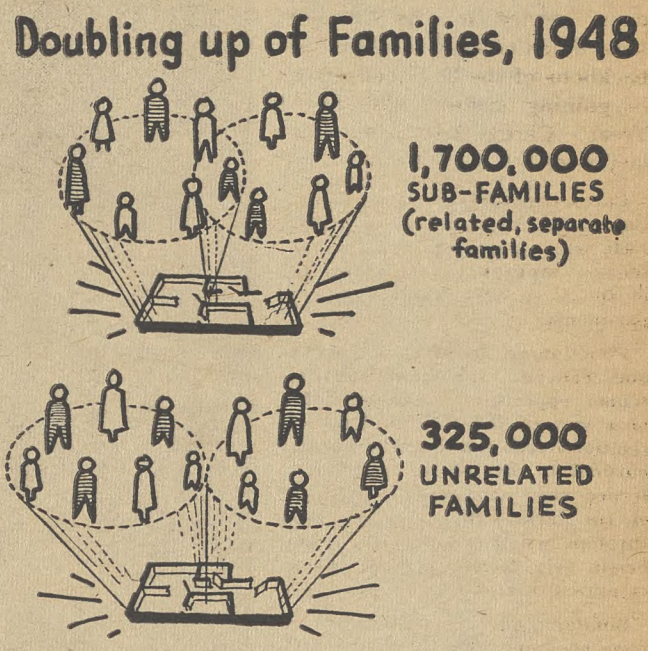
B. Amendments to the existing Federal and Postal Employes' Classification Acts, removing present inequities and correcting certain injustices which have risen as a result of previous legislation.

"I favor this legislation and will do everything possible to cause its Early enactment," Buckley pledged in a speech to the House.

"Are you through fitting that dress on me, dear?"

CIO Spokesmen Say:

Middle Groups Hit By Housing Costs



These cartoons, drawn for Economic Outlook by Guernsey-Montgomery, depict the plight of middle groups seeking housing.

IF THE country's housing industry did as good a job building homes as its lobby does in holding up needed legislation, the country wouldn't still be plagued by a shortage of dwellings.

The Senate Banking Committee last week heard two CIO representatives urging support of a new "middle income" housing bill. The CIO spokesmen were Leo Goodman, director of the CIO Housing Committee, and John Edelman, Washington representative of the Textile Workers.

The CIO Research & Education Dept. publication, "Economic Outlook," also warned of the perilous state of middle income housing.

Proof of the housing shortage —despite real estate lobby claims that it no longer exists—was shown in the sharp increase in rents in areas where controls have been lifted, the CIO witnesses told the Senators.

In industrial areas of Allegheny County, Md., rents rose an average of 52% after Rent Control Director Tighe Woods decontrolled the area, and in Dallas, Tex., rents rose as high as 400%, with the heaviest increases occurring on low- and middle-income families.

The "housing industry," the CIO spokesmen said, "has manifestly failed to do the needed task."

That charge was made at the job of getting houses built to meet volume demand at the places where the need really exists."

They agreed with government estimates that the "middle income" group of families has annual earning of between $2,500 and $5,000 a year, and these millions of families have difficulty in buying homes at present prices.

"It is fairly accurate to say that half of all American families cannot afford a house costing more than $6,000," the CIO statement said, "but for all practical purposes, no such creature exists today. The typical single house in today's market has a price tag of $10,000."

To buy a $10,000 home, they pointed out, a buyer needs about $1,000 in cash and the ability to pay monthly charges of about $56. "The fact is, very few people in this middle income group can or should pay this kind of money."

Advocated by the CIO were provisions in the new housing bill to make available mortgages at 2½% interest instead of the current 5%, and extending the period of the mortgage to 40 or 60 years. A 40-year mortgage at the lower rate would cut monthly payments on a $10,000 home to about $32 a month, and on a 60-year mortgage to only $25 a month.

Another stumbling block to big-scale buying of new homes is in speculative builders' profits, which they said must be "eliminated altogether" if sufficient housing is to be provided.

Hatred Of CIO Policy Even Bars Strike Aid

THE Bakersfield, Calif., local of the CIO Newspaper Guild recently came through a tough strike. It is still having its troubles with the Bakersfield Press after having won that strike.

During the strike, the Guild asked for, and received in many cases, contributions from other CIO locals. Guild locals and councils all over the country gave, and so did many a California CIO local, particularly the Oil and Utility Workers. The Northern California Regional CIO office, through Dir. Tim Flynn, sent out the request for aid.

Despite this, the following letter was received by the Bakersfield Guild from the Alaska Fishermen's Union, an affiliate of the CIO Intl. Fishermen & Allied Workers:

"Dear Sirs and Brothers:

"This is to let you know that although our union has always supported the Guild strikes financially, the appeal for your local, sent by Mr. Tim Flynn, was turned down at our May 20 membership meeting.

(The Guild reported it did not make the Fisherman's letter public until recently because it hesitated to reveal such an anti-strike move by an affiliate of the CIO. However, it decided that such actions must be exposed.)

"This should not be construed as lack of support for your efforts to win what we are sure are your just demands from management, but rather lack of support for the channels through which you have made your appeal to the Fishermen membership.

"Our disagreements with Mr. Flynn on trade union principles, CIO democracy and the future of our once great CIO organization are too fundamental to support any projects sifting through him. Perhaps if you will write your own letter, it will meet with better success at our next meeting.

"Regretfully yours,
"Abe Lehto, agent."

CIO officials in California were quick to point out that the Fishermen's "principles" with which they have had disagreement with Flynn are over CIO policy.

J. F. Jurich, president of the Fishermen, voted with a diehard minority against every major decision reached at the recent CIO board meeting and then refused to adhere to the decisions made democratically.

As The CIO News went to press, no comment had been heard from Longshoremen's Pres. Harry Bridges, with whose union Jurich is urging his members to vote merger "to add to economic strength."

Everett, Of CIO, Again To Run For Cincinnati City Council

THE CINCINNATI Charter Committee has chosen a strong ticket for this fall's Proportional Representation election for city council.

It includes the incumbents, Rollin H. Everett, leader in the Cincinnati CIO Newspaper Guild, Mayor Albert D. Cash; Charles P. Taft, liberal brother of the senator; Businessman Edward N. Waldvogel, and AFL leader Harry D. Proctor.

The other four Charter candidates are Robert P. Goldman, attorney prominent in Jewish affairs; Theodore Berry, well-known Negro attorney; Bernard L. Rowelkamp, head of a steel-fabricating and erecting firm, and Newton A. Brokaw, young war veteran.

The Charter group two years ago won five of the nine Council posts and has, political observers say, made a splendid record in office. Also, two years ago, the voters turned down a scheme to do away with PR.

Everett, a veteran delegate to many Guild conventions, was chairman of the ANG Collective Bargaining committee at the recent Columbus convention.

He is executive secretary of the Cincinnati Guild. He served on the NWLB Newspaper Commission during the war.

He is an active negotiator of contracts.

Gearhart Bill Hit In House

A first step has been taken by Congress to improve the social security law—but Washington observers are wondering how many other steps will be taken during the present session.

The House Ways & Means Committee, which has spent much of the past few months on social security, last week came up with its first decision: a 15-10 vote to restore social security benefits to 750,000 self-employed workers who had been placed outside the security law by the 80th Congress.

That action taken last July in the Gearhart Bill, passed over President Truman's veto. It barred social security benefits to self-employed salesmen, truck and taxi drivers and many other similar categories.

Last week the Ways & Means Committee recommended repeal of the Gearhart Act. (Gearhart, a California Republican, was himself "repealed" by the voters last November.)

Other Committee recommendations on social security have not yet been announced. But from every indication it will not go as far as Pres. Truman, CIO and many other groups had urged in bringing social security up to date. CIO had urged doubling of present old-age benefits and vastly increased coverage.

Carey Backs Labor Extension Bill

A LABOR Extension Service would be of tremendous service to the 100,000 local union officials who are the backbone of the U. S. collective bargaining system, CIO Sec.-Treas. Carey told Congress last week.

Carey appeared at House Labor Committee hearings to back HR 1380, which would set up the extension program under direction of the U. S. and state labor departments.

Functioning through schools and colleges, it would provide school opportunities for workers on a variety of labor-management relations problems. The program outlined in HR 1380 would be patterned somewhat along the lines of the farm extension program, through which special U. S. officials help farmers on all kinds of agricultural problems.

Similar labor extension bills have been approved by the Senate and House Labor Committees in previous years, but it has never been passed by either branch of Congress.

A number of other union and government officials have appeared to testify in support of the bill. Last week the Committee heard from Brandan Sexton, UAW acting education director, and from two local union officers —Robert Hulsebus of Grand Rapids, Mich., and Dallas Sells of Anderson, Ind.

Both Hulsebus and Sells have been active in local union education work.

WANT SCHOOL SERVICE: CIO Sec.-Treas. James Carey and Hilda Smith, chairman of the National Committee for Extension of Labor Education, get together with union officials on behalf of bill to create labor extension service. On the other end of what appears to be a merry conversation are Robert Hulsebus, UAW officer in Grand Rapids, Mich.; Frank Fernbach, of CIO and Steelworkers and committee vice chairman; Dallas Sells, UAW local official at Anderson, Ind., and Brendan Sexton, acting education director for UAW. Carey and the UAW men testified in favor of a bill at House hearings.

"THE UNANIMOUS labor support for a Labor Extension Service," Carey told committee members at the hearing, "reflects our belief that it offers great opportunities to further extend the area of cooperation and good will.

"Industrial peace and goodwill are essential for labor, for management, and for the nation. No organization more ardently desires stable industrial relations than CIO—peace based upon fair play, mutual respect and justice."

The CIO official said that creation of a labor extension service would be of particular value to the 100,000 "key union personnel who so largely influence the nature of the management-labor relationship—local union officers, grievance committeemen and shop stewards democratically elected by the membership as their spokesmen.

"These 100,000 worker-leaders are the real voice of CIO in foundries, assembly lines and shops spread across the nation. And it is they, far more than myself or any other national union officer who, with their management counterparts, determine the character of our industrial relations."

While corporations have increasingly turned to the college for trained industrial relations experts to serve as collective bargaining representatives, the union men and women in the collective bargaining process "often have gained knowledge and leadership only through the school of experience.

"We are justly proud of the magnificent achievements of our thousands of CIO shop stewards, grievance committeemen and officers, but we must heed their insistent demand that the inequity between management and men, in the provision of facts and information, be ended."

The Labor Extension Service Bill, Carey predicted, "by providing the tools of fact and reason, will give labor educational parity with other citizens for the first time. Its constructive and democratic program points the way to substantial progress towards industrial peace."

He said that the U. S. Department of Labor and the state labor departments have become "vast storehouses of practical information which wage earners need and want," and that this can be funnelled to workers through the colleges and universities through the extension program.

THE AUTO union spokesmen told of the help that union members get from classes in the technical side of collective bargaining, as well as in general education matters.

Hulsebus, talking of intricate piece-work schedules in the union's contract, said:

"Now the way I see it, if all the knowledge is on one side—the company's side—and the companies have highly trained time study experts who in many cases got their training in schools supported by the state and federal government, a steward doesn't have a chance in negotiation unless he has training."

Sells said he came from a comparatively "rich" local, but it can afford only one full-time education director for its 10,000 members.

"Without minimizing what we have done, we could do a lot more if we had a source for instructors and texts and materials. . . . We get some help from schools in Anderson, but instructors in high schools rarely know the subject matter we are interested in."

DURING the hearings some GOP Congressmen sought to bring up the question of labor classes conducted by the Workers Education Service at Univ. of Michigan, which were killed after a propaganda attack by General Motors and other corporations. GM had particularly objected to the use of union literature in the classes.

Rep. Tom Burke (D., Ohio.), himself a UAW member, recalled that in union classes he had attended, the UAW had used technical textbooks published by the Ford Motor Co. Burke asked Sexton, the UAW's acting education head, whether the union has even been "fearful or panicky" that these books are "subversive."

Sexton, with a smile, answered in a negative. In fact, he said, many universities use NAM pamphlets and books in their class, without protest from unions.

Rep. Velde (R., Ill.), a former FBI agent, was worried about union control of education classes under the program—in part because of the union's control, in part because of some sort of fear that the classes would help "communism."

Sexton retorted that many universities supported with state or federal funds have business schools which are training students for work in management.

"No one raises any question whatever on the millions and millions of dollars spent every year at the statelevel to train people in skills that have specific use only for management.

"That is certainly subsidizing management, as we are asking that labor be subsidized here."

Officers' Defiance of CIO Cuts Up Contra Costa Council

THE PROPS have been knocked out from under efforts to continue to manipulate the Contra Costa County CIO Council in opposition to the National CIO.

Two big locals of the Oil Workers pulled out of the council, and a third old local will act soon.

By overwhelming membership vote, OWIU Local 5, Martinez, and Local 587, Pinole, ordered immediate disaffiliation. Members of Martinez Local 445 planned action on an executive board recommendation for similar withdrawal.

Together, the three locals have 2700 members, and represent the principal per capita support of the old council. Oil, Auto and Steelworkers locals with some 5800 members quit the anti-CIO council months ago and are organized in the Contra Costa County Committee for National CIO.

With the Oil disaffiliation, the old council is virtually eliminated as a functioning organization. At the most it represents unions—ILWU, Mine-Mill and Fishermen —with some 1000 members in the county.

DISAFFILIATION of the Oil Workers was voted, it was made plain, after party-liners stymied all efforts of the OWIU majority to reorganize the Council in support of CIO.

Early in June, the Contra Costa Council requested assistance of the Northern California CIO Regional Office to reorganize the Council "in accordance with the policies of the CIO."

At a preliminary conference of all CIO locals—both in the Council and outside—James Drury presented for the regional office a tentative proposal for (1) amending the Council's constitution, (2) resigniation of its present officers, and (3) election of new officers at a special convention.

Subsequently, the Council's Executive Board by a 5 to 3 vote, with the Oil locals dissenting, voted to "dump" the tentative proposal, but the full Council meeting rejected the board's action, 9 to 6. At this point, the eligibility of four delegates from OWIU Local 587 was challenged on a technicality, although the local's per capita payments never had been challenged. Then Virgil Coragliotti, Local 5 secretary, resigned as a Council delegate and trustee.

CWA Aim: Unification On Pacific

ENDING "THE HORSE and buggy labor policies" of the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Co. is the next goal of 50,000 CIO telephone workers in all Pacific Coast states.

In phone locals scattered from Spokane to the Bay Area to Los Angeles, delegates began reporting on formation of the new Communications Workers Pacific Council and its drive to seek unified bargaining on wages and working conditions for all workers in all job classifications employed by P.T.&T.

The framework for coastwise telephone bargaining was established at a regional CWA conference in Portland, Ore., with some 35 delegates and observers from all Far Western phone locals participating. The meeting was a direct consequence of the recent Chicago convention in which all phone unions previously under the CWA and under the CIO Telephone Workers Organizing Committee joined together under CWA-CIO.

IN THE Portland meeting, reported Joseph Deardorf, CWA regional director:

"The same spirit of unity which brought 300,000 phone workers together at Chicago was continued by delegates representing 50,000 phone workers in California, Nevada, Oregon, Washington and Northern Idaho.

"With sucess due to the willingness of delegates to work together as a team, the foundation was laid for a strong bargaining council especially designed to deal with P.T.&T. and its horse and buggy labor policies."

Richard T. Leonard, National CIO liaison man for telephone organizing, pledged CIO's full assistance.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

The Bell telephone outfit shows signs of climbing off its high-horse idea of dictating to its employes on their choice of Union representation.

In Michigan, the company which was among the first to refuse to recognize the affiliation of CWA with CIO has now bowed to an NLRB ruling and agreed to meet with the Union on grievances and to turn over checked-off dues.

Indications are that other divisions of the AT&T empire will follow suit. The unwarranted and unreasonable attitude of the company has created much embarrassment for the Union—which may have been its intention — and has interfered with advancement of organization among other telephone workers.

When the recognition question has been cleared away the telephone workers will move ahead with their organizing program. Throughout the dispute with the company, the telephone workers have demonstrated clearly that they want CIO and intend to have CIO in spite of any lordly attempts by the corporation to prevent them from having the benefits of CIO affiliation.

Another industrial giant is, this week, fighting the legitimate aspirations of labor. U. S. Steel, having squalled and bawled in protest, is now before a fact-finding board appointed by the President of the U. S.

Steel, like many other giant corporations, can hide many things in its financial reports, but Steel could not hide, in its latest report, the fact that its profits in the first six months of 1949 were even higher than the excessive profits raked in during the first six months of 1948. And the report of profits, of course, does not figure in the many improvements and additions to plants and physical properties.

Full support of the officers and the union's policies is the way the Steelworkers can hope to gain the benefits to which they are justly entitled.

From West Virginia, Regional Director John B. Easton reports that negotiations with the State Road Commission covering a large number of the department's employes organized in LIUs are nearly complete. Included so far is an 8-cent across-the-board increase and an agreement that employes below the top of the wage bracket will be moved to the top in 5-cent steps. Sick leave, vacations and paid holidays have been improved. When these employes first began organizing in the CIO the common labor rate was 35 cents an hour. It is now 90 cents. CIO organization, as we all know, pays.

Secy.-Treas. James J. (Scotty) Mitchell of the CIO Shoeworkers, reports an election victory at the Rasmussen Shoe Co., Worcester, Mass. The vote was 38 for CIO and 25 against.

George Brown, Director of Organization for the CIO Woodworkers, reports an election victory at the Del Loma Lumber Co., Red Bluff, Calif., by a vote of 9 to 4.

Regional Director Robert McVay reports that the CIO Brewery Workers won representation of employes at the Oklahoma Coca Cola Bottling Co. by a vote of 41 to 30. John Dippel was in charge of the campaign.

Prods N.J. Congressmen

New Jersey Congressmen and all members of the House Education and Labor Committee were prodded tonight to report out and pass four bills "vital to the advancement of our free society" which have been backlogged in the committee.

In letters to the 25-member committee and to the 12 state Congressmen, Harry Kranz, legislative director for the State CIO, urged "prompt passage at this session of Congress" of bills to increase the minimum wage to at least 75 cents an hour, to extend Federal aid to education, to create a Federal commission on Services for the Physically Handicapped and to establish a labor education extension service.

Keep Your Eye On Congress

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	WHAT TO DO
Taft - Hartley Repeal	Senate loaded bill full of crippling amendments. Bill is merely new version of T-H.	New edition of T-H passed by Senate. House Labor Comm. studying proposals.	Give PAC $1. Get ready for 1950 elections.
Hiring Hall Status Bill S. 2196 HR 5008	Removes Taft-Hartley ban on union-controlled hiring halls in maritime industry.	House Labor Comm. hearings start Aug. 3.	Write Senators, Congressmen to seek quick action, to avert crisis in maritime industry.
Wage-Hour Law Improvements S. 653 HR 3190	Bills provide 75c minimum, improved coverage and enforcement.	Senate bill due for vote soon. House bill buried in Rules Committee.	Ask Senators and Congressmen to support increase to 75c plus coverage and enforcement improvements.
Social Security Improvements HR 2893 HR 2645	Bills extend, improve old age and survivors benefits, relief set-up, coverage, etc.	House Ways & Means Comm. due to report bill soon. Probably some increased coverage and higher benefits.	Ask Congressman to support strong social security improvements.
Fair Employment Practices Bill HR 4453	Bars discrimination in industry for reasons of race, creed or color.	House Labor Comm. due to act on bill. Subcommittee has approved.	Ask Congressmen to support bill in House vote.
Anti-Polltax Bill HR 3199	Outlaws levying of poll tax in U. S. elections in 7 southern states.	Passed by House. Bill faces possible filibuster attack in Senate.	Write Senators to fight filibuster and vote to pass bill.
Federal Aid to Education	Grants $300 million aid to states for school systems.	Senate passed bill, giving states right to decide procedures. House bills now in Labor Comm.	Ask Congressmen to pass bill along lines of Senate-approved bill.
Labor Extension Service Bill HR 1380	Sets up labor education services, under Labor Dept., and operating thru colleges, etc.	Senate Labor Comm. has approved bill. CIO supported bill at House Labor Comm. hearings July 25.	Ask Senators, Congressmen to pass bill this year.

Unions Ask New Air Minimum

THE NATION'S two aircraft unions, the Machinists and the CIO Auto Workers, have joined forces in urging the Secretary of Labor to fix the minimum wage in the aircraft industry at $1.15 an hour.

Hearings are being held under the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act on proposals to recognize the minimum wages already paid employes in the airframe, aircraft parts and accessories, propeller and engine plants on all military and civilian aircraft produced for the government. At present government orders make up more than 90% of the work of the aircraft industry.

The purpose of the Walsh-Healey Act, as defined by the Supreme Court, is "to impose obligations upon those favored with government business and to obviate the possibility that any part of our tremendous national expenditures would go to forces tending to depress wages and purchasing power and offending fair social standards of employment."

Witnesses from the two unions are presenting a common front at the hearings. They request:

- That the present "out-of-date and the unrealistic minimum" of 50c an hour, fixed in 1938, be raised to the $1.15 already prevailing for aircraft workers in the bulk of the industry.
- That special exemptions granted to companies considered "substitute manufacturers" during the war be rescinded, since obviously conditions no longer warrant such exemptions.

Union witnesses who will present the case for the higher minimum wage are:

For UAW-CIO: John W. Livingston, vice president and director of the aircraft department; Ralph E. Showalter, Detroit, assistant director of research and engineering; Irving J. Levy, general counsel.

For IAM: Elmer E. Walker, general vice president; Thomas E. McNett, representative for I.A.M. District 727; Grand Lodge Rep. Jerry Flinn, research department.

School Bill In Doubt

A prediction that there's "no chance" of action on the aid-to-education bill was voiced last week by Chairman John Lesinski (D. Mich.) of the House Labor Committee.

The school-aid proposal has been in committee for several weeks, and has been the focus of a sharp debate over whether aid should go to private as well as public schools. A middle-of-the-road bill passed in the Senate early in the session left that issue up to the various states.

A House sub-committee, however, reported out a bill by Rep. Barden (D., N. C.) to forbid payments to private institutions. The issue has not been voted by the full committee.

Rep. Sims (D., S. C.) said he would attempt to get the Senate-approved version through the House group, but many members doubt he will be successful.

'Humane Auto Unionists Deserve Much Credit'

Uncoordinated River Projects Wasteful

Tragic waste results from the failure to set up river valley authorities such as TVA for the Columbia and the Missouri. In the several states through which the rivers flow there is the same picture—erosion, drouth, floods, power shortage, unemployment, and poverty. See Page 8.

Proposed Welfare Dept. Backed By CIO

A SENATE Committee has turned thumbs down on two government reorganization plans proposed by Pres. Truman. CIO supports both plans, which are due for Congressional action before August 20.

Reorganization Plan No. 1 calls for establishment of a Department of Welfare, and would have control of such governmental functions as health services, education, welfare, social security, etc. Head of the Department would be a Cabinet officer.

Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, in a letter to all CIO affiliates last week, pointed out that "needless to say, the CIO and the other major labor organizations have similarly voiced their approval for Plan No. 1."

But the Senate Expenditures Committee recommended by a 7-4 vote that the plan be turned down by the Senate. The plan goes into effect unless the Senate turns it down by constitutional majority—49 votes before August 20.

The Committee also recommended disapproval, by an 8-3 vote, of the second plan, which would turn over the Bureau of Employment Statistics, now in the Federal Security Agency, to the Department of Labor. The CIO and other labor groups have advocated the switch on grounds that the Bureau, which is concerned with unemployment compensation problems, logically belongs in the Labor Dept.

Carey, in his letter on the proposed Dept. of Welfare, said that opposition to the plan "comes from the same old reactionary sources, notably the American Medical Association and the interests represented by Sen. Taft of Ohio."

Carey urged all affiliates to send wires to their Senators urging them to vote against Taft's resolution, No. 147, which proposes that the Reorganization Plan be dropped.

"The whole matter of public health agencies is at stake at this moment," Carey commented.

Earlier, in testimony given to the House Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, Paul Sifton of the United Auto Workers urged favorable action on Reorganization Plan No. 2. He pointed out that both the U. S. Employment Service and the Employment Security bureau should be in the Labor Dept., since their functions are "inter-related and should be indivisible."

Sifton, speaking for the CIO, said that opponents of the shifting of the two agencies to the Labor Dept. are using "scare propaganda not based on facts."

"We feel that the Employment Service and Unemployment Insurance are functionally two hands of the same body, and that if either is to function as it was intended to function, they must be operated together in a single agency—and the Labor Dept. is the natural location."

Murray Made No 'Deal' On Pensions

THE UNITED Steelworkers made no "secret deal" with the industry last year that it would forego asking for pensions in return for last year's 13c wage increase.

USA-CIO Pres. Murray made the denial—an angry, emphatic denial—of charges bandied about by Vice-Pres. John Stephens at a New York press conference. Stephens claimed that there was an "understanding" about the pension demand.

"In answer to Mr. Stephens—no such agreement exists," Murray retorted in a statement issued at USA-CIO headquarters in Pittsburgh. "The only agreements we have are contained in our contracts. We have no secret understanding with Mr. Stephens in this or any other matter."

The Stephens statement is part of the industry's claim that pensions should not be negotiated during current bargaining sessions. The union presented elaborate legal and economic arguments to the U. S. Fact- Finding Board on the "bargainability" of pensions at this time.

Murray, in his statement, took a slap at Stephens' issuance of a press statement "on a matter pending before Pres. Truman's fact-finding board . . . We feel that the issuance of an 'ex parte' statement when the issue in dispute is before the board is grossly improper."

Hiring Hall Ban Cited As Periling Sea Unions

CIO MARITIME Union Pres. Joseph Curran last week told a House Labor subcommittee that if the T-H ban against hiring halls remains in force, maritime unions could be completely destroyed by anti-union employers.

Curran was testifying in support of an amendment to the Wagner Labor Act which would allow current hiring hall practices in the maritime industry even though T-H bars so-called "discriminatory" hiring.

Constitutionality of the T-H bar has so far been upheld in lower courts, and is expected to receive a Supreme Court ruling next year.

Curran argued that T-H is so written that shoreside workers are permitted a degree of union security via the union shop, under which they must join the union within 30 days of their employment. But no union security is permitted maritime workers.

Such an arrangement would not affect the maritime industry, Curran said, since most voyages do not exceed 30 days. Thus it might never be necessary for a seaman to join the union—or if at all, only for the remainder of a long voyage.

Without the union hiring hall, Curran said, "in no time, non-union elements could make such effective inroads as to render impotent any effective union organization."

The bill under consideration is sponsored by Rep. John Lesinski (D. Mich.) in the House and Sen. Warren Magnuson (D. Wash.) in the Senate. It states that nothing in the labor act shall make illegal "any hiring or employment practices prevailing in the maritime industry prior to June 15, 1947."

CWA Aides Ask 75c Wage Action

CIO's Communications Workers want a 75c minimum wage law, and they want their Congressmen to know their thoughts about it.

So, state and local officials of the CWA—CIO'c newest affiliate—are in Washington seeing their Congressmen about it.

Both Senate and House Labor Committees have approved bills providing for 75c minimum and varying amounts of increased coverage. The minimum wage is now 40c—a figure set in 1940—but it has lost most of its effectiveness because of sharp increases in living costs.

"CWA representatives will seek to buttonhole Congressmen to let them know that its members have their eyes on Congress in this matter," the union said. "With millions unemployed in the face of continued high prices, a 75c wage minimum plus increased coverage for those sectors of America's workers must in need of protection, will aid substantially in maintaining much-needed purchasing power."

CCL Suspends Five UE Officers

Five leaders of the CIO Electrical Workers in Canada have been suspended from participation in the Canadian Congress of Labor.

The action was taken by the CCL executive council following a complaint lodged last March by the Ontario Federation of Labor. The UE officials have been constant opponents of CCL policies.

Those suspended were: Clarence Jackson, president of UE district 5 Council; M. Chambers, a vice-president; George Harris, secretary-treasurer; Ross Russell, organizing director; and Jack Douglas, editor of the Canadian UE News.

AS STEEL UNION PRESENTS ITS CASE: United Steelworkers of America told the why and wherefore of its demands for wage boosts, welfare fund and pensions, to fact-finding board appointed by Pres. Truman. Shown at the hearings in New York's Foley Square Courthouse (left to right): USA-CIO Secy.-Treas. David McDonald and Otis Brubaker, union research director. In right hand picture, Vice-Pres. James Thimmes, Pres. Murray, General Counsel Arthur Goldberg. Union finished its testimony August 3. The industry starts presenting its case next week.

Steel Union Buttresses Case With Mass Of Facts

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

WITH FACT and figure, chart and graph, the United Steelworkers have built an imposing case to support their demands for wages, welfare fund and pensions.

At 10:55 A. M. last Wednesday, the steel union told the three-man board appointed by the President that the presentation of the workers' case had been completed.

This week, on Thursday, the steel industry begins its own presentation. It will be no easy task for the corporation executives to overcome the mass of material placed on the record by the steel union.

Five USA-CIO officials took the stand in the oak-paneled, 13th-floor hearing room in New York's District Courthouse to give the union's viewpoint to the fact-finding board. They were: Pres. Murray, General Counsel Goldberg, Robert Nathan, economic adviser to the union; Otis Brubaker, union research director, and Murray Lattimer, expert on welfare funds and pension plans.

Murray — opening the union's case—gave the picture of the history of bargaining in the steel industry—including this year's experience, when corporation spokesmen said "no" in a variety of ways on a variety of subjects.

The union's demands, Murray said, are for 12½c hourly boosts; 6.27c an hour for social insurance; and 11.23c an hour for pensions. It totals 30c an hour.

Goldberg looked at the law, at NLRB decisions, and at the language of the present contract. He insisted that the union was fully within its rights in demanding the welfare and pension funds as well as wage increases.

"Bob" Nathan, the six-foot economist, was next to take the stand, and he elaborated on the reports which he had prepared a month ago for both the CIO and the steel union on the economic situation.

"It seems clear to me," Nathan testified, "that we must in this country of ours have a level of buying power on the part of the consumer which will take all the goods off the market that this vast, phenomenally successful American business can produce."

Nathan stressed two points: (1) that wage increases will help resist the rise of recession by adding buying power at a crucial time to the pocketbooks of a crucial group of consumers; and (2) that price increases based on possible wage increases are more unlikely than in other post-war years because of the competitive situation.

Otis Brubaker, who followed Nathan to the stand, analyzed the profit records of various companies in the industry—and concluded that virtually all of them have done very well in recent years.

Murray Lattimer, who conducted the government's study of guaranteed annual wages two years ago, was the union's next witness. A gray-haired man with twinkling eyes and a sedate moustache, Lattimer lectured the hearing on every aspect of pensions and welfare funds. As he talked, Lattimer produced more than a score of charts to back up his words.

Lattimer's theme: steel workers don't get adequate pensions.

The steel union is asking for $125 a month pensions for retired workers. That's a far cry from present figures, he pointed out. U. S. Steel has retired 722 workers since June, 1947. Of these, 384 received no pensions payments at all from the company. The average monthly pension payment is only $9.35.

Bethlehem and Jones & Laughlin do better—with average payments of $21 and $31 a month —but Republic pays none at all. But none of the payments is enough to provide a liveable income, even when social security benefits are considered.

The fact-finding board members must report to Pres. Truman with their recommendations by Sept. 1. The steel industry's case is expected to be completed by Aug. 10 or 11. After brief rebuttal testimony, the board will study the mass of facts poured into the record.

Chairman of the board is Prof. Carroll Daugherty of Northwestern. Other members are Judge Sam Rosenman, White House adviser, and David Cole, a New Jersey lawyer and arbitrator.

Card Is Issued For 'Free Riders'

If there's anything that riles a good unionist, it's a "free rider." That's a guy who doesn't want to pay dues to a union but gladly grabs up the benefits it brings.

Down in Texas, W. L. McMahon, field representative for the CIO Packinghouse Workers, thought up a bright idea to deal with parasites. When a worker refuses to sign a union card, Mac hands him a Free Rider card. It reads:

"I am opposed to all unions. Therefore, I am opposed to all benefits that unions have won through the years: Paid vacations, paid holidays, sick leave, seniority rights, wage increases, pension and insurance plans, safety laws, social security, time and a half for overtime after eight hours, unemployment benefits and job security.

"I refuse to accept any wage increase that will be won by union negotiations with ————Co. and I hereby authorize and direct the company to withhold the amount of the union wage increase from my pay check each week and to donate it to charity."

Let's Buck 'em

The best way right now to buck those who oppose labor is to give a buck to PAC.

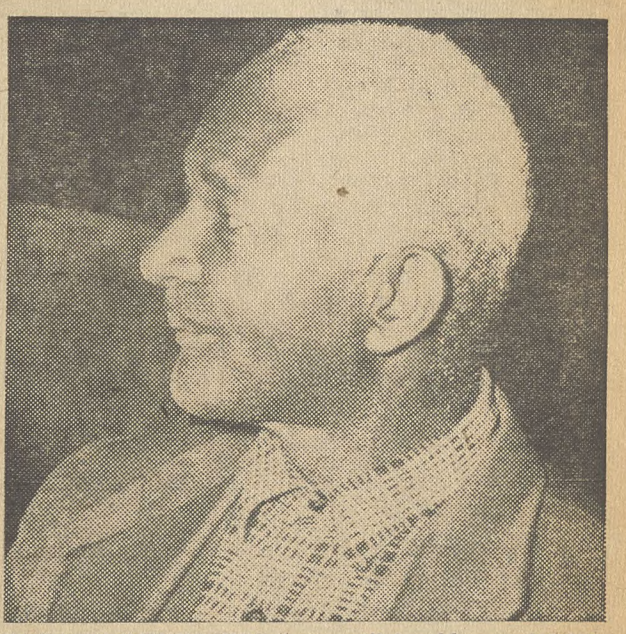
'Ability to Pay'

The steel industry's net profits jumped 52% in the first half of this year over the same period in 1948, a survey has shown.

Profits — after taxes — of 23 companies surveyed by the United Press rose to $305,946,506 in the first six months of 1949. A year ago they were "only" $201,494,199.

GEORGE KRESS has good reason to meditate over his 49 years' service with Carnegie-Illinois Steel Corp., while attending a meeting of the "65 Club" at Gary, Ind. He was "retired" on a pension of $9.80 a month. All members of the club are over 65 years old and have devoted from 30 to 49 years of their lives to the steel industry.

JOHN MEAD, 69-year-old chairman of the "65 Club," cannot forget the injustice of the steel industry's low pensions. A veteran Carnegie-Illinois Steelworkers, Mead devotes nearly all his time in retirement to the problems of Steelworkers who get a meager pittance from the company. The club voted to support the union's demands.



GEORGE KRUBECK'S "reward" for 44 years' faithful service with Carnegie-Illinois was a lump sum payment of $406.80 upon retirement and nothing else. This cost the company less than $10 a year. This 65-year-old member of the USA-CIO is typical of hundreds of others, who with him are the human side of the case for $125-a-month pensions.

'Unimportant' Item

It obviously was an "unimportant" little item when compared with world-shaking events.

The New York Times told the story on an inside page—in three inches of type placed alongside a big ad.

It was a simple story:

A young workman from New York was killed in Philadelphia while trying to save the lives of three fellow workers, who also died in the accident.

Three men were overcome by sewer gas while working in a 25-foot trench. They fell over into three feet of water.

Lawrence G. Williams, 28, rushed down a ladder in an attempt to save them—but he, too, was overcome by gas and fell into the water beside his three companions.

All of them were drowned.

Two firemen lost consciousness during an attempt to rescue the four workmen, but were revived.

That's all there is to the story, if you judge it as news items are usually judged. Just four more workers killed on the job.

But there was more to it than that—much more. The four who died must have had families and friends.

And, considering all of the modern equipment available, there must have been negligence "at the top." But the news stories didn't go into that.

This accident and many more like it provide rich material for those able editorial writers who like to hold forth on labor's responsibilities to the public. They could write some excellent articles about the public's responsibility to workers—but most of them won't.

'LITTLE' THINGS REALLY COUNT

At one time or another all of us have seen executives who have made life miserable for their subordinates merely because their breakfast eggs weren't poached correctly or because their coffee wasn't just right.

The word goes around the office or the plant, "Old J. B. is as grumpy as a bear today; better watch out or he'll eat your ears off."

One of life's unsolved mysteries is why these executives refuse to recognize that poor working conditions can upset their employes and make them grumpy, too.

A breakfast egg that's a bit too hard doesn't begin to compare with a plant that's too cold, or too hot, or poorly lighted, or badly ventilated.

And weak coffee is really mild compared with an overbearing foreman.

It's something to think about, isn't it?

In a way, you can apply the same type of reasoning to the increase in unemployment.

Joblessness at present isn't serious. At least that's what some of the economic experts say.

But how about those who are out of work? They still have to pay rent, buy food and provide milk for the kids. Their insurance premiums still come due regularly. To them the situation is deadly serious.

All of which leads us to remark that some fellow knew what he was talking about when he said:

"Our big troubles are the sum total of all of our little ones."

We Must Step Up The Fight

Much More Involved In Political Battle Than Repeal Or Retention Of T-H

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THERE are many persons in the U. S. who do not yet understand why organized labor put up such a strong—though unsuccessful — fight this year for repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act.

But those in the thick of the battle knew what it was all about. They knew there was much more at stake than the mere phraseology of a management-labor relations act.

If there had not been, then the Taft-Hartley Act wouldn't have become a major campaign issue. It wouldn't have become the subject of many editorials and radio commentaries.

And so many men wouldn't have staked their political future on the outcome of the fight.

WORKING men and women, acting individually and sometimes at cross-purposes, did much in the political field throughout the years to make the U. S. a better place in which to live.

Labor played a leading role in the establishment of the public school system—and that was a political as well as educational victory.

Labor also played important roles in the battles which brought about women's suffrage, the direct election of Senators, the income tax theory of "ability to pay," social security, minimum wage, Wagner Act and the TVA.

It was not until 1944, however, that the idea of labor political action on a national scale was translated into reality. That year PAC was born.

And now the American Federation of Labor has an active national political arm — Labor's League for Political Education.

BUSINESS and industrial leaders learned many years ago that their financial well-being was tied closely to politics, so they gave generously to the campaigns of the "right" candidates.

They realized that the type of legislation coming from Congress and the state legislatures greatly effected the operation of the enterprises they owned and operated.

Only on occasions was there any real threat to their dominance of politics until a major depression knocked our economy into a tailspin and Franklin D. Roosevelt went into the White House.

FDR ushered in a new era—an era in which the government was used largely for the benefit of the so-called "common man."

Shortly after the war ended Big Business launched a well-financed campaign to bring this era to an end. And enactment of T-H was a major part of the campaign.

LEADERS of business and industry knew they would have little chance of succeeding in their post-war drive unless labor was placed in hobbles.

The Taft-Hartley Act was designed to bring this about. Although it was called management-labor relations act, it had two purposes:

One was to give management the edge over labor in the so-called "normal" management-labor relations.

The other was to place limitations on the political activities of unions.

Thus T-H was designed to make labor weak in collective bargaining and ineffective in politics.

Had the scheme worked as intended, a lot of New Deal legislation would already be off the statute books or marked for quick slaughter.

THE BIG BUSINESS political applecart was upset at the polls last November, largely because of the role labor played in the campaign.

Events have demonstrated since then that the tide was stemmed but not turned.

And these events have demonstrated the need for increased political action in the future.

Labor has the manpower and the know-how necessary to complete in 1950 the job on which a good start was made in 1949.

It's a job into which we should put a lot of time and energy, because much more than T-H is at stake.

'There May Not Be Enough Money For Rent'

"FEW PEOPLE realize that the fabulous blossoming of the great green stretches of farmland in California, Texas, Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona was due in large part to the Mexican's" reports the current issue of Inter-American Affairs, published by the CIO Committee on Latin-American Affairs.

"The first irrigation systems in the area were built by Mexican-Spaniards," the publication continues. "Before them, the Indians had developed irrigations systems which are said to go back 900 years. This precious experience was invaluable to the 'Anglos' who knew nothing of farming in dry, hot lands. . .

"Today the great majority of Mexican-Americans live in squalid settlements known as 'Colonias.' They are usually unincorporated areas separated from the civic benefits, such as street lighting and sanitation.

"The colonias are the flesh-and-blood bankrolls of large finance farmers. At harvest time, labor contractors roll up in their trucks and take the Mexican-Americans out to the lush fields. The ride costs the worker from 25 to 50 cents each way.

"THEIR WAGES bear no relation to anything that can be dignified as a standard of living. Wages follow the classic pattern where cheap labor is kept because it is unorganized, unprotected and unknown to America's conscience.

"Tortillas for the children come first and after this there may not be enough money for the rent, though rent is from $10 to $15 a month for a one room shack and almost the same for tent space in a vacant lot.

"It is one of the foremost duties of the American trade union movement to end these conditions."

RUSS PRIESTLEY

"You think it's so damn easy—you pitch."

Industry Blamed

The most important cause of industrial unrest in this country is the failure of industrial management to agree on a "human relations" policy, Douglas MacGregor, president of Antioch College, told the Southern Industrial Relations Conference at Asheville, N. C.

He Behaved Like A Real Tough Guy

THE SITUATION was really tough and it looked as if it would get worse as time for the NLRB election drew near.

A dozen or 15 men at the big plant who had been working closely with CIO organizers were fired and they were told bluntly they were discharged because of union activity.

"All the NLRB can do is make us put you back on the job and give you back pay, and in the meantime we'll have smashed the union drive," said the labor superintendent.

That was just the beginning.

Intimidation and coercion were practiced openly by foremen and supervisors. A "citizens' committee" was set up to fight the union.

And nobody in the company-controlled town would rent the CIO a place big enough for a union meeting.

ABOUT THREE weeks before the election date a small group of CIO "reinforcements" was sent to the town to help in the campaign.

At about the same time the company hired two huge men to "work over" the organizers if they could be caught at the right time and right place.

Organizers began working in teams of four or five to discourage attacks on themselves. This was extremely unhandy, so a meeting was called.

"There must be no violence in this campaign," said the top organizer. "If those guys start a fight we'll get blamed for it—and we're the ones who'll get tossed in jail."

ONE OF THE "reinforcement" group—a small, mild-mannered man—said, "Look, I'll take care of those thugs if you want me to."

Most of the organizers laughed at him and one of them declared, "Why, sonny boy, either of those guys could tear you to pieces with his left hand. Both of them have served time on assault and battery charges."

The small, mild-mannered fellow insisted he could handle the job and nobody laughed when he outlined his plan.

Finally the campaign director said, "I think you're completely nuts but I'll back you up if you want to try it."

"And I'll send you flowers if it doesn't work," said one of the organizers.

THE NEXT EVENING the two thugs were standing on the sidewalk near an alley when the entire organizing force moved down the street in their direction.

Without saying a word, all of the organizers but one formed a line against a building directly opposite the two plug-uglies.

They didn't say a word as the mild-mannered fellow started walking slowly but steadily across the street. When he reached the midway mark he pulled his hat brim low over his eyes and jammed his right hand into his overcoat pocket as if to grasp a gun.

All of the organizers did likewise.

The two thugs stood still and didn't say a word.

THE MILD-MANNERED man stopped a couple of yards from the thugs and looked them over from head to foot. In a phony, rasping voice he said:

"You mugs ain't pretty like you are but you look better than you will if you don't get the hell out of town and stay."

He shoved his "gun" at them, spat on the sidewalk, turned his back on them and sauntered across the street.

The thugs weren't seen around town after that night—and neither was the "tough" organizer.

When the latter departed on a midnight bus he told his companions "I'd better quit seeing those damn gangster movies or I'm gonna get myself killed. Why I don't even know how to flip a safety catch on a gun!"

Carey: Some Aircraft Lack Required Radio

"CERTAIN United States scheduled air carriers" are transporting passengers in violation of the Inter-American Radio Communications Convention, concluded in 1937 and still in effect, CIO Secretary-Treasurer James B. Carey, charged in a message to Secretary of Commerce Charles G. Sawyer.

Carey wrote: "We are referring to overwater planes that do not have provisions for contacting surface vessels in case of emergencies." He then quoted Article 16 of the Havana Convention, Treaty No. 938:

"Article 16. OBLIGATION OF ALL COMMERCIAL AIRCRAFT TO CARRY RADIO EQUIPMENT.

"The contracting governments agree that:

"(A) All aircraft when operating on International scheduled services and carrying passengers shall compulsorily be provided with radio apparatus, both sending and receiving, which must be in efficient operating condition and in charge of properly licensed operators; and

"(B) Aircraft used for the transportation of passengers on international scheduled services making journeys over the sea beyond seventy-five kilometers from any coast, shall be able to transmit and receive on the frequency of 500 kc/s. for the purpose of establishing emergency communications with stations in the marine radio service."

CAREY DECLARED, "We are certain the Commerce Department does not willingly condone abridgement of safety regulations or the violation of effective U. S. Treaties; accordingly, this matter is brought to your attention."

The CIO Transport Workers' Union, which includes radio officers among its membership, has asked the Civil Aeronautics Administration to hold up, for reasons of security, permission for substitution of radio telephone equipment for radio telegraph on United Airlines between the West Coast and Hawaii.

Hugh States, legislative representative for TWU, told Carey of reports from Pacific flying men which indicate "planes have been out of contact with shore stations for long periods of flights, due to static, fading and other conditions.

"These planes, using radio phones, are thus completely isolated, whereas, use of radio telegraph permits constant and efficient contact not only with shore stations but with other planes and surface vessels along the route."

CIO Legislative Director Hits Natural Gas Bill

A NEW Congressional move to remove most effective control over the nation's highly prosperous natural gas industry has been sharply protested by CIO.

Nathan Cowan, CIO legislative director, called upon members of the House to demand a roll call vote and to defeat the Harris Bill (HR 1758). He charged that the bill would be of primary benefit to 70 out of the country's 2,300 gas producers—and that benefits would come through higher prices paid by consumers in their monthly gas charges.

A similar measure — the Moore-Rizley bill—died in the 80th Congress despite high pressure from industrial lobbies to win its passage. Last week the House Interstate Commerce Committee, however, gave a 14-7 favorable vote to the 1949 version of the bill. A similar proposal has also been approved by the Senate Committee.

Cowan told members of Congress that relaxation of U. S. powers of regulation over the industry "will enrich major oil companies by hundreds of millions of dollars a year.

"In wide areas," he said, "household consumers are dependent upon natural gas. They will pay a large part of the increased profits which this bill proposes to give to oil and gas companies. Costs of many industries in which our members work will be substantially and unjustifiably increased by this measure."

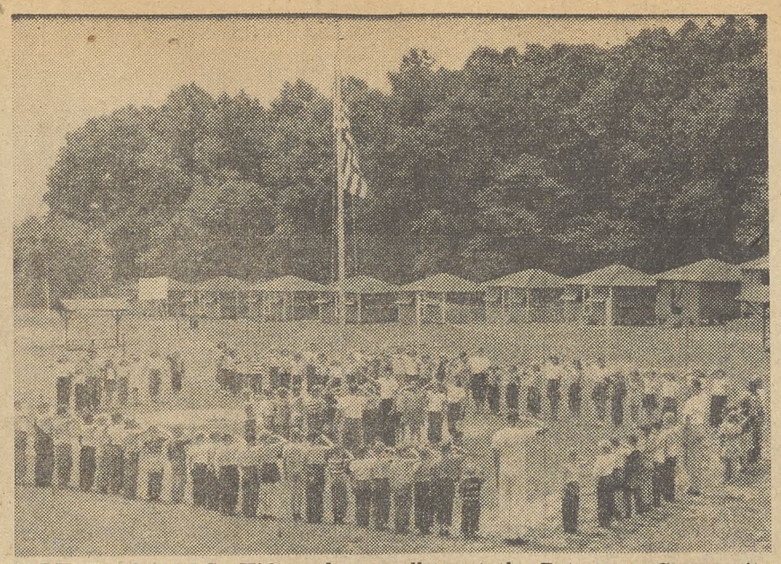
Signs In Storage

Picket signs were stored away—but not destroyed—after the "Big Three" steel companies agreed to accept Pres. Truman's truce proposal.

Rank-and-file determination to win pension, insurance and wage demands was very apparent.

One worker in Homestead, Pa., brandished his picket sign and told a New York Times reporter: "You notice there's no date on that sign. It still will be good in September."

BATTER UP: It's a healthy, happy life at the camp. Here, one of the boys stands, waiting for a pitch. Other sports include basketball, volleyball, swimming, boat rides, various organized types of athletics.



SALUTE TO FLAG: Kids and counsellors at the Pottstown Community Camp stand at attention as the flag is lowered just before sundown. More than half of the children are underprivileged and their board and keep —$14 a week, is paid out of the Fresh Air Community fund, collected by Local 644, aided by another UAW local, by Steelworkers, by Rubber Workers and by Clothing Workers. Salvation Army selects underprivileged.

Summer Camp

In the hills and valleys of Eastern Pennsylvania, there are a lot of summer camps for children. Thousands of kids weekly enjoy life at the camps.

But, in Berks County's lovely Oley Valley, at Earlville, there is located perhaps the most unusual children's camp in Pennsylvania—and probably anywhere in the U. S.

The camp is unusual in that it was bought for the community of Pottstown in nearby Montgomery County by a labor union—Local 644 of the CIO Auto Workers. Local 644 and its Aid Association—the workers are employed by the Spicer Manufacturing Co. — purchased the camp for $25,000 two years ago. About half of kids are underprivileged, selected a union has done so much for a community and its children. (Story by Arthur Riordan; pictures by Edward Pruner, a member of Local 644.)

RIGHT SIZE: A junior counsellor tries a T-shirt for size on one of the girls. Camp store sells ice cream, candy, etc. Each kid is allowed to spend 10 cents on sweets daily (underprivileged kids get their dime, too.)

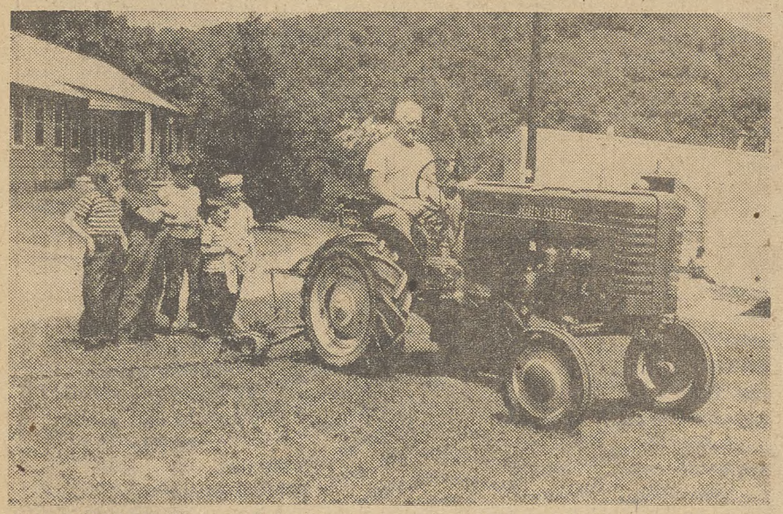
WORKSHOP: The children are taught useful handicraft as part of the day's schedule. Here, girls,—and one little boy kibitzer—make pot-holders. Camp counsellors are recruited from nearby schools; camp has staff of 36. If kid gets more than three letters a week, he must sing song.

INSTRUCTOR: One of the boy counsellors shows three kids how to operate circular saw. Lads make fish and salad boards, wooden slippers, metal bracelets. Pottstown Mercury said editorially: "The humane Auto Unionists who purchased the camp and who are now running it in the interest of childhood, deserve support of community."

VOLLEYBALL: This is one of the busiest sports. Local 644 members did all the repair and maintenance work for free at the camp. All are glad to do their bit. Robert Conner is president of local; Harry Travis, vice president; David Bechtel, financial secretary; John Shaner, recording secretary and chairman of the camp committee; Harold Faust, sergeant at arms; James Kelly, guide; Albert Wunder, Henry Cohen, John Bastian, trustees. Camp has Sunday School for Protestant children; Catholic and Jewish kids are taken into town for services. One boy, asked if he were Catholic or Protestant, replied, "I'm Jimmy."

FIRST AID: Here's the camp hospital. A trained nurse is on the staff. Accidents are rare, luckily. Just to be on the safe side, the $14 weekly fee includes 50c for accident and medical care insurance. Local has a "Blanket Fund." When camp opened, it was found that many underprivileged kids had no blankets, bathing togs, etc. So local members gave $750 for "Blanket Fund."

SHOWERS: Here is the boys' shower room. The modern shower house was built entirely by UAW members. It has the most modern equipment and is one of the showplaces. Camp was lucky in getting a highly experienced director. He is H. Roden Welker, a member of the faculty of Tamaqua, Pa., High and assistant football coach there. He previously had a camp in Maine, but it was burned out in 1946's forest fires. All the staff gets a kick out of the kids. Last year, on underprivileged boy, 10, sat down to Sunday dinner, took his first bite and beamed: "That's the first time I've ever eaten chicken."



VOLUNTEER: Henry Herbine, a member of Local 644, cuts the lawn while a group of admiring campsters look on. Hen takes great pride in his volunteer work for the camp. His son is an active contract committee member at Spicer.

KITCHEN: The camp's three cooks are (l. to r.) Mrs. Minnie (Aunt Min) Reinert, Mrs. A. F. (Sister Teddy) Welker and Mrs. Ella Plum. Typical good menu: ham, potato puffs, string beans, bread, butter, plums and all the milk you can drink.

PARLEY: Dir. Welker (in station wagon) talks over plans with Chm. Shaner (left) and Pres. Conner. Camp will be used later this month for high school pre-season football practice. Next month, UAW will hold a workers' school there.

Uncoordinated Projects—Tragic Story Of Waste

By GLORIA CAPLAN

FIRST THERE are the floods —the stark tragedy of death, homelessness, panic, destruction, untold waste.

Then comes the dry spell—the dreaded drouth. People, animals, and crops alike cry for luxury of water. The farmer watches his crops shrivel and die, sees the wind carry away his top soil—and wonders where to turn next.

In a region harboring the nation's greatest potential wealth, unemployment is rampant.

In a river where the bulk of the nation's salmon spawns, the entire salmon run is about to be wiped out.

In woodlands where the majestic Douglas fir trees grow, greedy private interests hew them down indiscriminately—and soon the trees will disappear from the American scene.

In an area where the earth is rich with minerals, resources remain dormant and untapped.

And the waste is compounded as 30-odd government agencies scramble all over one another to head off establishment of a single agency to halt the waste and harness the wealth.

Actually this story applies to two regions.

● The Missouri River Valley encompasses 500,000 square miles—almost a fifth of the nation geographically. But last year its population was only 15,866,000—only a tenth of the nation's people, and the population is shrinking. States through which the river flows are Montana, Wyoming, North and South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Missouri, Colorado, Minnesota and Iowa.

● The Columbia River basin is smaller, encompassing Washington, Idaho, Oregon and Western Montana, with a population of about four million.

Same Waste

In both regions one finds the same picture — erosion, drouth, flood, power shortage, untapped resources. In both, the Army Corps of Engineers and the Bureau of Reclamation, plus about 30 other government bureaus, are a beehive of conflicting and often wasteful activity—each intent on saving its present jurisdiction from eventual administration by a centralized authority.

For about five years now a bill to create a Missouri Valley Authority and another to create a Columbia Valley Authority have been smoldering in Congressional committees. In the past two months both Senate and House committees have held hearings on the CVA bill. None has been held on MVA.

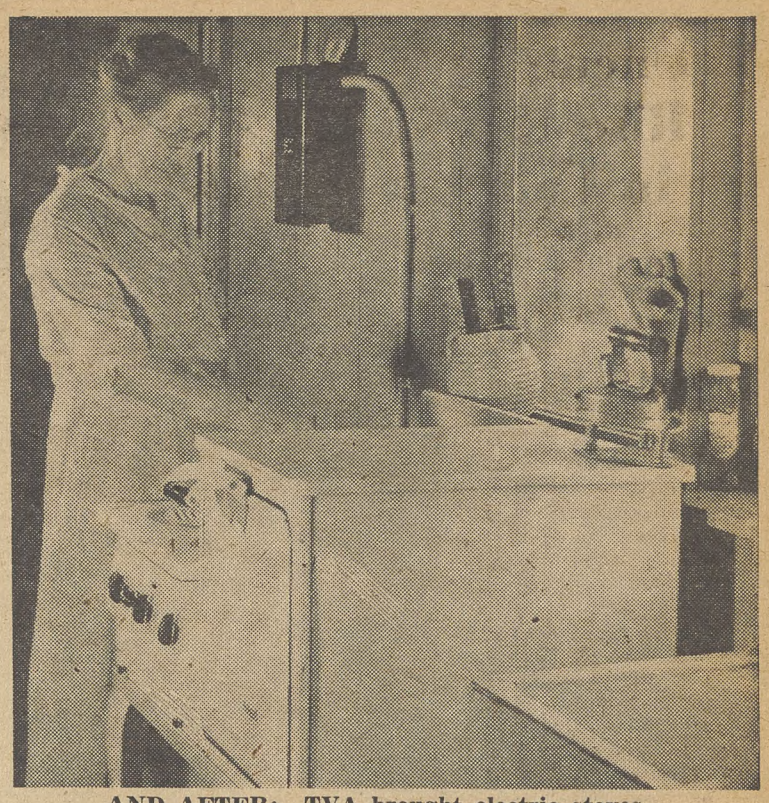
The two bills do not seek more money for development of the the areas. They seek only to coordinate the costly projects now being undertaken haphazardly by numerous bureaus. A single authority would be able to view the area as a whole, in contrast with the present piecemeal practice.

For instance: The Army Engineers are concerned only with navigation and flood control. The Bureau of Reclamation is responsible for developing irrigation and hydroelectric power. Between the mouth of the Missouri River and Sioux City, Iowa, the Engineers are preparing to build a nine-foot navigation channel, authorized by Congress.

Further upstream the Bureau of Reclamation is planning dams for irrigation and power.

But the river does not produce enough water for both projects. If the Engineers go ahead with their plans, they will use up the water so desperately needed for irrigation.

BEFORE TVA: Hot wood stoves were commonplace.



AND AFTER: TVA brought electric stoves.

What's more, the Engineers have no intention of utilizing the hydro-electric potential of the lower river, so an estimated 10 to 15 billion killowatt-hours of electricity, which could light up the dark sections of the valley, will go to waste.

The navigation vs. irrigation struggle is one of the inherent problems in such a vast development program. It can only be solved by a single top authority.

The CIO, sponsors of the CVA and MVA bills, and other public-spirited groups insist that irrigation must have priority, for there is no substitute for water. Water navigation, they argue, while desirable as a cost-reducer and competition-stimulant—is not a dire necessity. But irrigation is.

The Engineers' navigation channel is drawing fire for still other reasons. The Missouri State Dept. of Resources & Development, the Missouri Farms Organization and the Regional Committee for MVA are charging that the Engineers' levees and other navigation work are actually causing more floods with less water than before.

Thus, in the absence of any central planning, the Engineers are going ahead with their $222 million channel; flooding is worse than ever; the unlighted areas in the lower valley will remain dark; and the thirsty upper valley will remain dry and parched.

Then there's the romantic—but heartbreaking—story of a $20 million fishing industry in the Columbia River area—which will be totally wiped out if the Army Engineers proceed under present plans.

Most of the salmon that is served on American tables comes from this area. The big pink fish live in the Pacific Ocean, then swim up the Columbia River and into its tributary, the Snake River, to spawn.

On the way up to the spawning grounds, the fish pass through giant Booneville Dam. There the government has established fish ladders so the fish may pass through unharmed.

Fish Slaughtered

Later, however, when the young fish make the journey back down stream to the ocean, they get get caught up in the huge generators at Bonneville and some 15% die. The remainder make their way to the Pacific.

Experts have been unable to find any way of preventing this loss except by the costly construction of fish hatcheries down below the dams, but the Engineers are not planning to do this. The newly hatched fish could be placed in the river at this point, and would swim in safety to the ocean.

The thousands of people who depend on these fish for a livelihood —indeed the entire town of Astoria, Ore.—are of no concern to the Engineers, however. In their zeal for unnecessary navigation channels, they are planning—and Congress has authorized—construction of four more dams on the Snake River. Another big dam, McNary Dam, is also planned for the Columbia River. This means the young fish would have to hazard the generators of six dams before reaching their ocean home. With a loss of 15% at each dam, 90% would be wiped out in one run, tolling the death knell of an industry.

AS LONG and as furiously as the Army Engineers and Reclamation Bureau have worked to build dams all over the place, the Columbia Valley is still in this sad shape:

● The Columbia River contains 40% of the nation's potential hydroelectric generating capacity—but less than 10% of it is developed. The present power shortage in the region will continue at least five more winters under present schedules.

● The region's vast mineral deposits are largely undeveloped.

● When the Columbia went on a rampage last summer, 51 lives and more than $100 million in property were lost—and nothing is being done to prevent its happening again.

● There are 4 million acres of desert wasteland which could flourish with crops if irrigation were available.

● Almost ¾ of the non-irrigated croplands are in a serious state of erosion.

● A prosperous phosphate fertizer industry could grow up around the region's immense phosphate deposits, which constitute 62% of the nation's reserves. But only 8% of the nation's phosphate fertilizer is being produced.

● Population is increasing faster than jobs, so that unemployment is averaging about twice the national rate. The power shortage is keeping new industry out.

Contrast with all this waste the Tennessee Valley, where a single administration established a unified program which has already developed 100% of the river's power potential, eliminated flood disaster, greatly increased new industry and consequently raised living standards, stimulated soil conservation and reforestation.

Instead of such a unified program, the Columbia Valley has the sort of chaos that permits millions to be spent downstream on flood control, while nothing is done upstream to prevent soil erosion, which causes floods.

Only in such a chaotic system could you find the sort of ridiculous situation Assistant Secy. of Interior C. Girard Davidson recently related to a Congressional committee:

A barge ran on to some rocks on the Columbia River. The barge company asked the Army Engineers, in charge of navigation, to release some water to refloat it. The Enginers said the Reclamation Bureau had charge of the dam. The Bureau in turn said it couldn't because that would reduce the power for a dam owned by a private company. The private company said it would permit the use of water if Bonneville Power Administration would let it have some power above present needs. Bonneville said it had to be paid for the power, because its records were audited by the Comptroller General.

It took another day and a lot of red-tape-cutting before the barge could be refloated.

But that was just one day in the long, tragic story of the most gigantic waste in America today.

Ill. Labor Institute Has New Director

Pres. George D. Stoddard, of the University of Illinois has announced the resignation of Phillips Bradley as director of the University's Institute of Labor and Industrial Relations.

The board of trustees has approved the appointment of Prof. William Ellison Chalmers as acting director of the Institute for one year effective Sept. 1. Bradley will remain on the University staff as full-time professor of political science beginning Sept. 1.

Chalmers holds a half-time assignment as associate professor of economics in the College of Commerce and Business Administration and half-time in the Institue. He has taught at the University of Pittsburgh, University of Wisconsin, Bryn Mawr College, and the American College.

Millionth TVA Consumer

The millionth consumer of TVA electric power modernized his farm near Humboldt, Tenn., by installing $2000 worth of electrical appliances.

During ceremonies at the farm of 50-year-old Chester Williams in Crockett County, officials of the Tennessee Valley Authority reviewed the story of TVA power that has benefited the people of the valley so greatly. They pointed out that the whole nation has felt the effect of TVA in terms of greater federal income taxes and enormous purchases of electrical equipment manufactured in the north and east ($100,000,000 this year alone).

The 100-acre Williams farm grows cotton, corn and strawberries. After 26 years of hand-carried water and wood, it will now have an electric range, a deep freeze unit, an electric pump, and a hot water heater.

Sawyer Visits Mich., Hears Plea For Jobless Aid

Unemployed Rise 1515% In Calumet

By TED OGAR

MICHIGAN labor leaders joined civic, business and industrial representatives in asking Commerce Secy. Charles Sawyer for immediate Federal action to relieve unemployment in the State's so-called distress areas.

Sawyer spent two days visiting Michigan cities as part of a nationwide tour the Secretary is taking to get a first hand look at the downward trend in the economy.

Meeting with labor, small business and industrial leaders, Sawyer expressed the view that he thought business in the Detroit area was "sound."

But the outlook for at least two other sections of the State weren't as rosy. Muskegon, with 12,000 idle workers and additional thousands employed on a part-time basis, is one of the hardest hit areas in the country.

In the Upper Peninsula Copper country unemployment has risen 469% since October, 1948. In Calumet the idle rate has gone up 1,515%.

The once prosperous mining region is facing a recession following the closing of all copper mines in the area. The mines were shut because of inability to compete with low-cost producers in other states.

A SIMULTANEOUS reduction to 30% of capacity has taken place in the logging camps and saw mills. The area is also facing layoffs in the service trades and completion of construction projects in preparation for the winter shutdown.

Representatives of the five "distress" areas—Muskegon, Jackson, Benton Harbor, Port Huron and the Upper Peninsula — reported these and similar reasons for growing idle rolls to Sawyer in a Lansing meeting.

The Muskegon delegation, including Charles Bowers, president of the Port Cities CIO Council, and John Sutton, vice-president of the Muskegon Federation of Labor-AFL, asked Sawyer for special consideration on bids for government contracts submitted by Muskegon industries.

LABOR representatives were placed on the Muskegon delegation at the request of Michigan Gov. G. Mennen Williams and Sawyer after the community's business leaders attempted to monopolize the five-man group.

In addition the communities asked for immediate consideration for Federal public works projects to provide temporary relief. Sawyer said that approximately $60,000,000 will be contributed by the Federal government for Michigan projects during the next fiscal year.

The Upper Peninsula representatives asked for subsidies to permit reopening of the mines and the awarding of contracts to the area's sawmills. The mines employed 1,700 workers.

Spokane Controls Off

Rent controls have been lifted for the city of Spokane, Wash., and all of Spokane county. Housing Expediter Tighe E. Wood was told by the local rent advisory board that the supply of rental housing in the area had caught up with the demand.

Guernsey-Montgomery for the Economic Outlook, CIO.

Revision Urged In Nation's Unemployment Aid System

"UNEMPLOYMENT is a basic challenge to the present ways of running business" in America and a challenge that "must be met successfully," the CIO Economic Outlook warned in its current issue.

"We cannot afford to let things drift into a real depression situation," the publication, issued by the CIO Dept. of Education and Research, declared. "Nor will American workers be satisfied with merely an end to the downward trend. Our population and ability to produce are constantly rising. So must output and levels of living."

The Outlook urged a comprehensive program by government to combat unemployment and stimulate full-production policies by industry, and it called for an immediate and far-reaching overhaul of the country's unemployment compensation system — which it said is quickly needed to "protect the American people from suffering."

America's influence in the world is at stake in the current economic problem, the Outlook said, for "if democracy cannot provide jobs and food, people throughout the world will in despair turn to false leaders, either fascist or communist. . . .

"Only reaction and communism gain through unemployment. We want neither in the United States. But they will flourish if we do not prove that democracy can successfully maintain full employment and lead to ever higher standards of living."

THE OUTLOOK charged that "certain corporation officials welcome the return of fear of layoffs as a necessary aid to factory discipline," and that "some reactionary employers have been waiting for unemployment as their chance to smash unions."

Some diehard employers, with the help of the T-H Act, might be able to use a period of unemployment to destroy some unions, the Outlook said, "but they can't break the desire of American workers for decent homes, food and a fair chance for their kids. Workers will still seek the American dream."

Pointing out that it's easier to maintain full employment conditions than to remedy depressions, the Outlook asserted that "continuation of price controls, better taxation and other laws we supported would have helped to head off the inflationary boom which has led inevitably to the present declines."

IN THE PRESENT situation, the Outlook continued, government help to the jobless through unemployment insurance and relief is "tragically inadequate and requires immediate improvement through Congressional action."

Only two-thirds of the unemployed are receiving their insurance benefits for a variety of reasons: because their particular occupations are not covered, because workers refuse to accept "unsuitable" jobs offered by local employment services; because they have already exhausted their benfits.

"The level of unemployment insurance payments is so low as not to provide a decent living for the two-thirds of the unemployed who receive them," the Outlook pointed out. "This is especially true for workers with dependents. Benefits now average $20 a week.

"CIO unions fought hard in state legislatures this winter to improve the state laws, and certain gains were made. But four-fifths of the states will not pay anybody more than $25 a week, no matter how much he has earned nor how large his family is. Two-fifths of the states have maximums of $20 a week or less."

A NEW NATIONAL law must give adequate benefits to all jobless workers, the Outlook said. It recommended that such new legislation provide for benefits ranging between 60% and 85% of earnings; a period of benefit payments of at least one year; expanded coverage to provide for all jobless workers; limitation of disqualifications; so-called experience rating, affecting the amount of tax paid by the employer, should be abolished; the employment service should be operated as a national organization closely coordinated with employment security programs; and adequate administrative funds should be provided.

"One national system would be more efficient and economical" than the present state-controlled systems, with their varying standards, the Outlook commented.

In addition to the unemployment insurance recommendation, the Economic Outlook called for higher wages for workers; increased minimum wages; a national program of general relief; higher tax exemptions for low income families and elimination of excise taxes; development of public works projects; conservation programs, and regional planning; increased credit for small and new businesses; vigorous antimonopoly action; support for farm family incomes; utilization of government buying power in distressed areas.

4,095,000 Out Of Work, 7½-Yr. High

THE CENSUS Bureau last week reported that the number of unemployed in July reached 4,095,000, the highest number in 7½ years.

This represented a rise of 317,000 over the figure for June and of 1,868,000 over a year ago.

Federal Security Administrator Ewing reported that although initial claims for compensation slackened during the week ending July 23 compared with the preceding week, there was little decrease in the continued claims representing weeks of joblessness.

Initial claims were 316,487 for the week ending July 23 and 341,555 for the week ending July 16. The continued claims for the week ending July 24, 1948, were 1,014,155.

Several State employment security agencies reported that veterans who had been filing claims for Servicemen's Readjustment Allowance benefits had filed initial claims under State unemployment insurance laws in anticipation of the termination of the SRA program for most veterans on July 25.

Ford Workers Win $85,000 Compensation

AN estimated $85,000 in state and GI unemployment compensation checks last week were being issued to 1,200 auto workers at the Richmond, Calif., Ford assembly plant, as result of the CIO United Auto Workers' complete victory in a vital jobless benefits case.

Weeks of appeals, protests and hearings were climaxed 10 days ago when Henry Heide, State Department of Employment referee, upheld the UAW's case that the Richmond workers—laid off when the plant was shut down during the anti-speedup strike at River Rouge in May—were eligible for unemployment compensation. At the same time, the referee rejected Ford management's protest against such payments.

The decision was interpreted as of great importance for all California unions by Atty. Jay Darwin, of UAW counsel, because:

1. In similar cases in New York, Michigan and other Eastern states, where Ford assembly plant workers were laid off after the main plant was struck, benefits were denied.
2. Litigation is continuing regarding more than 2,000 workers at the Long Beach Ford and Maywood Lincoln-Mercury plants, and the decision in the similar Richmond case may serve as a precedent.
3. A contrary decision would have been a strong deterrent to economic action by unions.

Key issue in Fords' argument against paying the benefits was the claim that the assembly plant at Richmond and the River Rouge works were "a single establishment" and that when the UAW walked out in Detroit, it in effect ended its rights to claim unemployment benefits for workers laid off in California when the assembly plant was closed as parts and supplies were exhausted.

Referee Heide rejected this contention, saying in his ruling that "the assembly plant at Richmond is an establishment separate and apart from the main plant in Michigan where the dispute centered."

Further he pointed out that "the employer in the instant case established a new plant at Richmond in order to take over certain functions carried on in Detroit. He cannot be heard to say now that the plant at Richmond is merely a portion of a larger establishment."

Irish Quit WFTU

The Irish Trade Union Congress has voted to withdraw from the Communist-dominated World Federation of Trade Unions.

'Black Pegler' Tries To Smear CIO Leaders

OF COURSE you've heard of Westbrook Pegler. But, have you ever heard of the Black Pegler?

The Black Pegler is one Harold L. Keith, who Peglerizes on the Pittsburgh Courier, of which William G. Nunn is managing editor.

In two recent issues of the Courier, Keith, ignoring the facts in the case, threw mud at these champions of the Negro peoples:

1. The CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination—thus indirectly attacking CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, who is chairman of the committee.
2. George L-P Weaver, director of the committee and assistant to Carey.
3. Willard Townsend, president of the CIO Transport Service Union.
4. The CIO Steelworkers—by implication — thus indirectly smearing CIO and Steelworkers' Pres. Philip Murray.
5. The CIO Auto Workers, thus indirectly hitting at UAW Pres. Walter Reuther, who is also a vice president of CIO.

Weaver and the committee were the first targets of the poison pen. Keith, taking a note from his mentor, Pegler, first tried to smear Weaver by saying that Weaver had been introduced to a meeting at Fisk University as "national assistant secretary-treasurer of the CIO." Of course, that just wasn't true, since Weaver was introduced under his proper title of assistant to the secretary-treasurer.

HAVING STARTED from a false premise, Keith quoted Weaver, properly this time for a wonder, as saying "the unorganized plant in the South is a loaded pistol at the head of the organized plant in the North. The Southern Organizing drive is the most effective way to protect the high labor standards achieved in the North."

Keith took up that remark to make his indirect attack on the Steelworkers. Wrote he: "Many thousands of Negro workers in the North'd point to the fact that right here in Pittsburgh Negroes have been systematically denied upgrading because of contract clauses which set up discriminatory job line classifications in various plants. They'd produce figures to prove that Negroes on the whole have been relegated to 'hard-hot-heavy' and low-paying jobs."

That vague peglerization for which Keith's hero is so famous brought this reply from Weaver:

"I would appreciate it very much if those who have been systematically denied upgrading because of contract clauses, or anyone who has the facts and figures to prove your allegations, would bring them to the attention of the CIO committee or to the Civil Rights Committee of the Steelworkers (as I assume they are steelworkers you are referring to). The Civil Rights Committee of the Steelworkers was created at their 1948 convention to handle cases of this description.

"The elimination of discriminatory practices in unions will come about much quicker if the machinery established for this purpose is properly and effectively utilized by those who are discriminated against, rather than through insinuation and innuendoes in the daily or weekly press."

Up to this point Keith has produced nothing—if he has anything —to back up his un-documented charges.

KEITH, continuing his libel, accused the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination of "running out" on Pres. Truman's civil rights program.

Answered Weaver: "Your comments are inaccurate. For your information, not only Mr. Carey and myself, but the entire CIO legislative apparatus was vigorously thrown into this struggle.

"A casual analysis of the votes cast on the upholding of the Barkley rule during the filibuster fight will clearly demonstrate that there was not an additional senatorial vote to be secured by CIO or minority group influence.

Keith was building up to a climax. What was his solution for all these charges? Either abolish the Committee to Abolish Discrimination or reorganize it—Keith-style.

A Keith committee would be set up like this, he urged:

"(a) it would be entirely disassociated from national executive offices of CIO and its unions.

"(b) Its composition would be decided upon by a popular referendum within the membership of CIO.

"(c) It would be set up on regional basis,

"(d) Its membership would be free from any 'pressure' and its recommendations would be implemented by action of the CIO convention."

Weaver's reply: "Your recommendations for reorganization of the committee are not only frivolous but demonstrate a total ignorance of the sturcture of the American labor movement."

Other CIO leaders said it would be just as silly as having the people of America vote by referendum on the makeup of Congressional committees.

Willard Townsend has been given a lot of key assignments by Pres. Murray. He has represented CIO at home and abroad on many important occasions.

Yet "Westbrook" Keith made a facetious attack on Townsend's missions. The man who has Murray's utmost confidence is called a "gallivanter."

Since the Black Pegler seems to know little or nothing about the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination, we'll reprint the membership of that group just for the record:

Carey, chairman; Townsend, secretary; Weaver, W. Richard Carter, Shipbuilders; Arthur Goldberg, CIO general counsel; Mrs. Bessie Hillman, Clothing Workers; James J. Leary, CIO regional director, Kansas City; William H. Oliver, Auto; Morris Pizer, Furniture; Harry Read, Newspaper Guildman of Carey's staff; M. Hedley Stone, Maritime; Philip Weightman, Packinghouse, and Boyd L. Wilson, Steel.

And, for Keith's information, a group of Negro leaders right in his own home city of Pittsburgh visited Murray on his birthday May 25 to hail him for his work against discrimination.

Among those present, Mr. "Westbrook" Keith, was Mrs. Daisy Lampkins, vice president of your own paper, the Courier. A. R.

Brophy Sees New World Labor Group As Hope For Peace

THE NEW INTL. Trade Union organization now in the preparatory stages will be successful in helping people of the world achieve peace, freedom and social justice, John Brophy, CIO Councils director, has predicted.

Recently returned from Geneva, Switzerland, where he participated in the preparatory conference to shape a new Intl. Trade Union organization, Brophy was interviewed over radio station WCFM, Washington, D. C.

At Geneva, Brophy said, there were representatives from unions in 34 countries. A Preparatory Committee was set up to draft a constitution and program for submission to the next conference in November.

Objectives of the new organization, Brophy said, are:

- To aid development of trade unions in underdeveloped countries
- Further peace among nations
- Cooperate with governmental and non-governmental organizations to protect interests of the people
- Help to guarantee fundamental human rights for all people and rebuild war-devastated economies
- Work to insure full employment and higher standard of living for all peoples, particularly through development of backward countries and non-self-governing territories.

In his travels, Brophy spent some time in France, where he said he noted a much-changed atmosphere since his last visit in 1945. In comparison with the drabness and widespread poverty he observed in 1945, Brophy said Paris this time appeared cheerful and happy. He said the wartime shortages have been largely overcome, and with the exception of coffee and sugar, food rationing has ended.

France still has the problem of overcoming economic instability, due largely to a trade deficit, he added. This deficit is being partly met by Marshall Plan aid.

The economic weakness has had some restraining effect on the French trade unions, Brophy continued, and is largely responsible for workers' dissatisfaction with the communists' political strike method. The pro-communist General Confederation of Workers (CGT) has lost about half its strength due to these tactics, he said, but still remains the strongest union group in the country.

In Italy, also, Brophy (noted) evidences of a decline in communist strength.

In South Wales, Brophy addressed the annual convention of the Natl. Union of Mine Workers.

Delegates, he said, placed main emphasis on the need for more coal production "in the interest of further benefits for the miners and to meet the overall needs of the nation."

Although many shades of political opinion were represented, he said, all considered nationalization of the mines a vast improvement over private ownership. Since 1939 mine wages have almost tripled. Nationalization has brought additional holidays with pay, higher compensation for injuries, more sick pay and other concessions, he said.

To assist the Labor Government in its forthcoming election campaigns, the convention increased the political assessment.

FDR, Jr., To Campaign For House Candidate In Penn.

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

POLITICS WAS in the news quite a bit ahead of its normal time last week.

The Republicans, split about as widely as they ever have been, sat down and labored to bring forth a new chairman to succeed Rep. Hugh (Best Stock) Scott, the man they got tired of. Finally, by the margin of one vote, the GOP put up a nonentity from New Jersey, backed by a coalition of Taft and Stassen forces. As someone at PAC put it, "the flies have captured the fly-paper."

In Virgina, the Byrd machine won again, but got the scare of its life. In fact, it was the first time in the quarter of a century of Byrdism that its leading candidate failed to gain a majority of the primary votes.

In Pennsylvania, the Republican machine, callous as ever, has thrown tradition to the winds and is sending big guns into the 26th District in an attempt to beat Mrs. Robert Coffey. She is seeking the Congressional seat made vacant by the death in an air crash of her war hero son, Rep. Robert Coffey (D.).

Gov. James Duff and Sen. Edward Martin, both conservative Republicans, are going into the district to campaign for Mrs. Coffey's opponent, a man named Saylor. However, Mrs. Coffey, who visited Pres. Truman last week, will have Rep. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., as one of her campaigners.

Also of interest in Pennsylvania is the fact that for the first time since the Earle Administration, the Democrats have outnumbered the Republicans this year in new registrations. The Republicans still hold the lead, but their margin has been reduced considerably. Democratic officials credit labor and the veterans for the gains.

In New York, the uneasy coalition called Fusion seemed to be headed for Con-Fusion. A definite split developed between the Liberal Party, which wanted Robert F. Wagner, Jr., for president of Manhattan Borough, and the Republicans, who wanted none of him.

In California, the Northern California PAC conference declared "The era of political action on a five-alarm basis is finished. The longer we wait until the last two months before elections to organize our forces or to raise money and expect to win. That's why we have to get started now for 1950!"

In Minnesota, CIO and other liberals were looking even beyond 1950 to 1951 and the legislative elections.

IN VIRGINIA, in addition to the score given the Byrd machine, newspapers apparently had agreed on a veil of silence over the fact that Temple Kessinger, president of a CIO Paperworkers' local, had won Democratic nomination to the State legislature.

As the CIO News went to press, it was probably unknown to Virginians outside his district. Even the newspapers of nearby Roanoke did not mention the fact that Kessinger was a CIO man or that he was anti-Byrd.

Kessinger, president of local 675, is a rewinder in the finishing room of the West Virginia Pulp & Paper Co. Plant, Covington, over near the West Virginia line. He was backed by CIO, AFL and brotherhoods and is the first CIO member ever to be nominated. Such nomination is usually tantamount to election in the fall.

In another upset, the anti-Byrd forces defeated G. Alvin Massenburg, Dixicrat Speaker of the Virginia House.

IN PHILADELPHIA, the Republicans are having a tough time this year, as a result of last year's City Hall shortages scandals.

Several times, the GOP announced it had completed a slate for this fall's "Row" offices elections. Several times announced candidates withdrew.

Finally, a slate was completed, headed by an insurance broker, a meat packer and the chancellor of the bar association.

Heading the Democratic ticket will be Richard Dilworth, who received the highest Democratic vote ever two years ago for mayor.

THE CALIFORNIA conference covered the over-all political picture in the Far Western States, focused on Congress and the California legislature, touched on possible State and Federal candidates, and emphasized the developing co-operation of CIO, AFL and independent labor groups with "the people's forces" in the Democratic and—in some cases—the Republican parties—a cooperation which gives promise of victory in '50.

Top CIO Political Action Committee officials reported to the Northern California CIOers. They were George B. Roberts, CIO-PAC western regional director, and Morris Zusman, state director of the California National CIO-PAC.

They made plain the outcome of the 1950 campaign will mean "bread and butter" for every CIO member in the state.

Members and officers of more than a dozen CIO affiliates—including Steel, Auto, Textile, Telephone, Woodworkers, Clothing, Longshore, Furniture, Rubber, Utility, Railroad and Newspaper Guild—participated in the session.

Frank Dorsey Dies

Frank J. G. Dorsey, 58, Philadelphia regional director of the U. S. Dept. of Labor's Wage and Hour and Public Contracts Divisions since August, 1939, died July 13.

Dorsey was also chairman of the Department of Labor for the region embracing Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, and West Virginia.

Locals Give Money For Minn. Research

CIO UNIONS in Minnesota are beginning to contribute money for financing the state CIO Council's permanent research department.

Scope of the research will be limited only by amount of funds received from the CIO locals.

A membership meeting of the Newspaper Guild of the Twin Cities (Minneapolis and St. Paul) has recommended that each member contribute at least a dollar to the project, and the Guild's executive board has voted an advance payment of $100 to get the wheels turning. A Steelworkers' local at Bovey, on the Iron Range, has kept pace with the Guild.

Need for a permanent research project became obvious during the 1949 session of the Minnesota state legislature. The CIO, in co-operation with the Railroad Brotherhoods and the American Veterans Committee, set up research offices for the duration of the session near the State Capitol in St. Paul. The CIO financed its share of the project by voluntary contributions from membership which totaled approximately $4,000, much less than an adequate sum.

Liberal legislators were extravagant in their praise of the help thus given them, but pointed out that if there were a permanent research setup, much more ground could be covered and foolproof bills could be prepared well in advance of any session.

Some of these legislators appeared before the state CIO board and told how they were handicapped in fighting for certain bills because it had been impossible, under the temporary research setup, to provide all the information required.

Acting on these suggestions and on reports from CIO representatives who were engaged in research during the session, the state board then set up the permanent department.

Fight Planned For Mass. Benefit Bill

A bill to provide a cash sickness benefit plan for workers under a state fund was killed by three votes in the Massachusetts House.

"The 115 to 112 roll call vote was a slender and inconclusive victory for the powerful insurance lobbies," states the Massachusetts CIO Council, and adds that the fight has just started. Both CIO and AFL unions, it says, "will hold mass meetings in every section of the state to tell the sorry tale of what went on at the State House."

The legislation (H-2591) which has the strong support of labor and liberal groups would provide a system of cash sickness insurance benefits similar to plans already in effect in New York, New Jersey, Rhode Island and California.

In a radio broadcast sponsored by the Massachusetts United Labor Committee, Gov. Dever, warm advocate of the bill, said it would provide for "insurance rather than a dole; for contributions by the beneficiaries rather than a handout and for savings against a rainy day rather than a public welfare relief."

N. J. CIO Urges Cut In 7c Fare

Speed in the appointment by Governor Driscoll of "an avowed consumer representative to the State Public Utility Commission" and in reduction by the PUC of the 7c bus fare being charged by Public Service Corporation has been urged by Pres. Carl Holderman of the New Jersey CIO Council.

In a letter to the Governor, Holderman charged that Public Service has "reaped net profits after taxes of 241% during the past year. He said that "every day the PUC procrastinates on its decision the Public Service Corporation extracts additional thousands of dollars in net profits that are unjustified from the riding public —money which will never be returned. Holderman wrote:

"Therefore, Governor, we hope you won't give the PUC any further excuses for delay. Appoint a good, public representative to the PUC and let's get the bus fare down to a safe and sane level again."

A gift of a "stroller" for crippled children has been presented to the Children's Memorial Hospital, Omaha, Neb., by CIO Packinghouse Workers Local 60.

STANLEY EARL
Named To ECA Post

Ore. CIO Leader Gets ECA Post

Economic Cooperation Administrator Hoffman has appointed Secy.-Treas. Stanley W. Earl of the Oregon CIO Council as labor adviser to the ECA Mission in Korea. The appointment is effective immediately.

Earl has been secretary-treasurer of the Oregon Council since 1943. He is a member of the International Woodworkers of America, and was financial secretary of that union in 1942 and 1943. During the past six years he has also served as legislative representative for the Oregon Council.

NLRB OK's Poll Asked By Guild

AN ELECTION among several categories of workers on the Chicago Journal of Commerce has been ordered by the Natl. Labor Relations Board—over demands of the publisher that the poll should wait until the AFL typographical union strike is finished.

The election was asked by the CIO Newspaper Guild.

The paper has been operating, as have other Chicago papers, through use of the vari-type process, which eliminates the setting of type by machinery. The process, however, is slower than ordinary typesetting and has other disadvantages.

The publishers have employed vari-type machine operators, typists, pasters, head setters and copy boys to handle the vari-type operation.

The CIO Newspaper Guild organized this group on the Chicago Journal of Commerce, except the machine operators, and asked the NLRB to conduct an election. The publisher and the Guild agreed to exclude the machine operators over whom the Typos claim jurisdiction.

The Journal management asked that a NLRB election be held off until 60 days after the settlement of the strike now in its 21st month, but the board ruled:

"The record contains no indication as to when the strike will end. We shall under these circumstances not deprive the employes in the unit found appropriate of the benefits of the act during the indefinite period that the strike may continue."

The board granted the Guild's request for including in a single editorial bargaining unit the typists, pasters, head setters and copy boys.

DENHAM REVERSED

NLRB GENERAL Counsel Denham is having difficulty making his ideas stick.

The NLRB gave Denham a lesson in interstate commerce when it reversed him in one case in the Pittsburgh area.

Denham last September got an injunction—pending a board decision — against seven building trades unions charged with a secondary boycott on a drive-in theater being built at Bridgeville.

An NLRB trial examiner who subsequently heard the case found that only Local 5 of the AFL Electrical Workers, had violated the secondary boycott ban by asking members of other unions to quit the project because one electrical sub-contractor did not employ IBEW members.

The NLRB itself then found that the contractor and all of the sub-contractors with one exception purchased all materials from Pennsylvania houses and worked entirely inside Pennsylvania.

The sub-contractor who was an exception had a very minor bit of work to do on the theater, the NLRB discovered.

Accordingly, the Board said that it had no jurisdiction, the case not being in interstate commerce.

IN N. Y. AND KY.

TRIAL examners reversed Denham in two other cases, one in New York City and the other in Owensboro, Ky.

In both cases unions were charged with violating the secondary boycott provisions of T-H.

In the New York case, Trial Examiner Arthur Leff ruled that a union can picket the premises of a second employer provided his property is the actual site of a primary labor dispute.

The case involved a secondary boycott charge brought against AFL Teamsters Local 807 of New York City by Sterling Beverages, Inc., beer distributors of North Westport, Mass. Local 807 picketed Sterling trucks at the Jacob Ruppert Brewery in New York.

Local 807 picketed the Sterling trucks when Sterling refused to hire Local 807 members to take its trucks in and out of the brewery for loading and unloading. A single picket patrolled the sidewalk in front of the entrance to the Ruppert loading platform whenever a Sterling truck showed up.

Leff said that this was primary picketing of Sterling's only place of business in New York and was not a violation of the Taft-Hartley Act. He recommended dismissal of charges against the union. Unless contested by one of the parties within 20 days, the examiner's recommendation was to take effect as a Board order.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Flash! Vice Pres. Jack Livingston, CIO Auto Workers, telephoned that the Auto Workers won overwhelmingly in an NLRB election at the Chance Vought Aircraft division of United Aircraft, Grand Prairie, Tex. The vote was: UAW, 2,491; IAM, 653; no union, 718. Commendation is given the work of UAW Rep. Joe Sayen, Robert Oliver, Texas director, and the CIO Southern Drive staff. Sayen was assisted by Paul Krebs, George Arnold, Myron Dmyterko, Tony Bilger and the staff of the Dallas UAW sub-regional office.

Another news call from Texas! Mike Quill's Transport Workers have been chosen by the bus drivers of the Houston Transit Co. The vote: TWU, 728; AFL, 21; Neither, 380. Campaign was directed by Carl McPeak, of the Southern Drive, assisted by Dick Fisher, TWU board member; Frank McCarty and Dan Blanton.

Things are looking good deep in the heart of Texas!

Good news! Following the decision of the NLRB in Michigan upholding the Union, Pres. Joseph Beirne of CWA-CIO advises that telephone companies throughout the country are accepting the decision to recognize the union. This means company recognition of the union, resumption of the check-off remittances and all union functions of CWA-CIO. This is true everywhere except in the areas of Washington and Southern California and with the further exception where CWA agreed to an election in the Southern States—an election now being held which CWA definitely will win.

CWA is now enabled to move full scale into the organizing campaigns which with the CIO they have already started or planned.

Over last weekend I met with the Paperworkers' executive board in Cedar Point, Ohio. Reports to this board were similar to those flowing into the National offices of many CIO Unions. They show a sinister pattern of identical employer opposition to the advancement of union goals both in collective bargaining and new organization.

Our answer—and the only successful answer—to this type of attack must be to strengthen and build our unions on all fronts.

Recently I sat in with Pres. Mike Quill of the Transport Workers, Louis Hollender, New York State CIO Council President, and Morris Iushewitz, New York City Council Secretary, with a committee of the New York Newspaper Guild during negotiations of the Guild with the New York Post Home News.

It is gratifying to receive from Exec. Vice Pres. Thomas J. Murphy of the New York Guild the report that an amicable settlement has been reached bringing wage, holiday, vacation, severance pay and security improvements as well as a reduced work week. The settlement is subject to the approval of the membership.

The New York Post Home News has a liberal tradition which, reflected in its treatment of its employes, can command the respect of Labor.

The ANG reports new locals have been chartered in Montreal for editorial employes of the daily Herald and the weekly Standard, in Ottawa for editorial employes of the Citizen and in Tyler, Texas. Going into new territory, the Guild won a vote of 32-8 among editorial employes of the Greensboro, N. C., Daily News-Record. Intl. Rep. Ward Melody was in charge.

Progressive Metalworkers Council of the CIO Shipbuilders rolled up 1949 votes against 555 for AFL and 440 for no union at the big Scovill Mfg. Co. plant in Waterbury, Conn. The victory brings all three of the major Waterbury brass plants under PMC, the others being American Brass and Chase Brass & Copper Co.

Pres. Martin Wagner of the CIO Chemical Workers reports two election victories. At Federal Mining and Smelting, St. Louis, Mo., the vote was 72 for Chemical Workers, against 29 for AFL and 10 for no union. In Kankakee, Ill., an election at General Mills, Inc., was won, 47 for the Chemical Workers to 2 for no union.

The Byrd machine, the reactionary crew which runs the state of Virginia by virtue of a poll tax which disenfranchises the majority of voters, won its expected victory in the primaries last week.

One solid crack in the Bryd front was shown, however, in Covington, Virginia. There, Temple Kessinger, President of CIO Paperworkers' Local 675, of which International Union I have the honor of being a member, won the nomination for House of Delegates against the incumbent Byrd candidate.

Reg. Dir. Fullerton Fulton reports the CIO Shoe Workers won production workers at the Connolly Shoe Co., Stillwater, Minn., by a vote of 110 to 51.

CIO Woodworkers won representation at the CAR-AD-CO plant, Klamath Falls, Ore., by a vote of 59 to 52, it is reported by Reg. Dir. Chester C. Dusten. IWA Reps. Tim Sullivan, Joe Huber and Hal Geiger conducted the campaign with assistance from Reg. Dir. Chester Dusten.

Reg. Dir. Frank Cronin reports a victory at the plants of the Bar-Tack Manufacturing Co. in Auburn and Nebraska City, Neb., where the employes voted for the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers, 90 to 48. Earl Graham of the Amalgamated was in charge.

German Visitors Pleased By U. S. Unions

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

THEY'VE been getting around, those German trade unionists who have been coming to the United States in groups of 11 to 15 since last spring.

Many CIO'ers have met some of them, for they've been visiting scores of CIO unions and plants in industrial centers in the East, South and Midwest. And some of them have stayed in the homes of German-speaking CIO workers in Pittsburgh, Detroit and other places.

The groups are being brought to the U. S. by arrangement with the American Military Government in Germany, under the sponsorship of the Dept. of Labor's Office of Intl. Labor Affairs, to study American trade union methods and activities.

The program for the German unionists' visit in this country was planned in cooperation with the Dept. of Labor's Trade Union Advisory Committee, through a three-man subcommittee on international relations.

Mike Ross, director of the CIO's Dept. of Intl. Affairs, is the CIO member of the committee which includes also a representative from the railroad unions.

GERMAN TRADE UNIONISTS on a two-month visit to the U. S. to see at first hand how our unions operate, meet government, union and press representatives at the Dept. of Labor in Washington. The Germans are seated around the table.

purpose of studying American trade unions.

SO FAR FOUR separate groups have come to the U. S. under this project. Two of the groups have come and gone. A third group of 14 was in Washington last week, on the last lap of their two months' visit, and a fourth group which came over in July is now on a tour.

Five members of this fourth group spent last week at the CIO Steelworkers school at Penn State College.

Four of the trade unionists in this group were inmates of Hitler's concentration camps and others have behind them records of long resistance against the Nazis.

Wilhelm Kleinknecht, secretary of the executive committee, Wurtemberg-Baden Federation of Trade Unions, a heavy-set stern-faced man of 56, who speaks no English, was confined at the Heuberg concentration camp.

Otto Kraus, leader of the Nuremberg industrial trade union and Hardware Workers union, spent three years at Dachau. Peter Zink, chairman of the Works Council, Siemens-Reininger Werke in Erlangen, also was a prisoner at Dachau, and Walter Schiffel of Nuremberg, a former miner, who is now an official at the Northern Bavaria regional labor office, was imprisoned by the Nazis.

THERE WERE two women in the group, both of whom were interested in the position of women in the trade union movement in the U. S.

Margarete Ultsch of Munich, an official in the Bavarian Ministry of Labor and Social Welfare, said she was astounded to see how few women took an active part in union activities in the U. S., even in unions made up largely of women members. She said there were no women at all present at some union meetings she attended, and she met no women union officials.

She asked if this was the fault of the women. Were they plainly indifferent, or was it because they were not encouraged by the men to take part?

Miss Herta Obermayr, of Rosenheim, member of a local administration board for public management and administration, said her observations of union activity in the U. S. led her to believe that women played an important role in American unions. She said she had met a number of outstanding women leaders at unions she visited.

The men, too, had a wide variety of opinions about U. S. unions and working conditions in the plants, based on what they had happened to see on their tours.

Eduard Kalb of Munich and Paul Miesbeck of Nuremberg, both plant managers, made a tour planned by the American Management Association.

Two of the trade unionists who were the most vocal in expressing their impressions were Kraus and Kleinknecht.

Kraus, who was struck with the high standard of living of American workers, commented that in Germany management argued that the level of living depends on the efficiency of the workers.

Yet he noted that in some 30 plants he visited, he found that U. S. workers had to work much less hard than they did in German plants. He concluded that high production comes not so much from the hard work done by the employes as from better plant organization.

Even under the present poor economic conditions in Germany, Kraus felt that German employers could do much more to lighten the labor of the workers than they do, and could learn much from U. S. methods. He found American management's attitude toward labor much better than he had expected to find in such a highly capitalistic country, he said.

Kleinknecht also admitted that he was surprised to find that the industrial scene was not such a "rat race" for workers as he had expected it would be. He saw no outstanding speed-up, and was surprised at the easy, friendly attitude between workers and bosses. He even heard some workers call their bosses by their first names, Kleinknecht said.

The two management representatives seemed somewhat put out by some of the remarks made by the unionists. Kalb remarked somewhat sourly, that one got the impression from what the unionists said that all bosses were angels in the U. S. and all devils in Germany.

All agreed on at least one thing—that they were deeply impressed by the warmth and friendliness of the Americans they met. They were pleased to be treated not as former enemies, but as welcome visitors.

Members of the German groups sent to this country are selected by German unions and cleared by AMG. Experts in the fields of education, government, agriculture and industry, as well as labor, are being sent over under a broad program aimed to help the systematic introduction of democratic ideas into Germany.

MARGARET ULTSCH

An official of the Bavarian Ministry of Labor and Social Welfare, Margaret Ultsch thinks U.S. women unionists keep too much in the background.

The program for foreign workers sponsored by the Dept. of Labor is distinct from the one being conducted under the Economic Cooperation Administration. The foreign workers who have been coming to the U. S. under the ECA program are studying industrial productivity. The German groups uunder the Labor Dept.'s program come for the primary

Oil Unions Ask Truman To Give Denham Gate

The Executive Council of the CIO Oil Workers Intl. Union has asked Pres. Truman to discharge Robert N. Denham, general counsel of the Natl. Labor Relations Board. (Denham at the right). The Council charged that Denham had made a deal with the major oil companies to deny hearings for more than 250 members of the union fired from their West Coast jobs. The NLRB General Counsel was further accused of deciding — before the men had received a hearing — that they should not be rehired. (See Story On Page 2.)

Ford Strike Authorized

Members of the CIO Auto Workers employed by the Ford Motor Co. have voted by a better than six to one margin to authorize calling of a strike if the company persists in its refusal to grant the union's demands. Below, UAW members are seen outside the voting booths at the River Rouge plant, which may be seen in the background. (See Story On Page 3.)

Deal With Major Oil Companies Charged

Oil Workers Request Truman Fire Denham

By RAY DAVIDSON

CHARGING that Robert N. Denham, general counsel for the National Labor Relations Board, made a scandalous deal with major oil companies, the Executive Council of the CIO Oil Workers Intl. Union, has petitioned President Truman to remove Denham from office.

The ruling body of the CIO oil union at a meeting in Denver sent the President a telegram in which it was charged that Denham has used "dictatorial power at the request of major oil companies" in denying fair hearings before the NLRB to 253 members of the union discharged in California by major oil companies.

"We understand that the 'deal' to stop these hearings . . . was consummated through Washington lobbyist Gerard Reilly and Denham's close friend and former associate, Charles M. Brooks (who is now labor counsel for the Texas Company, one of the companies involved)," the Executive Council said in its wire to President Truman.

"We will cooperate with you in the full investigation of his scandal," the Council added. Full text of the wire follows:

"In November of last year several major oil companies in California discharged approximately 253 employes for union activities. Charges were filed in their behalf with the regional officer of the NLRB. After investigation of these charges the Regional Directors involved concluded that these charges were well founded and had ordered hearings thereon before the Board.

"We now find that Robert N. Denham, general counsel for the NLRB, who has dictatorial power with respect to such charges under the Taft-Hartley Act, has used this dictatorial power at the request of the major oil companies in denying these unfortunate employes even a hearing before the Board. We understand that the 'deal' to stop these hearings in the interest of these ruthless employers was consummated through Washington lobbyist Gerard Reilly and Denham's close friend and former associate, Charles M. Brooks (who is now labor counsel for the Texas Company, one of the companies involved).

"Due to these tactics to defeat the rights of workers to a 'day in court' we urge you to take immediate steps to remove Robert Denham from office, and to take further steps to see that these victims have a hearing on their merited charges.

"We will cooperate with you in the full investigation of this scandal. We wish to call to your attention that when Senator Downey first inquired into this matter that Denham tried to pass the responsibility to his subordinates, but that when the Senator investigated further Denham finally admitted personal responsibility. Please let us know what relief we may expect."

This wire was signed by O. A. Knight, president; A. R. Kinstley, vice-president; T. M. McCormick, secretary-treasurer; W. A. Urban, E. L. Stanfield, T. F. Scarbrough, L. L. Crane, A. W. Mitchell, George Carlson and Leo F. Brady, members of Executive Council.

The Oil Workers subsequently issued a news release telling of the telegram to the President. The Denver Post then interviewed Denham, who was quoted as saying "the discharged employes were not rehired by the oil companies because of violence on the picket line last fall."

Because of Denham's statement the Oil Workers' Executive Council sent this second wire to Truman:

"Oil Workers Intl. Union (CIO) has 253 unfair labor practices cases pending in California against oil companies which fired our members for union activities.

"General Counsel Robert N. Denham of NLRB has refused these men hearings. They have had no opportunity to present their evidence and neither Mr. Denham nor his staff has had an opportunity to hear the evidence.

"Yet Mr. Denham told the Denver Post in a telephone conversation on Aug. 10, 1949, that 'the discharged employes were not rehired by the oil companies because of violence on the picket line during the strike in California last fall.'

"Thus Mr. Denham has rendered a verdict in these cases—that the men were fired for violence—without hearing the evidence.

"We deeply resent this unfair and Unamerican form of finding men guilty before trying them. We believe that in so doing Mr. Denham violates all principles of the U. S. Constitution, American precepts of law and plain decency.

"For that reason we urge that Mr. Denham be removed from office because he is prejudiced and unfit to administer the law."

CIO OIL WORKERS Intl. Union has started a new education program over radio station KMJ, Fresno, for its hundreds of members scattered at production fields and refineries throughout California. Participating in the first discussion on "Full Employment" are Paul Jacobs, district educational director of the union; E. L. Stanfield, member of the OWIU executive committee, and Refinery Worker Al Lynch.

Denham 'Hit' Twice In Week

This is beginning to sound like a broken record.

NLRB General Counsel Robert N. Denham was twice overruled by the five-man Natl. Labor Relations Board last week.

Both cases involved issues long in dispute between Denham and the Board—one, the definition of "interstate commerce," the other, the application of Taft-Hartley's secondary boycott bans.

In a case involving a bar and grill in Oakland, Calif., the Board ruled it had no jurisdiction, since the cafe was not in interstate commerce. Anxious as always to get his hands on a case, Denham had insisted it was.

The other case involved CIO Electrical Workers at the Bucyrus-Erie plant in Evansville, Ind.

At the time Bucyrus-Erie employes struck in a wage dispute, the Ryan Construction Co. was building an addition to the plant. When UE pickets posted themselves at a gate used by the construction workers, the latter refused to cross a picket line.

Denham had insisted the picketing constituted an illegal secondary boycott, even though a few weeks previously the board had ruled otherwise on a similar case.

Denham's ears were pinned back again. The board ruled the workers had the right to picket the premises, since this constituted primary picketing.

Unionists In Canada

Trade union membership in Canada has reached an all-time high of almost a million, the Canadian Labor Dept. has reported. The exact total at the end of 1948 was 977,594, a jump of 65,470 over 1947 and of 266,000 over 1945.

George Baldanzi

Baldanzi Chosen Dixie Drive Head

GEORGE BALDANZI, executive vice-president of the Textile Workers Union of America, has been named national director of the CIO Organizing Committee, it was announced by CIO Pres. Philip Murray after a meeting of the CIO Organizing Committee at Pittsburgh last week.

The committee, headed by CIO Organizational Director Allan S. Haywood, also appointed John Riffe as assistant director of the Southern drive.

Baldanzi will succeed Van A. Bittner, who died July 19 at his home, Crafton, Pa.

Baldanzi had been an assistant director of the Organizing Committee since the CIO's southern membership campaign was launched in the summer of 1946.

As a youth Baldanzi worked in the coal mines of Pennsylvania. Later he moved to Patterson, N. J., where he worked in the textile industry. He played a leading role in organizing the old Dyers Federation, of which he was president until 1936.

He later became head of the United Textile Workers (AFL) and helped bring about its merger with the CIO Textile Workers Organizing Committee. The merged group was named Textile Workers Union of America and Baldanzi has served as its executive vice president since 1939.

Baldanzi, generally regarded as one of the outstanding public speakers in the trade union movement, is chairman of the CIO Italian-American Trade Union Committee and a member of the CIO Community Services Committee. He also is a member of the CIO Executive Board.

Baldanzi is married and has one child. During recent years he has spent a large part of his time in the South, working closely with Bittner and others connected with the CIO Organizing Committee.

Riffe, member of the United Steelworkers of America, had worked closely with Bittner for a number of years and was named one of his assistants when the CIO Organizing Committee was established.

The Committee at its Pittsburgh meeting adopted a resolution lauding Bittner's work in the organizing field and pledged continuation of the campaign he had been directing in the South.

In NLRB Polls It's CIO 5 To 3

During April, May and June, 50,795 workers cast ballots for the CIO in NLRB elections. This compares with 30,023 ballots cast for the AFL.

These figures were issued by the Natl. Labor Relations Board for the three-month period, and included one-union, two-union and three-union elections.

House Passes 75c Bill But Cuts Coverage By Million

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

THE HOUSE Dixiecrat-Republican coalition has passed a sweet-and-sour wage-hour bill.

The conservatives agreed, with some reluctance, to a 75c minimum wage—a 35c-an-hour increase from the present 40c base pay rate.

Then they jumped around and slashed the coverage of the Wage-Hour Law by upwards of a million workers.

The bill now goes to the Senate—where another wage-hour bill (S. 653) also provides for the 75c rate, but with about a 600,000 increase in the number of workers protected by the law.

The Dixie-GOP coalition did its knifing job through the medium of a substitute bill sponsored by Rep. Wingate Lucas (D., Tex.). It was approved by the House in preference to a bill by Rep. John Lesinski (D., Mich.), head of the Labor Committee. His bill, like the Senate version yet to be voted upon, would have increased wage-hour coverage by several hundred thousand.

The Lucas substitute, as it first hit the House floor, provided for what some Congressmen described as an "escalator-descalator" minimum wage. It called for a 65c minimum, which would move up or down with the cost of living.

But many northern industrial groups, worried by low-wage southern competition, put pressure on northern Republicans to remove the floating minimum provision. So, on a 186-116 teller vote, the flat 75c figure was inserted into the Lucas amendment.

THE SUBSTITUTE was opposed by labor and by the Administration on grounds that wage-hour protection should be lifted, not decreased. So, when the substitute package came up in final form, the liberals voted against it—in hope of defeating the Dixie-gop version and passing the Lesinski Bill.

But the Dixie-gops carried the day, and the Lucas proposal was carried by a 225-181 vote. Next day, with passage of the substitute an accomplished fact, it received the votes of all Congressmen except the handful of bitter-end opponents of any sort of minimum wage. Final vote was 361-35.

The Labor Dept. estimated, on the basis of preliminary surveys, that about 155,000 workers not now covered would come under the law, if it is finally passed in present form—while about 1,160,000 now covered would lose that protection.

It also estimated that about 1,300,000 workers now earning between 40c and 74c an hour would get pay raises as a direct result of the law.

Biggest groups losing coverage would be employes of sawmills hiring fewer than 12 workers; certain classes of employes in retail and service establishments; and perhaps about three-quarters of a million workers in various industries whose jobs are held to be not "indispensable" to production-such as plant guards, etc.

On the final tally, the House liberal bloc found itself forced either to vote for a bill cutting out more than a million workers from wage-hour benefits or to vote to send the bill back to committee. That latter course would have practically guaranteed no wage-hour legislation this year.

THE CIO Legislative Committee—in a statement issued by John Edelman, Washington representative of the Textile Workers Union—urged supporters of better legislation to vote for the bill, in the belief that a better measure will emerge from the Senate.

"Some of the finest liberals in the House are worried as to whether they should vote for a bill which includes manifest improvements (the 75c an hour minimum) but also robs a considerable number of workers of the protection they now enjoy under the Wage-Hour Act," he said.

"This is just the trap that the pro-sweatshoppers are hoping the decent legislators will fall into. If the present bill is defeated, we will be back to 40 cents an hour indefinitely.

"The CIO is convinced that the Senate will correct the injustices in the House Bill. It is the manifest obligation of forward-looking members of the House of Representatives to pass the pending bill.

"If the Senate-House conferees fail to substantially restore the coverage which was so viciously torn from the Fair Labor Standards Act in the House, it will be time enough then to vote 'No'."

IT WAS a topsy turvy parliamentary situation under which the wage-hour bill finally moved to a House vote.

The Lesinski Bill (HR 5856), which lifted minimum wages from 40 cents an hour to 75c, would have brought nearly 350,000 additional workers under the minimum wage section of the law. And it would have brought nearly a million workers—in such categories as airline, pipe lines and motor transport maintenance, food processing, etc.—under protection of the overtime provisions of the law

HR 5856 was a considerably watered-down version of an earlier Lesinski bill, which would have permitted minimum wage rates to go to $1 an hour and would have extended wage-hour coverage to millions.

But even that watered-down bill was too much for the Dixie-gops.

Into the hopper they threw the Lucas amendment. In its original form, it proposed—in addition to lopping a million workers out of wage-hour protection—the lifting of minimum wages from 40 to 65c an hour on a sliding-scale arrangement. That sliding scale, hooked to the cost of living, would have permitted minimum wages to drop as low as 50c an hour.

The sliding scale trick was attacked by supporters of a strong minimum wage, and by businessmen who didn't like the idea of monkeying with the intricacies of a wage-scale every time living costs dipped or lifted.

Typical of enlightened employer objections to this up-and-down minimum was the letter of Rochester, N. Y., clothing manufacturers. They said it would cause a "state of uncertainty for manufacturers and retailers alike, because neither could have any assurance as to what their basic costs would be for a reasonable period of time."

The Dixie-gop coalition split, for a moment, on the sliding minimum issue.

Wage Bill Summarized

Minimum wages: Increased from 40c an hour to 75c an hour.

Overtime: Maintains present 40 hour week, as well as weakening features contained in 1947 portal-portal bill and the 1949 overtime premium pay bill.

Exemptions: "Fringe" employes whose work is not "indispensable" to production, such as plant guards; executive, administrative, professional, local retailing employes, outside salesmen, local laundry employes; seamen; fishermen and fish cannery employes; agricultural workers; employes of newspapers with less than 5,000 circulation; employes of street railway or bus lines; food processing workers employed within the "area of production"; phone operators on exchanges of less than 500 connections; cab drivers; employes of small telegraph stations; employes of sawmills employing less than 12 workers.

Penalties: Employers who "wilfully" violate the law are subject to up to six months jail and up to $10,000 fine. Those who can prove they violated the law "unwilfully" cannot be so penalized.

House Shows Its Gallantry

Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas (D. Calif.) pleaded with fellow Congressmen not to increase wage-hour exemptions on small telephone exchanges.

A proposed amendment would have exempted exchanges with 750, rather than the present 500, phone connections.

Such a move by Congress, Rep. Douglas told her colleagues—most of them males—would "uncover" about 10,000 switchboard girls.

Congress laughed for two minutes—then defeated the amendment, as Rep. Douglas proposed. So the 10,000 girls will be covered—by the Wage-Hour law.

Steel Sees Fact Finders Manning The Barricades

By GLORIA CAPLAN

INLAND Steel's Pres. Clarence B. Randall—who referred to himself as "the newest recruit among top management in the industry"—was the first to occupy the center of the stage as the steel industry began its tale of woe before the Presidential fact-finding board in New York City.

Only the glycerine tears were missing as the "newest recruit" enumerated his complaints.

• "Collective bargaining has been destroyed," he moaned. It was "repealed," he said, by the President's appointment of a fact-finding board with power to make recommendations.

• The whole thing was part of "the global strategy of the union," and now it is "quite clear that at no time did the union actually intend to come to an agreement with us."

• Transferring the blame momentarily from the union to the government, he then painted a picture of amicable negotiations shimmering on the brink of settlement, when in came a call from Director Cyrus Ching of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service, advising Randall that negotiations had been broken off. Randall said:

"I FELT THAT I had been let down. I felt that something on the outside had come between us and the honest desire of our workmen to come to an agreement."

("Friendly" negotiations with Inland had been severely marred by the company's discharge of several hundred workers for having reached the age of 65. Although the contract stated specifically the circumstances under which discharges could be made, becoming 65 was not one of them, the union claimed.)

• Although the three-man board's recommendations will not be binding, Randall termed the procedure "government wage-fixing" and a "political proceeding."

(Pres. Truman appointed the board—only after acceptance of his plan by industry and the union—in order to stave off an industrywide strike. Replying to Randall's charge, he noted that fact-finding boards have been in use for 15 to 20 years "and there is nothing unusual about this one.")

• "This is a revolution," Randall said.

• He vowed his company would resist any effort to make it accept the board's recommendations'

WHEN JOHN A. Stephens, U. S. Steel vice-president, took to the stage, he concentrated on denying that the union had a right to seek pensions under the current contract reopening.

Stephens, then Roger A. Blough, U. S. Steel counsel, insisted that the 1948 settlement with the union had specifically ruled out pensions as a bargaining subject for 1949.

The union, on the other hand, has maintained that even though pensions are not specifically mentioned in the contract's reopening clause, they are subject to negotiations since they constitute a delayed payment of wages. Also, the union argued, because the contract contains no provision for pensions, they are bargainable at any time under an NLRB ruling in the Allied Mills case.

In all of the industry's first day of testimony there was no reference to the union's proposals for a 12½c hourly increase and 6.27c an hour for social insurance. Nor was there any reference to the union's detailed picture of the steelworkers' pressing need for pensions.

Stephens hinted that the union, in seeking pensions, was breaking its contract; railed against the CIO News for publishing Steelworkers' Pres. Philip Murray's brief outburst in which he termed the industry representatives "the biggest band of professional racketeers" he ever saw; then pictured himself as a winged "idealist."

For all his efforts to bring about "a betterment of human relations and a preservation of the kind of freedom we still enjoy in this country," he said, "I may be referred to by those who leave this room as a 'starry-eyed idealist'."

He wasn't.

'Wall Street Exhibit No. 1'

John W. Hancock, an investment broker led off the steel industry's second day of testimony with a grave warning against granting workers any wage increases.

When he finished, an industry representative protested that the investment broker spoke only for himself and said the statement would not be entered as an exhibit for the steel industry.

Quipped Philip Murray: Perhaps the statement should be entered as "Wall St. Exhibit No. 1."

6 to 1 Vote Authorizes Ford Strike

AFTER THE Michigan State Mediation Service announced results of a strike poll, there was no room for doubt as to how Ford workers felt about their contract demands—and the company.

They voted to authorize a strike, 65,001 to 9,549, if the company doesn't come across.

The company had thrown thousands of dollars and plenty of energy into beating the strike vote. Full-page advertisements blossomed out in the Detroit Free Press, the News and the Times. It bought time on four Detroit stations to broadcast spot announcements appealing for a "no" note.

It tried to block the poll by charging the State Mediation Board with being "unfair" in ordering the balloting to take place near the union offices instead of on company property. The state Supreme Court denied the motion.

CIO Auto Workers Pres. Walter Reuther, in reply, accused the company of wanting to "return to its pre-union practice of working the life out of an employe and then tossing him out of the gate."

Presumably Ford employes agreed with him. Although they only recently were walking the picket lines in a dispute over the speedup, the strike poll indicated they considered the pension-insurance-wage boost demands important enough to hit the bricks again.

Ford's only offer in two months of negotiations has been to freeze the economic provisions of the contract at present levels for the next year.

The Job Situation

We're in the midst of a period of great prosperity, so the experts say, and yet the latest figures show more than four million Americans are unemployed.

And nine million or more persons are working only part time—many of them not more than 20 hours a week.

If you believe what some of the experts say and the business writers concoct, then the situation isn't serious. It's nothing more than a "normal readjustment."

But if you could talk with the four million without jobs and the nine or more million with part-time jobs you'd hear an entirely different story.

We'll go along with the viewpoint of those whose source of income has disappeared through no fault of their own. The situation is serious and it demands our attention.

Some of our leading economists say employment will increase somewhat between now and fall as inventories are built up, which is probably true.

But there have been no real changes in the factors which brought about the present situation. It began developing when prices and profits started increasing faster than wages.

Consumer purchasing power has now reached a dangerously low point and one of two things must occur if we're to avoid real trouble. Prices must be reduced sharply or wages must be increased.

But, you say, prices have been coming down, haven't they? Yes, they have. Between 1939 and last August they increased about 70%. Since last August they have decreased about 3%.

Some of our major industries are in excellent position to hike wages and bolster consumer purchasing power.

Unfortunately, they at present are taking the same short-sighted position they did when they started shoving us into the present mess.

And the unions know that much more than the immediate future of their own members is involved in current wage drives. That's why they're prepared to fight for what they believe to be right and desirable. ★ ★ ★

Well, Well, Well, Well! The American Medical Association, which has been shooting some dirty pool in its campaign against compulsory health insurance, produced a couple of lovely lulus the other day. Both are designed, so the AMA says, to show that the CIO-supported insurance plan is something terrible and dangerous.

"For the first time since its founding 103 years ago, the AMA will seat a Negro physician in the House of Delegates," says an AMA press release.

Dr. George F. Lull, AMA's secretary-general manager, commented on the appointment as follows:

"This action will serve notice on the socializers who are attempting to besmirch American medicine for purposes of political gain that medicine recognizes no boundaries except the scientific skill and abilities of those admitted to its practice."

And in an address prepared for delivery by somebody else at the convention of the National (Negro) Medical Association, AMA Pres.-Elect Elmer L. Henderson of Louisville, Ky., said:

"Voluntary health insurance is one answer to the needs of those who require budget-basis medical care. Another answer is educating our patients to give medical care a higher priority in the family budget."

H-m-m-m-m. After 103 years! And "higher priority!'

'Autonomy' Tops Red Hit Parade

Commies Raise False Issue Because They Can't Fight On The Real One

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THIS IS THE story of how "Autonomy" was elevated to No. 1 on the Commie and fellow traveler hit parade.

It also is the story of party line twisting and that favorite tactic of the Reds—creating a false issue to draw attention from a real one.

Involved are an international plot and the efforts of a group of Americans to use the CIO as an instrument of Russian foreign policy.

It isn't a pretty story, but it's one that should be told.

CHAPTER NO. 1 was written during the period in which the CIO was being established—a period in which the U.S. was officially extending the hand of friendship to Soviet Russia.

Commies threw their support behind the new labor organization and helped in its organizing campaign. They posed as militant trade unionists whose first allegiance was to unionism.

It didn't take long for certain CIO leaders — including Philip Murray—to begin questioning the purposes of the party liners.

Murray was placed deep in the Commie doghouse when he sided with President Roosevelt in the latter's efforts to extend aid to Britain after she had been attacked by Germany.

At this juncture the conflict in Europe was an "imperialistic, capitalistic war," insofar as the Commies were concerned.

THE NEXT important chapter was written when Stalin and Hitler called a halt to their uneasy wartime honeymoon and began slugging it out on the battlefield.

Real Issue

The main issue involved in the CIO left-wing fight is whether an "outside" group shall be permitted to use the CIO for its own selfish purposes.

American Commies at this point became super-patriots and they maintained such a role all during the time the U.S. and Russia were military allies.

During this period the Reds were 100% for CIO policy and equally strong for U.S. government policy. Philip Murray became their hero because he headed an organization which was helping fight the fascists.

Then the war ended and Chapter 3 was begun.

RUSSIA SOON revealed to the world that she was embarked on a wide expansionist program which employed many of the totalitarian tactics employed by Hitler.

The U.S. likewise let the world know she intended to fight for the preservation of democracy.

Then the party line—inside the CIO and out — began changing again.

The domestic Reds began bucking U.S. foreign policy and it was on this score that they ran head-on into Murray and his right-wing leadership of the CIO.

Since then Murray and his colleagues have been subjected to slander and vilification almost beyond belief.

THE "RIOT ACT" was read to the Commies at the CIO convention last year but they chose to ignore it. They went right on following the twisting party line.

Then, at a recent CIO Executive Board meeting, the lefties were told they would be required to adhere to CIO policy or expected to resign from the board.

They thumbed their collective noses at this decision and stepped up their campaign of lies and character assassination.

It was obvious that the Commies couldn't wage their battle on the real issue—whether they were to be permitted to use the CIO to fight U.S. policies and foster Russian policies.

So they created a false issue and called it "autonomy." And since then they've been doing their best to convince everybody that they represent the forces of democracy which are battling against the "dictatorship" of Murray and colleagues.

THE AUTONOMY campaign is phonier than a pink $3 bill, and those who have studied the issues carefully know it.

Nobody has made an attempt to restrict union members—even the Commies—in the exercise of normal trade union functions.

No effort has been made to take away from international unions the privileges they have enjoyed since they became affiliated with the CIO.

The great "plot" directed by Murray to destroy democracy in the organization he heads consists merely of:

1. Determination that democratic majority rule shall govern the affairs of CIO.

2. An equal determination that neither the Communists nor any other group shall use the CIO for their own selfish, non-trade union purposes.

AT&T Ties With Other Companies Revealed

"ANYONE WHO has worked in the telephone industry for any length of time soon realizes that his employer is a $10 billion corporation centrally controlled by a small management group at 195 Broadway, New York City," writes Sylvia B. Gottlieb, research and education director for the CIO Communications Workers of America.

But what most telephone workers don't know, she says in The CWA News, is that "their bosses also consist of men whose names never appear as directors or officers of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co.

"These men are the officers and directors of such giant corporations as U. S. Steel, Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., and the Westinghouse Electric Corp. linked to the Bell System by interlocking directorships.

"Likewise, most workers in the U. S. Steel Co. in the Western Electric Co. and in many other large corporations in America don't realize is that their wages and working conditions are directly affected by men who are the managers of the Bell System.

"Bell System directors are also the directors of at least a dozen other large corporations, banks, and trust companies having assets totalling over $45 billion . . .

"When the U. S. Steel Corp. says 'No' to wage demands of United Steelworkers-CIO at the same time that the Westinghouse Corp. is saying 'No' to United Electrical Workers-CIO and at the same time that the Bell System is saying 'No' to CWA-CIO wage demands, the men who are dictating the 'No' to CWA-CIO wage demands, the men who are dictating the 'No' in one company are the very same men who are dictating the 'No' in each of the other companies . . .

"The men who run the AT&T Co. work closely with the men who run other large corporations. Knowing that the AT&T is the largest and wealthiest of the companies is some indication of the influence it must have in establishing not only wage policies in the Bell System, but in other corporations.

"Knowing this, have you stopped to consider how present wage negotiations in the steel industry will affect you? The President's fact-finding commission, which is presently studying the wage dispute between the U. S. Steel Corp. and the USA-CIO, has in its hand, to a large extent, the wage dispute between the AT&T and CWA."

"Baby, it's hot outside!"

He Merely Beat Other Man To The Draw

IT WAS A FAST double play involving a strike, some money, two men who worked closely together and psychology.

It took place back in the early days of the CIO, when none of the unions in the young labor organization had much more than "peanuts" in their treasuries.

When finances were low—as they were in those days—those involved did a lot of hard thinking before they embarked on a strike.

But in this case—involving a company out in the mid-West—the men who had recently formed a new union voted to strike to force recognition.

They had a strike committee and a strike director and little else when they walked out.

A CALL FOR help was sent out and the money started coming in—but it didn't arrive in large quantities.

Within a short time the strikers had exhausted their own resources and were depending entirely upon the union for funds.

The walkout was solid—and it soon became apparent that it would be long. And strike contributions have a habit of dwindling after a while.

In anticipation of this dwindling, the strike director had been building up a little reserve. It wasn't much but he thought it would be enough if handled wisely.

AFTER SEVERAL weeks of picketing, the strikers held a meeting, reviewed the situation and voted to ask for more strike relief.

Meantime the strike director had placed an assistant in charge of the walkout and was working on other projects a number of miles away.

The assistant was greatly impressed by the needs of the pickets and told them he would "really make a fight" for more money for them.

He wanted to talk the matter over face to face with his superior, so he boarded a train and headed for the latter's new headquarters.

AS THE TRAIN chugged along toward its destination one of the local union officials, a friend of the strike director, called the latter by telephone and told him what had happened.

"I know you're sending up every penny you can, but the strikers think that they may be able to get some more if they turn on the heat," the local official said. "I just thought you ought to know what to expect."

"Thanks a lot," said the director. "I'll see if I can figure out some way to keep this from developing into a nasty situation."

He did a bit of hard thinking, examined and re-examined the record of contributions—and finally hit upon an idea.

WHEN THE assistant director walked into the director's office the latter feigned surprise, then rose from his chair and shook hands.

"Gee, I'm glad to see you. I was just getting ready to call you and tell you the bad news," said the director.

"I'm going to have to cut down the strike relief by at least 10%. There just isn't enough money to go around."

The next night the assistant director told local strikers: "Say, that boss of mine is really a reasonable guy. He was getting ready to reduce strike benefits by 10% to 15% because there wasn't enough money. But after I argued with him a while he agreed to keep on sending the same amount.

"He said he'd do it if he had to go out and rob a bank!"

And there was no grumbling among the strikers.

QUANDARY

Patman Uncovers Monoplies' Move Against Coops

MONOPOLY, if given a free rein, would choke the country, Rep. Wright Patman (D. Tex.) believes. Sponsor of an administration bill designed to head off a depression and one of the strongest Congressional defenders of cooperatives, Patman last week aired his views before a meeting of the Missouri Farmers' Association. Excerpts follow:

The paramount issue facing this nation today is whether we shall develop this country—with all its God-given natural resources and intelligent, industrious people—for the people as a whole; or whether we shall fall victims to greed and reaction.

ALL OF YOU are familiar with how monopoly operates. I'm sure you've heard of the Natl. Tax Equality Association. Those boys are representing monopoly interests. They're trying to destroy your cooperative and they're trying to deny you the right to operate your own business. They want to be able to take over your farm products after they leave your farm and handle them from there on out. They want to set the price you get for your commodities, and then set margins all along the line. . . . They want to tell you how much you have to pay for seed and fertilizer and gasoline and feed and many other items. They want you to sell to them and buy from them—and let them set the price in both cases.

They say they want "tax equality." Let's see just what "equality" means to these NTEA boys. They're practicing their kind of "equality" when they say you're not a part of the free enterprise system. I say cooperatives are a part of the free enterprise system, just as much as the corner grocery, the clothing store or the hardware store.

'Attack On People'

"We recently had before the House of Representatives a measure to provide more and better telephone services to rural folks. I'm happy to say we passed this bill in the House. But we passed it after a bitter fight waged by those people who want to retain the telephone business for themselves. They don't care whether you get phones or not. They want to make sure that when—and if—you should get a phone, a big profit will come back to them. To my way of thinking, the attack of the utilities and others on the telephone bill was an attack on the people."—Congressman Patman.

They say all they want is for you to pay taxes on a basis of "equality." To them, this means either one or two things. It either means paying income tax where there is no income; or it means the cooperative must pay tax on money which does not belong to it, and you must pay tax on this same money when it is passed on to you. And they're so mad about it, they're going around telling people you don't pay any taxes at all.

They know you pay taxes, and they know, too, that you pay taxes the same as any other partnership or individually-owned business. . . . But the NTEA boys don't want real "tax equality." They want to keep a good racket going.

The congressional committee which it is my pleasure to head has repeatedly asked the NTEA for a list of their contributors, large and small. NTEA has consistently refused to divulge this information. They did, however, decide early this year to cast off the halo and wings of "research and education," and come out as a full fledged lobby against cooperatives.

Now these boys have told us time and again that they represented small business' Many of the $500 contributors are among the largest power companies in the U. S There're some big grain operators, and there're some fertilizer concerns, too.

In the past, we've seen bigness used to set prices of things you have to buy. Cooperatives have come in and set a pattern . . . for these businesses. And the net result have been reasonable prices. This is a healthy situation, because if the trend toward monopoly control isn't halted, I'm afraid we'll end up with some form of socialism or fascism in this country in the not too distant future.

I can say without reservation that no man in Washington is working harder for the kind of progress we want than your neighbor, Pres. Truman.

He has pointed out that to do so we must increase production by a yearly average of from 3 to 4% and provide from ½ to ¾ of a million new job opportunities each year. This is the first time that a President has presented an economic plan designed to stave off a depression and at the same time provide definite goals for national progress. . . . It has been my pleasure to introduce in the House legislation to implement the President's program.

(The Economic Expansion bill) . . . would tend to check monopoly. As I see it, monopolistic controls are the cancer that is weakening our entire free enterprise system. Monopoly is contrary to everything I conceive as free enterprise. It would choke us.

Pennsylvania's 26th District-Gallant

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

THE MOUNTAINS and valleys of Cambria, Armstrong and Indiana counties, Pennsylvania, are seeing some intensive campaigning these days.

The campaign is unusual in many ways.

First of all, it is to fill a Congressional seat in an off-year.

Second, the Democratic candidate is a mother, seeking to carry on the ideals and pledges of her war hero son, who met tragic death in an air crash less than four months after he took office.

Third, the mother, who also lost a second son in an air crash, tours the district by air, in a plane piloted by her third and only surviving son.

The campaign is in the 26th District of Pennsylvania. The candidate is Mrs. Robert L. (Curry Ethel) Coffey, Sr. Only unfortunate thing about it is that the special Congressional election—Sept. 13—is being held the same day as the State's primary, which might tend to confuse some voters into thinking that the Congressional race also is a primary.

In Pennsylvania, when a vacancy occurs in a Congressional seat, the party committees of the district select candidates. The Republican nominee is John Saylor, a lawyer.

Mrs. Coffey has the full support of Labor in the area. Joint labor committees are in operation. In Cambria county, the largest of the three, the chairman is Bernard E. Timms, Barnesboro, a district head of the Mine Workers. Co-chairman

A Buck for PAC Means Victory

CURRY ETHEL COFFEY

are Raymond E. McDermott (Steelworkers), president of the Greater Johnstown CIO Council, and John M. Casler, president of Johnstown's AFL Central Labor Union. Clyde Slick, CLU Secretary, is also secretary of the Joint group.

The Democratic county committee, which is headed by a smart chairman named John Torquato, is going all out to see that Mrs. Coffey wins.

Mrs. Coffey's platform is brief and to the point: "Bob was for the Fair Deal. So am I. When I go to Washington, I will do my utmost to carry out Bob's campaign pledges."

Young Coffey was elected last fall in a political turnover. The district had been represented fo some years by Rep. Harve Tibbott (R.). In 1944, despite the popularity of Roosevelt, Tibbott won the election, 58,743 to 52,994. In 1946, his margin was 49,573 to 41,224.

But, in 1948, young Bob Coffey swamped Tibbott under a count of 62,061 to 50,005.

THE DISTRICT is spectacularly beautiful from a scenic standpoint. The awe-inspiring Alleghenies cut through the counties. You get almost dizzy driving up and down long, winding roads.

Cambria has farms and mines, of course, but it also possesses one of the most famous cities in the world, Johnstown, famous for a tragic event which occurred there on May 31, 1889.

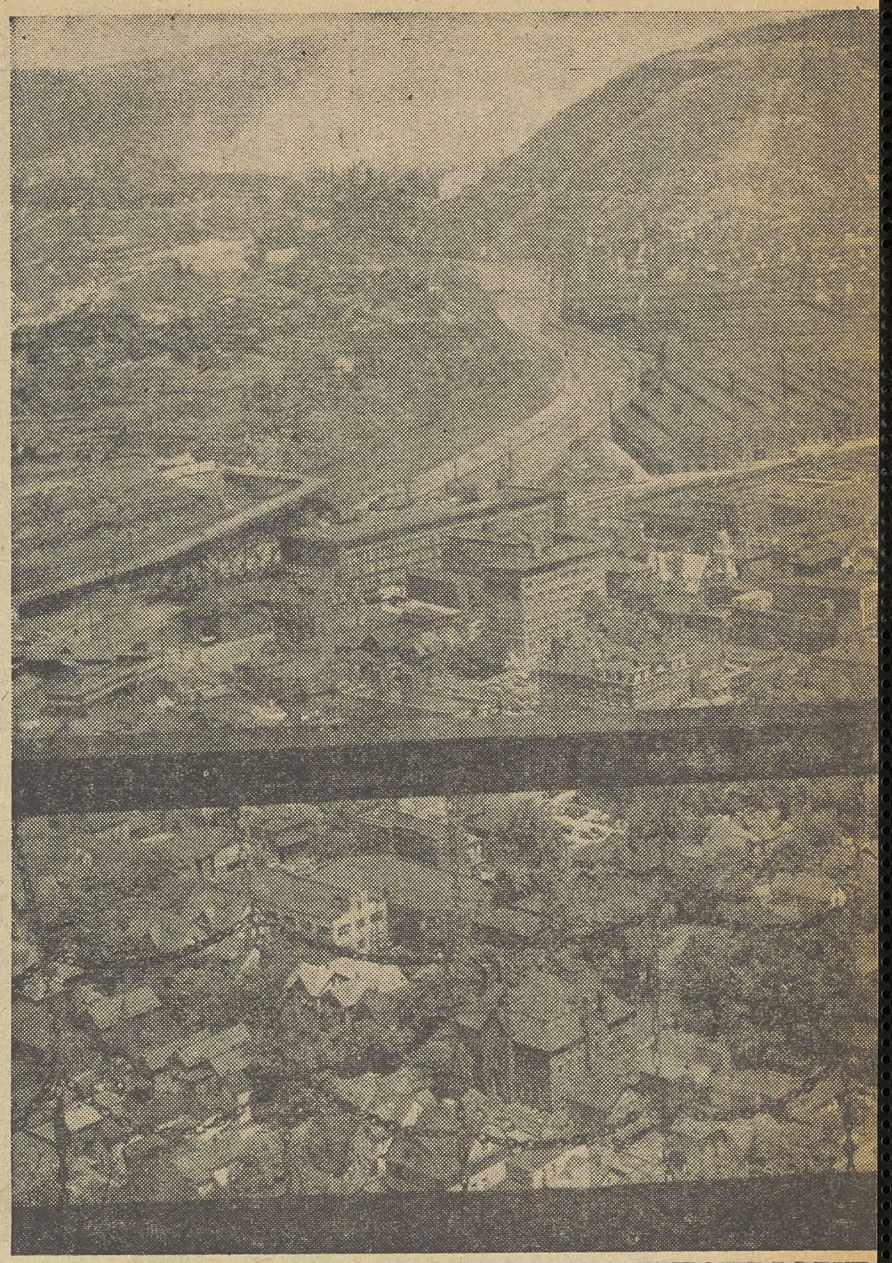
On that day, after heavy rains, a dam on the South Fork, 12 miles above the city, broke from the pressure of millions of tons of water. A mass of water 20 feet high roared down the valley at a rate of 20 miles per hour. The city was almost completely destroyed; 2000 to 3000 of its total population of 30,000 were left dead, hundreds homeless, with property damage in the millions.

Again in 1937, floods hit Johnstown, not as bad as 1889, but causing severe damage in life and property.

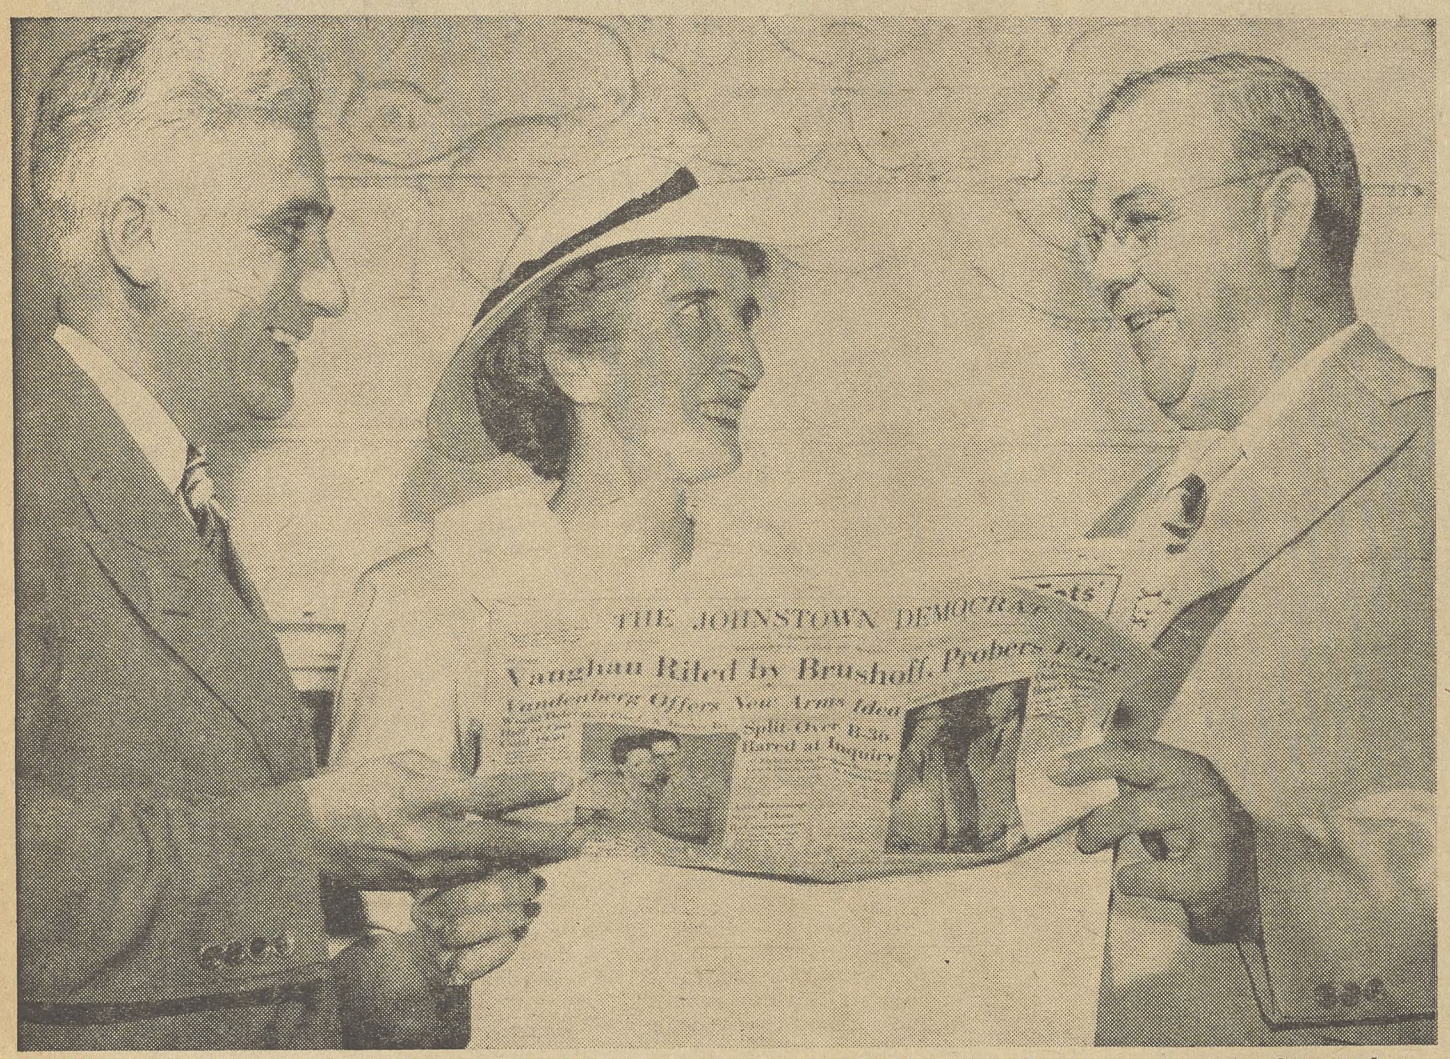
After that flood, Pres. Roosevelt visited the devastated area. He pledged that he would do something about it. He produced, and now Johnstown is protected by an elaborate system of flood walls. The chances are pretty slim that the Concemaugh River or the Stony Creek will ever again reach flood danger stage.

Incidentally, John Brophy, CIO director of councils, worked in the mines at Nanty Glo, a few miles north of Johnstown, and was active in the Mine Workers there.

Your Dollar PACs A punch for PAC



JOHNSTOWN, PA., FROM WESTMONT GAUTIER DEPT. AND FRAN



LABOR HELPS: Mrs. Coffey is shown in the lobby of the Fort Stanwix Hotel, Johnstown, conferring with Steelworkers' District Dir. Eugene Maurice (right) and Gene DiCola, PAC director. They are discussing a story in the prophetically-named Johnstown Democrat. Cambria County has a United Labor Committee. Its chairman is a member of the United Mine Workers. AFL aud CIO men are also officers. The committee is waging a strenuous campaign.

CENTRE spot of PAC work is District 13 of the Steelworkers, which includes the three counties. Dir. Eugene Maurice is taking an active part and one of his staff members, John DiCola, is PAC director. There are at least 18,000 Steelworkers in the area (12,000 alone at the five Bethlehem plants in and around Johnstown). There are also many thousands of miners and AFL members. Brotherhoods have a number of members there, too.

DiCola knows the district inside out. He keeps a keen ear to the ground and keeps constantly on the go. He will have a complete PAC setup, with blockworkers, precinct workers, city and town workers and county workers to get out the vote and man the polls.

A registration drive completed recently shows a definite drift towards the Democratic Party. A veteran county courthouse empolye, noting the figures for Johnstown, said that this was the first time in his recollection that the Democrats had the higher registration in Johnstown.

In 1948, there were 12,707 persons registered as Democratic, This year, there are 14,658, a net gain of 1951. The Republicans, on the other hand, gained only a net 85, to 14,348.

And that isn't all. In Cambria County, the Democrats lead greeted her warmly and said: "I hope you return in an official capacity. We want to see you here"

She also met Mrs. Perle Mesta, new minister to Luxembourg, and other prominent Democratic women.

SHE HAS already addressed a number of rallies, women's clubs, luncheons, etc. She visits towns and meets local officials, businessmen, labor leaders, etc., and tells them her story. Political observers say she is extremely effective.

She says she feels particularly at home with laboring people. All three of her sons were union members. Bob worked in the mines while attending high schools and college, holding a card in the Mine Workers.

William, killed in an air crash during the war while he was in the Army, had been in the Steelworkers when he worked in the Bethlehem plants.

John, a lead navigator with 35 or more missions during the war, was also a Steelworkers' member at the Franklin Plant.

The forthright stand on issues of this Alabama-born woman is in sharp contrast to her opponent's position. Saylor first said he was for repeal of the Taft-Hartley Law. Then he said he was for the Wood Bill, called worse than T-H.

In an attempt to offset the splendid war records of the Coffey sons, he has tried to make capital of the fact that he was an officer on the ship that carried the famous flag to Iwo Jima (A Cambria county boy was one of the heroes that took the flag in to the island and raised it in the incident made famous by Photographer Joe Rosenthal. The Cambria boy was killed.).

Despite Bob Coffey's commanding lead of last fall, no one is taking anything for granted. A get-out-the-vote campaign will be in full swing. Hundreds of CIO and other union members know that they cannot lay down on the job.

HERE'S HOW the joint labor committee of Cambria puts it:

"We have joined forces for a common purpose. We pledge our unanimous support and the overwhelming support of the organizations we represent to the election of Mrs. Robert L. Coffey Sr. to Congress.

"Mrs. Coffey is the candidate of the Democratic Party in the special election Sept. 13. Mrs. Coffey will have our complete confidence as our representative in Congress.

"Like her late heroic son, who lost his life while in the service of his country, Mrs. Coffey stands for the political ideals of organized labor and the welfare of the great majority of the people of the United States.

"Mrs. Coffey is whole-heartedly opposed to the infamous Taft-Hartley Act. Mrs. Coffey is for the social and human welfare program of Pres. Truman. Mrs. Coffey will put progress before profits and oppose special interests and special privilege at every turn.

"Representing the united forces of labor in Cambria County, we urge every voter and especially every one of the 65,000 members of our combined organizations in Cambria County to vote for Mrs. Coffey on Sept. 13."

Officers announced the joint committee will meet every Friday.

All local unions in Cambria, Indiana and Armstrong Counties will send representatives.

AND, SO, that's the kind of a campaign that's being carried on in the mountains and valleys of Pennsylvania's 26th Congressional District.

Mrs. Coffey knows the area well, having come there as a bride from Alabama. She knows the problems of the Steelworkers and the miners and labor in general. She knows that the country needs a Fair Deal. She has seen what havoc can be wrought when nature goes on a rampage, as in the 1937 flood.

Her opponent, who is afraid to take a definite stand on any major issue, is like a phantom. So, Mrs. Coffey sticks to the real issues—Taft-Hartley, social security, housing, prices, conservation, rent control, etc.

Local observers feel her chances are good, taking into count the margin by which Bob won, the increased Democratic registration and the general feeling among the people that the 81st Congress has robbed America of what it voted for in 1948.

Final Vote

Note to voters in Pennsylvania's 26th District:

The special Congressional set for Sept. 13 is a final election, not a primary. The primary is held the same day for county and city offices. So, cast your vote Sept. 13 for Mrs. Robert L. (Curry Ethel) Coffey, Sr., for Congress. She has, and is worthy of, the full support of organized labor.

STREET SCENE: Mrs. Coffey is doing a lot of talking to possible voters. Here, at the corner of Main and Franklin, in Johnstown, she talks over things with Charles Woolcock (left) and Mary Cimo. At right is Mrs. Coffey's sole surviving son, John, who accompanies her on her campaign tours. He also flies her to far points of the three-county district. Incidents like this are common in the Coffey-for-Congress campaign.

THE CAMPAIGN has its difficulties, as do all campaigns. Carl Will, sent in by the national Democrats, found that radio stations had been demanding that political addresses should be paid for at a rate twice that of regular advertising time. Two of the three stations have dropped that demand. The other probably will have to, too.

Banners will be placed on Democratic farmers' barns. Billboards will be utilized. A stencil effect will be stamped on rocks, roofs, barns, sidewalks, etc. Posters will be tacked up. More than 200 ads—42 inches wide—will be placed in trolleys.

A Sunday or so ago, Mrs. Coffey was one of the honor guests at a Johnstown air show. The Army presented her with a scroll citing the heroism of her son, Bob.

The announcer introduced her over the loudspeakers to thousands of guests as "our next Congresswoman."

A few days before that, she and John were due to fly to Washington to meet Pres. Truman. John was to fly his own plane. But, the airport reported the weather too low for flying and so they started off by auto. They passed close to the airport and decided to check again. The weather had lifted and so they flew down—and back again.

BEN STONG, executive secretary of the Natl. Committee on Resources explains to the CIO Committee on Regional Development and Conservation that the Pick (Army Engineer's) Plan authorized by Congress for the Missouri River will cause an estimated loss of $3,000,000,000.

CIO Maps Program To Save U.S. Resources

By ROBERT BOLLARD

WHO SAID the CIO was interested only in getting more money for its members?

Twelve members of CIO's Committee on Regional Development and Conservation met in Chicago last week to help map out a program to conserve and develop our country's resources so that future generations may continue to exist.

The Committee members, headed by John Brophy, director of CIO Industrial Union Councils, left their many duties as CIO regional directors or state council officers to concentrate on such important subjects as forestry, soil conservation, flood control, valley authorities and others. They represented every section of the United States, from Oregon to the far Southeast, and from Texas to New England.

Since 1944 the CIO arm dealing with such problems has been the Missouri Velley Committee, which was mainly responsible for the promotion of an MVA, similar to the Tennessee Valley Authority. Following the wishes of several previous CIO conventions, the CIO Executive Board extended the work of the Committee to include the other major river valleys and regions of America, and re-named it the Committee on Regional Development and Conservation.

At the Chicago meeting each CIO official expressed the problems and the needs of his respective area. Through full discussion and consultation with several noted experts in this field, the Committee was able to draw up specific proposals and statements of policy for future development.

BEN STONG, executive secretary of the National Committee on Resources; Charles Magill Smith, of the same group; N. R. Danielian, of the National St. Lawrence Association, and a number of members of CIO departments worked with Brophy and Anthony W. Smith, CIO representative on conservation, to cover every phase of the Committee's work.

The three-day meeting took each region separately and explored the possibility of conserving its resources. For the Pacific Northwest a Columbia Valley Authority which would encompass the entire forestry, soil and water problem, rather than the "piecemeal" projects that are being carried out at present was discussed. Considerable discussion centered around the desirability of protecting the Columbia River fisheries.

Other areas discussed included the vast Colorado River region, the Southeastern area, the Upper Mississippi River and Great Lakes, the Middle Eastern area, New England, Missouri Valley, and California. As each area was considered, thorough invesgtiation of existing developments and programs was made. All of this research will be put to work as the Committee breaks down into smaller regional meetings for each section of the country.

It was agreed, that due to the immediate importance of many of the projects, regional meetings should be planned for the coming months.

THE FINAL day-and-a-half of the meeting resulted in the adoption of a number of Statements of Policy to guide the Committee in its work. Most important of these were:

Valley Authorities, using the experience gained through the Tennessee Valley Authority, and developing other regions of the country, taking into consideration the peculiar problems of those regions.

Public Power Projects, calling for public development, transmission and distribution of hydro-electric power, and where steam plants are necessary and desirable in connection with public hydro-electric power plants, that they be constructed, owned and operated by the public.

Responsibility in River Management, where agencies working must be required to plan their projects against the background of all the resources of the region, including forests, soil, water, wildlife, scenery and recreation, and should be held responsible for any damage done to same.

Contractors' Lobbies, where the Committee felt that close ties between certain Congressmen and Senators and certain associations of contractors in connection with our national programs of flood control, navigators, reclamation and the like, are of serious national concern.

Forestry and Soil Conservation, where a sound national forestry policy was proposed with Federal legislation for regulation of timber cutting, expansion of national forest system, and larger appropriations for forestry, and a comprehensive program for stopping soil erosion. (It was pointed out that nearly half of our cropland may be ruined in the next 20 years if present wasteful practices continue.)

The Committee wound up its meeting with passage of a policy statement to "continue its efforts to achieve a broad working combination of truly progressive democratic economic and political groups for the realization of common purposes in the field of regional development and conservation."

The statement pointed to the necessity of working together with other labor, farm and cooperative organizations in these fields.

Films, Pamphlet Tell The Story

The CIO Dept. of Education and Research has available two media for telling the conservation story:

1. Films: "The Valley of the Tennessee" 30 minutes, the TVA story; "The Miracle of Hydro," 10 minutes, graphic reasons for setting up the Columbia River Valley Authority; "Topsoil," 10 minutes, importance of topsoil in everyday life. All are 16 mm. sound.

2. Pamphlet: "Healthy Soil, Healthy People," how conservation helps the nation keep its health, 23 pages illustrated. When ordering pamphlet refer to No. 162; 15 cents a copy; 8 for $1; 100 for $11.

Films and pamphlets may be obtained through the CIO Dept. of Education and Research, 718 Jackson Place N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

Two Reorganization Plans May Go In Effect Aug. 19

UNLESS Congress says "no" by August 19, two important changes in the government, as recommended by Pres. Truman, will automatically take effect.

One would create a new Department of Welfare, to include all social security, health and other similar government functions. Head of the department would be a member of the President's cabinet.

The other would transfer the Bureau of Employment Security and the United States Employment Service to the Department of Labor.

Both plans have been warmly endorsed by CIO and AFL.

UNDER Congressional procedure, the two reorganization plans go into effect unless either House or Senate vetoes the proposal by a "constitutional" majority—that is, a majority of all the members of each branch of Congress.

The House has in effect approved the plan to strengthen the Labor Dept. A voice vote on a veto move by ultra-conservative Rep. Clare Hoffman (R. Mich.) was judged by Speaker of the House Rayburn not to constitute the 217 votes necessary to carry the Hoffman resolution.

In the Senate, a committee has recommended disapproval of the Truman plans, but the issue has not yet come up for vote. The veto move is sponsored by Sen. Taft.

Much of the opposition to the new Dept. of Welfare comes from the wealthy American Medical Association,

DEFEATS BYRD MACHINE

Temple Kessinger, president of Local 675, CIO Paperworkers, won the Democratic nomination to the Virginia House of Delegates by defeating a candidate of the Byrd machine. Kessinger, an employe of the Covington, Va., plant of the West Virginia Pulp & Paper Co., will represent—if elected—the city of Clifton Forge and Allegheny County.

Transport Service Protests Order Boosting Baggage Fee

PRES. Willard S. Townsend of the CIO United Transport Service Employes, has requested the Interstate Commerce Commission to suspend its recent order permitting several railroad terminal companies to increase their fee for the handling of passenger luggage by railroad station ushers and red caps.

Townsend charged the nation's railroads with a "cleverly timed plan" to catch several million vacationers "with their bags down."

The Commission recently granted the Cincinnati Union Terminal Co., the Indianapolis Union Railway Company and the Columbus Union Depot permission to increase hand luggage fees from 15c to 25c effective Sept.. 1.

"This new increase," Townsend declared, "was sought by the railroads without any explanation to the travelling public and will threaten the jobs of the 3,000 red caps now employed by U. S. railroads. This gouping of the rail-travelling public by a two-thirds increase in the handling of parcels is plainly one of undue irresponsibility to both the customer and the employe."

"The obvious effect of the increase," Townsend stated, "will be to outrage the public, end station transportation of hand baggage and deny to the traveling public this highly necessary passenger service."

Help PAC Really Do It In '50

What The Party Planned—And Did

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

LAST JANUARY, John Williamson, who has the Communist Party's nod as its "labor expert," wrote an analysis of the CIO and AFL conventions of 1948, making some predictions and drawing some conclusions.

Now that more than seven months have passed, let's see how Williamson's estimates have fared.

Here they are:

1 He made much of the fact that the CIO convention was held in Portland, Ore., and the AFL convention in Cincinnati, O., "whether by accident or design," because both cities "have small labor movements." That meant, he said, "less pressure from workers in the galleries."

Williamson did not mention that CIO conventions have been held in the past in Atlantic City, which has virtually no industry, and where there are comparatively few CIO members.

He could have pointed out that almost every one of the so-called left wing unions in CIO have held conventions in Atlantic City, where only one — the Fur & Leather Workers—has members, a mere handful.

And, finally, what does Williamson think of the fact that this year's CIO convention will be held in Cleveland, where there are many thousands of CIO members?

And that the AFL convention will be held in St. Paul, which, together with its twin, Minneapolis, is one of the largest union centers in the Mid-West? Minneapolis, incidentally, has an AFL member as mayor.

2 He placed the "Soviet Union, leading all the peace-loving forces" against "the camp of reaction and imperialist war, organized and led by Wall Street and comprising the dregs of Fascist regimes, worn-out royalty, idle rich, colonial exploiters, the hierarchy of the Roman Catholic Church and right wing Social-Democratic leaders."

Of course, Williamson has included "Fascist regimes" in his list of those who oppose the USSR brand of "peace." He omits the fact that the real opponents of that "peace" are the strongest trade unionists in the world; they are definitely not Fascist. Nor are the religious, civic and other real opponents of USSR "peace."

How does Williamson feel now that Sen. Robert A. Taft (R., O.), pal of Wall st., has lined up beside the comrades in opposition to the Atlantic Pact?

3 Williamson said one thing that was true, though his reasons for saying it are completely false. That was: "It is crystal clear that there is no basis for pessimism today regarding the American working class."

Then he made a grand generalization: "While we cannot ignore the influence of national chauvinism among some sections of the workers, and an increase in the influence of Social Democracy, it would be fundamentally incorrect to speak of the masses of workers moving to the Right."

But, Comrade Williamson, seven months after your statement, the so-called "left" CIO voting strength has fallen to less than 10% of the CIO membership. And it becomes more and more apparent that there is considerable mounting opposition to the leadership in most leftish unions.

4 Williamson refers to the non-Communist affidavits of the Taft-Hartley Act as "yellow-dog affidavits."

How does he explain the fact that the CIO Food and Tobacco Workers and the Mine, Mill Union, both of which have leadership devoted to Williamson's type of "thinking," have signed the affidavits?

5 Williamson, like all other Communist leaders, hates the very thought of CIO Pres. Philip Murray. So, of Murray, he wrote:

"The real reason for the red-baiting hysteria of Phil Murray at Portland is that he has some inkling of the moods of the members, and he knows that this militancy will mount as the economic situation worsens.

"With nothing but the Marshall Plan to offer the workers, since his support of the cold-war policy of American imperialism strips him of all ability to make an effective fight on economic issues, Murray tries to cover up by resorting to flag-waving and anti-Communist hysteria."

What would Williamson write now about what Murray has to offer the workers? Murray and his Steelworkers are making a valiant and effective effort to win for the steel industry workers a pay raise, a decent pension and other social welfare items. And it is obvious that the Marshall Plan is perhaps the most popular foreign measure among workers.

Now, Williamson gets to the meat of the CIO convention:

6 He said that at the convention there was "complete neglect or evasion of most of the burning issues confronting the workers, such as speed-up and the short work-week and unemployment. There was no plan for the militant defense of conditions on a day-to-day basis in the shops, no real outlook for a fighting policy on wage increases, etc."

Of course, the convention paid plenty of attention to all those items, and since the convention, the CIO has consistently and strongly fought for measures to combat unemployment. It continues to fight for its people on all fronts.

7 Williamson accused the CIO of attempting to "destroy the autonomy and independence of thought and conscience that was one of the cornerstones on which the CIO was founded."

"Independence of thought and conscience" is a strange phrase for a Communist to use. How's your party line changer these days, Comrade?

8 "The actions of the right wing Murray-Reuther convention majority correspond neither to the feelings nor the interests of the CIO membership," Williamson wrote.

You ought to get away from 35 E. 12th St., New York (CP national headquarters) more often, Comrade Williamson. The vast majority of the CIO unions tell us that the actions at Portland were the most popular taken by a CIO convention in years.

9 Williamson's statement gives the left wing—a very small band of men and women at the convention—all the credit for such resolutions as that demanding T-H repeal, for civil rights, for better social security, etc.

That is indeed a strange statement in light of the fact that the left wing has hindered every effort the CIO has made; for instance, for repeal of T-H.

10 Communists never miss a chance to slur Murray's religious links with the Catholic Church. Williamson, speaking of the majority of the convention, said "the right wing coalition is a combination of Social Democrats, Murray supporters and the Association of Catholic Trade Unionists."

11 Williamson went in for some soul-searching. The left wing, he said, had made a number of mistakes (that's safe enough for him to say):

It shouldn't have allowed unanimous votes at the Boston convention; its opposition at the 1948 board meetings was too negative; there was a lack of left unity at Portland. But, he sure was happy that they made their speeches and cast their little "noes" at Portland.

12 Asks Williamson: "Why the division in the ranks of the left-progressive forces at the convention?

"Undoubtedly there is no one answer, but a complex of reasons. Some left delegates exhibited timidity and fear under the impact of intimidation and hysteria. Others mistakenly thought that if they 'don't stick their necks out' or if they 'sit this one out' they might be forgiven or passed over."

In any event, comrade, as the results show today, the CIO is better unified than at any time in its history.

13 Williams placed much emphasis on work among the rank and file.

Such as, no doubt, disrupting meetings until the right wing members have to leave, and then taking over.

14 Finally, Williamson got down to his advice and predictions:

a. "Develop mass struggles from below."

That's some line for the party, which never lets its own members have anything to say about policy —until after it is made by the bureaucrats.

b. "Work out a concrete wage program and strategy."

Now that sounds sensible enough, comrade. But, seven months after your advice, when are your union puppets going to do something?

c. "Be alert on, and keep to the fore within the framework of the general struggle, the specific issues that confront the Negro workers."

Like smearing Jackie Robinson because he tells the truth and lauding Paul Robeson because he makes fantastic claims.

d. "Develop a broad movement for the complete and unconditional repeal of T-H, without allowing it to be held in the hands of right wing leaders."

You certainly tried hard to accomplish the latter, comrade, and did much to ruin the chances of the passage of a decent repealer like the Thomas-Lesinski Bill.

e. "The convening of the 81st Congress calls for the maximum efforts of the left-progressive force—on the basis of a comprehensive legislative program on both domestic and foreign policy—to mobilize masses of workers to fight for the enactment of such progressive legislation."

That's a fine thing, comrade. Your guys, who actually prevented Pres. Truman from getting a clear control of Congress by supporting Henry A. Wallace, are trying to tell the Congress what to do. The work of your lobbyists hurt the cause of liberalism to a great degree, and many Congressmen have told CIO that.

15 Williamson reiterates a lot of previous party advice about mass movements, etc., but emphasizes one point to be watched:

"The need for a sharp change toward a consistent policy of party concentration among the workers in the basic industries."

Judging by the Auto Workers' convention, for instance, the party hasn't done much infiltrating in basic industries. But, they're trying.

Finally, Williamson had this to say:

"In its trade union work, the party's own style of work should be improved to help guarantee greater collective leadership, integration of trade unions and organizational work, proper distribution of forces, and increased attention to work among the rank and file.

"Trade union work must become the concern and responsibility of the entire party without diminishing the political responsibility of the labor secretaries and the various party committees. Special attention should be given to the work, life and activities (including shop papers) of the basic shop organizations."

Now, seven months after Williamson's treatise, there's no evidence of the comrades taking his advice. Maybe they didn't have the strength.

2 Italian Labor Groups May Unite

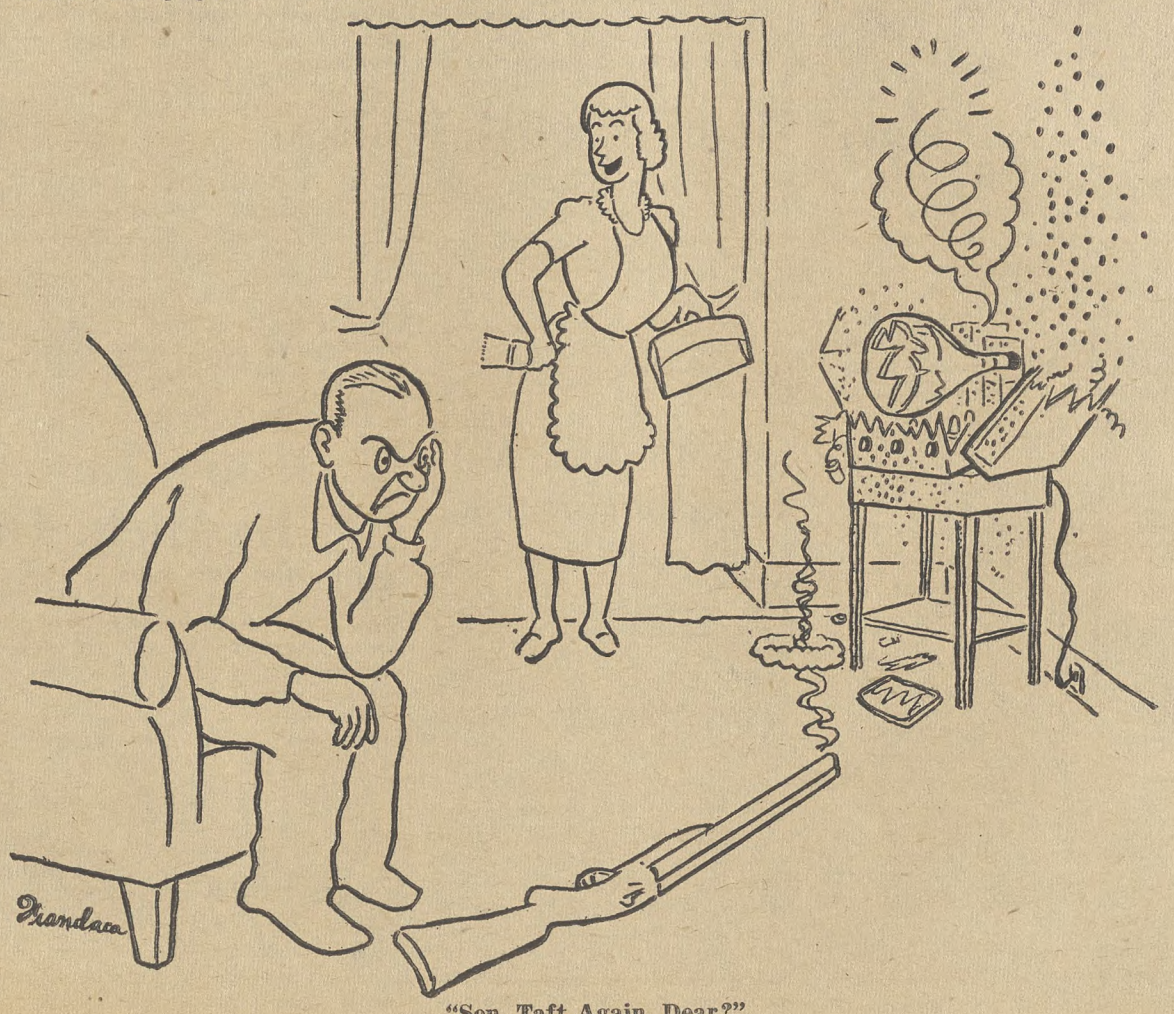
Action to form a single democratic trade union federation in Italy has been taken by two groups which have broken away from the Communist-controlled Italian Confederation of Labor.

The two groups, which have some differences in political outlook between them, formed a "committee of understanding" designed to pave the way for eventual merger, according to a New York Times report.

A number of points have already been decided by the two groups, the report said.

One is that the new labor organization will be non-political and that its leaders will sever their own political affiliations. The joint committee has also agreed that elected positions in the new organization will be filled on the basis of ability rather than of political horse-trading, and that it will set up a special protective committee to guard against political infiltration.

Taking part in the discussions were spokesmen of the Free Italian General Confederation of Labor, which the Times said is composed largely of workers with leanings toward the Christian Democratic party, and of the Italian Workers Federation, which has a Republican-Right Wing Socialist attitude.



"Sen. Taft Again, Dear?"

Hundreds Will Attend Institutes

DEFYING THE threatened mid-August heat, several hundred energetic CIO'ers will be going to school this week at four labor institutes in the Midwest.

At the University of Wisconsin's School for Workers in Madison, the Wisconsin State CIO is running its first summer school, Aug. 14-20. The week-long institute is sponsored jointly by the State Council and the Natl. CIO's Dept. of Education and Research.

Staff members include George Guernsey, Natl. CIO associate education director; Henry Zon, CIO Political Action Committee; Bob Jordan, public relations and legislative director, Wisconsin CIO; and Joel Seidman, University of Chicago.

Among the scheduled speakers are Dr. Nathan Feinsinger, Univ. of Wis., who will talk on labor legislation; Rep. Andrew Biemiller (D., Wis.), whose subject will be "Behind the Scenes at Congress," and Kenneth Hones, president of the Wisconsin Farmers Union.

The Textile Workers Union will also hold a school for its Midwest members at the same time and place as the Wisconsin CIO institute. The two groups will hold separate classes, but will attend some evening sessions together to hear special speakers.

THE PREVIOUS week one of the United Steelworkers' summer schools, which are being held at various colleges throughout the country, was in session at the Univ. of Wis. This week, another USA-CIO group is attending school at the University of Illinois, following up a week's session attended by 76 CIO steelworkers, Aug. 6-13.

At the FDR-CIO Labor Center, near Port Huron, Mich., some 500 members of the UAW and other CIO unions are registered for the sixth annual leadership training institute sponsored jointly by the Michigan CIO and the United Auto Workers Education Dept.

The institute, which got under way Sunday, Aug. 14, will run for three weeks. UAW's largest local, Ford 600, reported 80 students at the school. Other UAW locals sent from 11 to 50 members each.

At least 23 other CIO summer schools will be held by CIO international unions, state councils and the National CIO during the rest of August and in September.

"GET-ACQUAINTED-DAY" brought more than 2,000 CIO members, their children and friends to CIO headquarters in Kansas City, Kan., says Secy.-Treas. James Yount of the Kansas CIO Council. A truckload of underprivileged youngsters were also entertained during the day. Locals of the Packinghouse, Auto and Oil Workers unions cooperated with the CIO Council in running the affair. Everybody had a swell time.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

The telephone company piously said it only wanted to know if its employes really wanted to belong to the CIO.

That was their excuse for holding up check off payments and refusing to recognize the affiliation of CWA with CIO.

Well, the telephone company has its answer. It got it right on the line when 30,000 and more employes in Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina and Tennessee, voted in a NLRB election. In a great victory for CWA, the Union rolled up 26,216 votes against 4,264 for non-union. This overwhelming victory will be an inspiration for the Southern Organizing Drive and to workers everywhere. CWA-CIO is building a strong and powerful Union for every telephone worker.

Congratulations to William Smallwood, to the telephone state directors and their staff and to those in the CIO who participated in achieving this victory at Southern Bell. A great job, well done.

Another sign of the strength of CWA-CIO is shown in the NLRB election at the Del Ria Telephone Co. in Texas. The vote reported by President Joseph Beirne was 196 for CWA against 13 no-union. Keep them rolling and look for more!

From the West Coast Reg. Director Irwin L. DeShetler reports that the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Co. met with a CWA committee and paid over $27,000 it had held up in checked-off dues. The company was expected to sign an agreement that if CWA would withdraw its suit for damages the company would make no demand for new check off cards in the event of future small changes in name.

President Murray has appointed George Baldanzi as Director and John Riffe as Assistant Director of the Southern Organizing Drive. Brother Baldanzi was an executive assistant to the late and beloved Van A. Bittner. Brother Riffe occupied a position of trust and respect with Brother Bittner.

These two men make a good team. The Southern Organizing Committee, of which the writer is chairman, and David McDonald Secretary-Treasurer, will work closely with Brothers Baldanzi and Riffe, and with the support of all good, sincere trade-unionists their efforts in this great task of improving the lot of the southern worker will be successful. Best of luck to both of them.

Harold J. Straub, vice president and director of organization of the CIO Utility Workers, reports two election victories. At the Hackensack Water Co., Hackensack, N. J., the vote was 146 for UWUA with two against. At the Elizabethtown, N. J., Water and Union Construction and Holding Co., the vote was 61 for UWUA with one against. Rep. John Wynne was in charge of both campaigns.

The CIO Shipbuilders won an NLRB vote at Great Lakes Engineering, River Rouge, Mich., by a vote of 192 to 10, it is reported by Director of Organization Thomas J. Gallagher.

Reg. Director George De Nucci reports that an election covering all beer distributors in Marion, O., was won by the CIO Brewery Workers by a two to one margin. Rep. Joe Emmons was in charge for the Brewery Workers.

Security Law To Get 'Go' Signal

AN INCREASE of about 11 million people in the number covered by social security will be formally recommended next week by an important House committee which has been studying social security problems for many months.

The House Ways and Means Committee is due to make public its proposals in the form of a sweeping amendment to the Social Security law. The Committee held extensive hearings early this year, and has been meeting behind closed doors for several weeks.

The Committee indicated that the increased coverage would affect people eligible for old age and survivors insurance. Groups to be brought into the social security system would be about 4½ million self-employed, about 4 million state and local employes provided their states enter into agreements with the federal government; about 600,000 employes of non-profit institutions.

Not included, although Pres. Truman had strongly requested their coverage, were millions of farmers and farm workers. Also left out of the system will be several hundred thousand professional peoples.

In addition to increased coverage, the Committee is due to recommend considerably higher old age pension payments.

To meet the higher cost of benefits, the Committee suggests an increase in the payroll deduction tax paid by both employers and employes. At present, employes pay 1% of the first $3,000 of their income each year to social security.

Under the proposed bill, the tax deducation would rise to 1% on Jan. 1, 1950; to 2% on Jan. 1, 1951; to 2½% on Jan. 1, 1960, with subsequent jumps in 1965 and 1970 to 3% and 3¼%.

This would increase maximum payments to the social security fund from $30 per person per year to a total of $97.50 in 1970.

Administration leaders believe the Committee's recommendations have a good chance of passage in the House before the session ends, with action likely in the Senate next year.

Rare Mishap Kills Worker

ONE OF those unexpected mishaps that may crop up at any time in a plant recently took the life of a handsome young six-footer who belonged to the United Auto Workers in Lansing, Mich.

Edward L. Wythe, 29, who worked in the General Motors Forge plant, lost his life in one of the most unusual fatal plant accidents on record.

Wythe was waiting for four men to wield a steel battering ram to loosen a die from the steam hammer he operated, when a sliver of steel about two inches long and razor sharp split off the ram, zoomed six feet or so through the air to where Wythe stood and entered his chest and lung near his left shoulder, severing the artery running from his heart to his left arm.

A union committee set to work immediately after hearing of his death taking up a collection to help out young Wythe's wife and baby son.

MEBA Will Aid Longshore Strike

Marine Engineers Beneficial Association announced last week it was sending a special representative to Honolulu to give cooperation to the CIO Longshoremen in its dock strike.

Frank Frazier, assistant business of Local 33, New York, left by plane last Friday for the Hawaiian port "with instructions from union headquarters to our marine engineer members not to help take ships into or out of the port of Honolulu," an MEBA spokesman said.

CIO longshoremen have been on strike in Hawaii more than three months in an effort to bring their wages up to those paid in this country.

Hung Jury Ends Trial In Mich. Disturbance

WHETHER THE Michigan director and four representatives of the CIO Steelworkers will again stand trial on charges of rioting—after a jury at Kalamazoo, Mich., was unable to agree on the verdict — will depend on the decision of Attorney General Stephen J. Roth.

The five were accused of causing a riot last Dec. 1 at the Shakespeare Mfg. Co., Kalamazoo, makers of fishing tackle, where a strike had been in progress since Sept 7. The jury divided 6 to 6.

The accused were: Tom Shane, state director; Glen E. Sigman, international representative, and Clarence A. Jackson, Robert L. Farmer and Arthur Menozzi, field representatives.

Roth will make his decision after reading a report to be submitted by Asst. Attorney General Meredith J. Doyle, prosecutor in the case.

Earlier, on the motion of the prosecutor, charges against Harry Stefanick, Frank O'Connor and Leonard Marx were dismissed.

During the five-week trial the prosecution called 139 witnesses in its attempt to prove that the outbreak was planned in advance by the defendants. The defense, which contended that the Dec. 1 occurrence was provoked by the company, rested its case without calling a single witness.

Minn. Doctors in Deal With Press To Fight Health Plan

By NATHAN ROBERTSON

MINNESOTA doctors and newspaper editors have worked out a secret deal—under which the doctors have dropped their long standing ethical rule against advertising in return for a "closer understanding with the press—which amounts to bribing the press to fight President Truman's health insurance program.

Some of the editors are reported to be planning to blast the deal as an attempt to "corrupt the press." But although the arrangement was consummated in May, and announced to the editors in a "confidential bulletin" from the Minnesota Editorial Association in June, it has so far been treated with the same secrecy as press scandals in other states this year —notably in Illinois.

A copy of this "confidential bulletin" to editors has been obtained by the Committee for the Nation's Health, which is spearheading the drive for national health insurance. It carries a "doctored" text of a resolution adopted by the Minnesota State Medical Ass'n approving advertising by doctors and by local medical societies in order to foster "indirect publicity" for the medical profession.

Under the headline "Medical Profession Eases Ethical Restrictions on Advertising," the Bulletin tells the editors: "This is one of the most significant items your MEA Bulletin has ever carried, though we fervently hope that enthusiasm over relaxed medical ethics will not encourage even the momentary impairment of newspaper ethics."

ADS APPROVED

The background of the story, however, offers little basis for this hope. Apparently the idea originated with the newspapermen and was presented to the doctors in a medical-press conference in April. In May the State Medical Association at its annual meeting adopted the resolution approving newspaper advertising by the doctors with a preamble including this key statement:

"One criticism frequently heard from the press is that the medical profession expects the press to maintain the entire burden of indirect publicity from the doctor to the public without remuneration."

To meet that criticism the resolution approved of doctors placing in their local newspapers a "professional card" stating their names, addresses, telephone numbers, and office hours. Local medical societies also were encouraged to take advertising in the newspapers.

It is highly significant that the words "without remuneration" in the quotation above were in the text of the resolution as published by Minnesota Medicine, the organ of the Medical Association, but were omitted from the text distributed by the MEA. Apparently these words were a little too plain in their meaning. Even without that phrase, however, the meaning of the resolution as printed by the MEA Bulletin was clear.

MEANING IS CLEAR

The Bulletin made the meaning even plainer by quoting the medical association as saying:

"This resolution, we believe, is an important step in building up better relations with the press of our state. At our medical-press conference April 8, country editors particularly stressed the importance they attach to what they term a 'reciprocal arrangement' with the medical profession that would benefit both.

"They are perfectly willing to carry the story of medicine as a private enterprise, in which they, for the mast part, are firm believers, but they feel that physicians, as leading citizens in their home communities, have a responsibility to alleviate the financial burden connected with publishing local newspapers . . . Many of our country medical societies have carried on splendid programs in this respect for some time."

The MEA sent to editors, along with the Bulletin, a suggested advertisement for newspapers to solicit from county medical societies opposing the Truman health insurance program. It told editors "this will help you move, we hope with circumspect caution and genuine gratitude for the open gate, into this new era of medical-press relations."

AMA'S THIRD BID

This is organized medicine's third and most brazen effort to bribe the nation's press on health insurance.

The first was an offer to cartoonists of thousands of dollars in prizes by the Physicians Committee, an adjunct of the AMA, a year or two ago for the best "published" cartoon against national health insurance. This was denounced as an attempted bribe by Editor & Publisher, trade journal of the newspaper industry.

The second, disclosed only a few months ago, was the program of the California Medical Association to buy the press by taking advertisements in every newspaper in the state during the campaign against Gov. Earl Warren's health insurance program. A spokesman later reported that the "response from editors in publicity has been far beyond anything we expected."

The similarity between this technique and the technique now being employed in Minnesota is inescapable. In view of the fact that the AMA campaign against national health insurance is being conducted by the same publicity firm that conducted the California battle against Gov. Warren's plan—Whitaker and Baxter —the deal which has been exposed in Minnesota may only be a sample of what is going on all over the country today.

Organized medicine would not be constantly trying to buy the press if it were not having some success. An honest press not only would reject such efforts to purchase its good will, but would backfire so viciously that the doctors would never dare to try again. Obviously this didn't happen in California. It hasn't happened yet in Minnesota.

This repeated effort to buy the press is also a tip-off on the merits of the health insurance issue. If the doctors are right why is it so necessary to buy the press, which already is overwhelmingly on their side?

HIGH-POWERED PUBLICITY Experts Leone Baxter and Clem Whitaker are employed by the American Medical Association to defeat Pres. Truman's Plan to provide medical care for the American people.

American Medical Association Accused Of Blocking Medical Care For Negroes

ORGANIZED medicine last week was accused face-to-face of blocking badly needed medical care from the nation's 15,000,000 Negro citizens.

In an address at the convention of the National Medical Association in Detroit, Chat Paterson, executive director of the Committee for the Nation's Health, declared that the President's health program is the only hope of relieving the urgent shortage of medical services.

Detailing the handicaps that are put on both patient and doctor through race discrimination in the medical profession, Paterson said:

"It is no coincidence that the same forces—in Congress and out—which are allied against national health insurance are likewise fighting to block FEPC, anti-poll tax and anti-lynching legislation. These are not two separate battles."

The cost of voluntary health insurance, according to unbiased surveys, is much too high for Negro families, Paterson pointed out. "Therefore, the only answer is a national program of prepaid insurance. Such a program would bring down the cost, cover the individual against catastrophic illness, and enable doctors to practice in areas which cannot support them at present."

THE AMA ISSUED a news release saying that for the first time since its founding 103 years ago a Negro physician, Dr. Peter M. Murray, New York City, will be seated in the House of Delegates to which he was elected by the New York State Medical Society.

In making the announcement, Dr. George F. Lull, AMA's secretary and general manager, said:

"Dr. Murray's election to our House of Delegates is a forward step in American medicine. This action will serve notice to the socializers who are attempting to besmirch American medicine for the purposes of political gain that medicine recognizes no boundaries except the scientific skill and abilities of those who are admitted to practice.

"Dr. Murray is a magnificent example of what a physician can achieve under our present system of free enterprise, despite its admitted imperfections and injustices. Progress is still in the making, but this is a significant milestone."

Nov. Meeting To Establish New World Labor Group

A NEW democratic international labor federation will be set up at a world-wide congress to be held in London, England, starting Nov. 28.

Scheduling of the conference was worked out at a meeting of the preparatory committee in the British capital late in July. Michael Ross, CIO director of international affairs, was present at the confab. Another meeting of the preparatory committee is slated for Nov. 24—just before the Congress gets under way. The Congress is expected to last about a week.

London won out over Brussels, Belgium, as the site of the international meeting.

Draft of the proposed constitution of the new organization, which will be voted upon by the congress, calls for the election of a chairman, and five vice-chairmen, a general secretary and an as-yet-undecided number of assistant general secretaries.

CIO, which has taken a leading part in setting up the new group, will be entitled—on the size of its membership—to a delegation of 10 representatives at the November meeting, and to four members on the general council. There will be three places on the Executive Board for North America—presumably to be divided among the CIO, the AFL and Canadian unions.

Initial plans for the new organization were discussed at a conference in Geneva, Switzerland, in June, and the working committee of 14 was named to handle all details for the meeting.

Carey Asks Probe Of Soviet Slave Labor By UN

Hope that the United Nations will investigate charges of slave labor in the Soviet Union "and of any other documented accusations concerning similar practices anywhere in the world," was voiced last week by CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey.

Carey said that the "highly documented charges" of compulsory labor in the Soviet Union—which were placed before the UN Economic and Social Council recently —are of "major concern" to workers.

"There is no place for slavery in our modern world," he said. "If any remnants of forced labor still hold over from the days of feudalism, the practice should be investigated and stopped. . . . We know that slavery in any one country can endanger freedom throughtout the world."

90-Year-Old Steelworker Gives Longevity Recipe

NINETY YEARS old last June 10, Casper Streich has young ideas.

He is a charter member of Local 3120 of the CIO Steelworkers at Browning Crane & Shovel, Cleveland, where he is now employed.

Streich is not only a firm believer in his union, but he is a member of PAC and never misses a PAC collection, according to Local 3120 Pres. Frank Novsak.

Married 66 years ago, Streich is the father of eight children. He has a good crop of hair and a good set of teeth—his own.

Streich has spent 47 of his 80 working years at Browning Crane & Shovel as boilerman, riveter, assemblyman and gatekeeper, his present job.

His formula for a long life is to mind his own business, take care of himself and eschew liquor and "fast women."

Born near Berne, Switzerland, Streich worked on his father's farm until 1880, when he went to France to work on a large estate. He came to the United States in 1882, became an American citizen 61 years ago, cast his first vote in the Cleveland-Harrison Presidential election, and has never missed a general election since.

Vacation Found No Bar To Compensation

The Michigan Unemployment Compensation Commission has reversed itself to rule that workers receiving holiday pay while unemployed may still file a compensation claim for the same week. The reversal was based on the decision that holiday pay is earned, not on the holiday itself, but throughout the year.

3 Groups Spend Million Fighting Fair Deal

IN 1946 Congress, over the violent protests of Washington corporation pressure lobbies to register and to file groups, passed a law requiring quarterly financial returns.

Last week the quarterly returns for the April-June period showed these interesting facts:

• Gerard Reilly, former Labor Board member and strong supporter of the Taft-Hartley Act, was paid $7,864.11 by General Electric; $6,000 by General Motors; $1,500 from the Pond Creek Pocahontas Co. of Huntington, W. Va.; and $1,200 from the Printing Industry of America, Inc., which has been running a Taft-Hartley war against the Typographical Union.

• Former Sen. Joseph Ball of Minnesota—one of the most outspoken foes of labor to sit in Congress in recent years—was paid $3,475 during the three-month period. The money came from Reilly, and it was divided 50-50 between the GM and the GE accounts.

Reilly told a reporter that he had employed Ball—at almost his old Senate salary—to analyze amendments to the Taft-Hartley and wage-hour acts, go over the transcipts of hearings, etc.

Ball recently left Washington for his hometown Minneapolis. In Minnesota last week a newspaper reporter incorrectly notified Minneapolis papers that Ball had been drowned. It was a different Ball, not the ex-Senator.

• Three big conservative organizations spent more than a million dollars during the first six months of 1949 to fight Fair Deal bills:

1. American Medical Association (fighting health insurance)—$508,397.
2. Natl. Association of Electric Light Companies (fighting public power)—$224,222.
3. Committee for Constitutional Government (fighting all varieties of Fair Deal legislation)—$306,297.

• The real estate lobby was also in the big-money group of lobbyists. Leading the real estate field was the Natl. Association of Home Builders, which spent $181,600—of which it claimed "only" about $44,000 was for lobbying purposes. The Natl. Association of Real Estate Boards spent $86,493, while the Natl. Apartment House Owners Association and the U. S. Savings & Loan League, together dished out about $100,000.

• A collection of anti-labor lobbies, all of which fought Taft-Hartley repeal, listed expenditures of over $200,000. They included: (1) the Natl. Small Businessmen's Association, spending $129,637; the Conference of Small Business Organizations, $26,584; the Tool Owners Union, headed by ex-Rep. Fred Hartley of T-H notoriety, $27,304; and the Natl. Economic Council, headed by reactionary Merwin K. Hart of New York, spent out $23,522.

General Electric's widely-publicized "twenty questions" about Taft-Hartley, which was used to pressure Congressmen against T-H repeal, cost the company over $35,000, the figures show.

• A survey made by Congressional Quarterly, a Washington research and reporting agency, showed that total lobbying expenditures during the first half of 1949 totaled $4,098,653. This was an increase of $635,000 over the same period in 1948.

The "powerful labor lobby," to which so many columnists, radio commentators and politicians refer, spent no more than $100,000. This figure, representing CIO, AFL, railroad brotherhoods and unaffiliated unions, was about 2% of the total lobby expenditures compiled by Congressional Quarterly.

Lobby Probe Proposed

The Senate Rules Committee has proposed a Congressional probe of lobbying activities in the nation's capital.

The resolution, authorizing $50,000 expenditures, would set up a joint Senate-House Committee with wide powers to conduct the investigation.

Bill Would Let You Pay for Home at Rate of $25 a Month

NOW WORKING its way through Congressional machinery is a bill which would enable about a million Americans with incomes ranging between $2500 and $5000 a year to buy homes.

They call it the "middle income housing bill," and it has far greater significance for the average wage earner than the much-talked-about public housing bill, passed recently. But in contrast with the loud ballyhoo accompanying the progress of the public housing bill, little attention has been focused on the middle income housing proposal.

"Not more than 10 millions of our citizens are within the income range eligible for public housing," two CIO witnesses told the House Banking & Currency Committee in a joint statement presented during hearings on the bill. "At least 20 million persons are in the income range from $2000 to $5000 per year."

The CIO representatives were Leo Goodman, director of CIO's housing committee, and John Edelman, Textile Workers legislative representative.

FEWER RENTAL HOMES

New construction of houses has been declining, they said, and only a small part of these—17% last year—were for rent. Even those built for rent weren't for the middle income pocketbook. Most of them rented for $80 a month and up.

Thus, if rental units aren't being built for them, the only answer for middle income people is to buy their own homes, Edelman and Goodman reasoned. But the problem of financing bars most of them.

If middle income families could obtain government loans at low interest rates, payable over a long period, then this greatest group of U. S. families could manage the purchase of homes.

Exactly what would it mean to the average home buyer in terms of dollars and cents? According to the CIO witnesses:

• If interest rates were reduced to 2½% instead of the present 5%, the purchaser of a $10,000 home would pay $46-47 a month instead of $56.

• If amortization were spread over 60 years, with interest rates 2½%, a family could buy for $6000 a home which this year would cost $10,000.

• With a 60-year mortgage and 2½% interest rates, the monthly cost for interest and prineipal would be less than $25 a month. Over a 40-year period, the monthly payment would be $31 or $32.

Already approved by the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, almost exactly as recommended by CIO, the bill was moving toward a House committee vote as the CIO News went to press.

Of the 27 House committee members, 14 are sponsors of the bill themselves.

As the CIO News went to press, the House Banking and Currency Committee took the heart out of the bill, but observers felt there was a possibility a good compromise could be worked out in a Senate-House conference committee.

The legislation approved by the Senate Committee would:

• Provide direct loans to cooperatives and other non-profit corporations.

• Provide loans at the "going rate" of federal interest, estimated at 2½%.

• Permit amortization over the useful life of the property, not exceeding 60 years.

• Provide a maximum of one billion dollars a year for five years for such loans. This would permit construction of about a million homes.

Under such a program, groups which have tried to find the money for a cooperative housing project would have the solution to their problem. One of the values of cooperative housing, Goodman and Edelman said, is its elimination of the speculator and his "cut," thus reducing costs.

The pressing need for housing makes large-scale projects desirable, they said—another advantage of cooperative housing.

"What we are proposing is a means whereby the housing industry can concentrate on the all-essential job of production. Let the consumers handle the job of distribution. Until we finally do this the housing business will always be inefficient and overexpensive, and the economy will suffer," the CIO witnesses said.

CIO Wins Bout In Rent Fight

Opponents of a rent-boosting law in Wisconsin, led by the CIO, scored an initial victory when Federal Judge Robert Tehan temporarily enjoined the Milwaukee Federal rent director from turning over his records to state authorities. The Wisconsin CIO requested the restraining order, pending outcome of a court suit.

A new state law passed by Wisconsin's Republican legislature and signed by GOP Gov. Oscar Rennebohm would permit rents which have already been increased 15% under the Federal law to go up another 15%. Those which have not yet been raised could be boosted 30%.

Under the CIO-opposed local option section of the federal rent law, states and local communities are permitted to lift federal controls or to substitute their own rent law for federal controls. This section recently declared unconstitutional by a Chicago Federal judge.

The CIO and other opponents of the new law are suing to have the Wisconsin law thrown out.

RETIRED CIO STEELWORKERS deserve a better future than that pictured above at the Lake County, Ind., Poor Asylum. But that is their fate under industry pension "plans." There are 30 Steelworkers at the asylum, which is located in an industrialized area near Chicago. (All of them do not appear in the picture.) Here is the flesh-and-blood argument for the Steelworkers' pension plan presented by Philip Murray, his advisers and members of the union's staff to the fact-finding board. Steel industry representatives are arguing determinedly against the union's demands. (See Pages 6 and 7 for stories and other pictures.)

CIO, AFL and Independent Union Papers Back Move

Ideological-Free Labor Press Service Announced

FORMATION of a new, nationwide, co-operative labor news service—Labor Press Association — has been announced by a committee composed of representatives of newspapers published by affiliates of the CIO, AFL and by independent unions.

The Association will be incorporated in the District of Columbia within two weeks, the committee reported.

"The Association will begin functioning on or about Sept. 1 and hopes to have its news, feature, picture and cartoon service in full operation before the end of the year," the committee reported.

"One of its first moves will be to take over the facilities and staff of Labor Press Associates, an independent labor news agency which has been in operation more than five years.

"Irving Fagan of Philadelphia, a veteran newspaperman, has been chosen by our committee as the Association's editor. Fagan worked on papers in Washington, D. C., Missouri and Oklahoma before joining the staff of the Philadelphia Record 20 years ago. After the Record ceased publication in 1947, Fagan became executive officer of the Philadelphia Newspaper Guild.

"Mrs. Alvaine Hamilton, head of Labor Press Associates since its founding, will be one of top staff members of new association.

"Newest addition to staff is Cushman Reynolds, assistant editor of the AFL Seafarers Log for two years. Reynolds was an Army Air Forces press relations officer for four years and has had 12 years newspaper experience. He is co-author of "Strategy of the Americas," a book on military activities.

"ASSOCIATION headquarters will be at 1721 Eye Street, N. W., Washington, D. C. It plans to have correspondents in key industrial centers throughout the United States and to provide some overseas coverage.

"Policies of the Association will be determined by its client-members, with a Board of Directors and an Executive Committee directing its actual operations.

"The Association is being formed to help the nation's labor press fulfill its important role in balancing our daily newspapers.

"The Association's energies will be devoted to producing and distributing news and features, pictures and cartoons, that will bring to working people information that will be useful and entertaining. Our daily report to labor editors will be produced by professional newspaper men and women who are liberal and fair-minded, who understand America and American Labor.

"WE OF LPA believe in democracy in which free trade unions can function. We oppose totalitarianism and dictatorship whether it be fascist or communist.

"Those of us who have been largely responsible for creation of the new organization have long felt that the labor newspaper field has badly needed a nationwide news and feature service free of ideological taint. We believe we have the foundation for such a service.

"Our Board of Directors and Executive Committee will be composed of representatives of CIO, AFL, and independent union representation in determining Association policies. It is intended that the Executive Committee, which will work closely with Editor Fagan in establishing the new service, will be composed of experienced newsmen and with trade union backgrounds."

The committee making the announcement is composed of the following: Gordon Cole, editor of The Machinist (International Association of Machinists); Benjamin Haskel, editor of Textile Challenger (AFL United Textile Workers); Al Herrington, editor of CWA News (CIO Communications Workers of America); Glen Slaughter, AFL League for Political Education; Allan L. Swim, editor of The CIO News. Ruben Levin of the staff of Labor served with the committee as consultant.

LPA Denied Representation In Congress Press Galleries, May Appeal Decision

The standing committee of correspondents has denied by a 3 to 2 vote the application of the Labor Press Associates for representation in the House and Senate press galleries.

The majority felt that the organization was barred by the gallery regulation excluding representatives for associations or publications of "special economic, labor or business interests," the committee reported.

The minority was said to regard LPA as representing "a general labor interest and not a special labor interest in the meaning of the proviso."

The committee, however, agreed to consider revision of its rules regarding admission to the galleries and adopted an interim report of a subcommittee recommending a survey of those at present using the galleries. Mrs. Alvaine Hamilton, LPA head, who asked to represent her organization, said:

"If the decision is right, a change in the rules is imperative to prevent gross discrimination." Her complete statement follows:

"The committee may be correct in its interpretation of the rule, although we note the decision was by a close 3-2 vote. If the decision is right, change in the rules is imperative to prevent gross discrimination.

"Congress certainly does not intend to permit representatives of every kind of special interest trade papers to use the gallery and refuse that same privilege to a press association representing 180 newspapers serving 12 million subscribers just because they are labor papers.

"We haven't decided yet how we will appeal this decision but we will appeal if necessary. Under the committee decision, investors and bankers can have their reporters in the press galleries, but wage earners and their families cannot. We feel sure Congress, in approving the rule, did not intend to make this discrimination.

"It is heartening to note that the Committee itself decided to consider a change in the rule. Obviously, in the light of this interpretation, it is needed—and quickly. Even our competitor enjoys the privilege of the press galleries—because it happens to serve the New York Daily Worker, a daily newspaper—as well as weeklies.

"We hope the membership of the press galleries will insist on a quick change in the rule because we believe this is a problem which should be handled by the representatives themselves."

(Mrs. Hamilton was referring to the Federated Press.)

Line To Take Non-CP Oath Forms At Left

OFFICERS of another CIO union usually labeled left wing last week decided to sign the non-Communist affidavits of the Taft-Hartley Law, while two other union officers announced resignations from the Communist Party in order to be able to sign the affidavits.

The latest union which has decided to sign is the CIO Electrical Workers, according to UE Pres. Albert J. Fitzgerald, who is also a vice president of CIO.

The two officers who announced resignations from the party are Donald Henderson, "administrative director" of the Food & Tobacco Workers, and Maurice Travis, secretary-treasurer of the Mine, Mill & Smelter Union.

A third union officer, Max Perlow, secretary-treasurer of the Furniture Workers, recently took similar action.

Robert N. Denham, general counsel for the Natl. Labor Relations Board, sent to the Justice Dept. without comment the affidavits of Travis, who had been expelled from the CIO Steelworkers for Communist activity before taking the Mine, Mill job, and Henderson.

FITZGERALD made his announcement at a meeting of workers in Elmira, N. Y. He said the signing would take place "in a couple of months." Presumably he meant after the union convention, which opens Sept. 19 in Cleveland. "We'll sign, but we won't like it worth a dam," Fitzgerald said. He revealed the signing had been decided in "deference to well meaning but mistaken opinion in the union."

Other officers of the UE are Julius Emspak, secretary-treasurer, and James Matles, organizational director, and a number of regional vice presidents.

In 1947, at the CIO convention, Matles said of affidavit-signing: "I don't care how many newspapers put in headlines as they did today. 'X Number of Unions in the Lineup.' I read it and I was sick at my stomach—it reminded me of an employe announcing the results of a back-to-work movement."

He criticized others for signing at that time and said "we (UE) will not rush to that lineup for the simple reason it is not a chow line, it is a line where they are dishing out poison, but if we are ever found in that line we will be in the rear, and we will be squawking like hell, we will tell our people we are there because we were compelled to be, because there were so many ahead of us."

IN ANNOUNCING his decision Henderson said: "Although it is true that I had been a member of the Communist Party, I have resigned my membership therein."

Henderson, long active in many front organizations, has been a spokesman for the left wing against CIO policy.

Recently, he announced that he had resigned as FTA president in protest against the affidavits, which his FTA board had voted unanimously to sign. The board then gave him his new title and made John Tisa acting president. The Natl. Labor Relations Board challenged FTA to show that Henderson had not retained his old duties with his new title. Henderson signed the affidavit.

TRAVIS, ONE OF TWO central figures in an incident in Bessemer, Ala., which the Mine, Mill Union and the Communist Party used to launch a vicious campaign against CIO Pres. Philip Murray, announced his CP resignation: "with a great sense of indignation."

It was "not an easy step for me to take. I believe that under our Bill of Rights, for which our forefathers fought, that an American has as much right to be a Communist as he has to be a Republican or a Democrat, a Jew or a Catholic, or an Elk or a Mason."

Note: Communist Party members often refer to each other as "Brother Elks."

Travis went on: "Membership in the CP has always meant to me as an officer of the international that I could be a better trade unionist."

Perlow, in resigning, had said he believes in the principles enunciated by the CP.

All three unions have violently objected to democratically-arrived-at policies of CIO.

HERE IS THE oath which officers must sign under T-H in order to use the facilities of the NLRB:

"The undersigned, being duly sworn, desposes and says:

"1. I am a responsible officer of the union named below.

"2. I am not a member of the Communist Party or affiliated with such party.

"3. I do not believe in, and I am not a member of, nor do I support, any organization that believes in or teaches the overthrow of the United States Government by force or by any illegal or unconstitutional methods."

CIO unions which have not yet signed—or decided to sign—are: Fishermen and Allied Workers, Fur and Leather Workers, Longshoremen, Marine Cooks, Public Workers and American Communications Association (not to be confused with the Communications Workers of America, CIO).

"Benson, it has been reported to me that you hold a position other than the one you hold with us? What's the idea?"

IRVING FAGAN
Named editor of the newly-formed Labor Press Association

Reorganization Score: 1 Up, 1 Down

THE Administration, after losing its fight for a Cabinet-rank Welfare Dept., scored a smashing victory in adding to the prestige of the Labor Dept.

Under the Reorganization act, the Senate had until last Friday to disapprove seven reorganization plans or they would become effective automatically. Forty-nine votes would be needed for disapproval.

Plan No. 1 was that setting up a Dept. of Welfare, under which all social security, education and allied agencies would be placed. The American Medical Association fought the proposal tooth and nail. There was also considerable opposition to Oscar Ewing, Federal Security Administrator, who was reported to be in line for the new Cabinet post.

The vote to reject was 60 to 32. It was ironic to see such self-styled economy proponents as Sens. Harry Byrd (D., Va.) and Millard Tydings (D., Md.) voting against a plan which would have saved the Government millions of dollars.

Next day, the Senate took up Plan No. 2, which would transfer to the Labor Dept. the Bureau of Employment Security, which includes the U. S. Employment Service and the Unemployment Insurance Service.

Many Senators switched on this one and the vote to reject the rejection was 57 to 32.

Expressing his gratification over Congressional approval of the plan, Labor Secy. Maurice Tobin said:

"This is an important step in the rebuilding of the Dept. of Labor. More needs to be done to carry out the express desire of the President to rebuild the Department to its greatest usefulness."

A third reorganization plan passed by a vote of 47 to 40. Apparently the pork barrel figured in the vote which placed the Bureau of Public Roads within the Dept. of Commerce.

The Labor Dept. move is the first major step in the Administration's drive to keep its pledge to restore the Labor Dept. to its full status. The 80th Congress almost halved appropriations and stripped the department of most of its main functions, leaving only two key bureaus, the Bureau of Labor Statistics and the Wage-Hour Div., under the department. (The latter was somewhat curtailed.)

The USES was one of the Bureaus transferred out by the 80th. The return now, plus the addition of the unemployment setup, comes at a particularly important time, with a serious unemployment problem facing the country.

THE DEBATE on the bill was extremely interesting, since it debunked the widely prevalent story that Sen. Irving Ives (R., N. Y.) is a liberal when it comes to labor matters.

He was under heavy fire from Sen. Hubert Humphrey (D., Minn.). Ives was expressing great worry over the experience-rating features of the unemployment compensation law.

Humphrey pointed out that the Security Agency is opposed to experience-rating devices. Ives remarked that the agency hadn't tampered with the system.

HUMPHREY: "I may say to my distinguished friend from New York: let us cease worrying. Here is something which the FSA announced it does not like, but yet it has done nothing to destroy it."

IVES: "There happen to be thousands of employers who are worrying about it."

"Same old thing—shot from behind."

HUMPHREY: "There are some persons who are never so happy as when they are unhappy. There are other persons who enjoy worrying.

"They conjure up more ghosts and more bogeymen in an hour than a dog can acquire fleas. They have all kinds of problems on their minds.

"It is impossible for the Senate to set at rest all the worries of the 'ulcer' groups in this country. Some people are bent on having ulcers and dyspepsia. I do not know of anything as a remedy except Bisodol or something of that nature."

Sen. Paul Douglas (D., Ill.) then spoke up:

"In view of the fact that the distinguished and able Senator from New York does not share the fears that the Labor Dept. would be biased and which instead he merely passed on to this body, would it not be the judgment of the junior Senator from Minnesota that the great talents of the senior Senator from New York would be better devoted to removing those false fears on the part of employers, rather than merely passing them on to the Senate, and seeking to influence this body by giving them circulation?"

HUMPHERY: "I pay tribute to my esteemed and devoted friend, the junior Senator from Illinois, for his timely observations which always come to my rescue."

Turning to Ives, he said:

"When the Senator talks of delay, I know it is foreign to his character. He is one who likes to go ahead and get things done. Here is a political surgery job which needs to be done."

A LITTLE LATER, Douglas asked Humphrey (who was leading the Administration's floor fight for the plan) to yield. He did and Douglas asked:

"Did the Senator from Minnesota receive large numbers of letters from business groups in his state, as many of us did from our states, demanding that we put into effect immediately the recommendations of the Hoover Commission?"

"Yes, indeed, hundreds of them," replied Humphrey.

"Has the Senator from Minnesota been impressed with the fact that suddenly many of the same groups who only a few weeks ago were demanding that we take affirmative action upon the recommendations of the Hoover Commission are now writing demanding that those recommendations of the commission be rejected?" Douglas asked. Humphrey agreed.

IVES KEPT saying that the Reorganization wasn't the proper remedy.

Recalling that Humphrey had been a pharmacist while going to college, Sen. Henry Cabot Lodge (R., Mass.) asked:

"Will the Senator from Minnesota, as a medical expert, permit me to ask whether it is not true that the juice of a lemon is valuable in preventing scurvy, and the fact that the body politic takes a little of that, without the sugar, can neverthless advance the cause and is that not what the Senator from Minnesota would describe as a placebo?"

Webster's Dictionary defines "placebo" as "a medicine given merely to please the patient." It also means "verpers for the dead, from the first word of the first antiphon."

HUMPHREY: "I may say to the Senator from Massachusetts that my association with the healing art was strictly on the basis of dispensing, not prescribing. But I can make the laymen's observation that the lemon juice which the distinguished senator is talking about is exactly what the Government needs to sort of pucker it up a little bit."

And, so, the Senate paid a compliment to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts (Secy. Tobin) and passed Reorganization Plan No. 2.

Senate Vote On Reorganization

Here are the votes by which the Senate acted —on Aug. 16 and 17—on two important government reorganization plans. Plan No. 1—which was defeated, 60-32—would have created a new U. S. Department of Welfare to handle health and social service activities. Plan No. 2—which was passed, 57-32 — provides for transfer to the U. S. Dept. of Labor of the Employment Service and the Unemployment Insurance Service.

Votes for the Reorganization Plans are indicated by R. Votes against the Plans are marked W. Paired right is marked PR; paired wrong is marked PW. Absence is indicated by A.

Twenty-eight Democrats and four Republicans voted for Plan No. 1; 37 Republicans and 23 Democrats voted against. Forty-three Democrats and 14 Republicans voted for Plan No. 2; 8 Democrats and 24 Republicans voted against.

Senate Acts Soon On 75c Bill

WAGE-HOUR legislation is due to come up in the Senate next week.

Administration leaders are hopeful that the Senate will help repair much of the damage caused by the House-passed "sweet and sour" measure two weeks ago.

The House bill, like the measure due for action in the Senate lifts minimum wage rates from 40c an hour to 75c. But the House bill cut an estimated million workers out of wage-hour law protection, and left a number of loopholes which will hamper enforcement action.

The Senate bill, on the other hand, would increase wage-hour coverage by about a quarter-million people.

The weakening provisions of the House bill came in a sweeping amendment offered by Rep. Lucas (D. Tex.), and they were adopted with the support of the usual Dixiecrat-Republican conservative coalition. The Dixie-gop alliance may try a similar move in the Senate.

Justice Dept. Urged To Act

THE CIO TEXTILE Workers has asked the U. S. Department of Justice to make an immediate investigation of the alleged denial of civil rights of its members by mob action at the American Thread Co. plant in Tallapoosa, Ga.

In a letter to Atty. Gen. Tom Clark, the union said that the violence had taken place on Aug. 2 and 4, when TWUA members attempted to distribute leaflets at the Tallapoosa mill gates. Affidavits supporting the union charges were submitted.

The letter said that August 2, when a small group of TWUA members from the Dalton plant of the American Thread Co., now on strike, appeared at the gates of the Tallapoosa mill to distribute leaflets, a group of employes came out of the mill, armed with clubs and other weapons, and drove them away. The leaflet explained the strike.

The letter said that on Aug. 4 when another attempt was made to distribute leaflets a group came out of the plant armed with shotguns and pistols, and threatened to shoot.

"All during this episode a city policeman sat in his car within 15 feet of the leaders of the mob and refused to disarm them," the union said.

Outrageous? No!

You don't have to be very old to recall that labor's campaign for the 40-hour work week was termed "outrageous" by many employers and business-minded editorial writers.

Such a thing, they declared, would ruin our economy, give workers too much idleness, etc., etc.

Now the 40-hour work week is standard.

And the idea that hourly workers should have annual vacations was termed "outrageous," too, when the unions began campaigning for them.

But vacations are now an accepted part of the industrial scene.

It's well to call these things to mind when discussing the current union drive for pensions and when making plans to negotiate for guaranteed annual wages.

The pensions requested by some unions have been termed "outrageous" and many employers have referred to the guaranteed annual wage as "an outlandish idea."

Yet the only "outrageous" thing about both is that they're comparatively new. They haven't been accepted yet.

Pension plans, on a small scale, have operated successfully for many years, and a number of firms have had real success with the guaranteed wage.

Big stumbling block in the way of putting both into widespread operation is the old idea that hourly-paid industrial workers shouldn't receive the same consideration accorded others in industry.

The current steel industry case shows clearly that the bosses are in favor of pensions—for themselves. But they balk at the idea of worthwhile pensions for those who work in the plants.

And the idea that men and women should be paid the year around isn't really new. Management representatives and nearly all "white collar" employes are paid that way. ★ ★ ★

A Good Ruling

Few if any publications in the country have been blasing away harder at the Communists than has the CIO News—and yet we were extremely happy when Circuit Judge Sherbow held that Maryland's new "anti-subversive" law was unconstitutional.

Judge Sherbow ruled, in effect, that the law was invalid because it was designed to punish persons for what they thought and not merely for the overt acts they committed.

We hope the higher courts uphold the judge's decision and that the Maryland experience will keep other states and Congress from enacting "anti-subversive" legislation of the type put on the Maryland statute books.

We go along with the simple theory that spies, saboteurs and kindred punks should be tossed into the klink when they're caught, tried and convicted.

But we can't swallow the theory that a man should go to jail because he may have bad thoughts.

We've done fairly well up to now by following the old democratic idea that thought control is taboo and that folks in this country should enjoy real freedom of speech, press and assembly.

We think we can do pretty well in the future, too, by following the same line.

And then we object to the "though control" measures because they so closely resemble the kind of thing you get in those countries where the Communists hold sway.

Discrediting The 'Welfare State'

It's Done In Effort To Prevent Legislation Which People Want And Need

By ALLAN L. SWIM

ON A RADIO network forum show I recently said that the government should go much further than it has in providing the people with needed social welfare services.

A Washington woman called the station at the end of the program and suggested that Moscow was the proper place for me.

The implication, of course, was that I was a Communist or, at least, that I was peddling communistic doctrine.

This little incident illustrates the high pitch of feeling which has been generated by arguments and discussion dealing with the "welfare state."

And, unfortunately, this high pitch of feeling has blinded many persons to the issues actually involved.

IT SHOULD be pointed out that the country is witnessing a clever and concerted campaign designed to discredit the New Deal of Roosevelt and the Fair Deal of Truman by hanging phony and unpleasant sounding tags on the social welfare portions of the programs.

Those engaged in the campaign obviously believe it easier and more effective to charge that a program is "statism" or "collectivism" than to discuss it on its merits.

They take full advantage of the strained relations between the U. S. and Russia and the drive against Communists in this country to discredit purely domestic proposals advocated by non-Communist liberals.

And they never miss an opportunity to try to sell the idea that legislation designed to aid the bulk of the people also is designed to take away or limit their freedom.

ONE OF THE best current illustrations of the "smear" technique is provided by the campaign against federal health insurance.

The American Medical Association and other opponents of the program have dubbed it as "socialized medicine" and as "political medicine."

This has been done despite the fact that many of the strongest supporters of health insurance are strongly opposed to socialized medicine.

It is almost impossible, many of us have learned from experience, to enter into a calm discussion of the insurance plan with an opponent of it.

The minute the subject is mentioned the opponent shouts at you, "Oh, so you're in favor of socialized medicine!"

And the argument is usually over before you can get around to the insurance plan itself.

INVOLVED IN the struggle over the "welfare state" are two large groups of persons with entirely different ideas.

One adheres to the theory that the best government is the one which does the least for the people.

The other group believes that the people, through government, should provide themselves with the services they want, need and are willing to pay for.

The former group is the one which hangs out the "statism" and "collectivism" tags whenever possible.

The latter supports such things as expanded social security, higher unemployment compensation, health insurance and federal aid to education.

YOU'RE GOING to hear a lot more about the "welfare state" during the next year or two.

Those representing the "anti" crowd, for which former President Hoover is a spokesman, obviously are prepared to make a lot of noise.

One of the keynotes of their campaign is the accusation that advocates of the "welfare state" type of programs are trying to destroy the competitive enterprise system.

This, of course, isn't true.

And it's amusing that among the "antis" are so many persons who have attempted to make a mockery of competitive enterprise by practicing or condoning business monopoly.

Platter Tells All On Health Bill

IT COSTS A LOT of money to be seriously sick these days, as plenty of people have found out to their sorrow. That's why there is so much interest in the National Health bill now languishing in Congress.

Hope of its passage at this session has vanished into this air, but the fight for it continues, and will continue until the bill finally becomes a law.

Meanwhile, the American Medical Association is doing its utmost to turn people against the bill, by misrepresenting it as Communistic, bureaucratic, costly and other terrible things.

A good plain talk answering these charges and explaining just what the program and its insurance feature really calls for, is now available for the use of unions and other interested groups.

The talk is in the form of a transcription of an interview with Rep. Andrew Biemiller (D., Wis.), one of the authors of the bill, made by the Committee for the Nation's Health, a group leading the flight for passage of the bill.

Rep. Richard Bolling (D,. Mo.), interviews Biemiller, asking him the kind of questions about the program that anybody interested would like to know, and clearing up general misunderstanding as to its aims and methods of functioning.

The low speed 33⅓ RPM record may be used for local radio programs, or presented on a record player at union gatherings. The Committee for the Nation's Health has several copies of the record, and will be glad to loan them free when they are available.

UAW Says It Has Only Union Book Store

The UAW-CIO book store at 5021 Woodward Ave., Detroit, is the only union operated book stores in the country, the union claims. Acting Manager Bill Ross says that the book shop's customers are 45% union members, 30% Wayne Univ. students and 25% general public.

The store offers a 20% discount to UAW members and a 10% reduction to all other union members. Located in the heart of the Wayne Univ. cultural center, the book store does a booming business with students seeking supplementary reading material.

Many of the students are also union members, working in the shops and attending the university part-time.

Delegates Picked Up Papers And--

ONE NIGHT a couple of newspaper characters got together at a hotel bar and cooked up what they considered a very bright idea.

It still looked good the next morning—so they decided to carry through.

It was a simple scheme that didn't require a lot of work—but a bit of stealth was needed. And both were stealthy.

After the plan was put into operation, they—as they said later—"damn near died laughing."

The little incident was one of the most amusing in a lengthy, sometimes bitter but eventually successful campaign to oust Commies from a CIO union.

THE "BROTHER ELKS," as many convention delegates referred to them, moved in on the Newspaper Guild almost as soon as it was founded.

The Commies considered the Guild a key union because of the nature of the work done by its members. Naturally they wanted to control the union if they could.

The anti-Commies couldn't see it this way, so both groups squared off for battle.

The fight was a hot one which lasted over a period of several years.

Delegates from one city always led the party line convention tussles and the anti-Commies centered a lot of their ire and fire on them.

It was this delegation which was "victimized" by the two characters who met at a bar one night.

DELEGATES TO THE convention sat in groups and occupied the same chairs each day. The two characters knew about this.

They knew, too, that the success of their plan depended a lot on timing. So they waited until a hot party line issue was brought before the convention.

At midnight, following a late adjournment, the two news men went to a hotel room, picked up a bundle of papers, walked quietly down a couple of flights of fire stairs and entered the convention hall.

Then, without attracting the attention of anybody else, they placed a paper in the chair of each delegate in the particular delegation they were out to "get."

Then they began circulating among their colleagues, whispering, "Be sure to get to the convention hall a bit early in the morning so you can see what happens when the - - - - delegation comes in."

A LARGE NUMBER of anti-Commies were in their seats ahead of time the next day—and they were curious about what would happen.

Then members of - - - - - delegation strolled into the room in a group. As they seated themselves they removed the papers which had been placed in their chairs, and began reading them.

Suddenly, all over the hall, attention was focused on the "reading" group. Then the victims of the scheme realized what had happened.

As quietly and as quickly as possible they jammed the papers into their pockets or purses or tossed them to the floor.

The auditorium rocked with laughter.

THAT NIGHT the two characters who cooked up what they considered a very bright idea met at the bar to celebrate their success.

Said one of them to the other:

"It really was something to walk into the hall this morning and find the entire - - - - - delegation reading the Communist Daily Worker. Boy, were their faces red when they realized what had happened!"

ONE MAN'S MEAT

Youths Spend Vacations Helping To Rebuild Europe

THOUSANDS of young men and women from all over the world, and of all creeds and political beliefs, are working together in Europe this summer in special camps set up to aid the reconstruction of war-stricken countries.

The story of these International voluntary "Work Camps for Peace" is told briefly in the UNESCO World Review, weekly publication of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization.

"Some of these young people will reconstruct homes in a bombed-out town, while others, hundreds of miles away, will build a youth hostel on a mountain road or lay a section of railroad track. In many instances, they will do it without pay," reports the Review.

"Volunteers from one country may work for two or three weeks until their vacations from their own jobs end. Then they are replaced by other men and women from other countries.

"In most cases, volunteers in international work camps receive free board and lodging, but they usually must pay their own travel expenses. Camp life is devoted to the work itself—generally from 30 to 40 hours a week—and then to cultural activities, trips to places of interest in the camp vicinity, and to the establishment of friendly relations with the local community.

"IN BETWEEN working days, such topics as international affairs, the problems of peace and war, and the cultural patterns of various nations are thrashed out at round-table discussions and informal meetings.

"Thus despite differences in language and outlook, each volunteer develops a spirit of understanding and cooperation. Friendships reaching across frontiers are formed, and when the volunteers return home to their offices, farms, factories or universities, they become practical missionaries of international understanding.

"The origin of work camps goes back to the first world war. At Cambridge, England, in 1915, there came into being a group of men and women who felt obliged, for their part, to meet the conflict in a different way.

"They formed themselves into what became known as the Fellowhip of Reconciliation. Later on, Pierre Ceresole of Switzerland 'invented' the work camps, creating at the same time, the Voluntary Service for Peace—known in French as Service Civile.

"LITTLE by little, other groups and youth associations joined in. Camps were organized in France, in the United States, in England and in the Scandinavian countries. Each year the volunteers multiplied.

"In 1948, in Europe and in the Western Hemisphere, 32 camps built playgrounds, youth centers and hostels; 48 built schools, hospitals and houses; 15 constructed railways, roads and factories; 14 helped on farms, and 18 camps did social work.

"UNESCO quickly recognized the importance of this movement in fostering international cooperation. In 1948, UNESCO brought together in Paris, the organizers of work camps from nine countries, and a permanent committee was formed.

"This year each of these camps will receive from UNESCO a multi-lingual library on world affairs, the work of the United Nations, and the history, geography and culture of various countries. UNESCO representatives will visit some 35 camps, taking part in the life of the volunteers.

"UNESCO also tries to facilitate the granting of visas for volunteer workers moving from one country to another.

"This is UNESCO's role in this vigorous movement which not only builds and reconstructs in a material way, but also provides a practical method for young men and women to work for peace."

Literacy Crusade

A crusade against illiteracy in the Americas has been undertaken by UNESCO in cooperation with the Brazilian government.

At Quitandinha, high up in the mountains overlooking Rio de Janeiro, more than a hundred experts from 21 American republics, together with outstanding educators from Europe and Asia, have gathered for a six weeks' study seminar on the problems of illiteracy.

Five working groups are set up to study such questions as adult education campaigns, elementary school methods and production of teaching materials.

Reminding the educators that UNESCO places the universal right to education on the top priority list of human rights, Dr. Torres Bodet, director general of UNESCO, said in a special message to the seminar:

"When we speak of human rights, we shall do well to bear in mind that, as things stand, one human being in every two is unable to claim respect for those rights in writing."

Steel Industry Does Much Talking A

By GLORIA CAPLAN

IN THE steel industry it's "heads we win; tails you lose."

If it's a period of rising prices and full employment, the steel industry is opposed to wage increases. "Inflationary," they say.

If it's a period of declining prices and growing unemployment, the industry is opposed to wage increases. Also "inflationary."

In fact, whatever the economic condition of the country, the industry finds it a disastrous time for wage increases.

Last week, the steel corporations rounded out eight days of testimony before the three-man Presidential fact-finding board in New York City. Fifty-four separate companies, in addition to economists and lawyers speaking for the industry as a whole, hit hard at the CIO Steelworkers' proposals for a 12½c hourly pay boost; 11.23c an hour to finance a $125 monthly pension and 6.27c an hour for social insurance.

In essence, their arguments ran the same: Prices are going down; steelworkers are well-paid; pensions and insurance are already provided; an increase in wages would siphon off money which otherwise would be used for expansion, would prevent a price decrease, might increase unemployment.

In addition, the Steel companies didn't like the idea of a fact-finding board any more than they did the prospect of giving out more money in wages. In fact, Bethlehem Steel Pres. Arthur B. Homer ran afoul of the board in expressing his resentment of the whole procedure.

"It is easy to understand why Bethlehem was reluctant on the basis of past experience to give its approval to an irregular procedure which appears to be designed merely as a vehicle for forcing upon us important concessions to the union," Homer said.

"Am I to understand," asked board member Samuel I. Rosenman, "that because other boards recommend an increase, you assume that we necessarily were set up for the purpose of recommending an increase?"

"Well," said Homer, "having nothing to the contrary we could only assume there was a good possibility of it going the same way."

What would Homer think of the board if it based its finding on "that kind of evidence?" Rosenman queried. Homer said he hoped the board's findings would be based on the facts as now presented.

"Rather than on the same kind of assumptions you make?" the former judge asked. The board member asked for a withdrawal of the statement and an apology but received neither.

Later in the week came the Natl. Association of Manufacturers' chance to attack the board and the union. The day before, Ira Mosher, chairman of the NAM's finance committee, held a press conference to attack not only the board and union, but the steel companies which accepted the President's fact-finding proposal, and President Truman as well.

When Mosher began speaking at the board hearing, the Steelworkers' representatives arose and left the room.

"We would have to take insults from the parties in this dispute," explained Union Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg, "but we don't have to take insults from an outsider."

Mosher—to whom the St. Louis Post-Dispatch Washington correspondent, Joseph Hanlon referred as a "representative of the conservative if not reactionary segment of the business community"—termed the fact-finding board procedure "compulsory arbitration." Then he attacked the union for calling a "paralyzing strike" in 1946.

As each of the many industry speakers completed his testimony, the Steelworkers sat down to prepare rebuttal, to be presented this week.

Key to the board's ultimate decision will probably be whether it accepts the industry's economic theory of what's good for the country—or the union's.

The union argued that the present decline in business activity is the result of insufficient purchasing power in the hands of lower and middle income groups. As a result, it reasons, purchases have fallen off, factories cut back production; employes were laid off. If those industries which can afford it without raising prices would increase wages, argues the union—the increased purchasing power would thus set into motion the demand-production-employment, cycle, and the whole country would benefit.

The industry, on the other hand, argues that workers don't need an increase; that a wage increase would not increase total purchasing power; and that, anyway, a lack of purchasing power is not the source of the nation's problems. As described by Jules Backman, the industry's economist, "We are undergoing readjustments in the economy which inevitably follow any period of overstimulated demand."

Thus, to the union, the present unemployment rise is alarming; to the steel industry, it is a necessary "readjustment." To the union, the 2.8% cost-of-living decline in the past year—and then the rise between May and June—offers no indication of price relief for workers. To the companies the decline has real significance.

To the union it seemed that workers were entitled to a raise because of the industry's unprecedented profits and because of a sharp rise in worker productivity.

But to the companies, the union's demand for an increase in wages based on the industry's ability-to-pay is only "an emotionally-appealing argument." Acceptance of this principle would bring "the rapid disintegration of our free enterprise system."

In fact, regardless of the union's arguments or the decision of the board, the steel spokesmen hinted that they would never peacefully agree to any sort of increase—whether spent on pensions, insurance or hourly pay boosts.

"We intend by every means at our disposal to resist any measures which are designed to cause further inflation in this country," warned Bethlehem's Pres. Homer.

Steelworkers, on the other hand, were just as determined to resist that resistance, if necessary.

WORKERS SPEAK

Cleo Wambaugh, receptionist at the CIO Steelworkers' headquarters in Pittsburgh, is looking over the petitions signed by 26,457 members of the union telling CIO Steelworkers Pres. Murray that they are "wholeheartedly" behind him in the pressing for the union's demands. The signatures were obtained at mills in District 15, which includes U. S. Steel plants at Hemstead, Dravesburg, Braddock, Clairton, Duquesne, Rankin and McKeesport.

IN THE DOG HOUSE

Pres. Arthur B. Homer of Bethlehem Steel told the fact-finding board that he assumed that it was going to recommend a wage increase. Board Member Rosenman asked Homer what he would think if the board based its findings on "that kind of evidence," requested an apology but received none.

ng Us Your Life ut Alone Now' a lifetime of productive service, we don't know.

One thing, though, is clear: organized workers this year are grimly determined not to land on that human dump heap. They figure it's about time for them to get at least as much consideration from industry as the machinery gets.

Steelworkers Pres. Philip Murray put it this way: "We will no longer tolerate the double standard whereby machines are preferred over men. Every well-operated company sets aside money for depreciation, repair and replacement of machinery.

"Only infrequently, however, does it make similar provisions for the care of its employes—human beings . . . The time has come for industry to stop treating its machines better than its workers."

Almost every CIO union is seeking a pension plan, plus social insurance, in negotiations this year. To most of them these two demands are so important that they have placed them ahead of wage increase on the priority list. To most of the workers, the fight to keep out of the poorhouses is important enough to strike for. And in at least the auto and steel industries, workers have made it unmistakably clear that they're ready to walk out unless those demands are met.

The fate of most workers' 1949-50 pension hopes may depend pretty much on the precedent set by the decision of the three-man steel fact-finding board now sitting in New York City.

The board will have to rule first on whether pensions are bargainable under the current contract reopening. If it rules they are, as the union contends, it will then have to recommend a pension plan. The union is asking that the corporations spend 11.23 cents an hour to finance a $125 monthy pension.

Industry spokesmen have already made it plain in their testimony that they have no intention of spending any more money on their employes, regardless of the board's recommendations.

Should that be the case, steel workers have been heard to say, those picket signs they hauled out briefly on July 16 are still in usable condition.

Survey Answers Plea For South's Pay Differential

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

THE PROPS ARE knocked out from under the time-honored and lame arguments for a North-South wage differential and some other mildewed notions about southern labor in a study on "Why Industry Moves South," just published by the Natl. Planning Association.

The material in the book is based on a detailed investigation of 88 plants recently located in the 13 states of the "Cotton South," and on an analysis of data obtained in interviews with more than 50 of the business executives of important manufacturing concerns.

The study was made for the NPA's Committee of the South by Dr. Glenn McLaughlin, chief economist of the Natl. Security Resources Board, and Dr. Stefan Robock, now with the Anti-Trust Division, U. S. Dept. of Justice, in Boston. The two men worked together on industrial location studies for the Natl. Resources Planning Board before the war.

The report on the South takes up the broad problems of why businessmen locate plants where they do and what types of industries are attracted by the major economic factors in any area.

Offices in North

The writers note that although this was a study of the South, most of the interviewing was done in the North. "The home offices of the companies responsible for most of the large-scale expansion in the South are in New York, Chicago, Boston, Detroit, St. Louis, the Philadelphia-Wilmington area, and the Cleveland-Akron area," they say.

"The expansion into the South is thus largely a matter of establishment of branch plants of northern companies. Capital and management functions are centered in older industrial areas."

The sections of the report dealing with labor may be old stuff to the CIO in part, but as data coming from the mouths of employers, it has special interest. For one thing, it reveals some breaches in the wall of anti-unionism in the South that offer possibilities for organizing drives.

The CIO has long known and said many times that southern workers on the whole are just as efficient as those in the North, given the same machines, training and other facilities, but aparently employers have only recently discovered it.

The NPA investigators find that "although most of the companies requiring highly skilled workers were skeptical about being able to achieve within a few years, a satisfactory output in the South, the experience has been that the workers are easily trained and efficient."

Nearly all the companies covered in the study were of the opinion that "labor productivity in the South is equal or even superior to that in the North, the report states.

"Where the productivity was considered to be higher, it was attributed to less turnover, less absenteeism, selection of a better part of the labor supply because it was not necessary to 'scrape the bottom of the barrel,' fewer sympathetic and direct labor disturbances, and an eager and cooperative attitude on the part of the workers."

"You work as hard and as well, but I won't pay you as much money."

Wages as high as in northern plants, however, don't always follow along with the high opinion about southern workers' efficiency. An executive of an electric lamp plant, for example, said his company's experience revealed a high efficiency of southern labor, but added that wage rates were about 15% below those in the firm's main northern plant.

Companies mentioned which paid about the same rates in the North and the South, were such organized plants as Ford, General Motors, Intl. Harvester, and Cluett-Peabody—producer of Arrow shirts.

On the question of unions the study reveals that the most common reactions of organized concerns, were that the company had "accepted the principle of collective bargaining, or that there was little chance of avoiding unions, even if the company had wanted to, because of the size of the plant or because it had to be located in a metropolitan center."

A Wise Choice

One interesting case reported in the study tells of a company which selected a union town over an anti-union town, in choosing a site for a southern plant, because the management was "well satisfied" with collective bargaining in their northern plant.

"They expected their new southern plant to be organized also and they did not want to be caught in a battle between union and strong anti-union forces," states the report.

Companies locating new apparel, shoe and textile plants, the investigators find, "were interested on the whole, in staying away from labor unions. Two of the companies had no unions in any of their plants. The president of one of these companies said, 'We're not running away from unions, we're just staying away from them."

"The other company was concerned to a lesser extent about unions because it felt that its wage and employment policy was so good that its workers would not be interested in unions.

Type of Leadership

"Another company emphasized that the workers in the area were 'loyal' and for that reason unionism had not made substantial inroads. The companies with unionized plants elsewhere placed less stress on avoiding unions than did other companies."

On the other hand, the machinery group, made up entirely of northern companies, "expected to be unionized and their expectations were confirmed." But before deciding on a location, they all thoroughly investigated the history of management-labor relations in the community.

"It is not the unions we worry about but the type of people they sometimes have leading them," said one company. In the opinion of another company, southern unions would not be "so radical as those in the North and West."

Since the southern concerns studied were for the most part owned and controlled by northern management, one of the interesting points taken up is the attitude on the employment of Negroes. Did this follow the southern pattern, or was an attempt made to follow a policy of no discrimination?

The study revealed that with a few exceptions, Negroes were employed on less skilled jobs and rarely on the same jobs as the white workers, and that many companies regarded the employment of Negroes as "impractical."

Negroes Encouraged

A few concerns, however, like Intl. Harvester, "are creating important job opportunities for Negroes," says the report. "About half of the large force at its new Memphis plant will be colored.

A section of the report dealing with the big expansion of the shoe industry in the South, since the end of the war, contains data of special interest to the CIO's United Shoe Workers.

Shoe companies in St. Louis, Mo., one of the important shoe centers of the country, have recently established a number of plants in Arkansas, Kentucky and Tennessee. Arkansas, for example, which did not have a single shoe factory before 1945, had acquired 11 sizable shoe plants by the end of 1948.

The report says that the desirable shoe plant is small, as a rule, requiring 400 to 600 workers, over 50% of whom are usually women. This means that small towns are considered most suitable for plant locations.

Many of the plants of two big St. Louis concerns—International Shoe Co. and the Brown Shoe Co.—which have opened up southern plants are unionized. "Wage rates are fairly standard for all country plants but are higher in metropolitan plants," says the report.

In the textile industry, the investigation revealed that there has been only a small expansion of cotton textile facilities in the South during the postwar period. Rayon and other synthetic yarn industries, however, have been tremendously expanded, and there have also been significant additions to the small woolen and worsted industry.

Reasons given by the companies interviewed for expanding in the South were all related to labor supply and labor disturbances, states the report. "Their policy of decentralization carries out the desire to have part of the company operations in a new area and outside of large, highly industrialized districts, the report declares.

Secondly, the establishment of new facilities in small southern towns often means that a manufacturer avoids competition for local labor. The limited employment opportunities in most of the southern areas make textile mill jobs attractive, whereas there is great difficulty in securing labor for textile mills, in northern areas."

In a concluding section the significance of the industrial changes occurring in the South, the report maintains that the forces "responsible for attracting industry to the postwar South are still operating," and large reserves of resources and labor remain to be utilized.

"Needs for industrialization, by no means have been fulfilled. The South still has the handicap of below average incomes. Moreover, within the South some sections have remained behind others . . . This imbalance within the South needs to be remedied in order to strengthen the economic structure of the region and the nation."

Italy Decorates George Baldanzi

George Baldanzi, executive vice-president of the CIO Textile Workers and the new national director of the CIO's southern organizing drive, has received from the Italian government the Star of Solidarity medal, a high decoration for civilians.

The award was made in recognition of a long series of activities by Baldanzi in behalf of the general rehabilitation of the people of Italy.

These included his services during a CIO wartime mission to Italy to reestablish the free trade union movement in that country.

$5,250 Given Quake Victims

THE CIO Latin-American Affairs Committee, headed by Jacob S. Potofsky, president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, has announced a $5,250 contribution to the earthquake victims in Ecuador. The funds will be transmitted through the International Red Cross.

At the same time Potofsky urged President Truman to invoke immediate Congressional action to help, on a large scale, alleviate the human distress and havoc resulting from the disaster. He wrote the President:

"American humanity, you will recall, expressed itself magnificently when a similar disaster struck the people of Japan. I am sure we will want to do no less for our Latin-American neighbors who are the latest victims of such widespread tragedy.

"Would you not use the prestige and influence of your exalted position to obtain prompt Congressional action, in the most generous measure, for the earthquake victims of Ecuador?

"This would be a clear-cut demonstration of our Good Neighbor policy, as well as deep appreciation of our common humanity.

"I am sure that you will find instant response in the Congress and among our own people."

Lansing, Mich., Won't Mark Labor Day

There will be no Labor Day celebration in Lansing, Mich., according to Pres. Tom Eno of the Lansing CIO Council.

"We do not feel that there is anything to celebrate this year," Eno said. "We have contacted the AFL in Lansing and they feel the same way about it."

He cited the failure of the Michigan law makers to enact any substantial legislation in the people's interest and scored Congress' record, particularly the absence of action to wipe T-H off the statute books.

Right Wing Wins In Wayne Co. CIO

Margins of better than 8-to-1 have returned a complete right-wing ticket to the helm of the Wayne County CIO Council in Detroit.

Elected for a second term of office were Pres. Mike Novak, Exec. Vice-Pres. Alex Fuller and Secy.-Treas. Al Barbour.

Novak of Dodge Local 3, United Auto Workers, defeated Percy Llewelyn of Ford Local 600, UAW. Fuller, Steelworkers Local 1299, was elected by acclamation, and Barbour, Chrysler Local 7, UAW, defeated Yale Stuart, president, Detroit Joint Board, United Public Workers.

Md. Anti-Subversive Law Is Held Invalid

THE OBER law, designed to curb subversives in Maryland, has been found unconstitutional by Judge Joseph Sherbow of the State's Circuit Court, No. 2, Baltimore.

Members of Congress are watching the litigation over the bill with great interest because the 81st session is considering the Mundt-Ferguson Bill (S. 2311), which has been approved by a Senate Judiciary sub-committee. CIO testified against the bill.

In an 8000-word opinion, Judge Sherbow found the Ober law "violates the basic freedoms guaranteed by the 1st and 14th Amendments (to the U. S. Constitution), guaranteeing freedom of speech, press and assembly, and due process under the 5th Amendment.

"It violates the Maryland Constitution and the Bill of Rights, it is an unlawful bill of attainder and is too general for a penal statute.

"As stated by Mr. Justice Jackson in the West Virginia Board vs. Barnette, 319 United States 624, 624:

"If there is any fixed star in our constitutional constellation, it is that no official high or petty can prescribe what shall be orthodox in politics, nationalism, religions or other matters of opinion or force citizens to confess by word or act their faith therein."

(The Maryland law was named for Frank B. Ober, Baltimore lawyer, who headed a commission that drafted the measure, and crowned a crusade by State Senator Wilmer C. Carter, Baltimore, who pledged himself to stamp out Communism in the free state after hearing a luncheon lecture on the subject.)

JUDGE SHERBOW found that one section of the law which would impose a five-year prison term, a $5,000 fine or both on a member of a subversive organization, knowing it to be subversive, could apply to a union member. He wrote:

"Does 'knowing' mean actual knowledge or constructive knowledge. Does it mean having the information or knowledge in one's possession to lead a reasonable person to believe the organization is subversive? May reasonable people differ on the meaning of the interpretation of such information?

"Some labor organizations have been characterized as subversive. A worker may believe his union is in the control of officers who would direct its activities into subversive channels.

"If that union has a closed shop agreement with management he cannot withdraw from the organization without losing his job. If he remains in the organization he is guilty of a felony, not because of any act or commission on his part, but because of his association with others.

"Valuable property rights within the organization may be lost. The alternative is no job, or conviction of a serious crime, all without his day in court and without due process . . ."

THE MARYLAND CIO Council fought the bill. The court test was made by six professors, four from Johns Hopkins Univ., one from Morgan State College and one from George Washington Univ., and by a salesman, a physician and a sculptor.

The law requires a loyalty oath of all state employes except laborers, all candidates to file affidavits that they are not subversives and denies public funds to private institutions that do not file with the State their procedure for uncovering subversives on their faculties.

Attorney General Hammond said that he would move promptly for a review by the Maryland Court of Appeals at Annapolis, Maryland's highest tribunal.

He said that he thought that opponents of the Ober law could probably appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court if the Maryland Court of Appeals overruled Judge Sherbow. He said that he doubted that the state could appeal if the Court of Appeals affirmed Judge Sherbow's decision.

Twice a Hero

Jim Day, shop steward of New York City Local 4, Utility Workers, seems to be Jimmy-on-the-spot when there's trouble. He recently rescued two elderly persons from a burning and smoke filled hotel at great risk to himself.

A few months earlier he noticed one day as he was walking along, that the wall of an apartment house was bulging. He rushed back and forth into the building repeatedly, helping the tenants get out. The house then collapsed.

HERMIE

For Unity Of Labor And Farm

DELEGATES to the 11th annual convention of the Iowa CIO Council placed strong emphasis on farm-labor cooperation in blueprinting their economic, legislative and political action course for the next year.

During the three-day meeting at Des Moines, the convention was addressed by Gov. William S. Beardsley; Assistant PAC Dir. Tilford Dudley; CIO Reg. Dir. Delmond Garst; Assistant CIO Organizational Dir. R. J. Thomas; Ken Thatcher, Iowa Farm Bureau secretary; State Rep. George O'Malley; Joe Swire, of the U. S. Savings Bond Division of the Treasury; Duane Wendele, U. S. Dept. of Labor; and M. L. Gilbert, Iowa State Dept. of Labor.

Gov. Beardsley praised the CIO for working with other organizations for betterment of the community.

Dudley, speaking at a buffet supper, discussed U. S. foreign policy and the 81st Congress. First analyzing the reasons labor has not made more legislative progress, Dudley then outlined a political action program for Iowans.

THE SUCCESS of CIO-PAC in Missouri was cited by Garst as an example of the extent to which political action "pays off." Garst noted that it had resulted in the repeal of Missouri anti-labor laws, as well as improvement of state social security legislation.

"There's nothing wrong with the PAC program," Garst said. "It works where it has been tried."

Thomas urged the Iowans to defeat Sen. Bourke Hickenlooper when he faces re-election next year.

(The Republican Senator was listed by the 1948 CIO News voting record as having voted "wrong" on 13 out of 16 key issues.)

ELECTRICAL Workers delegates touched off a lengthy debate when they objected to a majority report of the resolutions committee in support of Natl. CIO policy. The report, however, won adoption by a wide margin.

Resolutions pledged increased support of PAC; endorsed cooperatives and dealt with such other subjects as foreign policy, civil rights, and unemployment.

To further cooperation with farm groups, the State CIO voted to establish community forums in conjunction with farm organizations. In addition, as part of the newly-established state Community Services Committee, each local was instructed to set up and train committees for service work within the community.

Pres. Vernon Dale and Secy-Treas. Kenneth Everhart were returned to office.

Relief Going Up

Relief cases in 19 representative cities rose 6.9% in the months of March and April, a survey by American Public Welfare Association shows. Payments in the 19 cities totaled $11,100,000 in April alone. At least six of the cities are conducting work relief projects.

N. J. CIO Supports UE's Singer Strike

ASSURANCE of continued support for the 7,000 striking workers of Singer Manufacturing Co., Elizabeth, N. J., was given last week by Pres. Carl Holderman of the New Jersey CIO Council.

In a letter to Pres. Robert Brennan of Local 401, CIO Electrical Workers, Holderman said that the "State CIO Council is extending and will continue to extend full moral and financial support to the striking members of Local 401 until this strike has been successfully concluded."

Holderman's letter was in response to a request by leaders of Local 401 to disavow what Brennan termed "strike-breaking editorials" appearing in the public press.

"The State CIO Council will prosecute its campaign to prevent the division of CIO ranks on the economic front as vigorously as it has prosecuted its campaign to prevent the division of the CIO on the political and legislative fronts," Holderman wrote.

"ANY NEWSPAPER editorial suggesting that the Elizabeth strike against the Singer Mfg. Co., be abandoned will receive the State CIO Council's strongest condemnation."

The Singer workers went on strike last May in a dispute over terms of a new contract. The company has had agreements with the union since 1943. This is the company's first strike since 1872, when workers at its plant, then in New York, went out for an eight-hour day. The concern has been in Elizabeth for 75 years.

Major issue in the current strike concerns the company's "standards system" which the union charges is a speed-up plan that has cut earnings and thrown workers out of jobs. The union's demands calling for a halt to this system, and for a general wage increase, plant-wide seniority and other improvements, were flatly rejected by the company. There has been no conference of the conflicting parties since June 28.

ON JULY 27 an election to determine if workers still wanted to be represented by UE Local 401 was held by the State Mediation Board. The vote in round numbers, was 4,000 for Local 401 to 2500 for the Singer Independent Employes Union.

Local officials offered to sign non-communist affidavits if the company would agree to negotiate on the speed-up issue, but the company refused.

Extensive support to the strikers has come from all branches of labor and from grocers, butchers and bakers in the area, who have carried thousands of workers on their books, during the strike.

Strikers are not eligible for unemployment compensation under the New Jersey law, and the long strike has caused much hardship to the workers. Many have had to sell their cars, use up their savings, cash in the War Bonds and go into debt.

The local runs a soup kitchen and pays small strike benefits, mostly in the form of food slips redeemable at the union's own wholesale store.

Publisher Rejects Wage Agreement

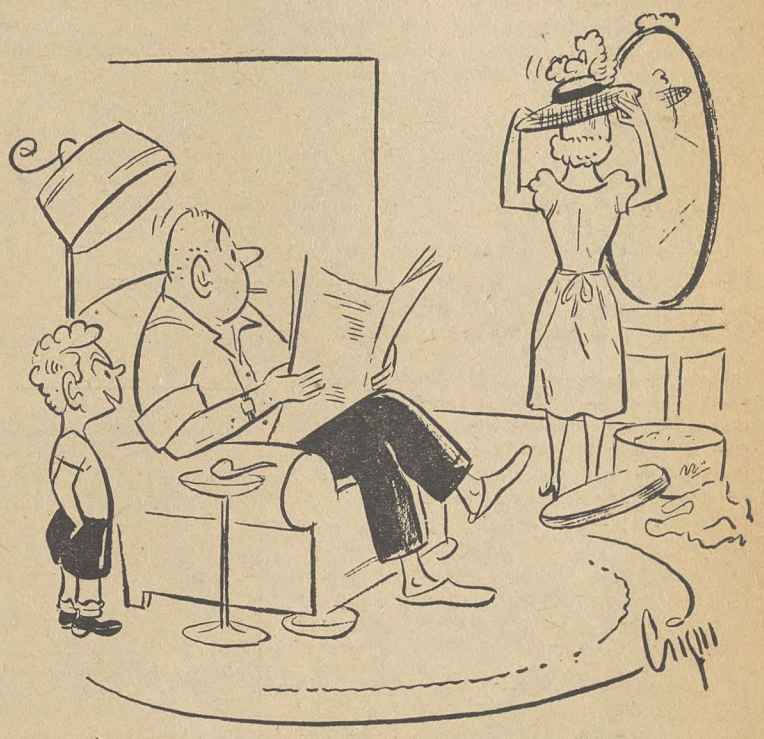
The agreement of the New York Newspaper Guild, CIO, and the Post Home News—reached after seven months of negotiations—was short lived.

Mrs. Dorothy Schiff, publisher of the paper, has repudiated the wage section of the agreement which was concluded while she was out of town.

The settlement provided for a higher minimum on March 1, 1950, a seven-hour day and 35-hour week and three weeks vacation after three years, and re-slotting of jobs, which would bring immediate increase to some individuals.

The Guild and management reached an agreement July 29 in the presence of a federal mediator. During the preceding seven months of negotiations the unit beat down mass firings and operated under a strike vote.

New York Guild officials said that unfair labor practice charges would be filed if the repudiation is not rescinded, and that part of the agreement—the 35-hour week—has been put into effect on the paper.



"Putting in any overtime this week, pop?"

'Freedom'—The Irony Of Russia

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

FOR YEARS, you've heard Paul Robeson and others return from Russia and declare with glowing eyes —and straight faces—that the only real freedom in the world is in Soviet Russia.

Probably those comrades have read the "Corrective Labour Codex of the Russian Soviet Federal Socialist Republics, confirmed by decree of the All-Union Central Committee and Council of People's Commissars of the Russian Soviet Federal Socialist Republics of 1st August, 1933."

If you can read Russian, look this up in Volume 9 of the "Chronological Collection of Laws, Decrees of the Praesidium of the Supreme Soviet, and Ordinances of the Government of the Russian Soviet Federal Socialist Republics up to 1st March 1940."

For those who can't read Russian, the British Labour Party has done a bangup job of analysing this fabulous document—which has 8500 words and 142 clauses.

And what does this codex do in "free" Russia—that self-styled sweet land of liberty?

It sets up forced labor. Says the British Labour party: "Forced Labor, with, and without, loss of freedom, and there are graded stages of compulsion whereby people can be made to do work which they do not want to do, or to work in places to which they do not wish to go, or to work for lower wages than they have hitherto received."

The codex sets up three main categories of forced labor (or, to put it more bluntly —slave labor):

1. Forced labor at the person's normal place of employment;
2. Forced labor in exile (known to Russians by the dread name of "silka").
3. Forced labor in a place of detention.

The British study found four general features of the system which it thought merited prime attention:

A. One of the chief purposes is elimination of opponents of the Soviet regime; Cause 1 states: "The task of the penal policy of the proletariat during the period from capitalism to socialism is the defense of the dictatorship of the Proletariat, and the socialist construction carried out by it, against encroachments by class-hostile elements and infringements not only on the part of declasse elements but also of unstable elements among the workers."

One might ask at this point: If there is such "freedom" in liberty-loving USSR, why do you have to have such rigid laws? You mean there are those who don't appreciate "freedom"?

On this same point, Clause 2 explains that the "corrective labor policy" follows certain "aims" including "to put the condemned in conditions which debar them from the possibility of committing acts which inflict harm on socialist construction."

B. An elaborate, thorough organization is set up to operate the slave labor rules. Those permitted to visit "places of detention," for instance, include a complete hierarchy extending from the chief directorate of corrective labor institutions to the subsidiary directorates of such institutions in regions, provinces, autonomous republics and autonomous provinces.

Here is where it is made clear that slave labor is the special concern of the MVD (Ministry of State Control, formerly known as OGPU, NKVD—the state police) which makes even the Gestapo look like town constables.

C. Communists the world over are screaming that their comrades—"The 12" as they are called—aren't getting a fair trial in that long-distance court proceeding in New York. But, if that charge is true, the 12, like any one else in America, can appeal to higher courts.

Now take a look at Free Russia. Clause 8 states these methods of condemning a person to slave labor:

1. "Sentence in a court of law.

2. "Decree ukase of an administrative organ." (The latter would be such organizations as MVD. Obviously, there is no trial, not even an unfair one.

D. What is the second aim of the Soviet forced labor system? Clause 2 says: "To re-educate them (the condemned) to the conditions of the laboring community by means of directing their work to socially useful ends and by organizing their labor on the principle of the gradual approximation of forced labor to voluntary labor based on socialist emulation—and the shock-brigade system."

(The British note here that "Soviet draftsmen almost invariably use the euphemism 'corrective labor' instead of 'forced (or slave) labor'—though in this passage, it will be noted, they have momentarily faltered.")

Once a person gets into forced—or slave —labor, Russia has to do something with him .A police state just can't stop beating the man into the ground. So, the codex sets up four means of exploiting these victims:

"(a)—For hire in state, cooperative, social enterprises and institutions on the basis of contracts between the enterprises and institutions on the one hand and the corrective labor institutions on the other;

"(b)—In enterprises socially organized for this purpose by the corrective labor organizations:

"(c)—On mass work organized by contract between the corrective labor institutions and state and cooperative authorities:

"(d)—In colonies for mass work."

HOW DOES ONE get into a "corrective labor" status?

Let's take the simplest form first. That's forced labor at your usual place of employment for offenses known as "progul," breaches of labor discipline.

Most important, to the USSR, is absenteeism.

To us, absenteeism means staying away from work. But, in a decree of praesidium, 26th June, 1940, a person became guilty of absenteeism if he lost more than 20 minutes working time by arriving late, leaving early, or extending his dinner break, or if he commits any of these offenses three times in one month or four times in two consecutive months, even if the loss of time in each case is less than 20 minutes.

For that offense, a person can be punished by pay cuts (up to 25% by order of the court or administrative authority) or by undefined methods, in which case the "department of corrective labor addresses a petition to the institution responsible for the sentence or order regarding the adoption of other measures in place of corrective labor."

NOW, WE COME to "silka"—a term for exile handed down from the czarist days. The "special purpose" of this is set forth in Clause 6—"the isolation of the condemned from their previous milieu by means of removing them to certain localities and educating them in discipline by means of corrective labor."

Webster's Dictionary defines "milieu" as "surroundings; environment; a medium."

Once you get into silka, you can't get out again, for any reason, without permission, obviously involved in a lot of red tape (no pun intended).

In silka, you get your pay cut only up to 15%, but other penalties are tough—such as transferring you to more remote places, and even switching you to the third category, forced labor in a place of detention.

The British study says that "Clause 3 shows that the variety of places of detention is closely related to the theory of class war and the practices of 're-education'." Here's what Clause 3 says:

"The basic type of places of deprivation of freedom are the labor colonies of different sorts to which the condemned are sent in accordance with their labor habits, their degree of class-dangerousness, their social position, and the success with which they are being corrected."

These places of detention are in five main categories:

- Solitary confinement cells — for those awaiting trial or under investigation.
- Deportation points—these are intended either as independent institutions or as departments at other places of "deprivation of freedom."
- Corrective labor colonies—These are subdivided into factory and agricultural colonies; corrective labor camps for mass work and punitive corrective colonies.

To the labor camps for mass work are sent "class-dangerous elements deprived of freedom, and also workers who, by the nature of the crime committed, are the most class-dangerous, which necessitates the application to them of a more severe regimen."

In the punitive colonies, there is no definition of the regimen, which is "based on strict isolation of the persons deprived of freedom."

Clause 45 of the codex makes it plain that the detainee may have been condemned to forced labor without trial: "For reception into a place of deprivation of freedom, it is obligatory to have a sentence or an order by organs, legally empowered thereunto, or an open warrant."

The codex, just about the most detailed document of its kind ever foisted on "free" people, goes into great detail on many points, such as how much exercise a detainee may take daily (one hour walking).

But, when it comes to what the detainees are paid for their work, no sum is specified. It merely says that they receive 75% of their pay, with the rest accruing until release.

Since the unions in Russia are creatures of the state, the worker, either detained or undetained, can't expect any collective bargaining help, nor can he strike.

If a prisoner becomes fractious, the MVD moves in fast. It has the power to rebuke, reprimand, transfer to a tougher regimen or spot, send to prison, etc. And, the MVD guards are armed.

HERE IS THE British conclusion as to all this:

"The basic motive underlying this elaborate system is economic. Forced labor has been used in the past—notably by the Nazi dictatorship—and for other objectives, such as punitive treatment or 're-education.'

"Punishment and indoctrination are by no means absent from the forced labor colonies of Russia. But, the main purpose is to insure that the government can undertake at 'cut rates' as regards wages, the great engineering works and the heavy industry demanded by the Gosplan, the building of railways and canals, and the mining of precious ores, often in the most desolate regions of the USSR.

"Thus, the Soviet Government contrives by force to use cheap or unpaid labor in competition with the labor of those countries which pay a reasonable wage and which employ free men living in normal conditions."

So that's how "free" Russia is. That's the kind of "freedom" sought by the Commies who attack Philip Murray and others in the name of autonomy.

Memo to Paul Robeson, to whom "Old Man River" means the Volga: just what do you mean by freedom?

British Government Charges 10 Million Are In Red Camps

The British Government, in charges made to the United Nations Economic and Social Bureau, accused the Soviet Government of having 10,000,000 persons in slave labor camps.

The British moved for a UN investigation of the charges. The USSR, obviously, opposed the motion strenuously. It is expected that it will use the veto, as it has so often in the past, to block such an investigation behind the Iron Curtain.

Unemployment Hits Muskegon, Mich.

'A Wonderful Place To Live—If You Can Live'

What happens to a city and its people as a result of unemployment is told graphically in excerpts from "The Crimes of Muskegon" (Mich.), which appeared in Ammunition, publication of the CIO Auto Workers' Education Dept.:

Shacktowns of unemployed in 1932 were called Hoovervilles.

What do you call shacktowns of unemployed in 1949?

Monopolyvilles? Taft-Hartley-burgs? Inflation Centers? Postwar towns?

Whatever name the shacktowns eventually get, Muskegon is almost one now.

In Muskegon today, there are between 12,000 and 13,000 unemployed men and women.

The Michigan Unemployment Compensation Commission economists have a fancy way of describing the situation. The severity rate in Muskegon, they say, is 250. They mean, out of every 1,000 Muskegon workers, 250 are unemployed. For every three people working, one is unemployed.

At the end of June, about 1,000 of these workers had exhausted their unemployment compensation rights.

By September, more than 8,000 will have used up their unemployment compensation rights.

For the first five months of 1949, Muskegon lost more than nine million dollars as the result of unemployment.

After you use up your unemployment compensation rights, you go on relief.

In Muskegon this means that you get about $44 a month, on the average. But the city has already borrowed $400,000 on the taxes it intends to collect next year to pay for relief.

Even the $44 a month for a family may go by the boards.

What did it?

CRIME OF TAFT-HARTLEY

Muskegon today is the victim of about every crime a corporation can commit against human beings without going to jail.

Campbell, Wyant and Cannon used to employ 3,100 people. Now it is down to 1,200.

The reason: Campbell, Wyant and Cannon committed the crime of Taft-Hartley.

It tried to smash the union in the plant. (Editor's note: A strike followed.) The result was that the Ford Motor Company, which used to buy substantial quantities of castings from CWC, pulled its work back into its own plant. Said a high Ford official, CWC is the victim of stupid management policies. Ford indicated that it would not do business with CWC again until the company showed that it was making an effort to get along with the people in the plant. Now CWC is making a small effort to reform. But in the meantime, purchasers looking for dependable sources of supplies have turned elsewhere.

CRIME OF MONOPOLY

The crime of Monopoly Concentration has cost Muskegon people additional thousands of jobs. GM used to buy parts for Chevrolet and Pontiac in Muskegon from independent suppliers. Now GM has pulled this work out of the independent plants and put most of it in the big GM plant at Saginaw. International Harvester in the same way has taken work out of independent plants in Muskegon and moved it to Harvester plants.

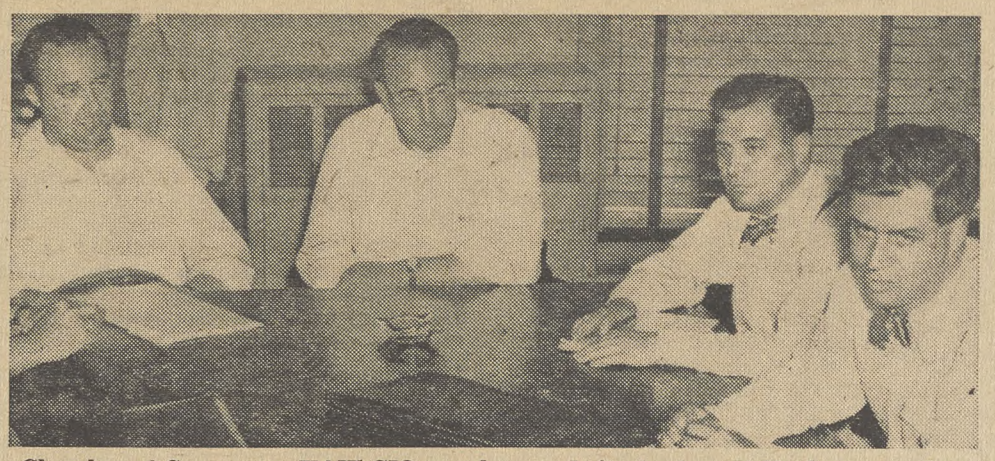
Thus a monopoly executive in GM or Harvester dictates an inter-office memorandum and strands hundreds of families in a town he may not ever have seen.

A company would be prosecuted for abandoning as many horses or mules or dogs like this. Machinery is too valuable to leave lying around loose. But people? People, yes.

CRIME OF THE RUNAWAY SHOP

The crime of the runaway shop has cost Muskegon people their livelihoods. Norge, manufacturers of stoves and refrigerators that are advertised in cheerful colors with gay slogans in most women's magazines, has left 1,100 Muskegon workers in a black unemployed mood. And 900 more will be reading the bad news on the plant bulletin board. Norge moved a substantial part of its operation to Herrin, Ill., and Chattanooga, Tenn., in search of lower wages. When the next layoff comes along, Norge will have gone down from 3,300 workers to 1,200.

Other plants have ducked off to small towns in Indiana and other states in wage chiseling expeditions.



Chamber of Commerce, UAW-CIO members and city leaders of Muskegon confer. Gov. Mennen Williams at far right.

CRIME OF HOARDING

Muskegon is a victim of the crime of hoarding. During the war, when there was a labor shortage, Muskegon companies, encouraged by extravagant government procurement policies (which were made by monopoly executives who took jobs with the government during the war to look after their companies) sent recruiting agents to southern states for workers and continued to hire people on long after all their needs had been filled. At the time, UAW-CIO representatives on War Manpower Commissions protested that more workers were being imported to Muskegon than the factories needed.

But with the government paying the costs, and management fees on top of the costs, the extravagance continued. Far more workers were solicited to Muskegon than the factories needed in war and could possibly continue to employ in peace.

The community, which was already overcrowded, spread slums out into the surrounding pine woods and sand dunes. Families were forced to live in tents, shacks, trailers and boarded-over basements. Just as the UAW-CIO predicted, these workers were left high and hungry when the war came to an end.

CRIME OF MUNICIPAL FUMBLING

The people of Muskegon are victims of the crime of offhanded municipal administration by the corporations.

Today, Muskegon is run by a city commission and city manager. On the city commission there is one representative of the rank and file of Muskegon citizens: Walter Sowles, assistant director of UAW-CIO Region 1D. Until he was elected, however, and began to speak out the needs of the people in the community, the city was run more or less as an unimportant sideshow in connection with corporation business.

Since the war began, there has been no city improvement program.

But, at the same time, there has been no accumulation of reserves to carry on public works when materials became available and men neded jobs.

Instead, taxes have favored big business, have borne down hard on wage earners and today barely provide enough revenue to keep a creaking city machine operating.

Long overdue public works, that would no more than meet the deficit of needs in Muskegon, could today be providing employment to thousands of Muskegon workers.

The city waterworks is inadequate to meet the city's needs. The sewage disposal system is getting the community into trouble with the state because there is danger of pollution. Streets are badly in need of repaving. The community needs storm sewers desperately.

But these are just routine needs the city cannot afford.

With some boldness and imagination, the city itself could meet its present crisis decisively.

Except for the stink from the paper plant and the soot from the factories, the pinewoods and lake air are as invigorating as any a man can breathe.

With magnificent miles of white sand beaches and dunes, with fish so plentiful that people can line the seawalls shoulder to shoulder, with fish enough for all, with hunting nearby, and the opportunity for winter sports few cities in the country can offer, Muskegon has a resource in its location that might furnish thousands of jobs in a tourist industry and at the same time could make it a wonderful place to live for the people of Muskegon.

Public works investments could pay off in new industries and in rich opportunities for pleasant living.

CRIMES AGAINST LIFE

Those are the crimes of Muskegon. A man collecting his last unemployment check at the Unemployment Compensation office, when asked why he hung on, said: "God, almighty, this a wonderful place to live—if you can live."

The UAW-CIO, however, has not been sitting on its hands calling names. It persuaded the Chamber of Commerce to work with the union on a joint program. Michigan's Senators have, at the insistence of the joint committee, presented a memorandum on the Muskegon crisis to the President.

The President has been asked to designate Muskegon a distressed area, to direct government agencies to allocate government orders to the area. (For this to work, the Economic Expansion Act of 1949, which contains the ideas in the UAW Convention Resolution on Full Employment, would have to be enacted.

The Governor of the state has met with the UAW-CIO and the Chamber of Commerce committee to discuss ways the state can help with relief funds and perhaps work projects.

In the community, the UAW-CIO is taking the lead in a campaign for a Housing Ordinance which will make it possible for the city to build homes for people under the new housing law.

In the meantime, the unemployed hang on. They take part in UAW-CIO education and recreation programs. They lie on the bright sand beaches. They line the seawall to fish when the fish are running.

They besiege the farms, some of them corporation-run farms, for jobs.

Farmers report they can't keep their gates on hinges, so many unemployed swing on them looking for jobs. Here bad luck, you can't blame on anyone, has blasted this possibility. Unseasonal weather hurt the cucumber crop, froze out the strawberries, cut down the cherry harvest and dried up the beans.

But, most of all, during the first five months in this vestibule to depression most of the people, on the slow ride from unemployment compensation to relief, live on rumors and headlines.

The rumor along the seawall one day is that a big Kaiser-Frazer contract is coming to Campbell, Wyant and Campbell. The next day a Hudson or a Ford contract is going to call the people back.

THE PEOPLE

Leroy Jewell is one of the victims of the Crimes of Muskegon. He is a slender man with wavy hair and an irregular, sensitive face, the face of a ballad singer or a poet.

His compensation rights were exhausted last spring, but he won't humble himself to ask for relief, and he can't sit still. He spends his days pacing the town, hopelessly looking for jobs.

Early in the evening he goes home, where his unemployed brother helps him garden and work on the house he is building.

Last winter he lived on the site in a tent. There his baby was born in the fall, got a kind of stomach cold and died.

He has a little girl, and a child on the way.

How has he lived since he stopped working at Norge's and ran out of compensation?

This spring he mailed a tent up North into the resort country and then he and his wife and child hitch-hiked up there. They claimed their tent at general delivery, set it up in the pine woods, and while his wife kept house in the tent with the child at her heels and the child aborning, he worked in a hotel, worked on farms, did what he could.

He got a $250 stake that way and now he is back in Muskegon. The money is almost out and he is thinking about mailing the tent back up North again, but his wife is pretty far gone and this time the pregnancy is not so easy.

He just doesn't know. He has two thousand dollars in his house, saved out of his wages and the labor of his back and arms. It would seem, he says, if a man wants to work, if a man wants to take care of his family, if a man is willing to take all his earnings and build his own house with his own labor, he ought to be entitled to a job.

CAMP BELL AND GERALD KREIGH

Camp Bell is what Gerald Kreigh calls Campbell, Wyant and Cannon.

He worked there as a finisher and molder for more than four years. He has also worked at Continental, Shaw-Walker and most other places in town.

The Kreighs are also building their home. For building materials they used what they tore out of a house they had up in the country.

Right now the Kreighs are still getting compensation, $26 a week; that's for four people.

Out of this they buy food, keep going, and pay off bills they owe to a finance company, to Monkey Ward and to a downtown store for a bicycle they bought the little boy when he was circumcised.

Then, whether they eat or not, they are paying their Blue Cross, $20.80 every three months.

They pay their debts and keep up their Blue Cross. No matter what happens, nobody can say they are not upstanding.

That's Kreigh and Jewell. Then there are others, almost twelve thousand others. People who want jobs—men, women, white, Negroes, and Bessie Brady, who has a sick husband. S P. Holmes, who has a child in Memphis he would like to bring North. The family that was persuaded to try out a sharecropping project in the South and came straggling back. Monroe Williams, tall and bent over, who was told one day early in the war that every time he stayed away from the sawmill where he used to work in Arkansas, it cost his employer $100. "If I save you that much a day," he asked the employer, "why do you just pay me 60 cents an hour?" "Because a darky ain't worth no more than 60 cents an hour," the man said. So Monroe Williams came to Muskegon, deeply indignant, and now he is unemployed. A blind veteran, receiving a government pension, who gave up a job so an unemployed person who didn't have a pension could work.

Almost 12,000 people, not counting their families, not counting some who have died, all victims of the crimes of Muskegon.

House Ok's Curbs On Monopoly

THE House of Representatives has taken steps to plug up a gaping loophole in the nation's anti-trust legislation.

By a vote of 223-92, the House passed HR 2734—a bill designed to prevent one corporation from buying the assets of another where the effect of that action is to substantially cut down competition or to promote monopoly.

The bill took the form of an amendment to the Clayton anti-trust act of 1914. No similar vote has yet been taken in the Senate, but a strong anti-monopoly group is pressing for passage of a companion bill this session. The Senate bill has already been approved by the Judiciary Committee.

Rep. Celler (D., N. Y.), sponsor of the House bill, pointed out during the House debate that the present anti-trust law covers only mergers which restrict competition.

"Astute lawyers for years have learned how to evade violations by their clients" of the anti-trust law, Celler said.

"Instead of purchasing corporate stock and thereby merging, the larger corporation swallowing the smaller one does it by acquiring the assets; by acquiring the accounts receivable, by acquiring the raw material and finished products, by acquiring the real estate and the good will—thereby leaving only an empty husk, a mere shell."

A SERIES of court decisions, Celler added, have made obvious the loophole in the law, so that government agencies are left with only a "paper sword" to fight monopoly trends.

"There are today over 3 million units of business in the country," the New York Congressman said. "But only 445 corporations—one-eighth of one per cent of all corporations—are reported to own 51% of the nation's gross assets.

"Four companies now have 64% of the steel business; four have 82% of the copper business; two have 90% of the aluminum business; three have 85% of the auto business; two have 80% of the electric lamp business; four have 75% of the electric refrigerator business; two have 80% of the glass business; four have 90% of the cigarette business, etc.

"The anti-trust laws are a complete bust unless we pass this law. Otherwise, big business will be hell-bent for more and more mergers."

Rep. Biemiller (D., Wis.) pointed out that more mergers—through buying of assets—had taken place in three post-war years than in seven years before the war.

The 62 largest corporations had working capital of nearly $8½ billion at the end of 1945, the Wisconsin Congressman noted—enough "to purchase the assets of nearly 90% of the total number of U. S. manufacturing firms."

ORGANIZE!

Organizers do everything.

William Farson, director of organization for the CIO Newspaper Guild, was in Madison, Wis., on a tour of duty last week. He was driving by Lake Mendota when he noticed a boy tricyclist had fallen into the water and was in danger of drowning. Bill leaped from his car and dived into the water, fully clothed.

While Bill was rescuing the lad, his wife, Blanche, noted from the pier that Bill's glasses were floating off fast. So, she dived in, too, and rescued the glasses. She was fully clothed, too.

Woods Hits At Third Of Nation

IF YOU LIVE in a community of less than 100,000 population, the sky will be the limit on rents after Oct. 1 if Federal Housing Expediter Tighe E. Woods carries out his present plans to decontrol one-third of the areas now under rent control.

Woods made his announcement after Congress prepared to slice the budget for his office by about $9 million. The 1950 budget of $26,750,000, requested by the Budget Bureau, was first chopped down to $21 million by the Senate. A House-Senate conference committee then cut further into it to leave it at $17½ million. This appropriation was approved by the House, but is still pending in the Senate.

Congress made the cut, Woods said, even though "every metropolitan office has reported an increase in workload of from 30 to 50% and processing of landlord petitions is running weeks behind."

As the CIO News went to press, Sen. Paul Douglas (D. Ill.) was preparing to offer a motion to reconsider the appropriation bill in the Upper House.

Meanwhile, CIO Reg. Dir. Nathan Cowan wired members of the Senate, urging support of the Douglas motion.

If the motion fails, and the appropriation cut stands, Woods said, the first batch of decontrol orders will come through in about a week. These will be in the least populated areas. The remainder will be decontrolled about Oct. 1, he said.

CIO officials had been expressing alarm over the rapidity with which decontrol action had been sweeping the country even before the Woods announcement. Most decontrol orders, they point out, have been imposed on Woods' own initiative.

They recalled that when the rent control bill was under Congressional consideration, Woods had quietly circulated among Congressmen a list of 108 "borderline" areas he promised to decontrol if the bill passed.

Instead of the promised 108, CIO spokesmen say, Woods has decontrolled 198 areas. An additional 118 have been decontrolled by action of local or state legislative bodies under the CIO-opposed local option section of the law, and three areas have been decontrolled by recommendation of the local rent advisory boards, approved by Woods.

Potofsky Honored By Boys' Republic

The Boys' Republic at Santa Marinella, Italy, where children left homeless by the war live in their own small town, has a new honorary citizen in far-off America.

He is Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the CIO's Amalgamated Clothing Workers. The honor was conferred upon him by the mayor and other officials of the Boys' Republic in appreciation for the help given by ACW union members to Italian war orphans. Funds contributed by the union went to help set up the Boys' Republic.

Vol. XII WASHINGTON, D. C., AUGUST 29, 1949 82 No. 34

FAMILY FACES DISMAL FUTURE: Manuel Gomez (seated in center), the father of 13 children, discusses his plight with George E. Carignan, (also seated), director of the CIO Textile Workers' New Bedford, Mass., Joint Board, while members of his family look on. (All of them are not present.) Gomez has been jobless since last March when the Fisk division plant of the U. S. Rubber Co. closed. His unemployment compensation benefits have expired. Because he owns a home—encumbered by a mortgage—he can't qualify for relief. This scene dramatizes the dismal outlook confronting thousands of families in New England textile towns —and probably in other areas, too. (See story on Page 8.)

OUT: William H. Talbot, Louisiana (at door with back to camera, is shown as he left the meeting of the Democratic National Committee after he was denied a seat as a Louisiana committeeman because he had backed the Dixiecrat ticket. Following him is Judge Leander H. Perez, who set up a Washington office for the Natl. States' Rights Bureau after his ouster.

IN: This is Mary Dickerson, Louisiana, who was granted a seat as committeewoman from her state after it was proven that she had backed the Truman-Barkley ticket last fall.

CHANGE JOBS: William M. Boyle, Jr. (left), Kansas City, takes over the chairmanship of the Democratic Party from J. Howard McGrath after the meeting had unanimously voted his election. McGrath resigned as chairman and also as U. S. Senator from Rhode Island to become Attorney General. Tom C. Clark, who held that post, was advanced to the Supreme Court.

Rent Decontrol Hits Unemployed Hardest

CAUGHT IN the squeeze between joblessness and a rent boost, thousands of American workers are wondering how they're going to keep their families in both food and shelter.

Since the 1949 federal rent control law went into effect on April 1, 1,231,740 rental units have been decontrolled. For tenants thus affected, the sky's the limit on rents these days. And many of those hardest hit are pounding the pavement, looking for jobs.

The spreading epidemic of decontrol actions has aroused bitter tenants to action from New England to Texas, from Tennessee to Nebraska.

Most of them were hit by action of Federal Housing Expediter Tighe Woods, acting on his own initiative. Second largest number were effected by decontrol votes of city councils acting under the rent law's "local option" section.

Both the retention of Woods as rent chief and the local option section were strenuously fought by CIO, and other liberal groups. Having lost both struggles, they now see their worst fears realized after five months of the law's operation.

Take KNOXVILLE, for instance.

In Knoxville, one of every four residents is unemployed. But the city council, acting under the federal local option section, voted to lift controls altogether, and so beginning June 14, landlords have had a heydey.

The Knoxville News-Sentinel on Aug. 7, termed the lid-lifting decree "anything but universally popular." The same day it reported the eviction of a tenant just a few hours after the newspaper had published his complaint about a rent hike.

"Here's a love letter for you," he reported the landlord as saying when he delivered the eviction notice.

"In many instances here, it's the low-bracket rent increases which have been hit hardest," the newspaper reported on July 28.

Some examples were cited by a social worker.

"A family of five lives in the 1700 block of Euclid Ave.," she said. "The rent's been upped from $15 to $20, effective Aug. 4. The father, a laborer, is out of work, trying to eke out an existence on the 52-20 plan which is of uncertain duration. There just wasn't any food in the house when I visited today."

In another instance, a mother of two told the social worker: "I can't meet that $3 raise and feed my children." Rent had been upped from $12 to $15. "That shack couldn't have been worth nearly the $12 they did pay," commented the social worker.

DALLAS, Texas—Like Knoxville, Dallas was struck by its city council. Since controls went off June 23, increases have ranged from 10½% to 380%.

In NEBRASKA, also CIO, veteran's groups and others are battling a state decontrol act. This one will become effective Nov. 15, unless 47,000 signatures to protesting petitions are obtained by Aug. 27.

CIO Reg. Dir. Frank Cronin reported that as part of the petition-signing campaign, tables were set up at every main intersection.

If sufficient names are obtained, the law will be nullified until the issue is decided in a November referendum.

In CHICAGO CIO and other organizations are fighting a move by landlords to obtain a general 45% rent increase. The request was first denied by the local rent board, but the landlords are now appealing to the Court of Appeals.

In LOS ANGELES the Greater L. A. CIO Council has been conducting a survey to aid in its anti-decontrol fight. The study revealed illegal rent boosts as high as $40.

Meanwhile, decontrol orders flow out of Tighe Woods' office almost daily.

Demos' Committee Ousts 5 Dixiecrats

THE DEMOCRATIC Party's drive to punish the Dixiecrats for their sellout of last fall moved to the National Committe last week.

The committee was called together in Washington to select a successor to Chairman J. Howard McGrath, who has been appointed Attorney General. McGrath had also been U. S. Senator from Rhode Island.

Seven would-be committee members accused of being Dixiecrats were investigated by the credentials committee. Two were cleared, the other five barred from being seated.

Those barred were:

Marion Rushton, Alabama; J. B. Snider and Mrs. Herman Gautier, Mississippi; William H. Talbot, Louisiana, and Mrs. Albert Agnew, South Carolina.

Cleared and seated:

Mrs. Mary Evelyn Dickerson, Louisiana, and Mrs. Leonard Thomas, Alabama.

Gov. James ("Big Jim") Folsom, of Alabama, lauded the committee for ousting Rushton.

Then, the committee unanimously named William H. Boyle Jr., Kansas City, as McGrath's successor.

Talbot, who tips the scales at 300 pounds, and who is known as "Little Eva," assailed the ouster and said his group would fight on. Just after the action, Judge Leander Perez, New Orleans, opened a "National States' Rights Bureau" in Washington.

The Dixiegops didn't like the whole thing a bit. Happy were Fair Dealers, who have watched the States' Righters join with most Republicans in an attempt to wreck what the people voted for last fall.

Senate Slashes Control Funds, House Weakens Middle Income Housing Bill

SET-BACKS to effective rent control and to an important bill to spur "middle income housing" developed in Congress last week.

The Senate finally approved an appropriation for the office of rent control administration which cuts about one-third of the agency's funds away. Sen. Paul Douglas (D. Ill.) reluctantly agreed to withdraw a motion to send the appropriations bill back for insertion of additional funds.

He said that many Senators would favor voting additional funds next year if the need for continued rent control enforcement still exists at that time.

Failure to vote the additional funds, if they are needed then, will be regarded as a "breach of faith," the tall Illinois ex-pofessor declared.

"If in January or later I find that because of my trusting nature I have been seduced in this matter, I shall naturally feel it my duty to try to tear my seducers from stem to stern," Douglas declared.

An immediate effect of the funds cut will be the skeletonizing of many regional bureaus of the Office of Housing Expediter.

A plan originally announced by Expediter Tighe Woods — whose removal was asked last year by the CIO convention — called for rent decontrol in a third of the areas now covered by the law.

But Woods' legal staff is reported to have reminded him that such action would be illegal, since the law permits decontrolling only when supply and demand for housing seem to be in balance. Nevertheless the fund cuts, by weakening enforcement facilities, are almost certain to weaken the already shaky rent control set-up.

THE SECOND housing up-set came in the House, where Rep. Vito Marcantonio (ALP, N. Y.)— who has shown no particular interest in the middle income housing proposals—submitted an anti-discrimination amendment.

Marcantonio's amendment was offered while large numbers of Democratic leaders were at the White House to see Tom Clark sworn in as a member of the Supreme Court. The rights proposals, while seemingly worthy in purpose, has been used again and again this session as "super-perfect" device to guarantee the defeat of many liberal proposals.

With only a small number of Congressmen on hand, the amendment was passed without a roll call by a 62-31 vote, with approximately 340 Congressmen absent or not voting.

To get the bill in shape for possible final passage, its sponsors then were forced to resort to some involved parliamentary maneuvers.

They proposed the original bill, as it came from the Banking & Currency Committee, as a substitute to the measure on the floor. That was accepted, but in the process not only the Marcantonio amendment but two important strengthening provisions were washed away.

Thus the House was forced to eliminate amendments providing for low-interest government loans to veterans and cooperative groups for the construction of medium-price homes. Without these, the bill is comparatively weak.

Its sponsors hope that it may be strengthened in the Senate when a companion bill—already reported out of committee—comes up for debate and vote.

3 Labor Bills Win Approval

Three important union-supported bills have won the blessings of a House Labor sub-committee.

They are: (1) HR 5008, to exempt maritime industry hiring halls from the Taft-Hartley ban on such institutions; (2) HR 1380, to provide a labor extension service; and (3) HR 3095, to set up a U. S. commission on service for the physically handicapped.

The bills were cleared up a subcommittee headed by Rep. Kelley (D., Pa.), but their immediate fate in the full Labor group is uncertain. The committee has been engaged in a long wrangle over aid-to-education proposals.

Kelley, however, predicted that the bills will eventually receive full support of the Labor Committee and may be up for House debate and vote "if Congress comes back here in September."

Senate Ok's Power Lines, Spurns Private Utilities

AN IMPORTANT victory for public power has been scored in the Senate.

By a vote of 45 to 38, the Senators defeated amendments that would have cut the Interior Dept. appropriations for building power transmission lines from government dams in the southwestern part of the country.

As a result, the government will now be able to build lines to distribute the power it produces, and private utilities will no longer have a monopoly on the cheap power that belongs to the people.

Sen. Lister Hill (D., Ala.) summed up the problem in debate on the Senate floor. "It is sound business," said Hill, "for the government to sell its power to more than one distributor.

"If the government does not build transmission lines, or if the agents representing the government are not prepared if need be to build the lines, the government is forced to sell its power to the one large private utility in the vicinity that can afford to build a line to the government's dam. That utility will then have a monopoly. And it can dictate the price it will pay the government and the price it will charge the people."

Sen. Carl Hayden (D., Ariz.) pointed out that not nearly enough transmission lines are now in existence.

A fight against government transmission lines was led by Sen. Elmer Thomas (D., Okla.). At one point he argued that we couldn't spend $300,000 for transmission lines because our national debt is already over $254 billion. This led to a lot of side talk and charts about the national debt which intrigued Sen. Forrest Donnell (R., Mo.) but seemed to serve no other purpose.

At another point Thomas declared that "if it is monopoly on behalf of the government or monopoly on behalf of free enterprise, I would take my stand on the side of free enterprise." He made no attempt to prove that such lines would mean a government monopoly.

On one thing, however, the Senator from Oklohoma stood firm He is for "rugged individualism and free enterprise," a road which he says we have traveled for 160 years.

Congress for 40 years has ruled over and over again that "public agencies, municipalities and cooperatives shall be given preference in the sale of public power," Hill argued back.

The bill to cut power line appropriations, he said, "seeks to change this national power policy by denying funds for the construction of public transmission lines from government dams and even by denying funds for adequate personnel to market government power.

"The bill would ignore the public agencies, municipalities and cooperatives which Congress has declared shall receive preference. It would give private companies first claim to public power. The government would aid monopoly, not prevent monopoly. And the will of Congress, clearly expressed for nearly half a century, would be reversed.

"The bill is a legislative anachronism. It seeks to turn back the clock to the good old days of private-power monopoly. But we cannot and will not turn back the clock. The people today understand and fully support the public-power policy. They know the many benefits of public power and they will not relinquish those benefits."

Senate Vote On Public Power

Here is the rollcall vote by which the Senate rejected amendments that would have cut the Interior Dept.'s appropriations for building power transmission lines from U. S. dams in the Southeast. The vote, on Aug. 23, was 45-38.

Votes for public power are considered "right" in the CIO's opinion, and are indicated by "R." Votes against public power are indicated by "W," for "Wrong." "PR" means "Paired Right." "PW" means "Paired Wrong." "GP" means "General Pair." "A" means "Absent."

Textile Union Man And Wife Badly Beaten In Tallapoosa, Ga.

A TEXTILE worker was slugged on a public street at Tallapoosa, Ga., by a man nearly twice his size, and when the victim's wife sought to assist him she was knocked unconscious.

Bystanders were prevented by an armed man—father of the attacker—from helping the couple.

These charges were made by Warren E. Hall Jr., Atlanta attorney, who made a personal investigation of the Tallapoosa situation. Copies of his report were sent to the U. S. attorney general and members of the House and Senate Judiciary committees.

The outbreak of violence at Tallapoosa occurred at the same moment that the Superior Court of Georgia had handed down an injunction forbidding officials and agents of the American Thread Co. (which operates a mill at Tallapoosa) from interfering with the civil rights of citizens and members of our union," the CIO Textile workers reported.

About a week earlier the union appealed to the U. S. attorney general to proceed against the public officials of Tallapoosa "on the grounds that they had actually assisted the action of American Thread employes in driving peaceful union members out of Tallapoosa."

The union charges that the nonunion workers were armed with pistols, knives and clubs. "The leaders of the mob which drove the TWUA members out of Tallapoosa recently were the same father and son who were responsible for the beating of the couple, Mr. and Mrs. Bernell Rochester," TWUA charged. "Both of the Rochesters are employes of American Thread in Tallapoosa and are union members.

"ACCORDING to Hall's report, Rochester, who lives in Tallapoosa, had single-handed, and without instructions from anyone, gone to the mill gates to distribute copies of a Georgia labor paper which carried accounts of the earlier mob attack. Durwood Teal, who is 6 foot 4 and weighs over 200 pounds, pounced on Rochester, who is a slight man, and knocked him to the ground. Elzie Teal, Durwood's father, was the gun wielder.

"The police in Tallapoosa actually watched the armed crowd drive union workers out of the city and refused to lift a finger. According to counsel for the union, the Dept. of Justice is required to intervene in any community where local police deprive citizens of elementary civil rights, or permit others in that jurisdiction to do so."

HALL'S report told the following story:

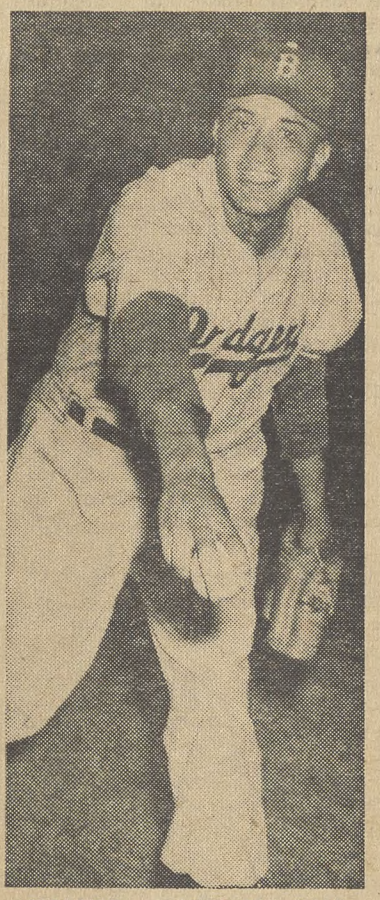
On Aug. 2 five members of the TWUA local which represents American Thread employes at Dalton, Ga., went to Tallapoosa to distribute leaflets explaining why they were on strike at the Dalton plant and publicize the advantages of unionism.

At 2:45 p.m., just before shift change, seven persons came out of the plant and approached the unionists on a public street.

"Two of the seven carried clubs which they brandished in a threatening manner. The leader of the group was Elzie Teal. Teal cursed the union members and violently ordered them to leave the scene, putting his hand in his pocked as though he had a gun.

"While the union members were trying to reason with Teal and the mob grew to between 15 and 20 persons, all of whom were threatening the union members."

TO AVOID trouble, the unionists left, went to downtown Tallapoosa, "where they asked a city policeman to intervene and protect them. This city policeman, who had been present at the plant and witnessed the entire incident, refused to take any part whatever."



SINGER STRIKER'S SON

Brilliant pitching of Don Newcombe (above), Brooklyn Dodger, last week cut the St. Louis Cardinal's National League lead to a single game. Newcombe, son of James Newcombe, one of the 7000 Electrical Workers on strike at the Singer Mfg. Co. plant at Elizabeth, N. J., was the host to 50 children of the strikers at Ebbets Field last week.

Two days later 10 Dalton unionists went to the Tallapoosa mill again to distribute union literature.

"Shortly before 3 p.m. a group of employes of the plant gathered on the plant's property and talked with P. M. Woods, a company overseer. Just as the shift-change whistle blew, a mob of more than 20 men came out of the mill gate, lead by Durwood Teal, son of Elzie Teal. Durwood Teal was carrying a double-barreled, sawed-off shot-gun.

"Another man in the group had a single-barreled shotgun and Elzie Teal was brandishing a pistol."

The unionists left the scene after being threatened and cursed. A policeman witnessing the incident refused to intervene although requested to do so.

ON AUG. 19 Bernell Rochester went to the American Thread plant to distribute copies of the Georgia News Digest.

He was standing in the street near a plant gate when Durwood Teal approached him, asked him what he was doing "and before Rochester could reply viciously assaulted Rochester, who had no opportunity even to defend himself.

"Durwood Teal's first blow knocked Rochester to the ground and Teal pounced on him and began slugging him with his fists.

"Meanwhile, Elzie Teal . . . . stood by with a double-barreled shotgun and would not permit anyone to intervene on Rochester's behalf."

MRS. ROCHESTER then came from the plant, saw what was happening and tried to pull Teal off her husband.

"Teal got up and slugged her with his fists, knocking her across the street to the ground. Teal them resumed his attack on Rochester, who was all but unconscious. Mrs. Rochester got up and again attempted to assist her husband.

"This time Teal seized her head with his left arm and viciously beat her about the head and face and again knocked her across the street and to the ground.

"Teal again resumed his beating of Rochester. For the third time Mrs. Rochester undertook to assist her husband, and this time Teal attacked her with both fists, finally knocking her across the street and into a telephone pole, knocking her unconscious.

"Elzie Teal used his shotgun and verbal threats to kill to prevent anyone even picking Mrs. Rochester up from the street."

THE TEALS then left the scene and two witnesses picked up the "unconscious forms of Mr. and Mrs. Rochester and took them to the county seat, and when they were revived they wrote out warrants for assault with intent to murder."

A dozen or more warrants have been sworn out by TWUA and damage suits against the Teals and American Thread were ordered prepared.

Hall recommended that federal authorities intervene.

Fishermen's Local Opposes Merger

The Cordova, Alaska, Fisheries Union, CIO, has voted unanimously to reject the proposed merger with the CIO Longshoremen of the CIO Fishermen and Allied Workers.

The motion further stated that should the merger be favored by a majority of the Fishermen, that the Cordova local would withdraw. The local recalled that it "has always given active support to ILWU and will continue to do so."

Steel's Bad Behavior

The steel industry deserves widespread recognition of its persistent arrogance.

Few who have watched the industry's tactics in its fight against the CIO Steelworkers can doubt that this is true.

The negotiations in which the giant corporations have engaged this year could hardly be called negotiations at all. About the only thing industry spokesmen seemed able to say was "no!"

When it became apparent that a steel strike was in the making, President Truman stepped into the picture with a proposal that the case be presented to a fact-finding board.

The industry said "no" again and stuck to its guns almost until the strike deadline. Then the force of public opinion, a break in the ranks of the steel makers, a whim or something caused a reluctant "yes" to be issued by industry spokesmen.

Perhaps all of this could be characterized as "normal jockeying for position" if the industry had presented a straightforward case to the fact-finders. But it didn't.

It used board hearings to sound off on its pet economic and political theories. It attempted to discredit the board and the whole idea of fact finding.

Representatives of the NAM and the Chamber of Commerce were brought in as witnesses.

An effort was made to discredit the report Economist Robert Nathan made for the steel union, although no proof to disprove his claims was submitted.

Sounds Off On Strikes

In view of the hue and cry for industrial peace that has come from Taft-Hartley minded industrialists in recent years, one of the most startling statements made at the hearing came from Pres. C. M. White of Republic Steel. He told the board:

"We don't like strikes, they are expensive and they are bad—there are worse things than a strike . . . every strike comes to an end. Everybody gets a lot of things off their chests and they say a lot of dirty things and they seem to feel awfully good after it is all over and they are back to work."

The newspapers gave this statement a big play, without attempting to interpret what White may have in mind.

To many the implication was that he—and perhaps the entire industry—would prefer a strike and its hardships to the Presidential fact-finding set-up.

Naturally, many steel workers put their own interpretation on the remark, for they recalled that a fellow named C. M. White was vice president of Republic Steel back in 1937 when the bloody Memorial Day massacre occurred at Republic's South Chicago plant.

Privacy At $1,500 A Week

Through a piece of legislative flim-flam too involved for short description, Congress has decided that Uncle Sam will no longer publish the names and salaries of corporation executives receiving $75,000 a year, or more.

This is regrettable—the more so since Congress tied its proposal to a complex law which the President cannot veto. That information was interesting, and valuable. It was also often embarrassing to the $1,500 a week boys—who are wont to say that labor's demands are greedy and uneconomic. Maybe that embarrassment was the reason for the death of the law.

Smear Campaign Against Britain

Drive Under Way To Discredit Labor Government And Social Services

By ALLAN L. SWIM

GREAT BRITAIN, a nation dominated by loafers and social dreamers, is coming apart at the seams.

Its social services have been dismal failures and its nationalization of a few industries has prevented economic recovery.

Things are really in a mess over there and the labor government is responsible.

Such is the picture—and it's a false one—which is being presented these days to the reading and listening public in the U .S.

It's obvious that Britain is the object of a spreading smear campaign. The story behind the story of this campaign is one which every American trade unionist should learn.

FRANKLY, many of the persons who are writing and speaking so frequently these days about the "failures" of Britain don't give a tinker's damn about the social welfare services the British people receive.

Their interest lies in their own determination to block social welfare measures in this country.

And what could serve them better than the "horrible example" set by the British?

In the first place, the British Isles are across an ocean from us, so it's hard to check up on stories about British activities.

In the second place, it's comparatively easy to blame Britain's economic difficulties on the labor government and its program.

LET'S TAKE one simple example to illustrate how the campaign works.

The average British worker doesn't produce as much as the average U. S. worker for the simple reason that the former doesn't have the help of as much electric power and machinery as the latter.

This situation has existed for many years. Yet our "anti-British" writers and commentators have just discovered it — and they're telling about it in such a way as to leave the impression that nationalization of industry is responsible.

And they imply, too, that the British health program must certainly bear part of the responsibility.

Actually, the British have done a remarkable job of stepping up industrial production since the end of the war.

BRITAIN, LIKE a number of other countries, is having serious economic difficulties—difficulties brought on or heightened by the last war.

These would exist regardless of the political party in power. But the labor government is blamed and it is frequently implied that they would disappear into thin air if Winston Churchill and his Conservatives were at the helm.

Ah, yes, the campaign is a clever one.

You merely point your finger first at Britain's economic plight, then at the labor government and its social services and declare:

"See! They're all tied together —all one and the same. What better proof do we need to convince us that we don't want a 'welfare state' in the U. S.?"

IT'S SAFE to predict that the campaign will pick up more steam as time goes on and that more and more "impartial" correspondents will visit Britain.

This will be extremely unfortunate unless they actually are impartial and are permitted to give a well balanced account of what they are able to learn.

Much is at stake.

Britain is one of the important keys to postwar European recovery, yet a number of Congressmen are seeking to prevent her use of ECA funds because some British industry has been nationalized.

The U. S. can learn much from the British social services program and thus it is important that we receive facts—not fiction —about its operation.

So it's a good idea to examine closely the charges hurled at Great Britain. Find out who's making them and why.

Chicago Librarians Join CIO-GWU

EMPLOYES OF THE Chicago Library have followed their colleagues of the Cleveland Library into the Government Workers' Union, IUMSWA-CIO.

The Chicago group, formerly affiliated with Local 2, United Public Workers-CIO, are now in Local 1215, GWU. According to Marie Antoinette de Roulet, chairman, the members had expressed "dissatisfaction with the policies of UPW, which have been at sharp variance with those of the National CIO. The Library Union has always felt its strength was in CIO."

The membership meeting, which was unanimous in its vote to join GWU, heard an address by William Mirengoff, national GWU co-chairman.

He disclosed that GWU has already chartered 35 locals and that its members include many in the executive branches of the Government at Washington, the Federal Reserve Board, the Veterans' hospital, Freedman's Hospital, the Economic Cooperation Administration, the Univ. of Chicago.

He said GWU also has many members in juvenile courts, post offices, employment service, hospitals in such cities as San Francisco, Atlanta, Milwaukee, Yonkers, Salt Lake City and others. There are also members in state and county governments, he said.

Besides Miss de Roulet, the officers of Local 1215 are: Clarence Kraemer, Marguerite Gallagher, Irene Welch, Ruth Puffer, Bessie Gayles and Mary Carroll.

Co-Op Sells Clothing

A CONSUMER Clothing Center is the latest addition to the cooperative ventures of the Motor Co-Op in Detroit.

"Union and co-op members of this area will be able to buy clothing for their families at real savings this fall and winter," said Al Rightley of the United Auto Workers Co-op division, in announcing the opening of the clothing mart on Aug. 19.

"With slow work weeks and layoffs predicted for the near future, the savings are going to mean much to our people."

Although sponsored by union and copoerative groups, the Consumer Clothing Center is a privately-owned enterprise operated by the U. C. S. Sales Corp. of New York City, owners of a national chain of clothing stores. The company has similar union and co-op sponsored projects in Providence, R. I., Hartford, Conn., and Chicago, Ill.

The Detroit co-op clothing store will be open only to union and co-op members who show the proper credentials. Through a collective buying agreement co-op members will receive a small additional savings on their purchases.

Among the items listed for sale are men's dress shirts, regularly priced at $2.95, for $2; all wool worsted suits with two pairs of pants, regularly priced at $55, for $39; dresses, regularly priced at $10, for $8.50; regularly priced at $7.99, for $5.90 and women's all wool zip-lined coats, regularly priced at $29, for $21.

Would Up Exemptions

Rep. George Rhodes (D., Pa.), an official of the AFL, has introduced a bill in Congress to increase from $600 to $1000 the income tax exemptions for an individual taxpayer and his spouse or other first dependent.

Well, Anyhow, It Was A Bit Better

HE WAS one of those good natured big guys who usually found himself able to chuckle when things went a bit wrong.

But, as this story opens, he was wearing a long face and his sense of humor was slightly sour.

"Everything seems to go just a bit wrong," he complained. "If you operate by the rules you don't get the expected results—and the same thing happens if you break the rules.

"But, you know how it is. You're assigned to a drive like this the second time—after you lose one election—and you're going to do your best to win."

THE SCENE was a CIO office that had been set up in a Southern town which contained a big synthetic plant.

The big fellow was the organizer in charge. He had come from the industry and had had a good record in his local union.

But, as he said, things weren't going well. There was a hard core of CIO strength, but it wasn't enough to assure victory in a forthcoming NLRB election.

The chief organizer tried most of the "tricks of the trade" with varying results —and then he thought up some new ones.

The campaign dragged. None of the unionists seemed able to give it the spark needed.

THE BIG FELLOW, sitting in his office, looked up from a stack of membership cards and said:

"We're making progress, but it's too slow.

"If only something would happen to stir up interest—just anything. When I was in here trying to organize the place a couple of years ago the company tried some rough stuff.

"But now everything is sweetness and light. Nobody has even threatened to take a poke at me or the other fellows.

"The company is conducting a clever and dignified campaign—a very smooth propaganda campaign.

"I'm telling you confidentially that something's going to have to happen or we'll lose the election."

FINALLY, AS ALWAYS HAPPENS, the week of the election rolled around and everything was quiet on the organizing front—too quiet.

Efforts to make the company show its anti-union hand had failed.

Nobody had been able to get the town really talking about the election and the number of membership cards signed indicated a union defeat.

The organizers put on a quick leafleting campaign but it didn't seem to create any new interest.

"Well," said the big fellow, "I've done all I can and the boys working with me have put out their best. We'll know the score soon."

ON THE DAY of the election, workers at the plant went to the polls quietly, cast their ballots and returned to work.

There's wasn't much excitement about it.

Then the votes were counted and the NLRB announced the union had lost by a fairly narrow margin.

That evening the organizers got together for a "weeping" session at which the entire campaign was reviewed.

"Well," said a downhearted unionist, "the whole campaign went this time just like the first one we lost."

The big fellow chuckled, flashed a smile and declared: "No, Joe, it didn't. We've really made progress. During the first campaign I was thrown into the river in January—and this time I didn't even get wet from rain!" A. L. S.

Impressions Of The Mad Artist

British TUC To Consider Wage Policy and Prices

By ELLEN McCULLOUGH

Secretary of the Research, Education, Political and International Department of Britain's Transport and General Workers' Union.

BRITIAN'S 81ST annual Trades Union Congress opens at Bridlington, on the Yorkshire coast, on Sept. 5. There will be about 900 delegates, representing some 8,000,000 trade unionists. The debates will center around the best way to apply the lessons learned in the last four years.

There may be, no doubt, hard words said from floor and platform, but there will be no fundamental difference of opinion between the delegates.

More than half the resolutions deal with the economic situation and the management of nationalized industries; most of the big unions have resolutions on one or both of these aspects.

The General Council of the Trades Union Congress has placed on the agenda a resolution which states that a permanent solution of Britain's difficulties "can only be found, internally, in a greater volume of production at lower costs, with a consequent raising of the purchasing power of wages and externally, in internationally concerted efforts to maintain living standards and full employment."

After rejecting alternative solutions involving lowered living standards or cuts in the social services, and noting the need for continued vigilance against rising prices and exorbitant profits, it pledges support of the policy of restraining an increase of personal incomes and expenditure unrelated to increased productivity.

This is in line with the General Council's policy on Personal Incomes, Costs and Prices, accepted at last year's Congress. All save two of the other resolutions give general assent to this, while expressing lively anxiety about prices or profits, or both.

The Transport Workers are worried about the increased prices of foodstuffs, and want to lower prices and curtail profits. The Tailors add to this a demand for the reduction of distributive costs, and the lifting of the purchase tax on domestic goods. The same line is taken by the Engineers, Shop Assistants, General and Municipal Workers, Railway Clerks, Railwaymen, and Railway-drivers.

On the other hand the Civil Service Clerks and the Electricians want a modification of the White Paper policy because the measures so far adopted "have not prevented a decline in wages in relation to prices and profits."

All these resolutions, of course, were put on the agenda before the Government's recent cut of some prices.

None of the resolutions on nationalizaton expresses doubts about the principle; indeed the Rubber Workers and the Foundry Workers want their industries to be nationalized. The resolutions are concerned with the methods to be adopted.

The Transport Workers ask for training schemes to fit workers for the responsibilities of management, and urge that "the utmost care and economy" be applied in the management of nationalized industries. The Bank Employes and the Firemen want more trade union representation on the Boards. The Miners want a joint council, representing the government bodies of nationalized industries and the trade unions, to deal with affairs relating to such industries. The Executives and Technicians want the TUC to "call a representative meeting of affiliated organizations which are also affiliated to the British Institute of Management, to consider the setting up of machinery to ensure the fullest participation of the trade union movement in raising the standard of management in British industry, including a definite scheme for the education of trade unionists in the technique of industrial management."

Two unions (the Transport Workers and the Railway Engine-drivers), are concerned about the financial burden placed upon nationalized industries by the compensation paid to former shareholders; the latter want the Government's liability to terminate on the death of the present shareholders.

In the field of internationaal affairs, the General and Municipal Workers approve the action of the TUC in leaving the World Federation of Trade Unions, but the Foundry Workers and one of the smaller Civil Service Unions (CSU) disapprove.

English Work Longer

The Britist worker in manufacturing industries works a longer week than does the American worker. Statistics of the Ministry of Labor shows that workers in manufacturing, building, transport, mining, utilities and national and local government employment had an average work week of 45.3 hours, compared with an average work week for manufacturing labor in the U. S. of 40 hours.

Overtime pay in Britain customarily starts at 44 hours, with time and one-fourth for overtime. In the U. S., overtime usually begins after the basic work week of 40 hours and the rate is time and one-half. Adult male workers in Great Britain average 46.7 work hours per week.

'Steel Industry Owes A Debt To Its Worker

By GLORIA CAPLAN

"THE STEEL industry owes a debt to its workers," CIO and Steelworkers Pres. Philip Murray told the Presidential fact-finding board.

It was up to the board to decide the extent of that debt from the great mass of material accumulated since the hearings began July 28.

The union head closed the Steelworkers' case with the pledge that neither he nor the union would rest "until the industry acknowledges this just debt by making a decent provision for those who have spent their lives in its service."

In his final statement, Murray lambassed Enders M. Voorhees, head of U. S. Steel's finance committee, for ascribing the union's pension demand to a race for personal power between Mine Workers Pres. John Lewis and himself.

"This attack is vicious and insulting," Murray said. "It is not only an insult to me. It is an insult to those who make Mr. Voorhees' steel and to those who mine his coal.

"There is real human need today for the benefits which we have asked. There is want. There is poverty. There is the kind of tragedy that only old age without security can know."

EARLIER in the week, as he led off the union's rebuttal arguments, Murray had torn into the testimony of John Stephens, U. S. Steel vice-president; Clarence Randall, Inland Steel president; and John M. Hancock, an investment banker.

Of Stephens' testimony, which purported to show that the union head in 1947 had waived the right to discuss pensions this year, Murray said:

"... although I need not, I choose to make a reply to Mr. Stephens. I do so because his statement, since it can have no legal bearing upon the issues of this case, as he knows, is obviously intended as a deliberate personal attack upon me and a challenge to my integrity as a man and as a labor leader."

To support his contention that the union had waived its right to talk pensions this year, Stephens had inserted into the record alleged transcripts of informal conversations held with Murray.

It was significant, Murray said, that Stephens had not referred the board to the official minutes of bargaining talks nor to a letter he sent Stephens on May 12, 1947.

The letter stated: "I feel that we have on this occasion adequately covered by our agreement the matters relating to wages, hours and conditions of employment. Should it develop, however, that the union desires to raise afresh with the company a matter that falls within the scope of collective bargaining, but is not covered by any provision of our agreement, the union would observe the no-strike pledge in the contract.

The reference to matters "not covered by any provision of our agreement" meant pensions specifically, Murray explained, and was intended to emphasize the union's right to bargain on pensions at any time.

"At no time in conversations or discussions with Mr. Stephens, or with anyone else in the industry, have I agreed either privately or publicly that the pension issue would not be bargainable under our present labor agreements," he said.

IN REFUTING the industry's legal arguments against the bargainability of pensions, Arthur J. Goldberg, union attorney pointed out what he termed a basic inconsistency.

First, he said, the industry had argued that to bargain on pensions would constitute a "modification of the contract" and hence would be illegal. Under the present reopening only the pay provisions are subject to modification.

If a modification of the contract, what provision would it modify? Goldberg asked. The only provision it could modify, since the contract contains no mention of pensions are the pay provisions. Thus, by inference, he said, the companies were admitting that pensions constituted a part of wages and as such are bargainable under the wage reopening.

If, on the other hand, the companies argue that pensions are not included in the contract, Goldberg said, then no "modfication" is involved and pensions are bargainable at any time. To support this claim he cited the NLRB decision in the Allied Mills case, which ruled any subject not mentioned in a contract bargainable at any time.

Goldberg's calm, almost informal refutation of the industry's legal arguments was followed by the union's case for pensions and insurance, presented by Murray Latimer.

In addition to an immediate wage increase of 12½c, the union is asking 11.23c an hour to finance a $125 monthly pension for workers over 65 and 6.72c an hour for a complete insurance program, including sick benefits, hospitalization, death benefits, disability benefits and surgery.

Latimer disputed the U. S. Steel claim that its pension payments averaged $44 a month, exclusive of social security old-age benefits. The union claimed the company's payments averaged $5.41. Difference was, Latimer explained, that the industry had failed to include those retired without pensions in computing its figure.

IT WAS in the economic arguments which followed, however, that the basic differences between the industry and the union appeared most acute.

These arguments involved far more than just the economics of the steel industry. For it was basically two diametrically opposed economic theories—laissez faire vs. the purchasing power theory—that were in conflict. And everyone in the packed little federal courtroom was aware that the economy of the whole country depends to a large degree on which of the theories wins out in the end.

Economic Expert Robert R. Nathan was the main ball-carrier for the union in this area, followed by Otis Brubaker, Steelworkers research director, who chopped away at

The Truth

About 92.2% of the steel industry—49 companies—are represented in the current controversy before the presidential fact-finding board in New York City.

About 34 are small producers, most of them seeking differential treatment by the board.

Some charged the union with being a "labor monopoly" and with foisting upon them—against their will—the same wage rates as the big companies paid.

Board Chairman Daugherty set out to find the truth of such charges. His questioning of Luke Sawyer, vice-president of Babcock & Wilcox, was fairly typical:

Daugherty: "Before there was a union, when there was a change initiated by one of the companies, you could follow?"

Sawyer: "We followed Ellwood City, yes sir."

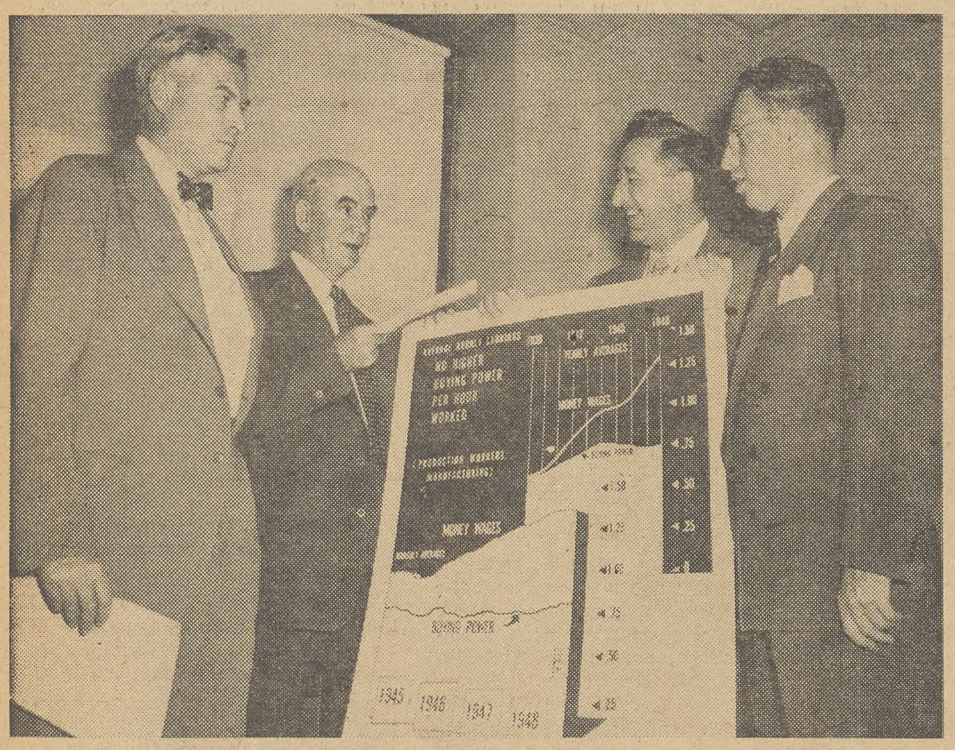
Daugherty: "Pretty consistently?"

Sawyer: "Yes, sir."

Daugherty: "Has that continued since the union has been in existence?"

Sawyer: "Yes, I think it has without exception."

MANY STEEL WORKERS recalled the bloody event pictured above when Pres. C. M. White of Republic Steel told the Presidential fact-finding board: "We don't like strikes, and they are expensive and bad. I've been on a picket line a helluva lot. I have been knocked down on a picket line from behind. So I know what it is and they are tough things. But if that is the way it has to be worked out, why—every strike comes to an end. I have never been in one that didn't come to an end



AN IMPORTANT POINT: This chart shows that although there has been an increase in money wages received by the CIO Steelworkers from 1945 to May 1949 there was no increase in buying power. NAM and steel industry contentions that the hearings of the U. S. fact-finding board are "sinister" interference with free collective bargaining have failed to impress some important eastern newspapers.

The Republican New York Herald Tribune noted that Clarence Randall, head of the Inland Steel, had spent much of his testimony in berating the board and criticizing its appointment. As a result, the paper commented, CIO Pres. Murray was forced to use much of his rebuttal time to answer these comments by the steel industry executive, who is also a power in the Natl. Association of Manufacturers.

Noting that the industry had voiced its objections to the board at the time of its appointment, the Herald Tribune said: "It would have seemed better for all concerned if thereafter the arguments had been kept to the issues in dispute."

The Herald Tribune, recalling that negotiating sessions between the union and U. S. Steel had been infrequent and marked by many recesses, by inference backed Murray's assertion that the company had not bargained in full good faith.

"In the future, those who are opposed to Presidential intervention will perhaps find the will to prolong and to sustain more effectively the processes of free bargaining," the paper commented.

Nathan also took Backman to task for insisting that when prices decline, fear of inventory losses causes businessmen to hold back on purchases, rather than any decline in demand, as the union contends.

WHAT causes those price declines in the first place? Nathan asked, answering that it was obviously a lack of consumers' buying power.

To support his claim that purchasing power is high now, Bachman compared the slice of the total national income pie going to wages and salaries with the slice in boom years such as 1929.

"We get little sense of comfort whatsoever out of such comparisons," Nathan said. "One need only remember what happened immediately afterward—in 1930-31-32—to understand why."

The union's purpose, he said, was to avert another 1929, not to duplicate it. And that could be done through a sufficient rise in purchasing power—through wage increases and price cuts, he added.

iberal New York Post also thought that White's blood-and-thunder statement "throws sharp light on industry's campaign for the Taft-Hartley law." Noting that in its campaign for anti-union legislation, industry has always pointed with horror at the effect of strikes, the Post declared:

"White's calm acceptance of a long battle in steel is the most ominous note in his statement . . . We can think of only one man outside the Communist camp capable of proclaiming the social irresponsibility voiced by steel's spokesman. His name is John L. Lewis; when he roars his defiance of government intervention in labor crisis, the editorial pages justly quiver with anger.

"But nearly everyone in our profession is reluctant to quarrel with Lewis-ism in the steel industry. Why, daddy?"

C. M. White Of Republic Ran The Show During '37 Massacre Of 10

"AND IF they think we are wrong, they strike us, see. That is the way this thing should work. It is a helluva good way to work it.

". . . And there are worse things than a strike. Everybody gets a lot of things off their chests, and they say a lot of dirty things and they seem to feel awfully good after it is all over and they are back to work."

Listening to those words from Charles White, president of Republic Steel Corp., before a Presidential Fact-Finding Board, representatives of the CIO Steelworkers were reminded of other days at Republic.

White's blunt challenge to a fight brought back memories of Memorial Day, 1937, in Chicago and Steelworkers wondered bitterly if that was what the corporation head mean by "a helluva good way to work it."

On that day 10 Republic Steelworkers were shot to death while trying to form a peaceful picket line—seven shot in the back, three in the side, none in the front. Thirty others, including a woman and three children, were wounded by gunshot—nine probably permanently disabled. About 60 others were wounded.

That was the notorious Memorial Day Massacre which occurred outside Republic's South Chicago plant. Steelworkers in the Federal courtroom, shocked by White's statement, doubted that any of Republic's employes "felt awfully good" when they went back to work in 1937.

WHITE'S invitation to a strike reminded many of Republic's history of labor relations and what the famous LaFolette Committee had to say of them in 1941.

The committee also had something to say of White, then Republic's vice president in charge of "operations":

"Mr. Girdler (then the corporation head) brought with him into Republic a group of men schooled at Aliquippa, proponents of the Aliquippa technique of repression, who immediately began organizing the police department of the new corporation. The captains of Republic police and Mr. White were among those whom Mr. Girdler brought from Aliquippa."

At Republic during the union-fighting days, White, reported the committee, had authorized the use of blind vouchers as "a convenient way of concealing payment for undercover men, espionage and 'rough shadowing' . . . his office received some of the espionage reports . . . Clearly Mr. White understood the purpose for which these moneys were being expended and approved it.

"One must conclude, therefore, the anti-union activity, labor espionage and 'rough shadowing' constituted the labor policy of Republic Corp."

LATER, the report states: ". . . acts of brutal violence, espionage and 'rough shadowing' characterized the attitude of Republic Steel Corp. and the conduct of its police."

That White was not inexperienced in preparing for a labor fight also was shown by the committee's findings. In three weeks during 1934, it reported, Republic spent $11,900.71 for munitions—riot guns, sickening gas grenades, tear-gas projectiles, revolvers and cartridges.

White explained: "Our general experience has been that during these strikes it is well to have your plants sufficiently armed and in proper shape to repel an invasion." (Laughter followed that statement.)

In 1937 Republic put its munitions to use.

The Senate Committee reported that police had been arbitrarily preventing the strikers from forming a picket line even though there were no official orders to do so. Told by the police commissioner they could form a line of any size provided it was peaceful, Steelworkers on Sunday, May 30, 1937, held a union meeting, then paraded toward the plant to establish a picket line.

At the gates they were met by a large detail of armed policemen.

POLICE contended they were attempting to prevent a violent invasion of the plant, but the committee dismissed that argument as groundless.

"We are of the opinion," it reported, "that the sole objective of the marchers was to picket in mass at the plant gate." Had violence been their objective, the committee reasoned, why were women and children among the marchers—and why were they not armed?

Nevertheless, a barrage of tear gas and gunfire was brutally trained on the marchers. Some were shot in flight, others while lying on the ground. Others were clubbed under similar circumstances.

But where did the police weapons come from? the committee asked. Photographic evidence showed that the clubs used were white hatchet handles, not regulation nightsticks. And the police department hadn't supplied tear gas. The committee concluded that the hatchet handles were supplied by the company and implied that the tear gas was too.

That's Republic's idea of a "helluva good way to work it."

California Organizer For Retail Union Dies

Robert Brown, organizer for California for the CIO Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Employes, died August 19 at his home in Los Angeles.

Formerly a resident of Brooklyn, he was active in the union movement for more than 30 years. He held a number of posts with locals of the retail union and at one time was secretary-manager of the United Retail and Wholesale Florist Union, Local 299, New York.

He is survived by his wife, two sons, two daughters, two brothers and five grandchildren.

IT'S UP TO THEM: These members of the Presidential fact-finding board will recommend a solution of the dispute over wages, social insurance and pension. They are: David L. Cole, Chairman Carroll Daugherty and Samuel I. Rosenman.

New Bedford, Mass., Workers Face

Most Crucial Tussle Ever With Hard Times

By IRVING KAHAN

UNEMPLOYMENT'S nothing new in the lives of the 18,000 textile workers of New Bedford, Mass. They've been through it before.

When you've worked 10, 20, 30 years in the spinning and weaving mills—through booms and depressions—you get to accept layoffs and short time as part of the game, whether you like it or not. And you learn to roll with the punches hard times deal you.

In the old days, before the war, that is, you scraped up a few bucks to tide yourself over at the fishing wharves, the docks or in the smaller factories that turn out rubber, paper, electrical equipment and machinery.

But you always knew you'd be back at your job in the cotton and rayon mills as soon as they started up again because you felt that as long as people wore clothes there would be a textile industry in New Bedford.

It seemed like it just had to be that way. Textile mill operators couldn't find a better supply of skilled workers anywhere, the market was conveniently close and the humid climate was ideal for spinning and weaving.

What's more, textile manufacturing was in the blood of the mill owners. Tough and obstinate though they might have been as employers, they were textile men through and through who stuck it out when good times gave way to bad. They had "bounce."

That's the way New Bedford workers felt about unemployment before the war. They don't feel that way today.

FOREBODING ATMOSPHERE

Instead, you find an air of foreboding. You sense it just talking to workers, merchants, insurance agents, city employees—the "little people" of New Bedford. There's a feeling deep down inside most of them that things are different—that this time, it's not going to be so easy to come out of this recession, or whatever you choose to call it.

They seem to have a feeling of being "caught"; that it's going to take a lot more than civic pep meetings and the like to shake this thing off.

It's not just because 7000 of New Bedford's 18,000 textile workers are idle, serious as that is. It's not because 18,000 of this area's 40,000-odd employables have been cut off from regular earnings. It goes far deeper.

Folks here have been looking to the owners of the textile mills for a solution—for some dynamic, positive action of reassure them. It has not been forthcoming.

They have looked to city officials and civic leaders for a program to set the wheels rolling again but their leaders are not acting like leaders.

SITTING ON PROFITS

The spirit and enterprise which made this a great textile center is almost totally absent. With but a handful of exceptions, mill owners are sitting on the fat profits they made during the war, speculating whether to stay in business or pull out with their bankrolls intact.

Even those mill owners who are sticking it out are displaying none of the "daring" which NAM tries to associate with the term "risk capital." They're playing it safe. When they're not looking to the "great, white father" in Washington for aid in the form of government orders, they're besieging the Textile Workers Union of America, CIO, with proposals for workload increases—the current word for wage cuts.

For one thing, the old time, dyed-in-the-wool textile mill owner is vanishing. He is giving way to a new type—the kind that have no basic interest in either the industry or the community and who are interested only in a quick killing.

In New Bedford, outstanding prototypes of this kind of free enterprise are the List interests, dealers in textile machinery with origins in the junk business.

List has been in New Bedford only since 1945 but its policies have already left an imprint that textile workers won't soon forget.

It was in that year that List took over the Nonquitt Mills, a highly profitable venture since 1906. List cleared $289,000 before taxes in 1946; in 1947, it was a whooping $661,000; in 1948, a healthly $395,000.

Early this year, Nonquitt Mills, like most textile concerns all over the nation, began to run in the red. That was enough for the List interests. The plant was closed permanently; 1100 workers have been kicked out into the streets.

A group of local businessmen tried to reopen it, but got no backing from local bankers. List is now preparing to dismantle the plant and sell its equipment.

Pulling up stakes and clearing out may be good business but it spells a raw deal for the city and for the workers who helped make "good business" possible.

ANOTHER PROBLEM

Not many mill owners are like List but they pose just as serious a problem, according to George E. Carignan, director of TWUA's New Bedford Joint Board. Their chief fault is lack of new ideas to keep pace with the times and with their competitors. They keep making the same products through the years, failing to develop new fabrics to capture market interest. They cling to production of staples and when demand falls off, they're left high and dry—and with them, the workers.

Carignan says most of them have failed or refused to re-invest part of their wartime profits in plant modernization. This lack of foresight has now caught up with them; they can't compete with modern, progressive rivals.

Carignan heads a joint board whose members worked in 32 large textile mills here little more than a decade ago. Today there are only nine large plants.

Current TWUA employment records make sour reading. You get an idea how serious the problem is when you run over the list.

"FEELS LIKE UNDERTAKER"

Hathaway Manufacturing Co., for instance, is down from a 1948 work force of 2169 to 1381; Firestone Textiles, from 1532 to 706; Kilburn Mill, from 1558 to 527; Wamsutta Mills, from 1537 to 807; Nashawena, from 1381 to 947; Fisk division of U. S. Rubber Co., from 762 to 340; Soule Mill, from 984 to 340.

There will be no large-scale rehiring at Firestone and Fisk. Both make tire fabrics and have abandoned cotton in favor of nylon and rayon. Kilburn has dropped its yard division, letting out two-thirds of its workers. Pierce Brothers, Ltd., with 570 workers, has announced it will liquidate in 90 days.

That may account for the feeling in New Bedford that this slow period is "different."

"With all that's been happening, I feel like an undertaker in this job," is Carignan's wry comment.

A visit to the Division of Employment Security's office here underlines the whole picture. John B. Hunter, New Bedford manager, tells you UCC claims ave dropped to 12,100 from a peak of 15,700 several months ago. But he warns you not to jump to optimistic conclusions.

The reduction merely represents the dropping from the rolls of more than 3000 workers who have exhausted their benefits. And there has been very little hiring, mostly from garment shops which want skilled stitchers only. By the end of September, TWUA predicts the number of those who will exhaust their UCC benefits will mushroom to 7300.

Next stop for a worker in this situation might be the New Bedford relief department. So you go there and, ironically enough, you find it's in Room 13 of the city hall. William A. Higgins, public assistance director, tells you relief cases ave increased almost 25% in less than a year. The figure—762 cases—is not large in view of New Bedford's 110,000 population, but he says there's cause for alarm.

What's significant is that the city has taken on the support of more than 200 cases of able-bodied men since 1945, people who can and want to be self-supporting. And the number of veterans on "soldiers' relief" has zoomed to 259.

Glum as the picture is, textile workers have not yet lost their hope. For the greater part, they are older people who have been through this before. And they have faith that the union will do everything possible to protect them. But they are anxious, disturbed. They feel in their bones, somehow, that this will be the most crucial tussle they have ever had with hard times.

Because they're old, they feel their prospects in the labor market are not good; in fact, they feel that the failure of mill owners to start something rolling may find them with no labor market at all in which to offer their services.

If they were younger, they'd pull up stakes and leave.

Then there's Manuel Gomes. He's 51, the father of 13 children ranging from four to 24 years in age and all living in a seven-room flat in a house Gomes had to buy at inflated prices when he was evicted two years ago.

"Every cent I have went into this house and I've still got a mortgage to pay off," he says.

Gomes was a slubber-tender in the Fisk division of U. S. Rubber Co. He earned about $55 a week. When cotton tire fabrics were ruled "out" at Fisk, Gomes was out, too, after 16 years in the plant.

BENEFITS EXPIRED

His UCC benefits expired last March. Because he owns a house, he's not eligible for relief. Only four of his children are of working age. They're textile workers, too, but are out of jobs. They're still drawing unemployment insurance so there's some food still on the table for Manuel Gomes and his large brood, which now includes a married daughter, her husband and three children, recently evicted.

"They're back with the old man," Gomes smiles, his chin still up.

But to him, this layoff is "different." In 1933, he points out, things were hopeless but at least the cost of living was low and there were some jobs to turn to.

"Didn't pay much, of course, but if you made a few dollars you could manage. Funny thing, this had to happen just when we were getting used to having modern conveniences—like an electric refrigerator.

"But you've got to learn to take these things," he says with a hollow chuckle.

And there's Michael J. Linkiewicz, a man in his late 40's who has been a textile worker since he was 12. Like Gomes, Mike got his walking papers when Firestone decided to stop using cotton for tire fabrics.

"FAREWELL" BANQUET

Less than a year ago, Mike was one of a group of union stewards and foremen who were tendered a banquet by Firestone. He remembers how a company official got up and announced plans for expansion.

"Little did we know we were attending a farewell dinner," he muses. "Well, many a dream other than mine is going haywire."

Things aren't too tough yet. He's drawing unemployment compensation and he's picking up a few dollars as a photographer, long a hobby and now a meager living. And his wife, sickly though she is, has insisted on taking a job in a garment shop. So they may sweat their dream through yet, if things improve.

If—that's what appears to be in the minds of all New Bedford folk.

It must be in the minds of local mill owners as they take their daily lunches in the sumptuous and exclusive Wamsutta Club.

It must be in the minds of workers still on the job, three or four days a week, who continue to scorn Communists who are appearing in greater numbers of late to distribute leaflets at mill gates.

It must have been in the minds of some 300 textile workers who glumly lined the banks of the Acushnet River this week to watch a freighter steam down to Buzzard's Bay loaded with 300 tons of textile machinery from the Firestone plant destined for Buenos Aires, Argentina.

The sight wasn't new. It was the third time it happened this year. But somehow there was something symbolic about it. The bay appears to have been well named for the freighter which rode its waters was very much like a buzzard slowly picking New Bedford clean of its once booming textile industry.

DISCUSS WORKLOAD INCREASES: Layoffs are accompanied by company proposals for heavier workloads for those still on the job. Here a Textile Workers committee from the Kilburn Mills, New Bedford, Mass., is talking over what to do about a proposed boost in workloads. Carignan, TWUA's New Bedford Joint Board director, and Ernest Rego, president of the local.

15,000 Jobless In Tenn. County

More than 21 per cent of the persons who were employed in Knoxville and Knox County, Tenn., last year are jobless today, according to Paul R. Christopher, CIO director for Tennessee.

Christopher said that of the 70,000 or more who were working last year, 15,000 are jobless and another 10,000 earning not more than 50 per cent of normal income. Other figures submitted by the CIO regional office are:

Of the 15,000 jobless less than 7,000 are drawing unemployment compensation. Of the 10,000 partially employed less than 2,000 are receiving partial unemployment compensation—the amount to which they would be entitled if they were entirely unemployed less what they earn.

The percentage of unemployed in respect to the entire work force would be even higher if the number of persons who worked during the peak war period, school graduates and domestic servants were included.

CP Ousts Bella Dodd; 'Fighting Party Line' Against CIO

BELLA DODD for years was a leading saleswoman for the Communist Party Line.

First, she did her selling as a fellow traveler. Then she announced she was a party member. Soon after, she was elected to the party's New York State executive, and later to the national committee.

She was one of the few important women in the party.

Suddenly, a few weeks ago, she was expelled by the CP, which accused her of "discrimination against Negroes," "Browderism" and "white chauvinism."

The charges sounded familiar, so Louis Schaeffer decided to do an interview with Mrs. Dodd for the New Leader. They were old acquaintances from the early days of the American Labor Party, when she represented the CIO Teachers' Union.

She denied the charges against her and said:

"The real cause of my break was the leadership's determination to maintain the Communist opposition in the CIO at all costs."

Schaeffer wrote that "she explained that she and others had argued that such tactics might lead to the CIO's expelling the Communist unions.

"But the party leaders answered that if this happened, the expelled unions would form their own central body."

CP Writer Lies About Nathan Report

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

NO ONE else can hate with the fervor the Communist Party uses in hating.

One of the chief targets of the CP's hates is the CIO. The CIO can do nothing right—in the eyes of the comrades. Now, believe it or not, the CP is sniping at the CIO's Nathan report!

The Daily Worker, during the vacation of its "labor" editor, Georoge Morris, decided to run four pieces by Elizabeth Lawson, identified as instructor in political economy at the Jefferson School of Social Science.

The Jefferson School (it's in New York City) has no official school colors, but you can bet your last dime that the chief color would be red.

Miss Lawson, parroting the party line, didn't have a good word for the 1949 Nathan Report (prepared for CIO by Economist Robert Nathan.) First, she harked back to the Nathan of 1947:

"Two years ago, the press and the public platform rang with the capitalists, denunciation of what was popularly known at the 'Nathan Report.'

"No such assault is being leveled today against the second Nathan report. And the captalists are quite right in their judgement. While the first document, in spite of all shortcomings, served labor in the light of a second round of post-war wage increases, this current memorandum, prepared as a labor document, is in actuality a distinct service to the capitalist class."

Now, that would be a serious criticism—if true. But it is not true. In fact, it is a lie.

If Miss Lawson weren't so slavish towards the party, she would have noted a barrage of editorial criticism of the second Nathan report in the press of America. She would have noted well-planted letters to the editor from conservative economists, attacking the report.

Only last week, Pres. C. M. White, of the Republican Steel Corp., attacked the Nathan CIO Report and the Nathan Steel Report while he was testifying before the steel fact-finding board.

"If someone on our staff had prepared such a report, he'd be canned," White cried.

Which brought this rejoinder from CIO and Steelworkers' Pres. Philip Murray "One thing we'll admit, Republic certainly is an expert at canning people."

So, Miss Lawson starts off with a lie.

HERE ARE the main points she attacks in the Nathan Report:

"It minimizes the crisis and thus the need to fight for the unemployed.

"It denies the existence of technological unemployment.

"In the name of 'increased productivity', it advocates speedup.

"It takes a flat stand against uniform national industry-wide wage scales.

"The Nathan Report pooh-poohs the very possibility of successful struggles to bring down prices.

"It neglects—and therefore betrays—the special burning problems of Negro labor.

"It urges our government to break strikes of workers abroad and to bar the way to political and social reforms in other countries."

It is ironic for a Party Liner to denounce the speedup, which is party policy in Russia. And, most American workers haven't forgotten—and won't forget—the passionate attempts of the party liners to get a speedup installed during the war.

Let's take up Miss Lawson's arguments point by point:

Miss Lawson babbles about "betrayal" of the unemployed by Nathan. She claims he hasn't offered any solution for them. She looks at the world through pink-colored glasses and attacks the man chosen by CIO to state its case.

The Nathan report devotes a lot of time and suggestions to end unemployment and to take care of the unemployed.

On Page 41, Nathan says: "The unemployed should be put to work on useful projects which would enrich the nation's wealth and welfare."

On the same page, he says, "certainly the maximum (of unemployment compensations) should be moved up considerably in all states. The duration should surely be increased to at least 30 weeks in any one year and preferably longer. The system should be extended to cover workers in all fields of activity."

NATHAN DOES say that "the myth of technological unemployment has been laid to rest." This expert on economics has made a thorough study and has come to that conclusion. While he does not go into detail, it is safe to say that his conclusions in the long run are correct. Certainly they bear far more weight than those of a hack instructor from the hack Jefferson School.

She accuses Nathan of urging speedups. What Nathan does say is that "it is certainly in the interest of all groups to achieve an ever-increasing yield of product per unit of effort. These are partly a matter of labor-management negotiations and partly a matter of pricing policies of business."

She accuses Nathan of taking a "flat stand" against uniform industry-wide wage scales." Of course he doesn't do that. He says that there may be some industries that could not afford to grant an appreciable increase and remain in business. Labor is not in the business of driving people out of business.

NATHAN doesn't "pooh-pooh" the drive to bring down prices. Over and over he urges price cuts. On page 39, he says "on the basis of reappraisal of costs of profit prospects at high levels of activity, business should price its goods so as to achieve these high levels of activity. This means price cuts on many fronts even with higher wages."

One of the most flamboyant misrepresentations is that concerning Negroes. She goes even farther here in her slander—"The failure of the Nathan Report even to mention the special problems of the Negro workers today reflects the betrayal of the Negro workers by the CIO leaders."

Thus she, like Communist leaders in left-wing CIO unions, joins the smear attack on Pres. Philip Murray, who has been honored by all the leading Negro organizations for his outstanding work in the field of anti-discrimination.

Even Miss Lawson must know that such a charge is a lie. The Nathan Report concerns all workers, white or Negro, oriental or any other kind. As the late beloved Van A. Bittner used to say: "If a man is good enough for God to create, he's good enough for the CIO."

Another accusation fringed with falsehood is the one which says the Nathan Report urges the American Government to break strikes abroad. Now, lady, that is a pure, downright lie.

The CIO is for the Marshall Plan. It feels the Marshall Plan will revivify the world economy so that it will not drag us down.

One place the American Governmen couldn't break strikes—that's if it were a strikebreaker—is Russia. A Russian worker just can't strike—no how.

So, that's the Big Lie, as spread Lawson style. It puts the CP squarely alongside Republic Steel and the other steel firms that are fighting CIO. It's a good place for the CP to be.

Here's Your Chance To Be CIO Golf Champion

The First Annual CIO International Golf Championships contests will be held Sept. 10-11 at Jackson, Mich.

Betty Hicks, former U. S. champion woman golfer, will be in charge of the tournament, sponsored by the Auto Workers' Recreation Dept.

Competition will be in four divisions: men's individual, women's individual, mixed and team. Individual championships will be played in flights according to handicaps. In men's individual and team events all players must be CIO members in good standing. Scene of the matches will be a 36-hole course.

Entry deadline is Sept. 3. Entry blanks and tournament regulations may be obtained by calling Trinity 2-1400, Detroit, or by writing CIO Golf Championship, 5707 Second Blvd., Detroit 2, Mich.

14 Unions And Councils To Hold Sept. Conclaves

SIX NATIONAL CIO unions, as well as eight state industrial union councils, have scheduled conventions during September.

The Mine Mill & Smelter Workers parley opens at the Sherry Hotel in Chicago on Sept. 12. On the same day, Natl. Maritime Union sessions begin in New York City.

On September 19, the United Electrical Radio & Machine Workers opens its annual convention at the Hollenden Hotel in Cleveland. The session will be marked by a strong bid from UE's right wing to win control of the union.

Also on that date, the United Rubber Workers convention opens at the Royal York Hotel in Toronto, Canada. That meeting will witness an effort by L. S. Buckmaster, who was ousted as president of the union by its executive board, to regain the presidency. Head of the union now is H. R. Lloyd.

A third convention on Sept. 19 will be that of the United Stone & Allied Workers, at the Seneca Hotel in Columbus, Ohio. On Sept. 26, the Intl. Woodworkers meeting opens at the Hotel Vancouver in Vancouver, British Columbia.

State councils meeting during the month are Washington, Virginia, Minnesota, New York, Kansas, West Virginia, Missouri, and Colorado.

Conn. Board Rules Case A Lockout

The Unemployment Compensation Division of the Connecticut Labor Dept. has ruled that the labor dispute between CIO Progressive Local 251 and the Manufacturers' Foundry is a lockout.

Radio To Dramatize Bargaining

A half-hour radio show to dramatize successful collective bargaining will be carried over the NBC network on Sunday, Sept. 4. It will be heard at 4:00 P.M., Eastern Daylight Time, as part of the "Living—1949" series.

The show is being written in cooperation with the National Planning Association, which has sponsored a number of plant studies on "Causes of Industrial Peace." The NPA surveys have searched out the basis of good labor-management relations in certain selected factories and mills.

Title of the NBC Labor Sunday show is "They Wage the Peace.'

Murray On Radio, Other CIO Officials To Talk Labor Day

CIO officers will speak in widely scattered sections of the country on Labor Day.

Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey will address a meeting at Passaic, N. J., under the auspices of the Textile Workers Joint Board of that industrial city. Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood will be in Duluth, Minn., for a CIO picnic in that steel industry center.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray, who has been involved in long hearings before the steel fact finding board, will make no public appearance, but will broadcast a speech over the ABC network at 4:30 p.m. EDT.

One of the biggest rallies will be held in Los Angeles. Speakers include Jack Kroll, director of CIO-PAC; Pres. O. A. Knight of the Oil Workers; and Pres. Joseph Beirne of the Communications Workers.

Editor Allan L. Swim of the CIO News will speak at a city-wide CIO-AFL celebration at Elkhart, Ind.

An all-day picnic that is expected to draw thousands of visitors is slated in Ottawa, Illinois, where Region 4 of the Auto Workers is dedicating a new $300,000 "Union Center." The buildings, formerly a sanitarium, will be used by the region as a summer camp, vacation resort and union school. UAW Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey and Sen. Paul Douglas are among the speakers at the dedication.

Organized Docs Alter Tactics In Drive Against Health Plan

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

THE CIO NEWS was represented last week at a luncheon given for the press in Washington by the American Medical Association. It turned out to be quite a fascinating affair as an exhibit of the AMA's present strategy in fighting national health insurance.

It was the first time I'd met the AMA's much ballyhooed publicity team, Leone Baxter and Clem Whitaker, and considering some of the unpleasant things said about them and the AMA in The CIO News, I was prepared for a cold reception.

DR. G. F. LULL

This was a gross underestimation of their ability as smooth experts in their field. I was greeted with friendly smiles and barely caught one brief, curious glance before my enemy hand was grasped as warmly as if I were an ardent booster for the AMA.

Then I was taken to meet the big bosses of the AMA—Dr. E. L. Henderson, president-elect; Dr. George F. Lull, secretary-general manager, and Dr. John Cline, member of the AMA Coordinating Committee. All three shook hands with me cordially despite my CIO label, and agreed amiably to pose for pictures.

I was also introduced to Dr. Ralph J. Gampell, lately of Great Britain, who has come to the U. S. to practice medicine because he was "fed up" with the British Health System. Later he told members of the press present at the luncheon that the British plan was "one of the filthiest pieces of blackmail" ever put across. He said it was "conceived in sin." But Dr. Gampell, too, was as friendly to me as if I were on his side.

We labor people sometimes get to thinking that those who are in the camp of the reactionaries have horns that must show if we look for them. We search their faces for expressions of smugness, arrogance, meanness or stupidity, and look for elegance in their clothes.

The truth is, they look pretty much the same as the people on labor's side. You can't spot a person who is backward in his social ideas by his looks. The AMA leaders at the luncheon were no exception. They looked OK.

Leone Baxter, young, charming and lively, was smart in a simple blue dress and hat piped in white, but no smarter than plenty of CIO women. Clem Whitaker, tall with a handsome gray pompadour, was not hard to look at either. Dr. Lull appeared to be a jolly fellow; Dr. Henderson, dignified and affable; and Dr. Cline smooth as silk. Dr. Gampell reminded me of Groucho Marx, one of my favorite comedians.

The marked cordiality shown to a member of the CIO press, however, became clear enough, after the first shock of surprise.

The AMA has apparently been greatly alarmed over the widespread interest shown in the National Health Insurance Bill, and stung by the wholesale antagonism aroused by Dr. Morris Fishbein, its lately ousted spokesman.

The present all-inclusive drive against health insurance which the AMA is pushing under the name of a "national education campaign," is built on different lines than Fishbein followed. You catch more flies with sugar than vinegar, you know.

DR. GAMPELL

In its current drive, the AMA must have some optimistic hopes of winning over the labor press, or at least a part of it, for the heart of the support for health insurance lies in the unions, as the AMA well knows.

It was therefore with an air of injured innocence rather than anger that Whitaker undertook at the luncheon to answer some of the CIO's charges against the AMA. He mentioned particularly a story by Nathan Robertson of Labor Press Associates in the Aug. 15 issue of The CIO News, charging the Minnesota Medical Association with making a deal with Minnesota Editorial Association, to fight the health insurance program. (Robertson's convincing reply is printed on this page.)

The weapon which the AMA has decided to use in its efforts to beat the health insurance program to death is, of course, the voluntary health plan. The doctors and publicity experts whooped such plans up big at the luncheon, purporting to show that they would solve all the American citizens' medical needs. These "alleged unmet medical needs of the nation," however, have been "grossly exaggerated," Dr. Cline said.

AMA Talks Two Ways In Minnesota Ad Expose

By NATHAN ROBERTSON

The American Medical Association sees nothing wrong in the new advertising policy adopted by Minnesota doctors to establish a closer relationship with editors who feel they cannot carry organized medicine's story "without compensation."

Clem Whitaker, the AMA's highly paid publicity director, made that clear at a luncheon with the press in Washington last week. In fact he semed to think the disclosure of the negotiations between doctors and editors in Minnesota for closer relations was "un-American" and "a definite attempt to undermine advertising by people who don't believe in our way of life."

At the same time, just to be safe, Whitaker wanted it understood that the AMA had "nothing to do with what happened in Minnesota." He branded as "absolutely false" all charges that organized medicine had tried to buy newspaper inflence.

The Minneapolis Morning Tribune took a similar attitude toward the disclosure by Labor Press Associates. It said charges of bribery and a "secret deal" were "preposterous distortions" and that such accusations had "all the earmarks of a deliberate campaign to smear editors opposing Mr. Truman's health scheme."

With such expressions of innocence coming from both parties to the alleged deal, the public will have to make its own judgment of the facts. Here is an attempt to re-state the indisputable facts in the case, without editorializing or drawing conclusions:

On April 8, a state-wide meeting of doctors and editors in Minnesota was held at the invitation of the Minnesota State Medical Association, which was attempting to work out a closer understanding with the press in its fight on President Truman's health insurance proposal, in accordance with directions from AMA headquarters.

At this conference there was some discussion of advertising by doctors—but just what took place is not recorded publicly. One editor who attended the conference told LPA it was sparkplugged by a top AMA publicity man and the whole atmosphere of the conference was "disgustingly venal."

At its annual convention in May, the Minnesota Medical Association approved a resolution aimed at closer relations with the press. After a whereas declaring that "one criticism frequently heard from the press is that the medical profession expects the press to maintain the entire burden of indirect publicity from the doctor to the public without remuneration," the resolution approved advertising by doctors and medical societies.

The doctors and editors have since argued that there was "nothing new" in this—that some doctors have always carried professional advertising. But the public has always understood that the medical profession opposed advertising to protect the public against quacks. Apparently, the press did too, because in June the Minnesota Editorial Association issued to the editors an announcement of the medical society's action, calling it "one of the most significent items" ever carried in the Bulletin.

This was a "Confidential Bulletin," marked "not for publication." The news was announced under headline reading "Medical Profession Eases Ethical Restrictions on Advertising."

Morse Flays Hawaii Employers And Anti-Strike Law

SEN. WAYNE MORSE (R., Ore.) has charged that the new Hawaiian anti-strike law, aimed at the longshoremen's 3½-month strike, involves "dangerous regimentation of a segment of the economy which I think all lovers of the private-enterprise system should fear.

In a blistering Senate speech, Morse placed blame for continuing the long Hawaiian strike on employers, who he charged have flatly refused efforts to secure voluntary arbitration.

Morse made clear throughout his long speech that he is flatly and deeply opposed to the left wing political attitudes of Harry Bridges, head of the longshore union. But he also emphasized that the employers' attitudes are at least 20 years behind the times.

"The Hawaiian employers are no more opposed to the left-wing philosophy of Harry Bridges than I am," Morse said.

"However, there is this great difference between us. I believe the way to handle such left-wingers as Bridges is to bring him before the fair and impartial judicial process of arbitration and answer his demands with facts."

But Hawaiian employers have used few facts and much smearing, Morse added, and the liberal Oregonian voiced bitter resentment that much of the stevedoring employers' smear propaganda had been directed at him.

Morse voiced hope that both parties to the dispute would come to Washington for mediation efforts through the office of Cyrus Ching, Federal mediation service head.

FLAYING THE employers' standpat attitude, Morse said, "I am perfectly satisfied . . . that . . . the employers have not been willing to agree to arbitration of the dispute (because) they feel that by holding out and winning an economic war against the union, they will so weaken the union that they will be able to meet successfully, for sometime to come, future demands of organized labor in Hawaii."

Morse noted that an inquiry conducted by a special governor's panel in Hawaii showed the companies stood firm on an 8c an hour raise until just before the midnight strike deadline April 30, when they raised their offer to 12c. The union, seeking a 32c hourly boost to bring pay in line with west coast conditions, has offered to bargain within a range of 12c and "substantially below" 32c, the report showed.

The Oregon Senator said that the new law, under which the territorial government took over ownership of the docks, not only bans strike activity on the waterfront but prevents aid of any sort to the strikers—even for the relief funds.

He charged that the Hawaiian government had made a "mistake" in taking over "the managerial rights of employers and the inherent rights of freedom of the workers."

The territorial law, he said, is far more severe than practices 20 years ago which gave rise to the Norris-La Guardia anti-injunction law in 1932.

The law will not bring a settlement, Morse added, and statements by leading industrial figures in Hawaii are "anti-labor propaganda which plays right into the hands of left-wingers, such as Bridges."

Voluntary arbitration of deadlocked labor disputes, such as in Honolulu, is "much preferable to the jungle law of economic force," Morse warned.

Negotiations have deadlocked in Hawaii, and requests have been been made that mediator Ching travel to the islands—a trip he is unable to make at this time. Meanwhile a Senate anti-labor group investigating "union monopolies" is considering a junket trip to the mid-Pacific islands.

It's A Whale Of A Story

Out of the mountainous pile of legislation awaiting action by Congress, here are two bills that passed the Senate:

1. A bill regulating the whaling industry and giving effect to the international convention for the regulation of whaling signed in 1946 by 14 nations including the U. S. It was designed, said Sen. Edwin C. Johnson (D., S. C.) to "protect an animal which is rapidly becoming extinct."

2. A bill to refund $1,003 to Abe Lincoln and $686.33 to his wife. Sen. Denis Chavez (D., N. M.) told the Senate that both Lincoln and his wife Elena, are Navajos who live in Albuquerque, N. M.

CONGRATULATIONS: CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey shakes hands with Philip Kasier after the latter had been sworn in as Assistant Secretary of Labor for International Affairs.

T-H Tree Bears Evil Fruit Again

THE EVIL of another T-H provision has been illustrated by a decision of the Natl. Labor Relations Board.

The provision, Section 10(c), provides "that where an order directs reinstatement of an employe, back pay may be required of the employer or labor organization, as the case may be, responsible for the discrimination suffered from him."

In its interpetation—the first—of this provision, the board found both the employer, H. Milton Newman, Mt. Vernon, N. Y., and Local 456 of the AFL Teamsters liable for loss of wages of Ernest Fritz, Jr., who was laid off because he had refused to pay his back dues and his dues three months in advance.

Before Fritz was laid off, the two other drivers employed by Newman went on strike.

Under the Wagner Act, the board's backpay orders could be directed only against the employer.

The NLRB held that the layoff constituted illegal discrimination under T-H because Newman and the union had no valid union shop agreement.

Newman and the union formerly had a closed shop contract. When this contract expired, they agreed to a union shop, but the NLRB poll required to legalize it under T-H had not been conducted.

The board made two other rulings in its first interpretation of Section 10 (c):

1. When it finds an employer and a union guilty of discrimination against an employe and orders back pay, the board will not attempt to apportion the amount that each owes.

2. "The Act makes no distinction between primary and secondary responsibility for discriminatory treatment of an employe."

In making the later ruling, the board reversed a finding of the trial examiner who found that Newman was "primarily" responsible for the discrimination.

A FEW DAYS earlier a NLRB trial examiner dealt the board's general counsel, Robert N. Denham, a set back when the examiner refused to bring unfair labor charges against the Hotel and Restaurant Employes, AFL, brought by Haleston Drug Stores, Inc., Portland, Ore.

The examiner, Charles W. Whittmore, granted a motion by the union to dismiss the complaint in its entirety.

Whittmore based his decision, which was an unusually swift one, on the fact that last April the NLRB itself refused to conduct a representation election among Haleston employes because Haleston's operations were "essentially local in character"

However, this ruling wasn't good enough for Denham. When the company brought the charges of unfair labor practices against the union the NLRB regional office issued the complaint.

A spokesman for the NLRB in Washington pointed out that this was the first time since the general counsel obtained independent power to issue complaints in unfair labor practice cases that a trial examiner had dismissed an unfair practice charge on the basis of an NLRB ruling on jurisdiction in a representation case.

Casler—chairman of Johnstown's AFL Labor's League for Political Education and president of the CLU, also cochairman, and Lewis Evans, of the United Mine Workers, who was sitting in for Bernard Timms, chairman, who is district board member for the UMW. Evans is a member of the state legislature.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

John C. Lawson, Secretary-Treasurer, United Stone & Allied Products Workers, reports that in a recent election held at the Bryan Rock and Sand Co., Rolesville, N. C., with 74 eligible employes the vote was 45 to 22 in favor of USAPWA.

CIO Reg. Dir. Frank J. Bender reports that in a Labor Board election held at the local plant of the Comfort Springs Co., Baltimore, Md., the workers voted as follows: Eligible 217; UFW-CIO 112; against 80; void 2; challenged 11. UFW-CIO Rep. Sam Weinstock was in charge of the election campaign.

CIO Sub-Reg. Dir. John J. Maurillo of Syracuse, N. Y., announces that in an NLRB Union Shop election held at the Bloomer Bros. Co., Newark, N. Y., Local No. 544, United Paperworkers of America was victorious by a large majority. The results are as follows: Eligible 317; UPA-CIO 226; against 77; void 1.

Claude Ballard, Assistant Director of Organization, IWA-CIO, reports that in an election at Ironwood Trailer Coaches, Inc., Ironwood, Mich., the workers voted 124 for, 1 against.

The great battle of steel, with industry on one hand, and human beings on the other, continues. The barons of the industry, hypercritically complain about the fact-finding committee appointed by Pres. Truman, and question the President's motives.

These are things industry generally calls for. It should be obvious to all why they are opposed to fact-finding. The answer is steel's exorbitant profits. Pres. Murray and his associates have presented the steelworker's case in a very effective manner. The security that the steelworkers are asking for is essential to the future well-being of our whole economy and can be met.

* * *

The truth will out. Former Senator and one of the authors of the vicious Taft-Hartley Law, Joseph Ball, according to press reports, received $3,475 this year from General Motors and General Electric to help defeat Administration efforts to get the T-H law repealed.

The great impartial Gerard D. Reilly, the report discloses, received $13,864 from the above mentioned corporations in the months of April, May, and June. Reilly, former member of the Natl. Labor Relations Board, was known for his bias against the CIO and labor in general. Reilly listed two payments that he paid to Ball, in the amounts of $1,737.50.

This information should be of great interest to the voters of Minnesota, who should be happy that they defeated him, and elected in his place Sen. Humphrey. The voters now know where Ball stands —right beside "big business."

Senate To Probe T-H Soon

WHEN THE newly scheduled Senate inquiry into labor relations gets under way this fall, you can expect the whole sordid two-year history of union life under Taft-Hartley to be revealed.

The Senate has approved the probe and voted $25,000 to carry it out by taking final action on a resolution introduced by Sen. Murray (D., Mont.) late in July. Murray proposed the resolution on behalf of a bi-partisan group of 10 Senators.

According to present indications, Sens. Murray, Thomas (D., Utah), Pepper (D., Fla.), Humphrey (D., Minn.) will be the Democratic members and there is a good chance that either Sen. Aiken (R., Vt.) or Morse (R., Ore.) will be one of the Republicans. Whatever the exact composition of the subcommittee, labor can look for fair treatment.

Among things the new inquiry is expected to disclose is exactly how the Taft-Hartley act has slowed down union organizing everywhere in the country, virtually halting all organizing efforts in the south.

UE Is Critical Of CIO Unions

THE CIO Electrical Workers coupled its recommendation to sign non-Communist affidavits with criticism of other CIO unions, it was revealed last week in the UE News.

The resolution of the General Executive board said that "for more than two years the UE has refrained from using the facilities of the Taft-Hartley Board as a necessary condition for carrying on a consistent and principled fight for repeal of the T-H Act. This has not been the case with the majority of the unions of the CIO and AFL."

The board resolution said "the officers and the GEB believe it advisable that the UE should place itself in a position to use the election machinery of the board." Therefore, it recommended that the UE convention, which opens Sept. 19 in Cleveland, authorize affidavit-signing.

The GEB went on to say that it "cautions the membership that no protection to the UE or its membership will flow automatically from this action.

"The action, however, should make it more difficult for the enemies of rank and file unionism to use the facilities of the T-H Board to injure the UE."

Oregon Victory

Organized labor in Oregon won a signal victory in the courts when the state's high tribunal ruled that a lower court could not stop a labor union from peaceful picketing.

The decision arose in an injunction suit filed by the Baker Community Hotel Co., Baker, Ore. against the Hotel & Restaurant Employes Union-AFL. The union, at the time, was attempting to organize the hotel's 40 workers.

Circuit Judge Homer I. Watts granted the injunction and awarded the hotel $2500 damages against the union.

Senate Unit OK's Carson For FTC

BIG BUSINESS opposition to John Carson, nominated to a spot on the Federal Trade Commission, wasn't enough last week to overcome a favorable vote in a Senate committee.

Members of the Interstate Commerce Committee voted 8-4 to recommend that the Senate confirm Carson for the FTC position. Carson, Washington representative of the Cooperative League of America, has been the subject of long committee hearings.

The favorable action in Committee indicates that Carson — who once was secretary to the late liberal Sen. Couzens of Michigan—will be approved by the Senate as a whole.

The Committee vote followed party lines, with GOP Senators Bricker (O.), Brewster (Me.), Capehart (Ind.) and Reed (Kans.) opposing the Carson appointment. Sen. Tobey, liberal New Hampshire Republican, was not present.

JOHN CARSON
Prospects Are Brighter

Opposition to Carson, an avowed friend of consumers and of cooperatives, came from the National Tax Equality Association, and from the Natl. Association of Manufacturers. The tax outfit has been engaged in a long-run campaign to tax both farmer and consumer cooperatives out of business.

The NAM has endeavored to picture Carson as a "left-wing reformer."

NAM publications, noting that the Cooperative League of the U. S. maintains contact with similar groups in other countries through the International Cooperative Alliance, sought to smear Carson as an international revotionary.

But a host of witnesses from labor, liberal, church and consumer groups attested to Carson's ability and character.

Education Bill Still Faces Fight

THE aid-to-education bill was in a confused position last week.

A majority of the House Education & Labor Committee signed a petition to order Chm. John Lesinski (D., Mich.) to hold hearings on the Senate - approved Thomas Bill. But, they were having a tough time getting together.

Lesinski called an "informal" round-table discussion of the bill, attended by members of the committee and representatives of the CIO, AFL, Natl. Education Association, U. S. Office of Education and Natl. Catholic Welfare Conference.

Only guest to get a chance to speak was James B. Carey, the CIO's secretary - treasurer. Carey started to say that the CIO favors the Thomas Bill when he was interrupted.

The interruption came from Rep. Thomas H. Werdel (R., Calif.), who represents a district dominated by the anti-labor Farmers of California.

Carey replied: "I am not running off at the mouth. You started this."

Rep. Carl Perkins (D., Ky.) asked Carey if the Natl. Association of Manufacturers "was involved in the religious controversy that has deprived us of federal aid this year?"

Werdel again shouted: "If all that is involved is that the CIO or some religious group is going to put more pressure on you fellows, this is a waste of time."

Carey said it was Perkins and not the CIO who had made the remark about the NAM and then declared to Werdel: "There was nothing in my comments that could call for your outbursts unless you are so prejudiced against labor that you won't concede its right to exist."

WERDEL then turned his fire on Rep. Thomas H. Burke (D., O.) and charged that a "so-called compromise" had been worked out on Burke in "secret meetings with the CIO and the NEA."

Burke (he's a member of the CIO Auto Workers), said there was nothing secret about his bill, which would appropriate $240 million to pay teachers' salaries only. He said it had been suggested to him, not by the CIO, but by the AFL Teachers' Union.

Carey, finally getting a chance to finish, said education legislation should cover all school services.

Werdel shouted again: "If the CIO is trying to put pressure on this committee, I'm through."

Rep. Richard Nixon (R., Calif.) asked Carey if it was his belief that the NAM "stirred up the religious controversy over the education bill."

Meanwhile, the controversy between Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt and Francis Cardinal Spellman over aid to education was over.

HR 5856 passed by House. S. 653 ok'd by Senate Labor Committee; debate and vote due soon.	Write Senators to support S. 653 in order to get strongest possible wage-hour law.
Social Security Improvements HR 6000.	Bill extends, improves old age and survivors benefits, etc. Lifts benefits by 80%, brings 11 million in security set-up.	House Ways & Means Committee has recommended improvements in present set-up. House vote possible this session.	Write Congressmen to vote for improvements recommended in social security.
Mundt-Ferguson Bill S. 2311	Endangers civil liberties, union rights—under guise of fighting subversive activities.	Senate Judiciary subcommittee has approved. Full committee due to act soon. CIO testified against bill.	Ask Senators to vote against bill as dangerous to basic civil rights.
Deficiency Appropriation Bill—Anti-Labor Rider HR 5300	Rider to funds bill limits union rights and law protection to many food-processing workers.	Bill passed by House. Action due soon in Senate.	Ask Senators to remove rider limiting rights of food processing workers.
Middle Income Housing Bill S. 2246 HR 5987.	Bills provide long-term, low-interest financing of homes; encourage co-ops, non-profit groups, etc.	CIO supported bills at hearings. Passed by the House in weakened form. Stronger bill is on Senate calendar.	Ask Senators, Congressmen to push aid for middle-income housing, include direct loans to Co-ops.

How We're Doing

(This is another in the series of check-lists on the progress of the CIO Legislative Program during the 81st Congress.)

CIO LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM	CONGRESSIONAL ACTION
1. Repeal of Taft-Hartley Act; re-enactment of Wagner Act.	1. Unsuccessful. Senate passed bill with Taft crippling amendments. House passed Wood Bill, as bad as T-H, but bill was recommitted to committee without further action.
2. Anti-inflation program.	2. No action.
3. Passage of comprehensive housing bill.	3. Passed. Major low-rent, slum-clearance measure became law. Bill to spur "middle income housing" passed by House but in diluted form.
4. Civil rights program—anti-polltax, FEPC, anti-lynching, non-segregation in armed services, Washington home rule.	4. Anti-polltax bill passed by House, not yet acted on in Senate. D. C. Home Rule bill passed by Senate; no action yet in House. FEPC and anti-lynching bills approved by committees, but no floor action yet in sight.
5. Improvement of Wage-Hour Act.	5. House passed Lucas bill, lifting minimum from 40c to 75c an hour, but cutting coverage. S 653, in Senate, to lift pay to 75c and improve coverage due for debate in September.
6. Improvement of social security system.	6. House Ways & Means Committee has approved HR 6000 to improve benefits, widen coverage by 11 million persons. Debate and vote possible in October.
7. National health insurance program.	7. Hearings held in Senate and House. No action likely this session.
8. Federal aid to education; and a labor education extension service program.	8. Senate passed labor-approved education bill. House Labor Committee in wrangle over bill; no action yet voted. Labor extension bill approved by Senate Labor Committee and by House Labor subcommittee.
9. Strengthening of Department of Labor.	9. Won increase in appropriation. Also, U. S. Employment Service & Unemployment Insurance Bureau transferred to Labor Dept. under approved Reorganization Plan No. 2.
10 Adjustment of veterans' benefits to meet higher living costs.	10. No action. In addition, GI Bill's unemployment benefit provisions died in July.
11. Support of TVA and other river valley and public power projects.	11. Congress passed TVA steam plant project. Hearings have been held on Columbia River projects. Senate killed power-trust efforts to bottle up U. S.-owned hydro-electric projects in south and west.
12. A farm program geared to a full economy.	12. No action yet.
13. Extension of power to negotiate reciprocal trade agreements.	13. Passed in House. Senate action due in September.
14. Adequate funds for European Recovery Program.	14. Authorization bill passed. Voting of actual funds tied up; action due next month.
15. Improvement of Displaced Persons Act, to remove discrimination and increase entry quotas.	15. Passed by House. Bottled for months in Senate Judiciary Committee, but may come up for debate soon.
16. Removal of oleomargarine tax.	16. Passed by House, pigeonholed in Senate.
17. Improved tax structure.	17. No action.

Seek Early Security House Vote

A DETERMINED drive to win an early vote on major improvements in social security is being launched in the House.

Failure to consider the measure (HR 6000) last week has postponed action for at least a month. The House, reasonably on top of its schedule by comparison with the Senate, has started a series of three-day recesses until the end of Septmber. No important matters will be handled by the House during the brief sessions in that period.

Sponsors of the bill have voiced hope that the House Rules Committee would bring the bill to the floor under arrangements where it could not be hacked away by weakening amendments.

The bill, product of many months of study in committee, increases social security benefits by an average of 70%, expands coverage to 11 million more people, and provides a quarter-billion dollars for payments for public assistance and public welfare programs.

LAST WEEK the CIO called on members of Congress to give the bill a high priority on its schedule.

Emil Rieve, head of the Textile Workers and administrative chairman of the CIO Full Employment Committee, said passage of the improved social security measure would "relieve human hardship, suffering and tragedy."

Although the bill fails to carry as many improvements as both CIO and Pres. Truman had advocated, Rieve said it is "a step in the right direction."

"As part of the emergency legislative program for checking recession, preventing depression and restoring stable prosperity, action on social security, on extension of unemployment insurance benefits, on the minimum wage and on other related economic measures, is of vital importance," Rieve wrote to Congressmen.

"These bills should be marked 'urgent' and acted on before Congress leaves Washington. Unnecessary delay can only result in damage to human lives, to industry and to business."

Left-Wing Labor Paper Suspends

The Midwest Guardian, left-wing labor newspaper, has shut up shop. The bi-weekly was started last summer in opposition to Minnesota Labor, official organ of the Minnesota CIO Council, after a split over following CIO policies.

Ray Munson, editor of the sheet, told a Minneapolis reporter that the paper was forced to fold because of heavy unemployment among members of supporting unions, particularly in Chicago.

Alfred H. Hirsch, removed from the editorship of the Wisconsin CIO News for being unsympathetic to Natl. CIO policies, was associate editor of the Guardian.

The paper had offices in St. Paul, Milwaukee and Chicago, and claimed wide circulation in Minnesota, Wisconsin, Illinois and upper Michigan. Munson said that the paper might be re-established later in Chicago.

Vol. XII WASHINGTON, D. C. SEPTEMBER 5, 1949 82 No. 35

MUST BE GOOD: Judging by the smiles on the faces of three of the Goodrich strikers, they anticipate no adverse comments from Vice Pres. Walter Childers of Local 5 of CIO Rubber Workers who is tasting the chili con carne at a strike kitchen at Akron, Ohio. Seventeen thousand members of the union are on strike at seven Goodrich plants. The union charges that the company not only refused to bargain on current demands, but also wanted to take away gains made in the past. (See P. 2.)

SECURITY MINUS FREEDOM: While the police were not looking this picture was taken at Prague, Czechoslovakia, in which nation Chairman Irving Abramson of the CIO Community Services Committee says the people have security but little freedom. Abramson recently returned from Czechoslovakia. Note the police armed with tommy guns. European Picture Service which supplied this photo says that the police were on the lookout for photographers and persons expressing hostile sentiments toward the Gottwald regime, and that people with cameras are turned over to the political police as potential spies. (See P. 8.)

URWA Strikes As Goodrich Refuses To Bargain

MORE THAN 17,000 Goodrich workers throughout the country are on strike following the company's refusal to talk turkey on the CIO Rubber Workers' wage and pension program during negotiations in Dayton, Ohio.

Instead of trying to make conditions better for its workers, the company wanted to change the old contract so as to make wages and working conditions worse, the union charged.

The strike was voted unanimously by the Goodrich section of the International Policy Committee.

"Our union was forced to take this action (strike) because the company insisted during negotiations on provisions which would have emasculated our existing agreement," said Pres. H. R. Lloyd. "This strike has the full indorsement of our international union and will have the backing of our union's entire resources.

"The issues in dispute could have been settled on the merits of our case. Unfortunately, the company showed not the slightest interest in reaching an amicable settlement and since the existing agreement expired at midnight Aug. 26, we were compelled to take this action to protect the interests of our membership."

Membership of Goodrich local unions had previously voted by 15 to 1 margin to strike if the company made no effort to reach an agreement with the union.

In addition to contractual improvements, URWA is seeking:

1. Wage increase of 25c an hour.
2. Monthly pensions of $100, paid by the company.
3. Health and welfare plan.
4. Ending of wage differentials for the same kind of work done in different Goodrich plants.
5. Inclusion of the Canadian Goodrich Local 73 in company-wide bargaining.
6. Extension of the six-hour day with no reduction in pay.
7. The union shop.

"The company would not bargain on these matters," declared Lloyd, "All it would say was 'no'. Our union won't take 'no' for an answer. We insist that Goodrich bargain on these matters in good faith. Sooner or later the strike will be settled through collective bargaining. Why won't Goodrich bargain now?

"Just saying 'no' to union representatives is not bargaining," said the union president.

Lloyd rapped the company for refusing to share its prosperity with its workers, despite the fact that it is the most prosperous in the industry and is making record-breaking profits.

NEGOTIATIONS continued in Dayton as The CIO News went to press. Lloyd expressed hope that a settlement could be "worked out, which will get the workers back to work.

"We have taken this step reluctantly," he said, "but we will prosecute this strike just as vigorously as we know how."

Lloyd and Spec. Rep. Asa Tiller represented the international union in the talks, assisted by Gen. Counsel G. L. Patterson and Research Dir. Woodrow Ginsburg.

The company's demands to weaken the old contract were outlined in detail by Lloyd. They provided:

THAT the union agree to a no-strike pledge which would have rendered the union liable for illegal acts committed by employes who were not even members of the union.

THAT the company be given the right to file grievances against the union and to take such grievances to arbitration.

("This particular clause alone would have given the company every opportunity to bankrupt our local unions by forcing every little issue to arbitration—an expensive process," Lloyd said. "In fact, I believe this is an unparalleled demand in labor-management relations. To the best of my knowledge, no other corporation in the country has ever made such an outlandish demand.")

THAT overtime rates originally granted by the War Labor Board be taken away from the workers in some plants.

THAT the company be given the right to schedule work so some plants would work only 24-30 hours a week while other plants would work 48 hours a week.

THAT vacation pay be withheld from workers whom company discharged "for cause."

THAT workers be compelled to stay at their machines for an entire shift.

Negotiations between the union and the company opened in Chicago May 23, and recessed June 14 without any progress being reported. Talks were resumed in Dayton on Aug. 8.

The strike is effective in Goodrich plants in Akron; Los Angeles, Calif.; Oaks, Pa.; Clarksville, Tenn.; Cadillac, Mich.; Miami, Okla.; and Tuscaloosa, Ala.

Good To Have Seen You, My Friend

Bill Hanscom, legislative representative for the Oil Workers Intl. Union, knows a good deal about the various members of Congress, but he recently got another lesson.

Hanscom, having lunched in the Senate restaurant, was standing at the cashier's desk waiting to pay his check. Up strolled Sen. Alexander Wiley, a conservative Republican from Wisconsin.

"Hello, young man," said Wiley. "Care for a cigar? Why not pick one out?" He pointed to the tobacco counter.

Hanscom, who doesn't smoke, figured he'd be willing to take a cigar from a Republican Senator any day. He selected one for a quarter.

Wiley carefully chose a nickel cigar.

The Senator proceeded to put a nickel on the counter, turned to Hanscom and said: "Good to have seen you, my friend." Then he walked away.

Non-smoker Hanscom dug into his pocket, shelled out a quarter for the cigar the Senator had "offered" him.

And Bill Hanscom carries the cigar around with him each day—just to remind himself that you can't be too careful with a Senator. Particularly a Republican Senator.

Steel Magazine Gives Lie To Industry's Depression Talk

A UNIVERSITY economics professor, a labor relations adviser and a former judge and presidential adviser retired last week to pour over 3850 pages of economic testimony and 150 exhibits covering additional thousands of pages.

From this mountainous pile of material, the three-man Presidential fact-finding board will have to fashion a proposed settlement in the steel industry by Sept. 10. Their proposals may or may not avert a nationwide strike by the million-member CIO Steelworkers. The strike deadline comes four days later, on Sept. 14—expiration of the 60-day truce which averted a walkout in July.

The board will have these main questions to answer:

- Are the workers entitled to a pay increase; and if so, how much?
- Are the workers entitled to a social insurance plan—if so, what kind?
- Are the companies required to bargain on pensions at this time?
- If so, should the companies finance pensions? To what extent?
- Should the board's recommendations apply to the smaller companies as well as the larger?

Just as the hearings entered the final stretch two outside developments entered the scene which may have some bearing on the board's decision:

First, the industry's arguments that demand for steel is on the downgrade and its forecast of depressed conditions in the industry later this year were pretty much knocked into a cocked hat as Steel magazine, official organ of the industry, announced that demand for steel continued to rise.

There would be no immediate steel price cuts, the magazine predicted. This statement, too, undercut another industry argument before the board. Steel spokesmen had argued that a wage boost would prevent price cuts. The union's claims that the industry had no intention of cutting prices, whether there was a wage increase or not, seemed at least partially vindicated by the magazine article.

The second development was the union's achievement of a company-financed social insurance plan at the American Can Co. Under the plan, the company pays the entire cost of the program, amounting to 7c an hour per worker. The program provides life and disability insurance, medical and surgical care, and hospitalization. Some 14,000 Steelworkers in 28 plants are covered.

THE FINAL two days of the board hearing were consumed by industry rebuttal.

Hoping to put a brighter lustre on their case, 16 "little steel" companies put former Secy. Robert P. Patterson on the stand. Now in private law practice in New York City, Patterson pleaded for special consideration of the smaller concerns. If the board was unable to make such a distinction, he said, then it should let the standard for the industry be set by the smallest firms.

Union witnesses had previously refuted this contention, pointing to the unprecedented profit position of the smaller companies. The union also argued that, because of the competition for labor, the smaller companies have always paid the same wages as the biggest ones—even before the appearance of the union on the scene.

Last week this issue was involved in a dispute between CIO and Steelworkers Pres. Murray and a Senate investigating committee headed by Virginia Senator Willis A. Robertson.

In a press statement, Murray blasted the committee and its chairman for "injecting themselves into the dispute between the United Steelworkers and the steel industry."

The Robertson committee has been holding hearings on the steel dispute. Two steel industry witnesses, Murray said, had "complained, among other things, that they are subjected to industry-wide bargaining, and must accept whatever bargain the U. S. Steel Corp. makes."

Murray said the union bargains separately with half the companies in the industry. "Unfortunately, however," he said, "while the various steel companies purport to negotiate for themselves, they, in fact, will offer nothing nor agree to anything until U. S. Steel sets the pattern." Murray said the union has always been willing to reach separate agreement with each of the companies.

The union head also struck at the term "little steel" for those steel companies other than the "big three"—U. S. Steel, Republic and Bethlehem. "They would be giants in another country or another industry," he commented.

That insistence on uniform wage rates in the steel industry is of the companies' own making was admitted by several company spokesmen who were questioned about the uniformity at the board hearing by Board Chmn. Carroll Daugherty.

Fairly typical was the reply of James W. Kinnear, Jr., president of Firth Sterling:

"I do not think we need differential treatment," said Kinnear. "We have to get our labor in the same market. We have no choice. I think it is our problem and not (one of) differential treatment, because we have to have skilled workmen."

THE DAY after the hearings ended, the board—which had been under continual attack by industry witnesses—had one more encounter with the companies.

In an effort to help ward off an ultimate strike, the panel offered to serve as mediator.

The companies all waited for U. S. Steel to set the pace. Four days later "Big Steel" replied—for itself and the others.

The answer was "no." But if the board wanted to sit in as mediator in each of the separate bargaining sessions—that would be acceptable. This would have meant attending negotiations between the union committees and about 30 companies in the space of four days.

For the board it was obviously an impossible task—so the mediation offer was withdrawn.

Now, with the board's mediation services out of the picture, the question of whether there is to be a steel strike on Sept. 15 will depend on the board's recommendation—and the four short days of bargaining that follow it.

"Here comes old Tidwell to pick up his retirement check."

CIO News Gives Answers

Local 167 of the CIO Packinghouse Workers has subscribed to the CIO News for all of its stewards so they "will be in a position to decide what is CIO policy and what is not."

That's what Leonard O. La Shomb, recording secretary of Local 167, South St. Paul, Minn., said in a letter to the CIO News.

'Recession f. o. b. Wall St.'—Murray

CIO PRES. Philip Murray in a Labor Day speech over the ABC network declared that the recession was "corporation-made" but that "good-faith collective bargaining and thoughtful legislation" can reverse the tide.

Citing the steel industry's resistance to collective bargaining, he said that big business has shown "little interest" in reaching agreements with labor. Murray declared:

"I wish that every worker, every American, could have attended the hearings of the (Steel) Fact-Finding Board held at the Federal Court House in the City of New York.

"Never in all my experience have I heard such a continuous stream of absurdities of ill-founded charges, of vicious allegations and malicious defiances of the government of the United States."

Excerpts from the speech follow:

URGE ACTION: Bernell Rochester (l.) and J. P. Abercrombie (r.), CIO Textile Workers members, last week urged the Justice Dept. to charge Tallapoosa, Ga., police and other officials with failing to uphold civil rights. The union asserted that the officials failed to act while Mr. & Mrs. Rochester were beaten during an organizing drive. (See story on Page 11.)

THE GAINS won by labor in the past have been well distributed throughout every community. It will be so in the future as in the past.

The storekeeper, the corner druggist, the doctor and dentist, the movie house manager—all of them know from long experience that high wage standards are the fountainhead of their own business prosperity. This country has grown and prospered on a high-wage philosophy.

We in the CIO intend to fight for continued increases in our standard of living in the future. We want full production, we want full employment, we want full pay envelopes. When the dollars in the pay envelope are cut, production falls and jobs decline. Likewise, when the buying power of wages is sliced, the effects are soon felt on both production and on jobs.

On this Labor Day, we are feeling the blight of recession. It is a man-made recession, a corporation-made recession. It has been delivered to the American people by the small but greedy group of men who direct the destinies of our vast industrial machine. The recession has been delivered to the American people f.o.b.—f.o.b. Pittsburgh, Detroit, Chicago, San Francisco—and Wall Street. This corporation-made recession, with its end-product of human misery and distress, must speedily be halted. We in labor intend to stop it—before it is too late.

This Labor Day of 1949 should be a day of relaxation, of untroubled rest, for every American worker. But the shadow of recession and unemployment hangs over the home of every working family. In New England, in Ohio, in Indiana and Illinois, along the West Coast, in my own state of Pennsylvania, fear and insecurity are rising. Today the government acknowledges that unemployment has passed the 4-million mark.

In Dayton, Ohio, and Lawrence, Massachusetts, to name a few of many hard-hit cities, unemployment is still mounting. Thousands of families are almost at the end of their economic rope. Soon their scanty unemployment insurance benefits will be exhausted. What then? Relief — miserable, insufficient handouts — on which no American family can be expected to live.

WE HAD full employment and full production in time of war. We can have jobs for every worker, at high American-standard wages, in time of peace. And I serve notice upon profit-gorged industrialists, and upon complacent or reactionary politicians: organized labor will not sit idly by and watch this nation drift slowly into depression and despair.

America can take many steps to improve our economic well-being. If we act now with resolution, we shall be spared more drastic actions.

We can halt the trend of recession through good-faith collective bargaining, and through thoughtful legislation. Both are necessary now—not at some remote day in the future.

Unfortunately, big business has shown little interest in reaching good-faith agreement with their employees on economic policies to help our country. In industry after industry, management has arrogantly said "no" to the legitimate economic demands of the unions.

The steel industry has taken the lead in saying "no." I know a little something about the arrogance of the steel industry, for my own union—the United Steelworkers of America—has tried to bargain in good faith with that industry.

We asked for wage increases, to restore the buying power of the pay envelopes of a million members of my union. We buttressed our requests with a solid wall of economic facts. But the steel industry said "no."

We asked for creation of a health and welfare fund, to help the employees of those great corporations when they are disabled or sick. But the steel industry said "no."

We asked for a pension fund, so that the steelworkers—who have given the best years of their lives to back-breaking toil—might have a few dollars in their pockets after retirement from their jobs. But the steel industry said "no."

Then, the President of the United States, anxious to avoid industrial conflict, suggested the appointment of a Fact-Finding Board—to find out the true situation in the steel industry. Again the industry, with the exception of a few companies, said "no." But, on second thought, the barons of the steel industry changed their minds. They consented, though with ill grace, to appear before the Fact-Finding Board of the President of the United States.

I WISH that every worker, every American, could have attended the hearings of the Fact-Finding Board held at the Federal Court House in the City of New York. Never in all my experience have I heard such a continuous stream of absurdities, of ill-founded charges, of vicious allegations and malicious defiance of the government of the United States.

The steel industry, whose profits hover close to one billion dollars a year after taxes, would have you believe that it cannot afford wage increases or a welfare fund or a pension plan. The steel industry, which fought against OPA and price control and price stabilization, would have you believe that today it is fighting inflation!

The steel industry has continuously lobbied against President Roosevelt's New Deal and President Truman's Fair Deal—but it has stood with outstretched hands to get every possible aid to business from our government.

Yet today the steel industry wants you to believe that the appointment of a Fact-Finding Board is a form of industrial revolution; that payment of decent wages would somehow constitute a loss of liberty to the owners of that rich industry; that $70,000 pensions for corporation executives are right and just, but that $125 a month pensions for decent working people are unnecessary and will only encourage "incurable spend-thrifts."

THIS INDUSTRIAL pattern is clear and obvious. The corporation lobbies have fought repeal of the vicious Taft-Hartley Law. The corporations have unitedly fought an improved minimum wage law. They have banded together against any strengthening of our shabby social security system. They have firmly resisted the improvement of the unemployment compensation laws to meet the needs of our times.

Unfortunately, the coalition of northern Republicans and southern Dixiecrats in the 81st Congress has listened to the corporation lobbies rather than to the people. Their record of obstructionism will be remembered by the American people in the elections of 1950.

Meanwhile, we will press for enactment of necessary laws to cope with our economic problems, our social welfare needs, our desire for stronger civil rights.

American labor and the American people do not intend to move backwards. With the help of our democratic government institutions, we can conquer fear and poverty and insecurity. We have the will to do it. And we have the skills, the resources and the power to lift our standards of living far above the levels of today.

We can move forward—and we will move forward. That is the pledge which American workers make on this Labor Day of 1949.

Labor Day Spells A-n-g-e-r Plus D-e-t-e-r-m-i-n-a-t-i-o-n

AMERICAN workers today observed Labor Day in the traditional manner but they were more in a fighting than celebrating mood.

Before and since Peter J. McGuire almost single-handedly rallied liberal and labor forces 55 years ago and got Congress to make Labor Day a legal holiday, there have been parades, picnics and speeches.

There were parades, picnics and speeches again this year — but labor saw little reason to throw hats in the air.

Unionists throughout the country were called upon by their leaders to unite against those who have been fighting labor in the legislative halls and elsewhere.

Workers today felt as they did because:

1. Taft-Hartley was still on the books and was being used by employers to halt the growth of unions and to thwart their demands for better working conditions.

2. Congress, which has been in session since last January, passed a comprehensive housing bill and strengthened the Dept. of Labor by increasing its appropriation and by transferring to it the Employment Service and the Unemployment Insurance Bureau, but failed to act on:

a. Civil rights measures, including anti-poll tax, FEPC, anti-lynching, non-segregation in the armed forces, home rule.

b. Social Security improvements which are likely to be approved by the House this session (but Senate action is unlikely until the next session).

(These were just a few of the measures on which the 81st Congress had failed to act, but the Dixiegop coalition found plenty of time to harass the Truman administration by investigation, some of which blew up.)

3. The steel industry and Ford were saying "no" to CIO demands for wage increases, pensions and social insurance.

4. The CIO Rubber Workers were forced to strike Goodrich Co. because the firm insisted during negotiations on emasculation of existing agreements, according to URWA Pres. H. R. Lloyd.

5. There are 4.1 million unemployed. The Labor Dept. last week reported that there were 32 labor market areas which in July had unemployment of 12% or more. It was reported that there were 356,000 unemployed persons in the following areas:

Alabama, Jasper (Walker county); Connecticut, Ansonia, Bridgeport, Bristol, Danielson, Meriden, New Britain, Waterbury; Illinois, Cairo (Alexander and Pulaski Counties; Crab Orchard, including Franklin, Jackson, Perrion, Union and Williamson Counties), Centralia (Marion and Clinton Counties), Mt. Vernon (Jefferson County); Indiana, Terre Haute (Vigo County), Vincennes; Maine, Biddeford-Sanford (York County); Maryland, Cumberland (Allegany County); Massachusetts, Lawrence, New Bedford, Worcester, Fall River; Michigan, Jackson, Muskegon, Port Huron, Upper Peninsula Copper Area (including Houghton, Keweenaw, Ontonagon Counties).

New Hampshire, Manchester; Pennsylvania, Pottsville (Schuylkill County), Scranton, Wilkes-Barre; New York, Utica-Rome; Rhode Island, Providence; Tennessee, Knoxville; Vermont, Burlington.

These conditions led CIO Pres. Philip Murray to declare in his Labor Day statement:

"CONTINUED recession — or economic progress?

"Unemployment, with its attendant suffering and distress—or jobs for all Americans?

"A weakening of our moral prestige among the democratic nations—or strengthening of our leadership among the free peoples, and the people who long for freedom, throughout the entire world?

"These questions, of staggering importance to every one of us, face the citizens of the United States on this Labor Day 1949. We must, as a nation, quickly find the answers—the right answers. We cannot afford to drift.

"LABOR IN America stands by its legislative program—a Fair Deal program to benefit not only the workers but the farmers, the professional men, the small business people of our land. We resolve to secure the adoption of that program—to repeal the infamous Taft-Hartley Act, to lift minimum wages, to adopt a modern and effective social welfare program, to strengthen our civil liberties, to combat the scourge of unemployment.

"FOR OUR OWN sake, and for the cause of freedom everywhere, we must show that free collective bargaining works in behalf of all the people; that we can avert mass unemployment and in fact, constantly raise our living standards; that our government acts vigorously, at all times and in all places, to avert hardship and distress, while buttressing our civil liberties and our economic rights.

"The CIO is committed to these goals, and determined that they shall quickly be achieved. Workers in America are devoted to the preservation and strengthening our democratic way of life against the attacks of all totalitarians. We will fight, and fight hard, against all who seek to undermine our liberties or encroach upon our standards of living."

Capital Antics

Ah—wonderful, beautiful Washington!

Capital of the world—city of tree-lined avenues—home of magnificent buildings and deep freezers—abode of "5 per-centers"—haven of intrigue, stuff-shirtedness and spy-hunters.

It's never a dull city. Almost anything can and does happen.

And frequently the extra-curricular activities of Washington overshadow the principal job for which the city was established—lawmaking.

We have a feeling that the public has paid more attention recently to the "trimmings" provided by Congress than to the "meat."

The Fair Deal program for which a majority of the people thought they were voting when they sent Harry Truman back to the White House has been inching its way forward—but at a snail's pace.

A Dixiegop coalition prevented repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act, stymied civil rights legislation and has been sitting firmly on much of the rest of the Truman program.

Both houses of Congress are far behind normal schedule, with the Senate in worse shape than the House.

What has happened—or hasn't happened—since the 81st Congress went into session has spurred labor to a determination to expand its political activities in the future.

Asked For It, Can't Take It

Recent events have demonstrated clearly that some of our politicians are adept at talking out of both sides of their mouths and that—for political reasons—they actually oppose some of the things which they advocate.

For weeks the Capitol resounded with shouts of "economy." Truman, the shouters said, was pushing us into bankruptcy.

Then the Defense Dept. announced it was swinging the economy axe and lopping off some 140,000 jobs.

The economy advocates began shouting again—when they learned their home districts would be hit by the move—but their tune was a different one.

The Hoover Commission report on reorganization of the government was hailed by most of the press and a large segment of official Washington.

But Congress defeated Truman's Reorganization Plan No. 1, which was based on the Hoover report.

There was a hue and cry in some quarters for a reduction in ECA appropriations. Yet a group of Congressmen attempted to write into the ECA bill a provision requiring the same expenditure in the future as in the past for farm products—regardless of whether the total fund was slashed.

Well, as we said earlier, almost anything can and does happen in Washington!

Senator Taft, Correspondent

We will make no attempt to interpret the motives of Senator Robert A. Taft, but we think it worthwhile to record here that his recent "Washington Report" column, which is furnished to Ohio newspapers, said:

"Remember that the cost of living has increased 70% since 1939, and the proposed increase in the minimum wage will give the less productive worker a much smaller improvement in his standard of living than that received by the organized worker since 1939."

We wonder if the Senator means what he seems to be saying—that the unorganized are the least productive.

Autonomy Gets A New Twist

False Issue Raised By Commies Now Being Used Effectively Against CP

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THE Communists, who often open their mouths widely and then stick their own feet into them, have outsmarted themselves again.

They didn't realize it, of course, but they handed their opponents a real weapon when they launched their phony "autonomy" campaign within the CIO.

What they had in mind was the kind of "autonomy" which would permit them to thumb their noses with impunity at democratically determined CIO policy when it went counter to the party line.

Their opponents, however, have given "autonomy" a new twist and are insisting that it be given much wider recognition in the conduct of union affairs.

What the latter groups wants, however, is the type of autonomy that will give all unions complete freedom from the dictates of the Communist Party.

AS WE ENTER the "final stretch" before the big showdown at this year's CIO convention it would be well to look carefully—and often—at the real issue involved.

It is a very simple one, despite effort of the Commies to create confusion regarding it.

The issue is:

Shall the Communists be permitted to use CIO facilities and the CIO's name to further their own conspiratorial ambitions and to carry out orders issued by the Politburo?

Philip Murray and his colleagues say "NO!"

The Commies say this isn't the issue at all—that the real issue is trade union autonomy.

And, coupled with their campaign of slander and vilification against Murray, they have been attempting to sell the idea that the affairs of CIO shouldn't be governed by majority rule.

THE COMMIE campaign, if taken apart and examined, is one of the most ridiculous things the CPers have attempted in a long time.

Here are their main arguments:

1. The unions affiliated with the CIO should be governed by majority rule as expressed by the membership.

2. All locals of the affiliated unions should be required to adhere to union policy.

3. An entirely different procedure should be used in governing the affairs of the National CIO. All affiliates should be permitted to vote on policy matters but none should be required to adhere to policies thus determined.

An organization operated in such fashion would soon fall apart at the seams—and the Commies know it.

That unquestionably is why they are fighting so hard for their asinine brand of "autonomy."

THE COMMIES, of course, would never dream of tolerating autonomy in their own ranks, and to them real democratic processes are decadent.

The "deviationists" in the party are soon tossed out.

Imagine what would happen to a party liner who even expressed an opinion that the Marshall Plan might be a good thing!

Yet the lefties, who neither understand nor appreciate democracy, are hell bent on "democratizing" the CIO.

Their first step would be to establish their own peculiar brand of "autonomy." Heaven knows what their next step would be.

If they succeeded—which they won't—they would be able to say:

"The patient died but the operation was a great success."

Packer Quits Meat Institute Board in Disgust

SAMUEL SLOTKIN, one of the largest independent packers in the U. S., fired a blast at the leaders of the $10 billion a year meat industry recently that must have hit them where it hurts.

In a letter resigning from the board of directors of the American Meat Institute, Slotkin, who is board chairman of the Hygrade Food Products Corp., said that the Institute had "strongly resisted" every move that would contribute "to an ever-increasing better standard of living for the people of America.

"It is small wonder, therefore, that our industry is summarily dismissed as hidebound self-seekers, oblivious to the general welfare and concerned only with its own profits," he said.

"The American people have a right to expect from the leaders of our industry—with their knowledge and know-how—some forward-looking contribution which would make for assurance and confidence.

"They have a right to expect a program which would:

"1. Aid the farmer to obtain a stabilized market, enabling him to produce America's needs at a fair price without the roller-coaster ups and downs to which he is constantly subjected.

"2. Enable the consumer to have the assurance that his expenditures for food would remain reasonable in proportion to income and earnings.

"3. Permit the processor and distributor to earn a fair profit for the service we render.

"No such program has been forthcoming from the American Meat Institute. Instead it has indulged in superficial and unconvincing campaigns hardly calculated to develop public confidence or help solve the serious issues that confront our nation."

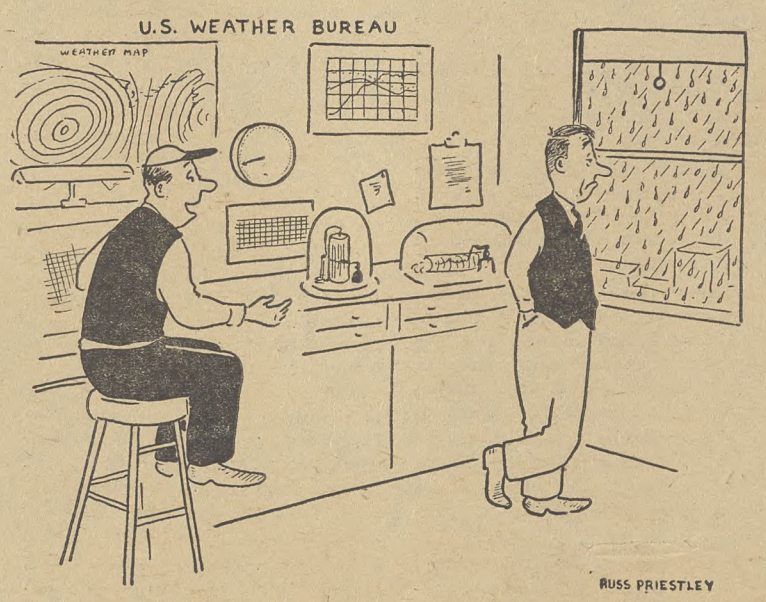
'Dixiecrat Tail Wags GOP Dog' -- Kroll

"THE DIXIECRAT tail is wagging the GOP dog," was the way CIO PAC director Jack Kroll described the antics of the present Congress in discussing political action with a group of Oregon CIO union members at Portland, Ore.

The Republican Party members of the House and Senate are so anxious to defeat every legislative proposal made by President Truman that they have been pulled into a position of following the Dixiecrats, rather than the Dixiecrats following them, Kroll told delegates from local unions of the Woodworkers, Steelworkers, Communications Workers, Longshoremen, Textile Workers, etc. Some ninety representatives of the locals throughout the State were present to discuss politics with Kroll, George Roberts, director of PAC for the Western states, and Henry Zon of the PAC staff.

An immediate drive for PAC dollars was agreed by all to be the first and most important item on the docket. This is to be followed by an aggressive registration drive and concentration on getting out the workers' vote in 1950 so as to assure a different and better Congress for 1951.

Immediately following the session with the CIO representatives Kroll met a number of political problems relative to their own field. The meeting was sponsored by Chet Dusten, CIO regional director for Oregon, and George Brown, CIO state secretary.



"Don't take it so hard, Smedley—even Drew Pearson is only 82% accurate."

Ohio UE Local Acts To Bar Red Officers

Members of Packard Local 717, CIO Electrical Workers, have taken two steps to bar Communists and sympathizers from holding local office. The local is in Warren, O.

She Let The Sheriff Overhear Her Conversation

THIS IS A story about a mild mannered woman, a tough sheriff, civil rights violations, the Department of Justice and a telephone conversation.

The woman was a CIO representative. The sheriff was a man almost completely under the domination of mill owners. The Department of Justice—insofar as the local citizenry was concerned—was a government agency that operated the FBI.

The telephone conversation was a very brief one, but it was potent enough to bring an end to a very bad situation.

BACK IN THE early days of the CIO, organizers moved into a town whose leaders had a long record of anti-unionism.

There was trouble almost from the minute they unpacked their bags and started to work.

They were told bluntly that they'd better leave town, that the CIO wasn't going to be tolerated and that they'd find "it wasn't healthy for them" if they remained.

The organizers said they thought they'd stick around for a while—and they did despite mounting tension and new threats.

They soon learned they could expect no cooperation from the sheriff and his deputies.

ORGANIZING WORK progressed very slowly—as they had expected it would—but they kept making progress.

Then the rough stuff began. At first there was a bit of pushing around and this was followed by several brutal beatings. One of the organizers and a couple of mill employes were "worked over."

And they were told that "this is just the beginning."

An appeal to the sheriff brought a reply that "you're not welcome here and if you're smart you'll get out of town."

Then there was more violence and in one of the frays a deputy was involved.

EVENTUALLY IT became obvious to the organizers that somebody was likely to get killed unless the situation altered considerably. So they sent out an SOS for a union "trouble-shooter."

Into town a day or so later came a mild mannered woman who had a reputation of really knowing the civil rights field.

She talked with the organizers, then called on some ministers, went to see the leading banker and visited public officials.

She was treated coolly but courteously and was told in no uncertain terms that the CIO "isn't welcome here."

She replied with equal courtesy that the CIO intended to stay. The workers, she said, wanted a union, unions were legal, and if there was any more interference with organizing "somebody is going to get in serious trouble."

AFTER SHE HAD completed her investigation, the CIO representative walked into the sheriff's office.

She asked—sweetly—for permission to use a telephone and her request was granted.

She called a friend in the Department of Justice in Washington, told him in detail about the local situation and concluded by saying:

"There have been enough violations here to send several persons to the penitentiary for years. I'd like to get things straightened out without the FBI stepping in and making arrests. I'll call you again later if I need your help."

She thanked the deputy, paid him for the call, smiled at the sheriff—who had been listening—and left.

And before the end of the day it became apparent that the sheriff had become a new champion of civil rights! A. L. S.

SWAN SONG?

CWA Organizing Drive Has New Slant

By BETSY BILENOW

AN ORGANIZING drive with a new slant has been launched throughout the United States.

Concentrating on no special section of the country, and not limiting itself to industrial cities, the all-out drive of Communications Workers of America (CIO) is expected to have far-reaching effects on the American scene.

CWA's president, energetic young Joseph A. Beirne, draws exciting pictures about the effect the organization of the phone workers can have. Sitting in his office last week, in the down-town section of steamy Washington, D. C., we found ourselves thinking of the farms, prairieland, mountains and small towns stretched across a huge continent, where CWA is today leaving its imprint.

At present there are 320,000 members in this union, which is the newest affiliate of CIO. That leaves 205,000 phone workers which CWA has yet to organize. This additional 205,000 is its goal.

These phone workers, unlike employes of a large city factory or department store or insurance office, are scattered in every far flung part of the country. In West Virginia many of them are daughters of coal miners. In South Dakota, they are daughters of farmers.

CWA now has membership in 46 states, plus the District of Columbia. In four states—North Dakota, South Dakota, Arizona and New Mexico—it's practically all there is of the CIO. There are telephone workers in over 70,000 municipaliites. In some towns CWA has only five members, and these five are the only union members in town.

SOME MEMBERS ride as far as 250 miles to attend a membership meeting. Believe it or not, there is a better percentage of attendance at these meetings than at meetings in industrial cities.

The unique contribution that CWA has to make lies in what will result from the far reach of this union.

Union Pres. Beirne sees its most immediate effect on the poitical front. "People in rural districts," he told us, "are intensely interested in what goes on in Washington." Long before last year's elections CWA polled its membership on the Presidential vote. Truman came out so far ahead of the others that there was no question whom the union would endorse. And the replies to the survey were important, too, because of the interest that people evinced in it. This live interest in political matters is being maintained by the union through direct contact.

"Union meetings discuss candidates more thoroughly than city people dream of discussing them." Beirne said, "Then the girls, who live on farms, take it home to their families. Their fathers carry it to farm-cooperative meetings." CWA can do a real job to improve the important relationship between farmers and labor.

By the same technique of direct contact, where none existed before, the phone union can make almost as great a contribution to unionism in general. Its most startling effect may be seen in the so-called "white collar" field.

About 15 per cent of CWA's members work in factories, mostly for the Western Electric Corp. Another 15 to 20 per cent are repairmen who spend most of their time riding around on trucks. The balance of the members fall into the white collar group and are mostly women.

"We don't consider our traffic girls (phone operators) real white collar workers," Beirne explained, "because they work production—so many calls in so many seconds. But in their thinking, surroundings, and training they are accepted as white collar workers."

These girls discuss general union principles with their friends, many of whom work in offices and stores. They discuss it at church socials. Some of the girls are Sunday school teachers, the height of respectability in a rural community, and are carrying the union message to places where it never before has been heard.

AMERICAN TELEPHONE & Telegraph Co., the monstrous monopoly with which the phone union bargains, recently tried to have all its contracts invalidated by the fact that CWA affiliated with the CIO. AT&T claimed that the phone union is now a different union than it was when it was independent.

The National Labor Relations Board ruled that CWA is the same union it was before and ordered the phone company to recognize it. As a result, the union is now receiving pretty little notes from various regions saying "we didn't really mean it and here's the dough." AT&T had withheld $1,200,000 in payroll deductions for union dues.

The next step, according to Beirne, is a fourth round wage increase. "We're really gonna fight for it," he said with conviction. Every CWA division contract has wage reopenings this year.

Probe of Piecemeal River Development Likely

By GLORIA CAPLAN

A POWERFUL lobbying governmental agency which has successfully defied three U. S. Presidents is expected to undergo Congressional scrutiny when the House returns from its unofficial vacation.

Prediction that the Army Corps of Engineers—which so far has victoriously battled Presidents Roosevelt, Truman and Hoover—would be the subject of a thorough probe was made by Rep. Adolph Sabath (D. Ill.).

Actually the Army Engineers would be target No. 1 of an extensive investigation of all lobbying activity. The investigation was proposed by Rep. Frank Buchanan (D. Pa.) and approved by the House last month. Originally the resolution called for a joint probe by a special House-Senate committee, but the Senate balked and passed over the whole idea.

A special seven-man House committee is expected to be named after the recess.

A NUMBER of Congressmen have complained about the increasing pressure of lobbies. In his attack on the Army Engineers, Sabath charged that the Corps can get "just about anything it wants out of Congress" because its costly "pork barrel" projects on rivers and harbors are so dear to the hearts of Congressmen.

Indignation over the Army Engineers' alleged high-handedness and wastefulness has been mounting.

Still Bologna

When the Senate fight over the Engineers' appropriation for rivers and harbors was raging last month, Sen. Douglas (D., Ill.) vainly attempted to "fry out" $300 millions of fat. When he was a schoolboy, Douglas said, the legislation was known as the rivers and harbors bill—more irreverently called the "pork barrel."

Since then, he noted, its name has been changed to the more formal "Army civil functions bill."

"This," commented Douglas, "has a very impressive and dignified sound, but when the wrapping is peeled off I have a very real feeling that, however succulent the slices, it is still the same old bologna."

The Hoover Commission on Government Reorganization dwelt at length on its wasteful projects and recommended transferring its rivers and harbors functions to the Interior Dept.

The staid New York Times on Aug. 30 attacked editorially the piecemeal method by which millions are being spent—and billions proposed—for the development of the country's great river basins—particularly the Missouri and Columbia River basins.

The Army Engineers is the central figure in this battle. The Times recalled that two years ago it had written that "the spending of money on rivers for single-purposes, such as the control of floods, has been rendered obsolete by the success of the TVA." (Most of the Engineers' projects are single-purpose.)

IN ITS AUGUST issue, Harper's magazine carried a blistering attack on the Army Engineers, entitled "The Lobby That Can't Be Licked." The article recalled that Pres. Franklin D. Roosevelt's conflict with the Army Engineers once reached such intensity that he sent this blunt note to Secy. of War Stimson:

"I want the Kings and Kern River projects to be built by the Bureau of Reclamation and not by the Army Engineers. I also want the power generated at the projects built by the Army Engineers to be disposed of by the Secretary of the Interior."

Of the numerous government agencies falling all over each other to "develop" the river valleys, the Army Engineers and the Interior Department's Bureau of Reclamation have been under the heaviest bombardment by advocates of centralized river authorities modelled after TVA.

But the Interior Department also last week drew the fire of Ben Stong, chairman of the Regional Committee for a Missouri Valley Authority, of which CIO is a member.

Stong charged the department with attempting to halt a great soil conservation program in the Missouri Basin in order to protect the controversial Pick-Sloan plan. Purpose, he said, is to save the badly needed water for "premature and unwise, but already planned, Pick-Sloan projects on the main stream."

General Called Ex-Officio Member of House Committee

Lt. Gen. Lewis A. Pick, chief of the Army Engineers, is practically an ex-officio member of the House Public Works Committee, according to one fed-up Republican Congressman.

Rep. Usher L. Burdick (R. N.D.) last week charged that the House Committee is "dominated" by the Army Engineers lobby to such an extent that "the Army can get anything it wants."

During committee hearings on rivers and harbors projects, Gen. Pick "sat at the controls," Burdick said.

"When the House Committee heard testimony on the rivers and harbors appropriation bill, Gen. Pick sat on the bench alongside the committee chairman. For all intents and purposes, he was just as much a committee member as anyone else.

"People back home have no chance to register their views as long as this insidious lobby exists."

(These Congressionally approved Pick-Sloan projects, babies of the Army Engineers and the Bureau of Reclamation, have been attacked as wasteful and ill-planned from nearly all corners—from the CIO to the conservative Hoover commission.)

The Interior Department's thumbs-down attitude toward the soil conservation program has brought it into direct conflict with the Agriculture Department, since it is the Agriculture Dept.'s land plan.

PROPONENTS of the soil conservation program have pointed out that the plan, in addition to its main purpose, would reduce the amount of sediment in the river so greatly that it would be possible to provide slack water navigation and over 12½ billion kilowatt hours of electric energy. Thus, they say, the Army Engineers' vast proposed navigation channel would be unnecessary.

This position was taken by the Federal Power Commission as long as two years ago. As part of the Interior Dept., the Commission thus finds itself in a tenuous position within its own family.

In his statement, Stong charged that the haphazard Pick-Sloan plan is not only jeopardizing the agricultural development of the Missouri basin, but the establishment of a central development authority as well.

"If the Missouri Basin wants the nation to pay $9 billion and throw away enormous resources potentials so it can watch a demonstration of bureaucratic feuding and wasting, then the Pick-Sloan plan should be continued," he said.

"If Missouri Basin and the nation want a great and useful development of the basin, then they will drive out the Pick-Sloan wasters, and demand a Missouri Valley Authority that can make bonafide decisions in the basin within congressional authority."

Court Decision Asked on Local Option Section Of Rent Law

THE NATL. CIO Housing Committee is backing a court test of the constitutionality of the local option section of the federal rent law.

A suit to determine the provision's constitutionality was filed in Federal District Court in Washington, D. C., last week by Edith Shimek of Milwaukee, Wis. It has the backing of the CIO Housing Committee. A suit must be brought by an individual in order to test the law.

In the petition, the court is asked to establish a three-man tribunal to determine the provision's constitutionality.

Under the local option section, a state or local governing body may remove its area from federal rent control jurisdiction by passing a state law or city ordinance. It may decontrol the area entirely by declaring the need for housing has been "reasonably met" as occurred in Knoxville, Tenn., or it may substitute its own law, as in Wisconsin.

In challenging the legality of the provision, Miss Shimek contends it is an unconstitutional delegation of federal powers under Article I, Section 8 of the Constitution.

THE SUIT also asks the court to order Federal Housing Expediter Tighe E. Woods to continue enforcing rent controls in Wisconsin and to bar the transfer of records and files from federal rent offices to the state. Woods is named as defendent in the suit.

Miss Shimek charged that she had been obliged to pay higher rent, totaling $3120, because of the local option section, under which the state passed its own rent law permitting increases.

On grounds that the state action was unconstitutional, Miss Shimek filed a petition with the Housing Expediter for the return of overcharges and sought to have her rent adjusted to its former level. Over 2000 similar petitions have been filed by Wisconsin tenants.

If the local option section is declared unconstitutional, Miss Shimek will be entitled to damages of more than $3500 under the federad rent control act, she stated.

Lisk Named Ga. TWUA Director

Pres. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers has announced the appointment of H. D. Lisk as the Georgia state director for the union. Lisk will take the place vacated by Kenneth Douty when Douty was appointed to the ECA mission to France.

Prior to his current appointment Lisk had been Alabama TWUA director, with headquarters in Birmingham. That position, Rieve said, will now be filled by Julius Fry, formerly manager of the Huntsville, Ala., TWUA joint board.

The TWUA president also named Duggan Boartfield as new manager of the Huntsville joint board and Harold Marthenke as manager of the TWUA joint board in Memphis, Tenn., a post previously held by Boartfield. Marthenke had been a TWUA staff representative assigned to the education department.

STRIKING POSE

Proof that the "voice with a smile" can really smile is supplied by Sheila Connolly, a member of Local 1, Long Lines Division 10, CIO Communications Workers, New York City. In order to pursue a part-time modeling career in the afternoon, Miss Connolly works double tours—four hours in the morning and four in the evening. Only a slight trace of Sheila's Irish accent can be detected now although it was quite noticeable when she arrived from her native Dublin in early 1946.

Radio Engineers May Join CIO

The National Association of Broadcast Engineers and Technicians has announced that it is considering affiliation with the CIO's Communication Workers of America. The union, now independent, represents some 2000 technicians employed by radio and television chains and other stations throughout the country.

The question of affiliation will be submitted to the membership in a national referendum, said Clarence Westover, the union's executive secretary.

MEBA Pres. Samuel J. Hogan Dies; CIO Mourns His Death

SAMUEL J. HOGAN, president for the past 12 years of the CIO Marine Engineers Beneficial Association, died at his Washington, D. C., home last week.

Death of the 66-year-old union head and CIO Executive Board member was termed a "loss to the American labor movement" by CIO Pres. Philip Murray and Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey in a wire of sympathy to the widow.

"In our long association with him, we always found him to be a man of the deepest sincerity and integrity," the CIO officials wired Mrs. Hogan.

"He felt his mission in life was to serve his fellow workers, and that he did to the utmost of his great ability. The officers, Executive Board members, and the whole membership of the CIO feel keenly his loss to the American labor movement. In behalf of this great multitude of workers and on behalf of ourselves personally, we extend to you our deep sympathy in your bereavement."

Following a 10-day hospital stay, Hogan was returned to his home, where he died a few days later.

Before his election to the top post in his union in 1937, Hogan served for 28 years as president of the New Orleans, La., local of MEBA. He was a marine engineer himself.

At the time of his death the union's 15,000 members were voting for union officials by referendum. Hogan, seeking reelection, was opposed on the ballot by four contenders: H. L. Daggett, Seattle, Wash.; W. L. Ball, Norfolk, Va.; John P. Holland, N. Y.; and Edward P. Trainer, N. Y.

The MEBA executive board has named the union's first vice-president, Ray H. Robinson, Portland, Ore., as acting president until results of the referendum are announced shortly after Sept. 30.

Edwards Suffers Slight Polio Attack

George Edwards, CIO Auto Workers member who is president of the Detroit Common Council and a candidate for mayor has been stricken with a light, non-paralytic attack of poliomyelitis.

Senate Votes 75c Bill, Bars 200,000 Now Covered

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

SOMETIME before next March 15, the minimum wage in American industry will rise from 40c to 75c an hour—for those workers still able to qualify under a bill which cuts, rather than extends, coverage of the Wage-Hour Law.

The Senate, by a voice-vote, completed action Aug. 31 on the new provisions. The Senate bill, though considerably better than the House-passed Lucas bill, still removes many categories of workers from wage-hour protection.

But both branches of Congress voted for the flat 75c minimum for those workers who will eventually benefit from the law's provisions.

The House version would cut an estimated million—or more—persons from wage-hour protection. The Senate version would cut an estimated 200,000 workers out from under the law.

On the other hand, the Labor Dept. figures that about 1,300,000 workers now earning between 40c and 75c an hour will get pay raises when the bill, in its final form, finally becomes law.

SENATE voting on the wage-hour measure showed a break, for a change, in the familiar Dixiecrat-Republican coalition. While the final tally on the bill was recorded only by voice vote, the line-up was clearly shown on a series of drastic amendments.

One of the most important of these was a proposal by Sen. Ellender (D. La.) to raise the minimum wage rate only to 65c, and to tie the minimum on a "flexible" basis to rises and falls in the cost-of-living index.

Ellender's proposal was knocked down, 51-26. Twenty-six Democrats and 25 Republicans voted against it; 16 Democrats and 10 Republicans voted for the "flexible" 65c suggestion. [The one northern Democrat who voted with the Dixie bloc was Frear (D. Del.)].

A series of similar amendments, all calculated to weaken the effectiveness of the law, were beaten down. Ellender tried again, with a second proposal for a basic 65c minimum and a scheme for a public board to raise or lower the figure between 55c and 75c. That was licked, 51-24.

A third Ellender proposal, to set the minimum at 70c, was defeated by voice vote. A proposal by Sen. Fulbright (D. Ark) that the 75c go into effect through annual small increases over a 3-year period, also was thrown out, 54-20.

Then Sen. McClellan (D. Ark.) sought to write in a provision—similar to one adopted in the House—barring wage-hour law benefits to employes of sawmill operations hiring less than 12 people. This amendment, affecting an estimated 130,000 low-pay employes in the lumber industry, was defeated by voice vote.

Two Versions To Become One

The two versions of the new Wage-Hour Bill (HR 5856) will go to a joint Senate-House conference committee for compromise of the many differences in coverage and enforcement.

The Senate version, although it slices 200,000 workers out of minimum wage protection, is far stronger than the House bill.

Senate members of the conference committee are Thomas (D. Utah), Murray (D. Mont.), Pepper (D. Fla.), Taft (R. O.), and Aiken (R. Vt.). House members will be named when that body returns from recess in mid-September.

The House version provides that the new 75c minimum rate will go into effect 60 days after the bill becomes law; the Senate version provides a 120-day waiting period.

SEVERAL PROVISIONS which would have extended wage-hour coverage were removed from the bill by the Senate Labor Committee before the measure came to the floor. That action was taken in the interest of getting the bill passed without long-delaying debate and vigorous opposition from both Republicans and the Southerners.

One effort to improve the bill was a floor amendment offered by Sen. Magnuson (D. Wash.) to bring wage-hour coverage to U. S. seamen not engaged in foreign trade. Most of the workers affected would be seamen on the Great Lakes and inland waterway. It was defeated by voice vote.

Leading the Senate fight for adoption of the bill without weakening amendments were Senators Pepper (D. Fla.), Murray (D. Mont.), Myers (D. Pa.), Thomas (D. Utah), Magnuson and other Fair Dealers.

Even Sen. Taft (R. O.), who is not generally regarded as one of labor's staunchest friends on Capitol Hill, went along with the 75c minimum pay proposal.

Taft opined that the 75c figure seemed to be "a reasonable minimum wage under all the circumstances." He went so far as to indicate that some employers may not necessarily give a worker all the money that's coming to him. The theory of minimum wages, Taft solemnly explained, is based on the "belief that any working man or woman is worth at least that much in terms of pay."

SEN. PEPPER, commenting on passage of the bill, hailed it as a "great step forward."

"It is going a long way to carry out the pledges of the Democratic platform," he added. "I regret that we had to limit the bill as we did so far as coverage is concerned . . . We are optimistic as to the future and hope to extend coverage to the great mass of workers in the U. S."

Sen. Myers (D. Pa.), one of the leading fighters this session for wage-hour improvements, regretted it had taken the Senate so long to get around to the subject.

During the course of debate, Myers gently chided his colleagues. "Instead of telling each other at great length how devoted we are to the principle of a fair and decent wage for American wage earners, I suggest that the Senators proceed as promptly as possible to a vote on this matter . . ."

Myers charged that the House bill, with its many exemption, is an attempt "to remove this basic protection from great groups of wage earners now covered by the Fair Labor Standards Act."

The Pennsylvania Senator revealed he had written a sharp letter to the Philadelphia Textile Manufacturers Association, after that employer group had protested the increase to 75c an hour. Noting that northern textile employers have been complaining against southern competition based on low wages, Myers said: "It is my firm belief that an increase in the minimum to 75c will aid rather than hurt the business of your member firms by forcing your unfair competition to pay at least a half-way decent wage to their employes—a wage of $30 a week."

TWUA Researcher Says:

House 75c Bill Would Jeopardize 40-Hour Workweek

SHARP denunciation of the House-approved version of the new Wage-Hour Bill as "utterly hypocritical and deceptive" in its enforcement and coverage provisions was voiced by the CIO last week.

A 12-page analysis prepared by Solomon Barkin, research director of the Textile Workers Union, was issued by the CIO Committee on Revision of the Fair Labor Standards Act.

Barkin said the Lucas bill—which was passed by the House as a substitute for the Administration's own Lesinski bill—would:

1. "Remove entirely from the Act, even from the 40c minimum, many hundreds of thousands of employes in a wide variety of businesses who have been protected by the Wage-Hour law for the past 10 years."
2. Jeopardize the 40-hour workweek for employes.
3. "Throw even the question of minimum wage and hour protection into the courts for a 10-year period of litigation before it could be known just what the new act means."

The Lucas Bill, Barkin said, reaffirms the "purpose" of the present law, "but what it really does is to take away all safeguards for decent minimum standards for millions of workers in interstate commerce.

"The bill continues to say that the law should drive out of interstate commerce the manufacturer who competes unfairly on the basis of substandard wages, but after mouthing this pious declaration, proceeds to encourage the sweatshop operator to compete in the interstate markets."

THE TEXTILE union economist—an outstanding expert on wage-hour law—charged that the Lucas bill is "marked throughout by contraction of coverage, expansion of exemptions, strengthening of employer defenses, and loosening of definitions.

"Its three main purposes obviously are:

"1. Remove huge segments of low-wage, long-hour employes from the protection of the Act;

"2. Permit employers to escape the full impact of the Act for those employes who would still be covered;

"3. Raise the minimum wage—but for as few people as possible."

Barkin predicted that "confusion will arise in nearly every work place in the U. S. when employers attempt to determine which employes would be covered and which would be out," if the House version of the bill becomes law.

One loophole, he pointed out, is contained in a major change in wording of the law. In the past, the wage-hour law has covered persons whose services are deemed "necessary to production" of goods in interstate commerce.

The House bill changes that to persons "in any closely related process or occupation indispensable to the production thereof." This change, he said, would eliminate many hundreds of thousands of workers.

THE SITUATION would become "precarious" for clerks, stenographic and office employes; watchmen and guards; elevator operators; janitors, firemen, plummers, messengers, window washers, repairmen and maintenance employes in "virtually every business."

Another catch-phrase, Barkin noted, is one exempting retail firms, even if they manufacture or process the goods they sell.

"This provision seems an open invitation to large retail stores and chains to set up their own factories, from which they can get goods made under sub-standard labor conditions," he said.

The hours-and-overtime provision also contains a serious joker, Barkin charged, for it permits the deduction from "measured working time"—on which overtime is calculated—of minutes or hours to which a union is willing to agree.

"It is not enough to say that the employe's rights are protected because such exclusions can come only through bona fide collective bargaining," Barkin commented. "Weak unions may not be able to withstand the tide if they are not protected by basic fair labor standards."

Senate Vote On 65c Proposal

The Senate version of the wage-hour bill was adopted by unrecorded voice vote—but a key rollcall test came on the Ellender amendment to dump the 75c minimum pay proposal in favor of a "flexible" 65c base pay that would rise and fall with the cost of the living. The amendment was defeated, 51-26, on August 31. Votes against the weakening amendment are indicated by R; votes for the amendment by W; pairs are marked PR and PW; absence is indicated by A. Twenty-six Democrats and 25 Republicans voted Right; 16 Democrats and 10 Republicans voted Wrong.

Nine Senators who were absent on official business indicated what their votes would have been. Chavez (D., N.M.), O'Conor, (D., Md.), Morse (R., Ore.), Ferguson (R., Mich.), Thomas (D., Okla.), O'Mahoney (D., Wyo.), McCarthy (R., Wis.), and Dulles (R., N.Y.) would have voted against the Ellender amendment; Russell (D., Ga.) would have voted for it.

Negro Newsman Seeks N. Y. C. Council Post

Earl Brown, Negro newspaperman on the staff of Life, and an active members of the New York Newspaper Guild, has been chosen as Democratic candidate for a City council seat now held by Benjamin J. Davis, Jr., one of the eleven defendents in the Communist conspiracy trial. Brown is widely known in labor circles as he has covered many union conventions.

Czechs Have Security Minus Basic Freedom

By IRVING ABRAMSON

Chairman, National CIO Community Services Committee

I looked forward eagerly to my visit to Czechoslovakia, for I was most anxious to learn first hand what the Communist state really meant to the workers, their trade unions and their working conditions.

I must confess that the first walk down the streets of Prague made a great impact on my thinking. I arrived in Prague on a Sunday. I was immediately struck by the great number of large book stores that were on almost every street. I counted seven on one street. The windows of one looked pretty much like the others. There were large pictures of Stalin and Gottwald, side by side, displayed in the windows. Below the pictures were books, chiefly on Lenin, Karl Marx, Engels and biographies of Gottwald.

ABRAMSON

My inspection of the store windows was interrupted now and then by loud speakers that were suspended from street lamp-posts blaring forth music interspersed with comments that I did not understand and emanating from a central broadcasting system.

PEOPLE walking along the streets appeared to be neatly dressed. The Czech who may have been poorly dressed was always, nevertheless, neat and meticulously clean. His suit may have been 10 years old, but it was literally turned inside out in order to get the most out of it. The people appeared to reflect no tensions and seemingly unaware of any political crisis.

Uniformed police or soldiers were not in evidence.

It might be of interest to tell of the weirdest sight-seeing experience I encountered any place in Europe. I visited the Jewish section of Prague and what was at one time the Ghetto.

In the middle of the Ghetto was a building that was the product of a fiend. Toward the end of his systematic slaughter and annihilation of the Jews, Hitler decided to write the obituary of the slaughtered race.

He did this by building a museum in which is now displayed all of the collections from all over Europe of plundered synagogues and murdered rabbis. The result is that the museum in Prague has the greatest collection of paraphernalia portraying Jewish religion and Jewish culture of any place in the world. It was the weirdest experience for a Jew to walk through this ghost-like museum that was intended to record for the world his own past life.

DURING MY conferences, I first inquired into the structure and function of the trade union movement. The conclusion is inescapable that the trade union is an agent of the government, and its duty is to carry out the decisions and wishes of the government.

I quote from page 13 of a pamphlet issued by the "Control Council of Czechoslovakia Trade Unions" entitled Trade Unions and Nationalization.

"The law (enacted by the Government) on the scope of activity of the works council sets very precisely the border-line of the sphere of action of the works council on the one hand and the management on the other."

We in America regard collective bargaining as an essential part of union function. In Czechoslovakia, the official trade union document entitled "To Each According to His Merit" has this to say about freely negotiated agreements:

"We know from experience that the freely negotiated collective agreements guard only crafts interests in a very narrow way. These narrow interests of single sectors, defended without regard to the other branches do not create the necessary foundation for planned wage policy as envisaged by the government."

The trade union publication Social and Labor Legislation, has this to say about collective bargaining:

"The constitution did not, as a form of collective wage adjustments, take over the collective agreements current in Czechoslovakia before the second world war and still used as a means of defense by the working class of capitalist states. That kind of collective agreement is a result of the class struggle and has no place in a socialist state or in a state where production and distribution are to the greater part socialized."

The fact is that collective bargaining, free or otherwise, is forbidden by the state and not authorized by the new constitution, according to the trade unions.

WOMEN DO MANUAL WORK: Here are some of the "voluntary workers" in Prague. Women "volunteer" several hours' work every week toward a "useful cause" such as mining, farming, or heaving bricks to clean up a lot, as these women are doing.

However, in discussing with the trade union leadership whether the trade unions have the right to strike, they insist that they do have such a right, adding, however, that there is no need to strike. I asked whether the government's decree last year extending the five-day week to a six-day week (the hours remained the same 48) resulted in any strikes. I was told there were only a few strikes but that they did not last more than 24 hours.

I ASKED whether I could see a factory in operation. The union director explained that it would be difficult to arrange inasmuch as it would take at least three weeks to clear through the government security officials.

The prime minister, who is also the chairman of the national federation of unions, was out of the city at the time of my visit and I met with the acting chairman.

In a short while the chairman was engaged in an explanation of the social security laws. It must be said here that in the field of social security they have achieved a great deal.

When the chairman finished going through the highlights of their social security accomplishments, he asked me how I liked them. My reply started off a discussion for two full hours on the differences in our thinking.

I replied that I thought that what he described sounded like real achievements in social security and then I asked "why is it not possible to have social security and freedom at the same time? Why must one be had to the exclusion of the other?"

The chairman then embarked on a dissertation to the effect that our concepts of freedom and democracy in America are different from theirs. I pressed the chairman whether there could be any difference in concepts, between the right of a worker to criticize his government, the rights of workers to assemble and petition for redress and the rights of the press to print what they wanted to.

He replied that workers have the right to make "constructive criticism."

WE PASSED TO the question of manpower. I expressed an interest in the statement that there is no unemployment and the means the government used to achieve that.

He asked me whether my question implied that there was forced labor in Czechoslovakia. I said frankly that it does, and that I heard that if an unemployed worker was caught idling in the afternoon drinking a glass of beer he would be picked up by the secret police and sent to a labor camp. I asked him whether that was true. He said that while it was true that the worker would be arrested, the reason for his arrest would not be for idling. The reason was that any worker who idled his time drinking beer must have secured his money on the black market and would be arrested for black marketeering.

No worker can be discharged nor can he leave his job without the approval of the government. Nor can he take a new job without its approval.

The constitution (article three) contains a provision which is used to set up labor exchanges that require approval before workers can take on any job and gives the government the right to direct a person to any job it sees fit.

"Every citizen is obliged to work according to his ability and to contribute by his work to the welfare of the community."

PLENTIFUL: In Prague there are as many as seven book shops like this one in one block at which the works of Lenin, Karl Marx, Engles and the biographies of Gottwald are featured. The windows are usually adorned with pictures of Stalin and Gottwald.

THE NEXT DAY I met with the editor of the union paper. I asked him what would happen to a worker who stood up on a platform and told a meeting of workers that Gottwald is no good and that he ought to be removed.

He said he would be arrested, and if an investigation showed that he didn't have any enemies of the government behind him and did it in good faith, he would be released.

I then said, "suppose after arresting him you find that he is a good Communist, the best producer in the plant and the head of the works council; suppose you find that he feels that Gottwald ought to be removed because he is not carrying Communism far enough, can he go back and continue his speech after you release him?" His reply was "ah no, that's not constructive criticism."

FREE ELECTIONS are now a thing of the past. When elections are to be held the people will be presented with a ballot containing suggestions of the names to be voted for and no opposition ticket is permitted.

The strength of the government and its hold on the people are not to be discounted. Czechs are not disposed to discuss political problems with strangers.

In Europe where workers desperately need social security there are many who in their desperation are willing to exchange their freedom for it. The evidence is convincing that if the remaining western democracies are to remain free, their peoples must be given social security and a decent standard of living to keep them from the clutches of Communism.

Lawyer Defines 'Welfare State'

Current big business propaganda attacks on "statism" are a new version of the fight against the hopes of the people for a better economic life, a union speaker told the recent Institute for Special Progress at Wellesley College, Mass.

William Isaacson, general counsel of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, told the group:

"If our way of life is to be perpetuated, if our political freedoms are to be preserved, these economic aspirations must be satisfied. The welfare state would do this. While retaining the best in our political democracy, it would at the same time establish an economy rooted in equality and security. This, in essence, is the welfare state."

Mass production and mass education, Isaacson said, "create an irresistable demand on the part of the people for social as well as political justice. That security represents one of the basic aspirations of the common people throughout the world."

Taft Hopes To Confuse Voters—Ohio CIO

By AL ZACK

LABOR AND Senator Robert A. Taft are set for a preliminary bout in the November 1949 election. On the outcome of that bout may well rest the decision in the big go in 1950.

In 1949 they will be battling over a change in Ohio's familiar ballot.

Taft is the behind-the-scenes power seeking to change the Ohio ballot, which now permits straight party voting.

He seeks to substitute the so-called "Massachusetts-type" or "office-type" ballot.

Ringing this proposed change with high-sounding phrases, the Taft forces are actually attempting to confuse the voters.

To the executive board of the Ohio CIO Council, Taft's reasoning was apparent: "If you can't win the voters, you can confuse them."

THE OHIO ballot now calls for all the candidates of one political party to be listed in one column with the emblem of that party placed at the top of each column.

By placing his "X" at the box alongside the rooster for the Democrats, or the eagle for the Republicans, a voter can register his approval of the platform, pledges, commitments and record of a political party. Thus, he would vote for all the candidates of that party.

If he prefers, the voter can indicate his choice between individual candidates. To the Ohio CIO Council this is a sound and salutory choice.

To Taft, however, this ballot means he must stand on the record of the Republican party which he helped to write.

Knowing that record well, Taft is "afraid of being called on to stand and be counted on his party's record." Council Secy.-Treas. Jacob Clayman said.

To avoid being tagged with the GOP record, Taft's henchmen flooded the state with petitions called for a change to the "Massachusetts-type" ballot.

This ballot does away with straight-party voting by listing the candidates by the office they seek, doing away with parallel columns.

"Such a ballot avoids individual responsibility for party commitments," Clayman said. "It is an attempt to make party platforms worthless and party pledges meaningless."

CLEAREST hope of the ballot-change proponents is that Ohio voters, accustomed to the familiar party-type ballot, would be confused when they went to the polls.

Such confusion would result in thousands of ballots being discarded and would mean disenfranchisement for these citizens.

The Taft juggling team is hoping for this result, the Council Executive Board said in a letter to its members, advising them to refuse to sign the petitions.

By the liberal use of funds, including the payment of 15c a signature to ballot petition distributers, Taft came up with what may be enough signatures to qualify the referendum and have it appear on the ballot this November.

At present, election officials in each of the 88 counties are checking the signatures to determine their validity. In two counties where the check has been completed, the Boards of Election have reported an unusually high number of invalid signatures. In Clark County, officials have asked the district attorney to investigate cases of patent forgery.

N. J. Acts To End Discrimination

As a result of protest by the New Jersey CIO and the Natl. Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the State will administer the East Orange Housing project.

Gov. Driscoll had ordered an investigation following the protests. The State will select tenants for the project on the basis of need alone, and not on the basis of race and need which the Council charged was used by the local housing authority.

Arthur Chapin, director of the Civil Rights Committee of the N. J. Council, was in charge of the CIO protest.

Auto Union Gets Set For Strike At Ford

AFTER THREE months of stalemated negotiations, the CIO Auto Workers union was prepared last week to serve notice of its intention to cancel the contract with Ford Motor Co., paving the way for a possible strike on Sept. 13.

The Ford agreement, which expired July 15, has been extended on a day-to-day basis since that time. Under Michigan law, either side must give five working days' notice before cancelling a contract. At the same time, the law requires that a strike fall within a 30-day period following a state-conducted strike vote.

Thus, unless the union and the company request an extension of the strike authorization period, deadline for the walkout is Sept. 13—end of the 30-day period following the overwhelming vote to strike.

As the CIO News went to press, UAW Pres. Walter Reuther submitted a memorandum to John S. Bugas, Ford vice-president in charge of labor relations. The note warned "that unless the company demonstrates a willingness to accept its responsibilities and get on with the practical job of negotiating a fair solution to the issues still in dispute, the union will be compelled to serve its notice terminating the contract."

The union negotiators have demonstrated "extreme patience," the memorandum continued. "By any reasonable standards, 90 days of bargaining are more than adequate time to arrive at a fair settlement in any contract negotiations.

"The Ford workers do not want a strike. They want justice. However, if they are compelled to strike in order to win justice, the company must accept the full moral and economic responsibility for such action. The company cannot indefinitely rely on the patience of the Ford workers as a substitute for meeting its responsibility to the Ford workers and their families."

The union is seeking a wage increase, pension plan improvements and an insurance program. To date Ford's offer has been to freeze wages for another year.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN HAYWOOD

"Storm the Fort! Ye Knights of Labor,
Battle for your cause
Equal right for every neighbor,
Down with tyrant's laws."

Union folks still tingle to the words of this song. It was sung 67 years ago when the Knights of Labor, on the first Monday of September, 1882, marched in open display along the streets of New York City.

The Knights of Labor were brave men who had worked underground, in secrecy and frequently in terror of their lives, to build a union organization.

Their enemies—or at least those who caused them to be fired and blacklisted, clubbed, shot and killed—were the railroad barons, the lords of steel, the mine operators and the mill owners of that dark generation.

It was only when the knights of Labor had enrolled 500,000 secret members that it dared to come out in the open and stand against the master of industry as a labor organization.

The Knights of Labor were destroyed. Its half million members were not enough to stand up against the guns of the Pinkertons, the clubs of the cops in mill towns and mine towns as their struggle for economic justice went to the picket lines.

That early organization could be destroyed by superior force—with considerable help from internal wrangling by the factionalists and dogmatists of that generation—but the courage and spirit that built it could neither be shot nor clubbed out of the bodies of American workers.

The courage of the workers, their will to organize carried on against every defeat. New groups sprang up. New unions were formed. New battles were fought.

On this Labor Day millions of Americans can meet in union halls, at rallies, at union picnics without immediate fear of being clubbed by cops or shot by Pinkertons. Millions of Americans can hold up their heads in self-respect and know themselves as free men and women because of their own struggles and the brave struggles of those who came before them.

But not one of us who will join in the celebration of this great day of Labor can say to ourself that the job has been done.

None of us can be free of the knowledge that there are today (and will be tomorrow) new attacks on the organizations we have built.

Each of us must consecrate ourself to the cause of building unions stronger, bigger and more powerful. We must hand down to our children more powerful organizations for the common good than we received from our fathers.

What we owe to those who struggled and fought for us and have gone we must pay. We must pay it to our children—to the men and women of tomorrow. We must build! We must organize!

"Storm the fort! Ye Knights of Labor,
Battle for your cause.
Equal rights for every neighbor
down with tyrant's laws."

The IBEW, who offer class B memberships, was set back by the CWA-CIO in the Western Electric plant election in Buffalo, N. Y. The workers voted 587 for the CWA-CIO; 456 for the IBEW-AFL. The CWA-CIO will roll on and is determined to eliminate the craft union from the telephone field where it has failed for the past 50 years. Regional Director Hugh Thompson, the CIO staff and the CWA-CIO are to be congratulated.

The present day terrorism of some companies still fighting union organization was set back in a decision by NLRB Trial Examiner James A. Shaw who ordered reinstatement and compensation for two employes of the Mount Vernon (O.) Telephone Co. Mrs. Betty Chalfant was refused maternity leave and discharged by the company and Leona Oakes was refused reemployment after returning from the funeral of her father. Examiner Shaw ordered the company to cease and disist coercing employes against the union.

Secy-Treas. James J. Mitchell of the CIO Shoe Workers reports a victory by the Shoe Workers at the Porter Shoe Plant in Milford, Mass., by a vote of 60 to 46. Intl. Rep. Angelo Georgian and organizer Michael Flaherty were in charge.

CIO Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler reports that in an NLRB election held at the Great Western Heel Co., Los Angeles, Calif., the Shoe Workers, Local 122, won by a vote of 35 as against 9 for the AFL. There was a vote of 34 to 8 for union shop, according to Frank Condon, Shoe Workers' International Board Member.

CIO Reg. Joseph M. Walsh, reports the Textile Workers Union victorious in an NLRB election among the workers of Penn-Hadley Mills, Scranton, Pa., by a vote of 82 to 25. The campaign was conducted by TWUA Reps. Samuel Fiore, Elwood Taub, Joseph Bellas, and Raymond Munts.

Local 109, UOPWA announces that the offce employes of Loew's MGM home office, Loew's International and Radio Station WMGM authorized the Screen Office & Professional Employes Guild Local 109, UOPWA-CIO, to bargain for a union shop, in an NLRB election. The results showed a 384 to 16 vote favoring a union shop. In a similar election the office employes at Columbia Pictures, voted 193 to 54 for a union shop. All these elections were in New York City.

CIO Rep. T. D. deCuennois of Virginia reports that UAW-CIO won an election at the Fruehauf Trailer Co., Norfolk, Va., the vote being 10 for UAW-CIO and 4 no union.

CIO Reg. Dir. Robert McVay reports that the Oil Workers won an election at the Phillips Refinery, Oklahoma City, Okla., with 87 for OWIU-CIO and 62 for AFL Operating Engineers. Rep. William Paara was in charge of this election and contributed much to the successful outcome.

The Oklahoma Coca Cola Bottling Co. employes in Oklahoma City, voted 40 to 21 for a Union Shop. Rep. John Dipple of the Brewery Workers was in charge of this election. At Muskogee, Okla., the Swift Co. employes voted 81 for UPWA-CIO, 64 for the AFL Teamsters. CIO Rep. Gobel Cravens was in charge of this election and met with very stiff opposition from the AFL, which vowed that CIO would not get a foot-hold in this town.

CIO Reg. Dir. Michael Mann reports the following NLRB elections. Allied Chemical and Dye Corp. (Barrett Div.) Chicago, Ill., UAW-CIO 152, against 108; Waukegan News-Sun, Chicago Newspaper Guild, Local 71, ANG-CIO 8; 5 against.

CIO Reg. Dir. James J. Leary reports the following elections. At the Federal Mining and Smelting Co., Joplin, Mo., the workers voted 72 for the CIO-GC&CW; 29 for the AFL. The following are union shop elections: Armour & Co., East St. Louis, Ill., Local 42, UPWA-CIO, yes-1,422; no-19; Armour & Co., St. Joseph, Mo., Local 58, UPWA-CIO, yes-725. Armour & Co., Kansas City, Kansas, Local 15, UPWA-CIO, yes-1411; no-28. The Maurer-Neuer plant, Kansas City, Kans., Local 36, UPWA-CIO, yes-44; no-4.

CIO Reg. Dir. George DeNucci reports the following election victories in the telephone field: Ohio Associated Telephone Co. Celina, Ohio, Ohio Federation of Telephone Worker—34; against 12; Ohio Associate Telephone Co., Bryan, Ohio, Federation of Telephone Workers—32; against 29; Home Telephone Co., Athens, Ohio, Ohio Federation of Telephone Workers—34; against 8. Pres. Tom Ryan of the Ohio Federation of Telephone Workers was in charge along with general organizer Tom Mitchell.

Calif. PAC Backs URWA

FULL AND effective support of the economic and political battles of two CIO International unions has been offered by the California CIO-PAC.

The State PAC executive board in Los Angeles:

Gave 100% backing to the strike of the Rubber Workers against B. F. Goodrich Co.

Joined with the Oil Workers in demanding that President Truman oust Robert N. Denham, general counsel of the National Labor Relations Board, who has denied hearings to some 150 California Oil Workers blacklisted since last year's state wide oil strike. The State PAC recommended that all local unions take similar action.

Acted on 12 state propositions to appear on the Nov. 8 ballot, highlighted by endorsement of Prop. 1 for $250,000,000 in school construction bonds and opposition to Prop. 2, which would repeal the state's present old age and blind pension act.

Endorsed and gave financial-backing to the 69th Assembly District campaign of Gayle Collins, Auto Workers staff member, for election to the State Assembly from the Compton area. Collins is a CIO, AFL backed candidate in a special election—also set for Nov. 8.

Developments in California CIO, leading up to the coming National CIO convention also were reviewed. Secy. Treas. John Despol reported a "very substantial improvement" in local union affiliations with the California National CIO-PAC. The State PAC was organized more than a year ago.

Researchers Find

AMA's Red Paint Doesn't Apply To Health Plan

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

A PILE OF pamphlets lay on the table in the doctor's office where I sat waiting for my appointment. They had red, white and blue covers showing an eagle standing on the American flag.

I picked one up and read the title: "The Voluntary Way is the American Way—50 Questions You Want Answered on Compulsory Health Insurance versus Health—the American Way."

So here was some of that propaganda I'd heard so much about, which the American Medical Association was distributing in an effort to scare the public away from believing in National Health Insurance.

Thumbing through the catchy-looking pamphlet curiously, my eye fell on these words under Question 24: "Would socialized medicine lead to socialization of other phases of American life?

And the answer: "Lenin thought so. He declared, 'Socialized medicine is the keystone to the arch of the Socialist State'."

Now I'm no authority on the writings of the deceased leader of the 1918 Russian Revolution, but the quote certainly sounded phony, as a good part of the other questions undoubtedly were, and I began wondering if there was any way it could be tracked down.

A few days later I had my answer. It came in a speech made in the House by Rep. Andrew Biemiller (D., Wis.), one of the sponsers of the National Health Insurance Bill now stymied in Congress.

REP. BIEMILLER gave a detailed account of a careful search which had been made to find the source of the Lenin quote. The search, he said, covered the time it was first used by the National Physicians Committee—"the busy and always open mouthpiece of the American Medical Association," now disbanded—down to its present use in the pamphlet being distributed in the AMA's current "National Education Campaign" run by the publicists Whitaker and Baxter.

Biemiller said that the research staff of the Library of Congress, "among the ablest specialist in America in tracing historical documents and quotations, after making an exhaustive search of the entire collection of Lenin's public utterances and writings," reported that Lenin never made such a statement.

The same task was also put before the Russian specialist of the University of Chicago, who after long and arduous research, came up with the same answer. Then the Physicians Committee itself was challenged to produce the source of the quotation. No reply.

"And yet the American Medical Association," Biemiller told the Congressmen, "has continued to bespatter the country with literature containing this phantom quotation. The AMA's high-powered and high-priced lobbyists, the advertising firm of Whitaker & Baxter, has produced a number of pamphlets trying to scare the daylights out of the American people.

"One of these 'The Voluntary Way Is the American Way' of which I understand, over a million copies have been circulated, again repeats this fabrication, this completely spurious quotation."

AT LAST THE mystery was solved, after a fashion, by a letter Biemiller received from Dr. K. H. Doege, president of the Wisconsin Medical Society. Dr. Doege wrote that he finally had received a report from Whitaker and Baxter, dated Aug. 12, saying that the quotation was taken from Lawrence Sullivan's book, "The Case Against Socialized Medicine, published in 1948 by the Statesman Press, Washington, D. C.

"Mr. Sullivan's authority for this quotation has not been established," Dr. Doege wrote.

"Apparently Whitaker and Baxter have made an effort to go behind the quotation in the Sullivan book but because of translation difficulties, the enormous quantity of material by the prolific Lenin to be examined, and the fact that the statement may have been made orally, and never committed to record, they have not yet been able to provide chapter and verse for this quotation."

THIS PICTORIAL STRIP in the CIO Economic Outlook shows how the proposed National health plan would work.

The worker's contribution, the Outlook said, is "less than workers' families now spend, on the average, for far less medical care." A worker earning $3,000 a year would thus pay between $30 and $45 a year for medical insurance.

One-Man Campaigner Finds Docs, Inc., Tough Opponents

G. F. SHADLE, a retired railroad worker who lives in South Gate, Calif., is carrying on a one-man war against the American Medical Association. He has written the CIO an interesting letter telling about it.

Shadle says that during the war emergency he belonged to the CIO, but his life work was on the railroads. He has a life membership in the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, and is now retired on pension.

Although he is 79 years old, Shadle has plenty of pepper and vinegar in him. In his letter, he says he's "fond of a good fight, when shoved around." And he thinks the AMA did just that to him.

As he explains it, he was the victim, in 1946, of a "brutal case of malpractice," in which some doctor, a member of the AMA, using him as a guinea pig, gave him an injection that nearly cost him his life. It took an emergency operation performed by another doctor to save him. This cost him $900 for surgery, hospital and incidental expenses.

Shadle set about to recover this through legal action. An "able lawyer," Shadle says, agreed to take his case. The lawyer "approached 61 practicing physicians," all of whom refused to have anything to do with his case against a fellow AMA doctor.

Since "everyone seems to be afraid," to antagonize the AMA, declares Shadle, he decided to carry on alone. Onto his own personal case, he hitched the general fight against the AMA for the methods used by its California branch to defeat the health bill introduced in the state legislature.

He says he wrote to California's Gov. Earl Warren, outlining his own gripe against the AMA and reminding the Governor that he, along with more than a million other citizens in the state, voted for him, and in fact for the state health program the Governor sponsored.

Shadle pointed out that the California Medical Society, working through the Whitaker-Baxter public relations experts, had "defeated the health measure three distinct times," in total disregard for the will of the citizens who backed the Governor's bill.

Shadle wanted some action. The Governor's office wrote him, he relates, that the matter had been referred to some department. After waiting a reasonable time, Shadle again wrote the Governor bitterly, informing him that the referral was "without results."

Same was true when he contacted the Bureau of Internal Revenue to check on Whitaker and Baxter. The BIR official told him:

"I see you are one of those fellows that thinks the world is going to the bad. I don't, and I am satisfied that everything will work out all right."

None of this has discouraged Shadle. He says he knows he's right, and is "fighting a major menace to our people."

Extension Of Trade Pacts Is Advocated

THE SENATE, returning to Washington this week after a Labor Day recess, will be faced with an Administration demand that it extend reciprocal trade agreements for another three years.

The House has already acted on a bill (HR 1211) to extend the trade treaty powers of the government, which expired on June 30.

The late Pres. Roosevelt and former Secy. of State Cordell Hull originally sponsored the treaty-making power in 1934 as a means of wiping out inequitable tarriff barriers that were stifling world trade. Power to continue negotiating the treaties has been voted from time to time since then.

CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey and Stanley Ruttenberg, CIO research director, appeared at both Senate and House committee hearings earlier this year to urge prompt extension of the trade agrements.

Carey, at Senate hearings in February, said it was "essential that we reduce the barriers to a trade which exist between ourselves and foreign countries." He said that high productivity and working skills, rather than tariff protection, has brought about high U. S. wage levels.

RUTTENBERG, appearing at House hearings, pointed out that "American labor knows, when huge American companies shed crocodile tears over the tale that imports depress American wages, their real purpose is to restrict imports so they can raise prices and increase their own large profits."

Farm groups and the U. S. Chamber of Commerce have also urged extension of the trade pacts.

Some Republicans had suggested that the Senate pass only a stand-by extension of the treaty power, and conduct a full-dress debate on the subject some time next year.

But Pres. Truman, meeting with Administration leaders at the White House, decided to fight for the 3-year extension at this time. Debate on the issue may last week or 10 days.

Penna. CIO Goes To Aid Of Guild In Harrisburg Fight

THE Pennsylvania CIO Council has entered the fight to get the Harrisburg Newspaper Guild a contract with the Patriot and the Evening News, the only daily newspapers published in the state capital.

The dispute arose after the Harrisburg Guild voted against acceptance of a management offer, which was subsequently signed by the local's president and attested to by a second vice president. The local has removed both men from office.

The Harrisburg Guild took the controversy to the public in a quarter-page ad in the Patriot and the Evening News, but Publisher Edwin F. Russell ran a two-page news story in which he charged that the ad was "brazen untruth" circulated by left-wingers and Wallace-ites.

The Council ran an ad in the Harrisburg newspapers answering Russell's smear against the Guild. The ad stated:

"The Guild has battled side by side with the CIO unions fighting against subversive activities. It loyally subscribes to National CIO policy. It is, therefore, a bit disheartening to see a local group of Americans being smeared by the very people who should be applauding its forthright stand...

"There are real issues at stake in the dispute between the Harrisburg Newspaper Guild and the Patriot-News Co."

The papers simultaneously carried an open letter from Council Pres. Harry Boyer pointing out that the Guild membership cannot be bound by an illegal contract which it refused to approve.

The Pennsylvania CIO Council first entered the dispute when Boyer attempted to arrange a meeting with Russell. Unsuccessful in his first effort, Boyer has written again to the publisher.

A committee appointed by the AFL Central Labor Union of Harrisburg, also was seeking a long-delayed meeting with Russell to talk over the dispute.

Local 1688 of the CIO Steelworkers, of Steelton, a Harrisburg suburb, voted at a membership meeting to boycott the proposed Sunday newspaper until the publisher negotiates a legal contract with Guild. The local has a membership of 5000.

The Harrisburg Guild has filed unfair labor practices with the Natl. Labor Relations Board against the publisher.

Although the Patriot-News Co. is technically owned by Russell, a stock holder in the firm of indeterminate power is S. L. Newhouse.

Newhouse is owner of newspapers in Syracuse, N. Y.; Newark, N. J.; Long Island, N. Y., and has a half interest in a paper in Jersey City, N. J.

Although papers in all these cities were once organized, Newark and Syracuse no longer have Guilds. The Guild convention this year lifted the charter of the Syracuse local for repeated contract violations.

ACW Gives Factory To Italians

THE AMALGAMATED Clothing Workers turned over, Sept. 3, a clothing factory to the municipality of Carrarra, Italy, costing $250,000 raised by the union among its membership, giving employment ultimately to at least 400 workers and helping meet the acute clothing shortage in Italy.

Jacob S. Potofsky, Amalgamated president, in announcing labor's aid to the Italian people, said the project will be a non-profit making venture for which the municipality of Carrarra has taken full responsibility.

The Amalgamated not only raised the funds through voluntary contributions and supplied the machinery, but also is helping to put the clothing plant on an effective working basis. Philip De Luca, Amalgamated official from Philadelphia, has been in Carrarra a year, serving as liaison between the Amalgamated, the Italian municipality and the factory.

Company Is Sued In Beatings

DAMAGE suits totaling $300,000 have been filed in the Superior Court of Atlanta, Ga., against the American Thread Co., Durwood and Elzie Teal in the alleged beating of Mr. and Mrs. Bernell Rochester, members of the CIO Textile Workers union, in front of the company's Tallapoosa, Ga., plant. Elzie Teal is Durwood's son.

Twice in recent weeks American Thread workers from Dalton, Ga., who are members of TWUA, have been alleged driven from Tallapoosa by armed mobs emerging from the mill. The union had obtained an injunction from the Georgia courts restraining plant officials and workers from interfering with TWUA members engaged in distributing organizing literature, but the alleged attack on the Rochesters occurred regardless.

TWUA also has urged Attorney General McGrath to bring charge against the police and public officials of Tallapoosa on the grounds that these officials assisted or connived in attacks on the civil rights of union members.

Rochester and J. P. Abercrombie of Tallapoosa, another TWUA members, were in Washington last week to present facts in the case to Assistant Attorney General Campbell.

Lefties Say They'll Fight To Stay In CIO

TALK WAS cheap — and brash — at a "Conference on Democracy and Autonomy" held under the auspices of a number of CIO left-wing locals in New York.

The August 30 "mass meeting" brought together an estimated 1500 people from left-wing unions and from left-wing locals of other CIO national unions in New York City. It was an evening devoted to the super-sized adjective, to familiar cries of "dictatorship" on the part of CIO leaders, to bitter —if untruthful—charges of anti-Negro, anti-union activities by respected spokesmen of organized labor in America.

The meeting's chairman and keynoter was Joseph Kehoe of the American Communications Association. Others who mounted the podium to assail CIO policy and leadership were Maurice Travis of the Mine Mill & Smelter Workers, who recently "resigned" from the Communist Party in order to be able to sign Taft-Hartley affidavits; Ewart Guinier, officer of the United Public Workers and an American Labor Party candidate for president of the Borough of Manhattan; Irving Potash, of the Furriers' Joint Board.

Theme of the speeches: We don't like CIO's policies or leaders—we won't quit the CIO—we'll fight if you try to throw us out for violating policy.

SOME SAMPLES of the fire-and-brimstone left-wing oratory:

Ewart Guinier of Public Workers: "We vote to represent the rank-and-file, no matter what Philip Murray and James Carey say. The national CIO have tied their kites to the big industrialists . . .

"I am proud that the Negro people have repudiated the white-supremacy policy of Philip Murray . . . Autonomy is not respected by Philip Murray when the rights of the Negro people are involved, but when the rights of the Kluxers are involved, Murray respected their autonomy."

(NOTE A: If Philip Murray has "tied his kite to big industrialists," the word hasn't yet reached the steel industry and Wall Street, which are fighting the steel union's demands, as voiced by Murray, with all the power at their command.

(NOTE B: Murray has been cited by several Negro groups for helping promote racial tolerance. Carey is chairman of the CIO's Committee to Abolish Discrimination, and served on the President's Committee on Civil Rights.

(NOTE C: Philip Murray, a Catholic, has never been known for any fondness for the viciously anti-Catholic, anti-Negro, anti-Jewish Ku Klux Klan. Proof of Guinier's charge simply does not exist.)

Joseph Kehoe, ACA: The national CIO is "aggressive and dictatorial . . . But our purpose is to unite the CIO and to stay in there and fight to do it. We will never do anything to divide the American labor movement."

(NOTE: The Communications Association leadership, including Kehoe, were active supporters of Henry Wallace's presidential campaign—an act which more than any other in recent years served to split the labor movement and its political action functions.)

Both Potash of the Furriers Joint Council and Travis of Mine Mill repeated familiar, if not necessarily correct, left-wing themes. Potash charged violations of CIO policy by the national leadership; Travis brandished claims of violence, cross-burnings and Ku Klux activities by southern CIO representatives during last spring's election at Bessemer, Ala., where CIO local unions won out over Mine-Mill as bargaining representative at Tennessee Coal Iron & Railroad properties. The charges have been made before, and knocked down before.

A POLICY resolution — with a reported 50 voice votes cast against it—cited determination on the part of the meeting "to fight to remain within the CIO and to exert all our influence to return the CIO to its founding principles of democracy and autonomy."

Apparently the meeting felt that "democracy" is something for somebody else to practice. When Samuel Freedman of the Office & Professional Workers took the floor to speak on the resolution, he charged that it was "following the Russian line from beginning to end."

The Conference's "democrats" howled him down.

Sponsors of the New York meeting were listed as local and regional officers of ACA; UE; Food & Tobacco; Lithographers; Marine Cooks & Stewards; Shipbuilding; Mine-Mill; Office & Professional; Transport Workers; Furriers; Furniture Workers; Packinghouse Workers, and Shoe Workers.

(NOTE: National officers of the Lithographers, Shipbuilding, Transport, Packinghouse and Shoe Workers have consistently followed CIO national policy.)

NMU Seeks To Legalize Hiring Hall

A RENEWED drive is being launched by the National Maritime Union for passage of a bill to give legal status to the union's hiring hall system.

The Natl. Labor Relations Board has ruled the hiring halls violate the Taft-Hartley Act, and its decisions in two separate cases have been upheld in the U. S. Circuit Court. The Supreme Court is apt to get the case during its coming term.

A bill to give Congressional sanction of the halls has been introduced in both the Senate and House. A House Labor sub-committee has referred the matter to the full Committee, which has not yet acted on the measure. No action has yet been taken in the Senate Labor Committee.

Opposition to the bill was voiced at short House hearings by Frank Walker, counsel for the American Merchant Marine Institute, representing many shipowners.

Neal Hanley, NMU secretary, said last week that the bills—introduced by Rep. Lesinski (D., Mich.) and Sen. Warren Magnuson (D., Wash.)—recognize the justice of the union's demand that the hiring halls be permitted to continue in operation.

SHIPOWNERS' mouthpieces bitterly attacked the bill, using every phony argument they could dream of to confuse and misrepresent its provisions," Hanley declared.

"They made it plain that they don't want stable and orderly relations in the maritime industry, even if it means wrecking the American merchant marine and the country's defense.

"They raised no objection, they said, to the hiring hall itself; they just don't want rotary shipping. In other words, they would be perfectly willing to have unions provide the place where they could come and pick out the personnel they wanted, as they see fit—a sort of union-run crimp joint," Hanley added.

Hawaii Banned From Halting Picketing

CIO Longshoremen's Pres. Harry Bridges hailed as a "victory for the union" a decision by a federal court in Honolulu, Hawaii, temporarily restraining the government from forbidding picketing in the four months' stevedore strike.

At the same time the court banned any further distribution of profits to the struck stevedoring companies and ordered the Territory not to apply provisions of the recently-passed seizure laws "which would violate Federal rights of employes."

The decision, Bridges said, "upholds our contention, at least temporarily, that Act 2 and 3 of the Hawaiian Legislature are unconstitutional."

Convention Call Stresses Full Economic, Political Rights for All Americans

The call to the 11th CIO Constitutional Convention, at the Cleveland, Ohio, Public Auditorium, beginning at 10 a.m., Monday, Oct. 31, was issued Sept. 1 by Pres. Philip Murray and Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey.

The call said that "we shall continue to insist on wage increases, pensions, and health and welfare plans where the facts justify our demands."

Also urged was the utilization of American workers and natural resources "so as to provide full employment for workers at just wages, reasonable profits for investors, lower prices for consumers, and a consequent steady increase in the American standard of living . . ."

Government-sponsored prepaid medical insurance and education for all were advocated. The call continued:

"We will redouble our efforts to win for all Americans their full economic and political rights so that all may make their full contribution to our American society regardless of their race, creed, color, or national origin.

"This objective can be attained only through our continuing to organize the unorganized, especially in the South. . . ."

The call declared that a strong labor movement is needed to halt the plans of those who would mislead the workers into totalitarian dictatorships and the abolition of individual human rights.

Continued political action was pledged to "continue with all our strength the task set for us by the general election decision last year. . . ."

The call asserted that "American domestic policies are inseparable from American foreign policy" and that "both must be directed to attain peace, security, and recognition of human rights everywhere."

Mundt Bill Called Blow At American Premise

SHARP attacks on the Mundt-Ferguson Bill as a serious danger to basic American civil liberties have been made in recent weeks.

The bill, already approved by a Senate Judiciary sub-committee, is described by its sponsors as aimed at controlling subversive activities—but spokesmen for labor, liberal groups and the legal profession have warned that its vague provisions would be a contrast danger to all group of citizens.

The CIO bitterly criticized the measure during Judiciary Committee hearings. Tom Harris, CIO associate general counsel, charged that it was based on the theory of "guilt by association" and that it aimed to punish thoughts as well as allegedly dangerous actions.

THAT SAME theme was expressed in an editorial in the Washington Post, which said that that bill would strike at "one of the fundamental premises of American life . . . that the Government may never prescribe to a free people what is orthodox in social or political or religious belief."

The Post described the proposed law as almost identical with the Mundt-Nixon bill of 1948, which was "spawned" by the House Unamerican Activities Committee and denounced by leading constitutional lawyers.

Reviewing the various provisions of the bill—which deal with identification, registration and close regulation over both Communists "political" organizations and Communist "front" organizations—the Post declared:

"Thus, a government agency would, in effect, be authorized to tell American citizens what organizations they may join and what organizations they may not join."

The Post referred to the proposals as of "dubious constitutionality," an "indubitable violation of long-settled American principles" and "a stupid bill." The Mundt-Ferguson bill is stupid, the paper declared, because it sees a political danger from Communist political agencies rather than a security threat from "agents who are not allowed to be formal Communists."

TO INDICATE that there is little danger of the Communists gaining political power, the paper quoted Prof. Zachariah Chafee of Harvard, a leading authority on civil rights and constitutional liberties.

"By the American tradition," Chafee said recently, "sifting bad parties from good parties is the job of the voters, and not the job of Congress or government officials . . . The failure of the Communist Party to win any important office anywhere or even a single Presidential elector, shows that this confidence in the voters is amply justified."

Keep Your Eye On Congress

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	WHAT TO DO
Taft-Hartley Repeal	Senate loaded repeal bill with crippling amendments, to reinstitute T-H law.	Taft amendments passed in Senate. No action pending in House.	Give PAC $1 and get ready for 1950 elections.
Wage-Hour Law Changes	Both bills lift minimum pay from 40 to 75c, but weaken enforcement and cut coverage. House version cuts million workers from law's protection.	HR 5894 passed by House. S. 653, a little better bill, passed by Senate. Now to go to joint conference committee.	Ask Senators, Congressmen to insist on better coverage & enforcement provisions.
Social Security Improvements HR 6000.	Bill extends, improves old age and survivors benefits, etc. Lifts benefits by 80%, brings 11 million in security set-up.	House Ways & Means Committee has recommended improvements in present set-up. House vote possible this session.	Write Congressmen to vote for improvements recommended in social security.
Mundt-Ferguson Bill S. 2311	Endangers civil liberties, union rights—under guise of fighting subversive activities.	Senate Judiciary subcommittee has approved. Full committee due to act soon. CIO testified against bill.	Ask Senators to vote against bill as dangerous to basic civil rights.
Reciprocal Trade Agreements HR 1211	Extends U. S. power for 3 years to negotiate pacts to promote international commerce, spur world trade.	Passed by House. Due for action in Senate starting Sept. 7. Administration to wage no-compromise attack.	Wire Senators to vote for extension of agreements for three more years.
Middle Income Housing Bill S. 2246 HR 5987.	Bills provide long-term, low-interest financing of homes; encourage co-ops, non-profit groups, etc.	CIO supported bills at hearings. House passed diluted version, cut provision for loans to Co-ops.	Ask Senators to push aid for middle-income housing, include direct loans to Co-ops.

Action On DP Bill Is Sought

A BILL TO liberalize the present displaced persons law is moving very slowly in the U. S. Senate.

The House voted overwhelmingly on June 6 to increase the number of displaced persons permitted into the country, to extend for a year the period in which they may come, and to remove eligibility rules which have been widely regarded as anti-Semitic and anti-Catholic.

Improvement of the bill has been demanded repeatedly by Pres. Truman. Early in August Sen. Lucas (D. Ill.) promised that the Senate would act on it before adjournment. On August 24, Lucas and a number of other Senators took the unusual step of offering a resolution to discharge the Senate Judiciary Committee from further handling of the bill.

Sen. Pat McCarran (D. Nev.), Judiciary chairman, sat on the bill for several months, and more recently has conducted a series of leisurely hearings. McCarran has indicated little enthusiasm for the bill.

Lucas, in filing the discharge resolution, said "there has been ample time for consideration of the bill's provisions." Under the resolution, the House-passed bill could be placed directly on the Senate calendar.

Chas. Lanning Dies Of Stroke

CHARLES E. Lanning, secretary-treasurer of the CIO United Rubber Workers of Americt since 1942, died of a stroke at Emergency Hospital in Washington on Sept. 2.

Lanning suffered a stroke in the office of CIO Vice-Pres. Allen S. Haywood at the close of a conference attended by URWA Pres. H. R. Lloyd and other union officials. He was rushed to the hospital but died less than three hours later.

Born in Hocking, Ohio, in 1900, Lanning married the former Miss Almer Turner in 1919. Mrs. Lanning and nine children survive.

Lanning had been active in the labor movement from his earliest years. In 1917 he became President of Local 3952 of the United Mine Workers, and was a local official of that union until 1926. From 1933 to 1936 he was member and president of an AFL federal union in Akron, Ohio, and a member of the executive board of the AFL central body

Two days after the scrapping of the NRA by the Supreme Court in 1935, he was fired from his job. He went on WPA and helped the fight for higher pay scales on WPA projects.

In June 1936 he became an organizer, first for the United Rubber Workers, later for the CIO in New York and New Jersey. In 1940 he was transferred to the Buffalo area where he remained until 1942.

Vol. XII WASHINGTON, D. C. SEPTEMBER 12, 1949 82 No. 36

YOU SAID, IT, MR. PRESIDENT: Students and speakers at the CIO Regional Summer School at Kimmswick, Mo., are looking at a CIO poster which underscores the call for farmer-labor unity which President Truman issued in his Labor Day speech at Pittsburgh. Participants in a discussion at the school included leaders of two powerful farmers' groups in the area, Pres. Gene Fortune of the Kansas Farmers Union (right) and H. E. Klinefelter, editor of the Missouri Farmers Association publication, who does not appear in the picture. Others in the picture, reading from the left are Rosalie Widman of Local 58, Packinghouse Workers, St. Joseph Mo., Lyle Cooper, Packinghouse Workers' research director, and Cliff Howard, also of Local 58. (For story of the Pesident's Address see Page 2, and for story of the school see Page 11.)

"I WORKED 35 YEARS at Ford. Why don't I have a Pension?" is the question asked in one of the placards above. This demonstration was held last week in front of the Rackham Building, Detroit, where CIO Auto Workers and Ford negotiators met. The question about pensions is a pertinent one which the Steelworkers and other CIO unions are asking again and again during negotiations this year. The unions' membership wants an affirmative answer from the corporations.

HST Blasts Plan to Pit Farmers Against Workers

A CLEAR call for a farmer-worker alliance against the forces of special privilege has been sounded by President Truman, who set the issues for the 1950 elections in two Labor Day speeches reminiscent of his barnstorming in the Presidential campaign.

Before a crowd of 100,000 at Pittsburgh at the Allegheny Free Fair and then again before the Amvets convention in Des Moines, the President insisted that "If we want a healthy and prosperous economy, there must be economic opportunity, not just for the fortunate few, but for all of us—workers, businessmen and farmers.

"The organized conspiracy of the selfish interests" has ignored the results of the last elections, and now is trying to pit farmers against city workers, Truman asserted at Pittsburgh.

"Some people have been telling farmers, out of one corner of their mouths, that the labor unions are bad for the farmers.

"Out of the other corner of their mouths, these same people have been telling industrial workers that programs to benefit farmers are bad for labor."

We still have a fight on our hands, Truman said, because:

"Too many people who can afford big insurance policies for themselves are not concerned over the need of expanding social security.

"Too many who are making money out of the rents from slums are not in favor of expanding public housing to provide decent shelter for low-income families.

"Too many with big incomes are not interested in raising minimum wages.

"Too many who can freely organize themselves in business associations or employers' groups are not anxious to protect the same right to organize among industrial workers."

He repeated earlier pledges to repeal Taft-Hartley, and defended the proposals which have been called "welfare state" plans. "We don't care what they call it," Truman insisted, adding that "programs like these make the people more independent—independent of the government and independent of big business and corporate power."

LATER, in Des Moines, he stated the two purposes of the Brannan farm program, behind the "misrepresentation and propaganda" stirred up by its opponents.

The twin purposes of the Administration farm plan, rejected by this session of Congress but very much alive as a campaign issue in 1950, were described by Truman as:

"First, we need a farm-price support system that will afford farmers an opportunity to secure a fair return on their production.

"Second, price supports must be so organized and administered that they will give consumers the benefit of our abundant farm production. Our people want to buy more milk and meat, more fruit and vegetables, and all the things that go into a better diet. We must have a price support system that will encourage farmers to shift their production to meet the demand for more and better foods at reasonable prices."

Widow Says She Had To Pay 5th Year's Rent In Advance

By BOB TREUER

THIS IS THE story of a fight that started in the precincts and the wards, the shops and local unions of Wisconsin—a fight that is heading toward a climax in Washington, D. C., federal courts.

It began with the introduction of a rent control bill in the state legislature, which is controlled by a large Republican majority. Round by round, the State CIO fought—by lobbying, pressure, direct appeal to Gov. Rennebohm (R.) and battles in federal court in Milwaukee.

SORENSON

Under the local option clause of the federal rent act the road was cleared for states to institute their own rent controls. Wisconsin Republicans chose to do this, enacting a law permitting rent rises of 15% and 30%, and ending all rent controls by June 1950.

Representatives of the state CIO, AFL, independents and a number of veterans and civic groups came out in strong opposition to the bill. It was nevertheless passed, and signed by the governor after the customary statement that "he would study and consider it fully."

Immediately after passage of the bill, the state CIO set up a "Rent Clinic" at its Milwaukee offices. A number of attorneys and state CIO officials were present every night for a period of two weeks to interview tenants having problems.

Many CIO members, as well as members from other unions, came for advice and help. Said Secy.-Treas. John Sorenson of the state organization: "You wouldn't believe the amount of gouging, unfairness and plain greed brought to light by our clinic."

Court action was started on behalf of a number of the people who had come to the CIO for help. A three-judge panel heard the case, in which the CIO petitioned for an injunction which would prevent the federal rent director, Ray W. Rose, from handing over rent records to the state. The judges dismissed the case, declaring they lacked jurisdiction.

Max Raskin, State CIO attorney, in cooperation with the Natl. CIO Housing Committee, then took steps to bring the issue into federal courts.

PROTESTS RENT INCREASE: Rep. Davenport (D., Pa.), left, takes exception to the rent increases which he said had been granted by the Pittsburgh regional office of the Housing Expeditor to the Wendover Apartments, Pittsburgh. He is stating the case to J. Walter White, assistant general counsel in the Housing Expeditor Tighe Woods' office in Washington.

ONE OF the key instances on which the fight for federal rents is being fought is the case of Mrs. Edith Shimek, one of the earliest applicants at the Wisconsin CIO Rent Clinic. Mrs. Shimek, a widow, is a member of Local 248, CIO Auto Workers.

Last year she looked for a place to live for herself and her two sons, both minors. She met Richard E. Mueller, a real estate agent, who arranged for her to rent one of his own properties—an upstairs flat in Milwaukee.

She said that in the lease she was required to sign, she had to agree to rent the place for five years, pay the fifth year's rent in advance and make other commitments.

MRS. SHIMEK is plaintiff in the first case to head for Washington courts. Walter Reuther, head of CIO's Housing Committee, commented that "this is merely the first such case," that there will be many more to challenge the inequalities and hardships arising from the local option clause of the federal rent control act."

Had federal rent controls continued in Wisconsin, Mrs. Shimek would have been able to take her complaint to court. As things stand, there is no enforcement agency under the Wisconsin decontrol act—and Mrs. Shimek has no recourse except her own pocket-book and initiative.

STEFFES

This case is one of thousands—and the Wisconsin State CIO is aware of it. Herman Steffes, president of the state organization, promised that "we have fought this legislation from the beginning, and we will continue to fight it in behalf of the people of the state."

Fines Of $30,000 Levied On Monopoly Charges

Fines totaling $30,000 have been imposed by a federal court against four companies and five individuals charged with violations of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act in the sale and distribution of kitchen equipment in Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware and Maryland.

Three of the concerns—Nathan Strause-Duparquet, Inc., Arbycraft Co., and W. F. Dougherty & Sons—were fined $5000 each, and the Victor V. Clad Co. was fined $4000. Four of the officials of the companies concerned were fined $2500 each, and one was fined $1000.

The Dept. of Justice also announced that a Federal Grand Jury, at Los Angeles, Calif. has returned an anti-trust law indictment charging six corporations and four individuals with fixing prices on medical X-ray film sold in the Southern California area.

12 Million Affected By Rent Decontrol In 5 Months

IN SLIGHTLY more than five months, 12,000,000 persons across the country have been affected by the removal of virtually all controls on rents for 1,475,000 dwellings in 384 areas.

That's the tally announced by the Office of the Housing Expediter for the period running from April 1 to Sept. 2.

Here's how the units were decontrolled:

1. By action of Housing Expediter Tighe Woods, 241 actions covering 541,000 home units with a population of 6,500,000. These actions were taken on grounds that the demand for rental housing had been met in these areas, and shortages no longer exist.

2. By action of city or town councils, which under the 1949 federal rent control law can vote to lift rent curbs, 137 actions covering 493,000 units with a population of 2,600,000.

3. By action of state legislatures, either lifting controls or putting a state rent law into operation, four actions. In Texas, where controls will be lifted Oct. 19, the federal rent offices are already closed up. In Alabama, controls go off May 10. In Nebraska, controls go off at an indefinite date. (See story on this page for what happened in Wisconsin.)

4. By action of area rent advisory boards, only two actions, together covering 63,000 units and 412,000 population.

There are still 13,000,000 homes covered by the federal rent law, battered though it is by Congressional riders and by a stingy appropriation for enforcement.

Steel Case Seen As Key to 1949 Bargaining Trend

By GLORIA CAPLAN

IN 1946 IT took a long strike to bring the steel industry around to accepting recommendations of a Presidential fact-finding board.

As the CIO News went to press, the nation was waiting to learn whether steel history was going to repeat itself in 1949.

The fact-finding board appointed by President Truman was scheduled to issue a report and recommendations just four days before a strike "deadline" of midnight Sept. 14.

There were three big questions to be answered:

- What would the board recommend?
- Would the industry and the CIO Steelworkers — or either group — accept the recommendations?
- Was a long strike likely in the event the industry and union couldn't reach agreement?

THE STEEL industry indicated it would withhold comment on the report until after the union made its stand known. And the CIO Steelworkers' decision wasn't due until late Sept. 12, the date set for both the union's international executive board and the 170-man wage policy committee to meet and discuss the recommendations.

Thus, with only two days remaining for negotiations before the end of the 60-day truce, speculation was running high that Pres. Truman would request an extension of the strike deadline.

As events in the steel industry unfolded, workers in other mass-production industries—particularly auto—were watching just as closely as the one million CIO Steelworkers.

With negotiations between the CIO Auto Workers and both Ford and Chrysler stymied, what occurs in the steel industry could possibly spell peace or a walkout in auto.

Employes of both companies have voted overwhelmingly for a strike if negotiations continue to sit on the starting line, as they have the past several months. The Chrysler vote was conducted by the union. A second poll—this time by the State—will be taken next week at the union's request.

SOME 500,000 CIO Electrical Workers, too, will be watching to see what happens in steel, since it may set a pattern for settlement at General Electric and Westinghouse. Negotiations with these two giants have been recessed since appointment of the steel fact-finding board.

While all these things were going on, the steel union moved to arm its membership with facts in event of a walkout. One of the preparations was the distribution of a fact sheet to its members. The fact sheet stated that the union had asked an independent research outfit to study the industry and answer these questions:

1. Have the Steelworkers received a fair share of the steel industry's tremendous profits in recent years?
2. Can the industry afford to grant wage increases, pensions and insurance benefits at this time?
3. If so, how much can they afford to pay?
4. Would another round of wage increases help or hurt the economic situation of the country as a whole?

The independent researchers, the fact sheet said, reached these conclusions:

The Steelworkers had not received a fair share of the industry's profits; the industry could easily afford higher wages, pensions and insurance benefits; such increases would benefit not only the Steelworkers, but the country as a whole, since it would "keep the economy on an even keel."

The leaflet then goes on to cite the statistical information supporting these conclusions—information which was presented to the fact-finding board in New York City.

Meanwhile, the union's case for the bargainability of pensions received a shot in the arm from an unexpected source. The NLRB ruled for the third time since the Inland Steel case set the precedent that an employer must bargain on pensions unless the union has specifically waived that right.

The steel companies, arguing that they are not compelled to bargain on pensions during the current wage reopening, refused to discuss pensions with the union. The board will have to rule on the bargainability, though neither side is bound to accept the recommendation.

STILL ANOTHER blow to the industry's case was noted by conservative New York Times Financial Editor John G. Forrest last week. This time it was the industry's plea of impending poverty.

"One of the props used by the steel industry to buttress its case before the committee was knocked from under it when steel operations last week were scheduled at 86.3% of capacity . . The industry contended when the hearings began that operations were on the decline, but to their surprise, 600,000 more tons of steel were produced in August than was thought possible," said Forrest.

But for the steel industry, the "most unkindest cut of all" came from Barron's Natl. Business & Financial weekly — staid, strait-laced "Gospel" of the stock market crowd.

Barron's, of course, held no brief for the union—nor for one of the board members — former judge and presidential adviser Samuel I. Rosenman. But its Aug. 22 attack on the industry witnesses was even more scathing. Following are excerpts:

"The steel trade remains unloved. The manner in which it is handling its current dispute with the Steelworkers' union may provide a partial explanation for this anomaly.

"Unfortunately, to date few steel men have seen fit to use rational arguments in presenting their case. We grant that originally they were right in not wanting to appear before the board at all. Then, however, for fear of the bad public-relations effect of a refusal, they agreed to appear. . . .

"Having done so, they could properly be expected to put their arguments fairly and objectively . . .

"Unfortunately, since the steel side was opened, the public has been treated in the headlines to the spectacle of one steel company president after another getting up on his feet to impugn the motivations of the members of the board and complain about the proceedings in a manner that must cause howls of joy at CIO headquarters.

"How can a fact-finding board find facts in favor of the steel companies if the steel executives present mostly legal arguments instead of facts? . . .

"To date the fact-finders haven't opened their mouths on the merits of the case. Thereupon the steel executives stand up and blame them for what they think they're going to say. After the kind of workout these fact-finders have gotten, it would be amazing if they did not develop the strongest possible resentment against the steel companies.

". . . for the managers to have tantrums in public life like a group of maladjusted children can only strengthen the hand of those enemies of the steel industry who are striving for its nationalization."

Two Unions Found Guilty In Jurisdiction Strikes

A NATL. Labor Relations Board trial examiner has found two AFL building trades unions guilty of engaging in jurisdictional strikes in violation of the T-H act.

The board announced that this was the first ruling by a trial examiner on the section of the act forbidding jurisdictional strikes and boycotts as unfair labor practices. The ruling could be interpreted as setting a pattern within which unions would have to operate.

The ruling grew out of charges brought by the Intl. Association of Machinists, independent, against the Los Angeles Building & Construction Trades Council and the Millwright & Machinery Erectors Union, Local 1607, an affiliate of the AFL Carpenters.

The IAM said that two machinists were forced to quit work on a power plant near Los Angeles by a strike of 650 AFL craftsmen who claimed the machinists' jobs belonged to the millwrights.

THE MACHINISTS were employed by Westinghouse Electric to install a steam-turbine generator. Previously, the five-man NLRB had ruled that Westinghouse could not be forced to give the machinists' jobs to the millwrights union, such a ruling being necessary before a charge of unfair practice through illegal boycott or jurisdictional strike can be prosecuted. It was at this point that the trial examiner entered the picture.

The trial examiner ruled that both the trades council and the millwrights union were guilty of having engaged in jurisdictional strikes and of having induced employes both of Westinghouse and other employers on the job to engage in such strikes.

He recommended that such strikes cease, and his recommendation had the force of an NLRB order enforceable in a U. S. Court of Appeals unless contested within 20 days.

TWU Flays Transit Line

Pres. Michael J. Quill of the CIO Transport Workers, and Pres. Matthew Guinan, of TWU Local 100 accused the trustees of the Third Avenue Transit Corp., New York City, of breach of faith in failing to live up to their agreement to submit contract demands and scheduling of back pay to arbitration.

In a letter to Mayor O'Dwyer, Quill and Guinan expressed surprise at the fact that the appointment of Sidney Sugerman as arbitrator for the other private bus lines did not include Third Avenue. "We cannot understand why the trustees are opposing such appointment," they stated.

The TWU officials asked the Mayor to intervene in the Third Avenue situation to expedite the long-delayed arbitration. "We earnestly request you to step into this picture once again and include the Third Avenue Transit Corporation with the bus lines for whom you have already appointed. Mr. Sugerman as arbitrator."

The union and the trustees for the company had agreed last Aug. 4 to submit to arbitration the TWU's 1949 contract demands and the method of payment of the $1,100,000 in retroactive pay previously agreed to by the company.

Calls 75c Wage 'Boon'

Southern clothing merchants recently got a sales talk on the need for a 75c minimum wage law—and it came from a leader in the industry.

Addressing the convention of the Carolinas Association of Retail Clothiers & Furnishers, Louis Rothschild said:

"The higher minimum wage . . . is going to be a tremendous boon to the retail business and particularly to the men's wear trade."

Rothschild is executive director of the Natl. Association of Retail Clothiers & Furnishers.

Action Urged To Get U. S. Contracts In Jobless Areas

THE CIO'S FULL Employment Committee is urging local unions whose members worked in plants that have been shut down or have substantial layoffs to bring pressure on company officials to look into the possibility of utilizing the government's new program of awarding contracts to depression areas.

"Management should be made to explore possibilities whereby it might obtain contracts under the new aid system being set up," said Everett Kassalow, the CIO Committee's executive secretary, in letters sent to CIO and State and local Councils in the areas which government figures show have 12% or more unemployment.

"Since contracts are let to companies the only effective way we can move into this program is to push management into action wherever possible," the letter stated.

John R. Steelman, assistant to President Truman, has asked government officials concerned to aid the President's plan of relieving areas where unemployment is serious by awarding contracts to them wherever possible.

The Labor Dept. reported recently that there were 32 labor market areas which in July had unemployment of 12% or more. A total of 356,000 persons were reported out of work in these areas alone, with 4.1 million unemployed throughout the country.

Votes Are What They Add When Polls Close

On election day, it's your vote that counts, not your opinion.

That's the theme of the Registration Manual just issued by the CIO Political Action Committee.

The manual is an attractively gotten up booklet which tells you just how to go about organizing your area for the 1950 Congressional elections. Main idea is to establish a card index of your ward or precinct, and then see to it that every man and woman eligible to vote registers—and votes.

The aim is to transform opinions into votes. Votes are what they add up when the polls close.

Copies of the manual may be ordered from the CIO Political Action Committee, 1346 Connecticut Ave., N. W., Washington 6, D. C. at the rate of $3 per 100.

Ah, Those Golden Eggs!

Substituting printers' ink for ordinary tears, wealthy Republic Steel is now crying publicly about its poverty.

Here's Republic's story, as told in a newspaper advertisement entitled "Now let's kill the goose."

The big corporation has been having terrible, terrible trouble making ends meet. Affairs are really in a sad, sad state. Republic's "reserve for depreciation" is about $195 millions short.

And, besides—horror of horrors!—Philip Murray and the Steelworkers are standing by with a big axe, just waiting for a chance to chop the head off the goose that lays the golden eggs.

The axe is labeled "fourth round wage increase."

And the golden eggs are portrayed as high wages, jobs, good living, good working conditions, cars and safety.

The advertisement, naturally, didn't mention the swollen post-war profits of Republic and the rest of the steel industry. It didn't call attention to the fact that Republic's profits the first half of this year were about 50% higher than in the corresponding period of last year.

And at this point we'd like to point out that the goose is a very fat and healthy one and that it hasn't been very fair in its distribution of "golden eggs."

The idea that the Steelworkers Union has any intention of killing the Republic "goose" is pure nonsense! And the steel industry knows it.

The tears made of printers' ink are about as convincing as some of the stuff the industry handed out at hearings before the Presidential fact-finding board.

Ham actors in Class C pictures do a more convincing job with the aid of glycerin!

Truman Put Finger On It

President Truman was more particular in his choice of words than we're going to be, but he certainly hit the bull's-eye in the middle when he said in his Labor Day speech that a widespread effort is being made to discredit Fair Deal legislation by heaving nasty names at his proposals.

The name-calling technique, of course, is old stuff and for years it has been practiced with effect by Commies and rightist demagogues.

But there has seldom if ever been a more concerted smear campaign against liberal measures than the current one operated by the anti-"welfare state" boys.

Unless we badly miss our guess, the "welfare state" is going to be the prime issue of the 1950 elections—if the conservatives and reactionaries can make it so.

Here's the technique:

You repeat the words "welfare state" over and over and over again in much the same manner as you would if you had your mouth full of quinine.

Then, after convincing your listeners that there's something horribly wrong with the expression you begin hurling it at every liberal proposal which comes up.

If you do this often and convincingly, so the advocates believe, you can start the country back on the road toward Hooverism or something akin to it.

By doing it this way you can avoid discussing the issues on their merits.

Mob Action Is Inexcusable

Robeson Concert Riots Hurt Democracy More Than They Hurt Communists

By ALLAN L. SWIM

NOBODY WHO believes in civil liberties can find any justification for the type of mob riots staged recently in New York in protest against Paul Robeson concerts.

The fact that Robeson has expressed great admiration for the Soviet way of doing things doesn't give legitimacy to mob action.

Neither does the fact that the concerts were to benefit the Civil Rights Congress, which is regarded by many as a Commie "front" outfit.

The riots, to put it bluntly, were as un-American as any of the policies Robeson may espouse.

THE ROBESON affair—a very smelly one from every point of view—again focused attention on the hysteria which too frequently accompanies the battle against Communism in this country.

It also illustrates that the elements of fascism aren't dead.

And it points out again that democracy faces a threat from the extreme right as well as from the extreme left.

Usually the extreme right attempts to cloak itself with respectability but occasionally the veneer is brushed aside to reveal the rottenness beneath.

And it's a fact—though one sometimes hard to believe—that the extreme right and extreme left are each other's best friends when it comes to the manufacture of ammunition for the propaganda guns.

THOSE WHO staged the Robeson riots gained nothing except, perhaps, the personal satisfaction of behaving like Ku Kluxers.

But they gave the Commies something to exploit. The CP will take full advantage of the fact that Robeson happens to be a Negro and they'll scream that the civil rights violations are merely part and parcel of a dictatorial plot to stamp out political freedom.

If police don't arrest and prosecute the mob ringleaders the Reds will shout that the cops are shirking their duty.

And the Reds will be right.

And if the police carry out their duty they'll be put on the pan for "playing along with those damn subversives."

It's always a bit like that when a mob goes into action.

THE COMMIES in this country are really on the run, as they deserve to be, and it's time for us to pay more attention to the extreme rightists.

The professional hate peddlers—men like Gerald L. K. Smith and Joseph Kamp—and organizations like the KKK are finding fertile soil in which to plant seeds of race and religious prejudice.

Then there are "respectable" organizations like Publisher Frank Gannett's Committee for Constitutional Government.

And beyond them are the industrialists and business leaders who supply much of the money upon which the fascist-type crackpots operate.

Yet Congress, which seems to love investigations, hasn't even mentioned a possible probe in this field.

THIS COUNTRY isn't in danger of being taken over tomorrow or the next day by either the Communists of the Fascists, and guys like Smith and Kamp are little more than minor annoyances.

But that doesn't mean democracy will be with us forever unless we safeguard it.

The best safeguard is to make democracy work—really work—and this can't be done unless we extend civil rights, remove bars to easy voting and give much more attention to the fact that strange ideologies and economic degredation frequently travel hand-in-hand.

Two things we must not attempt are to punish persons for what they think and try to beat ideas to death with legalistic clubs and mob action.

Visitor Says Steelworkers 'On Their Toes'

CYRIL ARTHUR Mawson, a press operator and die setter at an Oxford, England, steel plant had words of high praise for the CIO Steelworkers on the completion of his tour of American pressed metal plants.

Mawson was a member of the team of 10 British steel managers, technicians and workers who recently visited the U. S. as part of the Economic Cooperation Administration sponsored Anglo-American Productivity Council's program of exchanging British and American production "know how."

"We were very pleased with the fine organization of the United Steelworkers in Pittsburgh and the great knowledge which they have of plant costs, profits, etc." Mawson declared. "It shows the unions in America are on their toes, just as management does its best to increase production and cut down costs."

MAWSON WAS struck too by the success of the American steel industry in so equipping its plants that work can go on in weather hotter than that which British workers experience.

"The men worked steadily and showed skill comparable to that of the best British men in the same fields," he added.

AAPC has succeeded in enlisting full cooperation from American labor and management in its program of exchange visits, Mawson indicated. "In every plant which we visited men, including works managers, supervisors and the men at the machines took time out to explain all their equipment and processes," he said.

"We swapped ideas and we'll all get a lot out of it. The hospitality of the men in these plants, the managers, the unions and the individual workers has really touched our hearts."

"Until you stop putting old cigarette butts in my coffee cups, you'll get your morning coffee in the ash tray."

ABC Tournament Unwelcome In N. J.

The American Bowling Congress tournament will not be welcome again in New Jersey unless it ceases its policy of excluding Negroes according to Joseph L. Bustard, assistant N. J. Commissioner of Labor in charge of the Division Against Discrimination.

The N. J. CIO Council tried to prevent the ABC from holding a tournament at Atlantic City in the summer of 1948 because of its discriminatory policy. Bustard recently stated:

"I might state officially that as long as ABC continues its policy of exclusion of Negroes from participating in tournament, the Division Against Discrimination in New Jersey will resist any effort on the part of the organization to hold a tournament in this state."

What They Say--

MEN WHO WORK among the tall trees sometimes use blunt language and—on occasion—so does their CIO union's newspaper, the International Woodworker.

The Woodworker's editorial ire was recently aroused when General Electric issued a four-page brochure entitled "Why We Oppose a Fourth Round."

The brochure was quoted as saying: "Increases in wage costs of a few prominent employers will spread across the country as a 'pattern' regardless of how much the first wage increase appeals are based on the individual employer's 'ability-to-pay.' Wage increases by other employers show up as increases in costs of materials others buy from these employers."

Snorts the Woodworker:

"This is the most blatant piece of hypocrisy we have heard in many a day and we are amazed at the sheer gall of any corporation which would seriously utter such nonsense!"

ADVANCE, publication of the CIO Clothing Workers, says a Maryland judge struck "an important blow for the preservation of our basic liberties" when he declared the "so-called Ober law" was unconstitutional.

Although "allegedly designed to outlaw subversive activity," the Ober law was "so loosely worded that it would penalize the mere holding of certain kinds of beliefs, thoughts and opinions.

"Instead of guarding against subversion, that kind of legislation is in itself subversive of the basic rights that underlie our whole democratic way of life."

DON'T GET the idea that U. S. Steel doesn't believe in pensions, says Steel Labor.

"It does. But it all depends upon who is to collect. For instance:

"If Benjamin F. Fairless, U. S. Steel president, who is now 59, wants to retire when he is 65, he will collect a pension of $76,537 a year, or $6378 every month.

"If E. M. Vorhees, chairman of U. S. Steel's Finance Committee and comptroller, who is now 58, chooses to retire at 65, he will collect a pension of $70,323 a year, or $5680 a month.

"If Irving S. Olds, chairman of the board of U. S. Steel, who is now 62, wants to retire when he is 65, he will collect $63,815 a year, or $5318 a month."

THE INDUSTRIAL Union Reporter, CIO Shipbuilding Workers union paper, nominates the Communists and Dixiecrats for the champion "strange bedfellows" of the current year.

"The Dixiecrats," says the Reporter, "mean by states rights that they should have the right to ignore the U. S. Constitution and the Bill of Rights in the deep South.

"The Communists in their states rights or 'autonomy' claims demand the right to lead their left-wing unions wherever Moscow tells them, whether the membership suffers or not."

The Reporter concludes its attack on the two groups by declaring that "these two reactionary groups—the Commies and the Dixiecrats—have worked out a rallying cry: States Rights! Autonomy!"

THE CIO Packinghouse Worker hangs the tag of "Power Grab" on the campaign to keep the nation from having more projects like TVA.

The CIO Oil Worker calls on President Truman to remove Gen. Counsel Robert Denham from his NLRB post. The paper says that Denham "renders verdicts before hearing the evidence!"

The Mine-Mill paper, the Union, charges that "CIO Nod to Tom Clark Is Betrayal of Labor."

The CIO Furniture Workers Press takes a crack at Tom Clark, too.

And so it goes.

STAMP, STAMP, STAMP

THE BOYS ARE MARKING

Frank E. Gannett's Committee

Launches Campaign Against Wage Demands

THE BREWERY WORKER, publication of the CIO Brewery Workers union, has reported that the Committee for Constitutional Government has launched a campaign against the unions' wage demands and the 75-cent minimum wage bill. The article follows:

The Committee for Constitutional Government is at it again.

It is out to torpedo labor's demands for a fourth round of wage boosts.

It is seeking to lower rather than raise the general minimum wage level.

Copies of recent propaganda releases of anti-union publisher Frank E. Gannett's hate group reveal that a tremendous pressure campaign is under way "to broaden our base to deal effectively with the critical problems before the country."

To the committee, "deal effectively" means smashing labor unions, lowering living standards, cutting corporation taxes and permitting big business to profiteer recklessly at the expense of consumers.

(Editor's Note: The St. Louis Labor Tribune charges that since its founding CCG has spent $100 million for anti-labor propaganda and is currently trying to raise $8,750,000 for its campaign this year.)

In a letter to members, the committee blasts the CIO for "fighting all year to get Congress to raise the minimum wage rate to at least 75c per hour."

It then launches an attack on the whole philosophy of minimum wages. "This is no time to have our government stage a wage boosting program," it continues. "The certain result of any such action will be to throw added millions out of work . . . and add billions of dollars to the cost of relief and unemployment insurance payments."

ACCORDING to the committee, "the volume of new spending power has declined to such an extent that, if reasonably full employment is to be restored, it is necessary to lower rather than raise the general wage level."

The CIO and high Government officials, it charges, "appear to be conspiring . . . to raise the minimum wage level by an amount far greater than Congress is willing to sanction."

A box at the bottom of the newsletter says: "Help prevent usurpation, by executives and labor bosses, of the powers of your Congress. You have no vote to control labor bosses and appointees of the Executive . . . but all Congressmen and one-third of the Senators must come back to you for reelection every two years."

For its all-out onslaught on wage increases, the committee has issued a slick-paper leaflet entitled: "Who Gets Knocked Out In That 4th Round? You! And Who Are You?" Three arrows suggest turning the page to find out.

You, you are told, are just the "average guy—who can read and think for himself." You are also informed that "your 'boss' is willing to pay wages as high as he can pass on in higher prices to his customers." You are not told why he can't take pay increases out of profits.

Now He's Paid $100,000 A Year

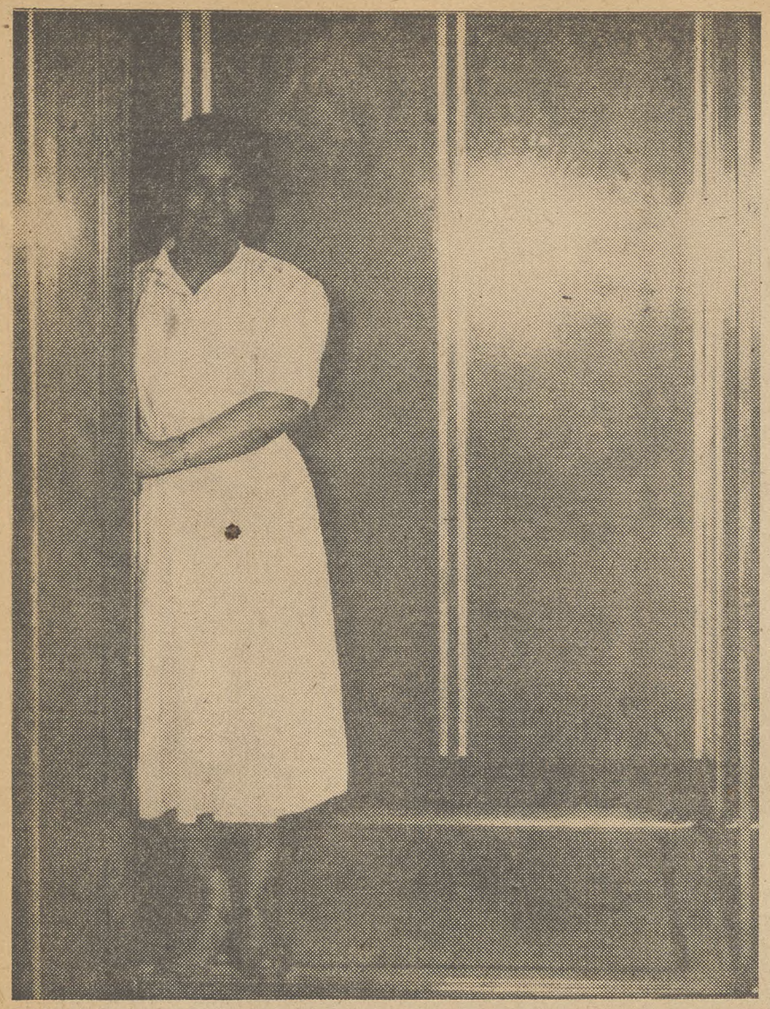
Union men who served in the famous "Sea-Bees" during the war under Admiral Ben Moreell, looked upon him as a man friendly to organized labor. Head of the Bureau of Yards and Docks in the Navy Dept. for many years, Moreell had earned a reputation for being pretty fair in dealing with trade unions.

Since the war, labor has not heard much about the former admiral. Then one day recently he popped up at a hearing before the Senate Banking Committee, along with a lot of other Big Business fellows, with some startling anti-labor propositions that would practically wipe unions off the map.

He wanted laws to break big unions into little ones; a ban on industry-wide bargaining; and other union-smashing devices to "insure that the power in the hands of labor organizations will be kept within bounds."

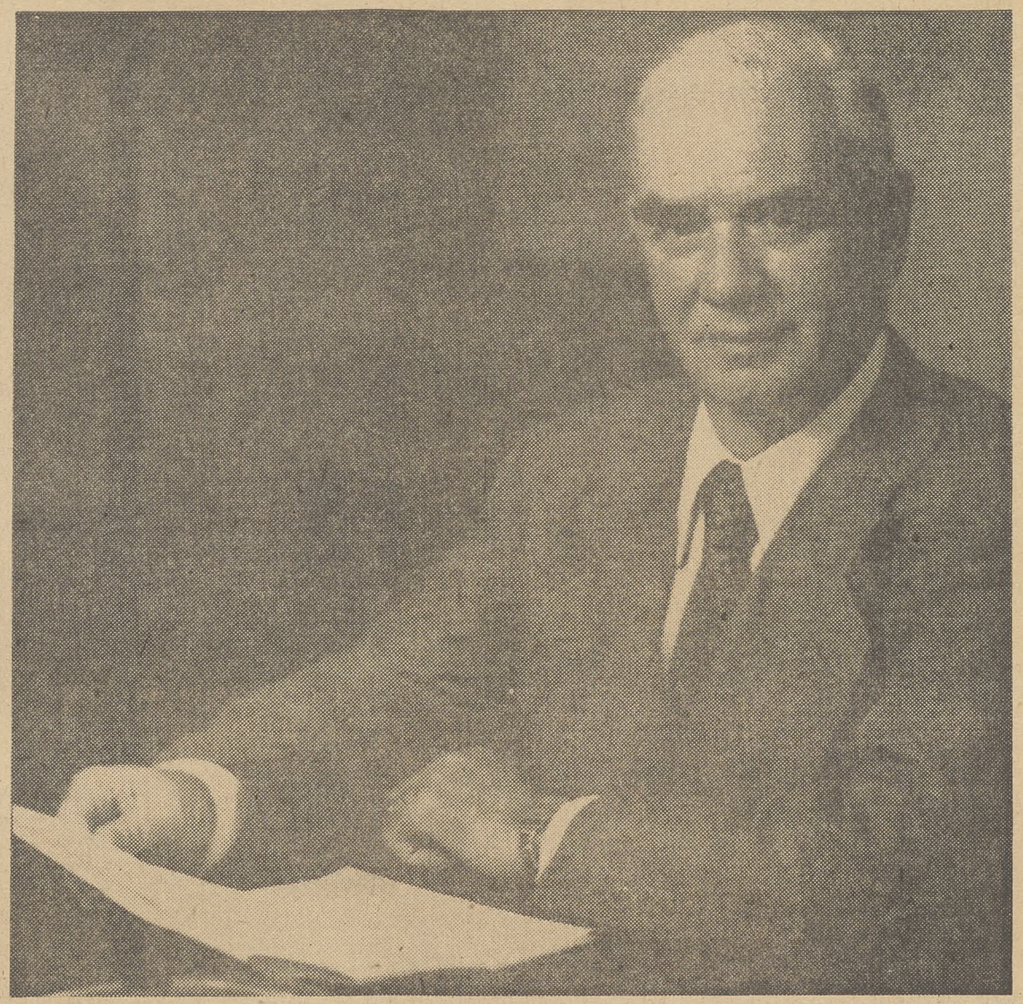
What brought about the change in him? Well, he's now president of the Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp., at $100,000 a year.

YOUR HEADQUARTERS



FLOOR PLEASE: The picture story on this page shows how your national CIO headquarters operates. If you visit the offices at 718 Jackson Pl., N. W., Washington 6, D. C., you take this elevator which goes to the second, third, fourth and fifth floors of the building.

Office is situated on lovely Lafayette Park, just about a half block from the White House—and a half block from the national headquarters of the Chamber of Congress of the United States! Operator is Mrs. Ada Washington. Unfortunately, all CIO's staffers couldn't be crowded into this page. All contribute to the mighty progress of CIO.



PRESIDENT: Chief officer of the CIO (and of the Steelworkers) is Pres. Philip Murray. Here he sits at his desk in his third floor office. He divides his time between the Steelworkers' main office in Pittsburgh and Washington. He keeps a watchful eye on the needs of America—particularly those of CIO's more than 6,000,000 members and their families—and of the world. His secretary, Molly Lynch, is in charge of his office when he's out of town. She's assisted by Gaye Sublette in the important office.

OPERATORS: If you call the CIO (EXecutive 5581) you usually get one of these operators. Left is Marjory Platt. Right is Marion Haith. Their switchboard is on the fourth floor.

SUPERINTENDENT: This is Catherine Clarke, who is in charge of the building. She does all the purchasing and sees that the maintenance crew keeps the headquarters in tip-top shape. It does, too. Her office is on fifth floor.

SECRETARY-TREASURER: Center is James B. Carey, one of the CIO's top

ORGANIZATION: One of the busiest spots in the CIO headquarters is the office of Vice Pres. and Dir. of Organizarecent successful one in the telephone industry, which Pres. Murray called "miraculous." Left to right are: James

ANTI-DISCRIMINATION: This department, the CIO's Committee to Abolish Discrimination, has a lot of heartaches handling segregation problems. George L-P Weaver, who is director of the committee and constitutional duties as secretary-treasurer, Carey also helped prepare President Truman's civil rights program, served on the Marshall Plan committee and has represented CIO abroad on a number of occasions. At left in his fifth floor office is his secretary, Marion Kupcek. At right, one of his assistants, James Gildea. (Carey's executive assistant, Harry Read, is in another picture, on page 8.)

EDUCATION & RESEARCH: There is rarely a respite for this department, which compiles economic statistics, prepares and edits "Economic Outlook," runs schools, does dozens of other things. This is an informal conference in the office of Dir. Stanley Ruttenberg. Standing are Associate Dir. of Research Everett Kassalow and Frank Fernbach. Seated on table at left are Stuart Brock and Associate Dir. of Education George Guernsey. Seated behind desk are Ruttenberg and Associate Dir. Katherine Pollak Ellickson.

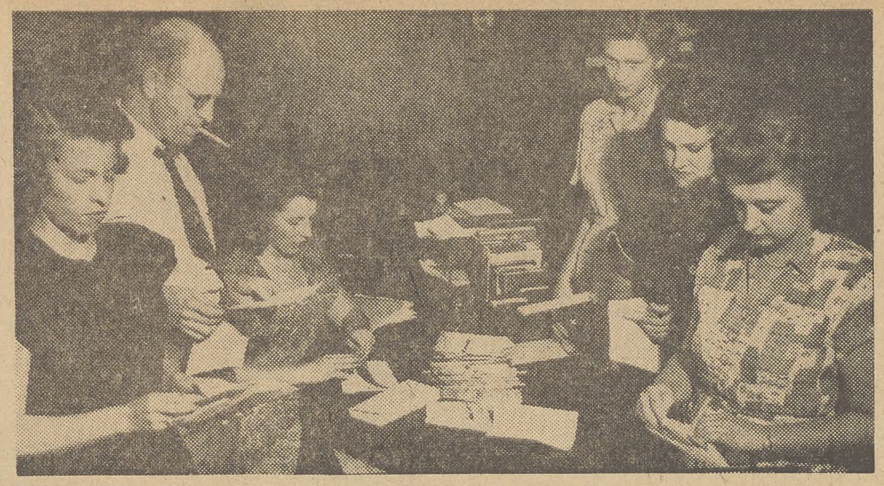
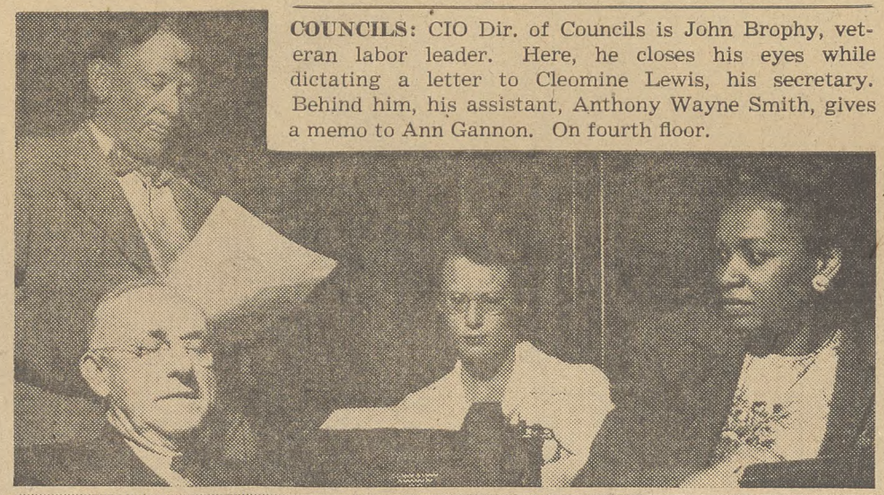
ganizational set-up of CIO is funneled. Unions come here with their problems and seeking aid. From here was directed many a campaign, including the Pearl Phillips, a secretary; Haywood, talking by phone to a field representative, and John Green, president of the CIO Shipbuilders.



PUBLICITY: The Publicity department is perhaps best known for its publication of the CIO News. But, a little known, but major portion of the work is the issuing of publicity releases, pamphlets, etc. Here, Publicity Dir. Allan L ("Pete") Swim looks over a publicity piece as staff members prepare the release and a pamphlet for distribution. Clockwise from left: Marguerite O'Connor, Swim, Kathryn Vrataric, his secretary; Kathy Capps, Irene Takacs and Mary Ference, secretary to Asst. Dir. Henry Fleisher. Fourth Floor.



COUNCILS: CIO Dir. of Councils is John Brophy, veteran labor leader. Here, he closes his eyes while dictating a letter to Cleomine Lewis, his secretary. Behind him, his assistant, Anthony Wayne Smith, gives a memo to Ann Gannon. On fourth floor.

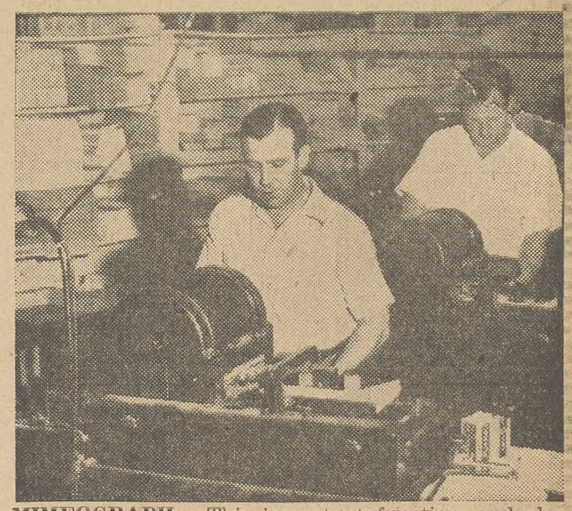
INTERNATIONAL: This department handles the CIO's relations with workers in other nations. Here, Dir. Michael Ross, just back from Europe, catches up with some back correspondence, while Helen Kissane Dyer, his secretary, looks on.

LEGISLATIVE: This is the desk of Nathan Cowan, as the desk sign indicates. This energetic legislative director was out of town on business when the pictures were taken. Two of his staff members, June Pickett and Rosemary Ruane, were busy with work.



MIMEOGRAPH: This important function, and also mailing and a number of other tasks, is in a bright basement workroom under the guidance of Joseph Evans, left, and Thomas Moran.

'Congress, Legislatures Can Stop Downward Spiral'—Kroll

"CIO is a fighting organization. We were born fighting and we will go on fighting. Let's develop our hand of political action as strong as our arm of industrial action and go to town! Let's go out and finish the fight and win the battle in 1950!"

Jack Kroll, national director of CIO's Political Action Committee, brought that appeal to California CIOers last week.

With it he coupled a warning that the key to the 1950 campaign—for the election of new Congressmen and for the election of a new Legislature which will have the job of redistricting the state for at least eight more Congressmen—will revolve largely around the job labor and her allies do in California.

The PAC director spoke twice in the Bay Area in Oakland to some 150 CIOers at a Northern California CIO-PAC conference and also at an off-the-record luncheon of union officers. Then Kroll was the principal speaker in Los Angeles at the Labor Day picnic and political action rally sponsored by the Greater Los Angeles CIO Council.

JOSEPH VAN ELSEN, of Richmond Auto Workers Local 560, chairman of the California Nat'l. CIO-PAC, presided at the conference in Oakland. Other speakers were George Roberts, PAC Western representative, and Tim Flynn, Northern California CIO regional director.

Kroll complimented Northern California CIOers for the organization of pro-CIO county and area committees which "have done a pretty good job of doing the job for which CIO was organized—serving the members of our unions and not any particular political party."

He predicted the job of eliminating anti-CIO, party-line elements still in control of some California councils will be completed shortly.

Kroll's approach to the coming elections was on a practical basis, and his emphasis was on local organization to get out the vote—"the only thing that's counted on election night."

He emphasized: Full participation in the state and local election this fall, in preparation for 1950; an all-out registration campaign to get CIO members eligible to vote; strong campaigning; and—of most importance—careful organization to get people to the polls.

He recalled the record of California voting—43% in 1944; 35% in 1946, when labor got the 80th Congress and Taft-Hartley; 52% in 1948. And he stressed that a big vote means a labor-liberal victory.

THE "BREAD AND BUTTER" reasons for political action by organized labor was another keynote of Kroll's report to CIOers.

With four million American workers now unemployed and another four million working only part-time, he emphasized "Congress and the legislatures can stop this downward spiral by putting into effect the present blueprints for public construction. It's all important who sits in Congress."

Kroll also commented acidly on the developing "unholy alliance" of Republicans and Southern Democrats.

On the national scene, Kroll declared, "the G. O. P. is marching now to the tune of Dixie, not to the grand old Battle Hymn of the Republic.

"The only difference between a Sen. Byrd and a Sen. Knowland is that one has a Southern accent and a taste for mint juleps and the other comes from out here."

THE PAC director, who also is president of the Ohio State CIO Council, predicted a realignment of U. S. political parties. He noted:

1. The alliance of Republicans, Dixiecrats and some Southern Democrats in Congress.

2. The recent action of the Democratic National Committee in refusing to seat Dixiecrat members.

3. The action of the G. O. P. state chairman in Virginia, sending Republicans into the Democratic primary to support the Byrd candidate for Governor.

'First Class'

"We're not only trade unionists; we're also citizens of a great country. We'll not hold still for being set aside as second class citizens. We've earned the right, and we'll exercise it, to be first class citizens."—Jack Kroll, PAC director.

Murray Pledges Support For Conference On Youth

A GROUP OF distinguished citizens appointed by President Truman to serve on a National Committee for the Midcentury White House Conference on Children and Youth met last week at the White House to lay plans for the conference, to be held in 1950.

The committee, headed by Federal Security Administrator Oscar Ewing, is composed of more than 50 educators, labor leaders, doctors, clergymen, economists and civic leaders.

Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey and Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the Auto Workers were named to represent the CIO on the National Committee.

In a wire to Pres. Truman promising the CIO's participation, CIO Pres. Philip Murray said:

"As I understand it this citizens' conference is expected to come up with some very definite plans for action that will get us more and better schools and teachers for our youngsters, more and better playgrounds and community facilities. Organized labor knows how much we need these things if all our children are to have a fair chance in life."

Murray told the President that he was requesting CIO affiliates to cooperate fully with the conference plans. "We welcome this chance," he said, "to unite our strength with that of other organizations in making the Midcentury Conference the most dynamic one that has ever been held."

THIS IS the fifth White House conference on children held under the auspices of a President of the United States.

Chairman Ewing said that each of the four preceding conferences had produced important results in pointing the way for improved conditions for children.

"I see in this 1950 White House Conference," he declared, "an opportunity for the people of this country, including those in the professions dealing with children, to come together, to work, to plan and to act in behalf of the Nation's children.

"The contributions of the conference, I would expect, will have significance not only to children of the U. S., but to children throughout the world."

ACA To Sign Taft-Hartley Affidavits

ANOTHER left-wing CIO union has announced that its officers will sign T-H non-Communist affidavits.

The executive board of the American Communications Association voted unanimously that ACA officers should sign non-Communist affidavits and submit them to the Natl. Labor Relations Board so that the union can participate in an NLRB election at the Mackay Radio & Telegraph Co., it was learned.

In 1948, ACA lost a long strike against Mackay and two other subsidiaries of the Natl. Telephone & Telegraph Co. The employers used the union's failure to sign affidavits as an excuse for refusing to bargain. A quarter of the 2100 workers involved didn't get their jobs back after the strike was over.

N. J. Ford Workers Win Benefits Fight

The Appeals Board of the New Jersey Unemployment Compensation Board has ruled that 4000 employes of the Edgewater and the Metuchen plants of the Ford Motor Co. are entitled to compensation during the recent strike at Detroit.

The union had appealed a UCB ruling denying the workers at the two plants unemployment benefits. The appeals board took the position that the New Jersey workers were not on strike but that they were unemployed as a result of the Detroit strike.

'Stay In School,' Kenosha Wis., Unions Tell Boys

LABOR IN Kenosha, Wis., has united to help combat juvenile delinquency, and urge that all children get a maximum of education.

A full page ad in Kenosha Labor takes the theme that "Only 'dopes' are juvenile delinquents." The ad is sponsored by the Kenosha Industrial Union Council, CIO, the Trades and Labor Council, AFL, the Kenosha Union Club, Teachers Local 557 and several stores.

The ad starts with a drawing of a boy carrying a lunch pail, dressed for work. Two other boys, watching him, say: "Thinks he's smart quitting school . . . but, boy, is he a dope."

Then, "Joe Smith thinks he's a pretty smart cookie. No more high school for him . . . no, sir! Studying and home work are just 'from corn'. Joe Smith is going to show those stick-in-the-muds back in school that he can draw a man's pay.

"But, one of these days, Joe is going to wake up and find he's not so smart after all. Finishing his high school is just about the best thing a fellow can do nowadays."

On delinquency, the ad says: "It's the suckers with nothing to do evenings and easy money in their jeans who are out making fools of themselves trying to act 'grownup'.

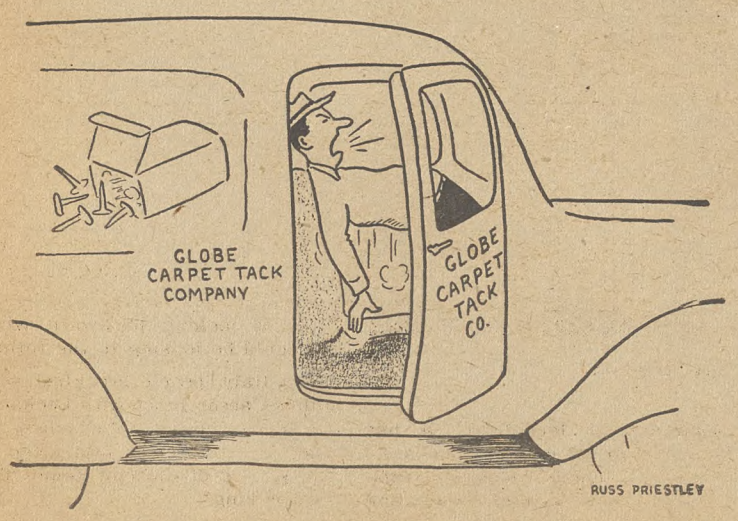
"The fellow who really has a man's brain won't waste his time 'painting the town'.

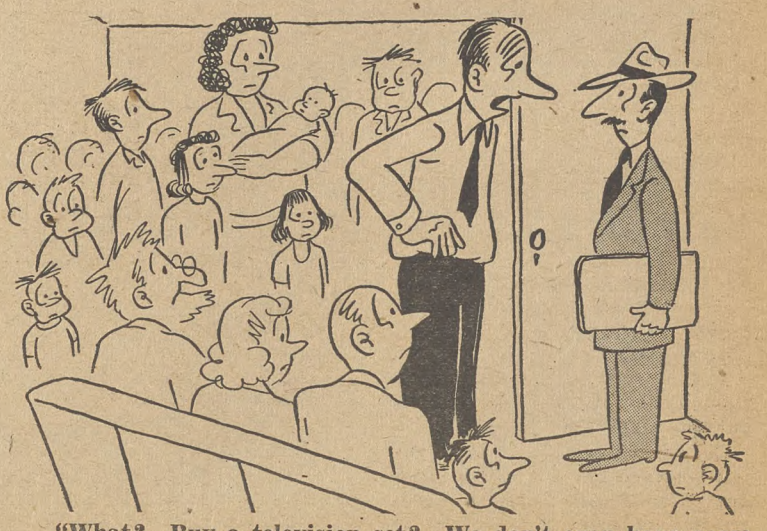
"He is getting in some good licks at his school work. Ten years from now the dopes will be begging for a job!"

Big British Union Bars Reds From Office

The British Transport and General Workers' Union, meeting in biennial conference recently, ruled that no member of the Communist Party shall be eligible to hold office, "either as a lay member or as a permanent full-time officer."

The TGWU, with 1,300,000 members, claims to be the world's largest union.





"What? Buy a television set? We don't even have room for a lamp!"

CIO, Humphrey Back Aid To Britain

CIO PRES. Philip Murray has placed the CIO fully behind continued American financial aid to Great Britain in the present "dollar crisis."

In a statement issued while British, Canadian and American monetary experts are meeting in Washington, Murray said:

"On behalf of the men and women of the CIO, I would like to express my fervent hope for a successful outcome of the present conference. The outcome of this conference, in our judgment, may determine in large measure the success or failure of our whole effort to strengthen and extend democracy throughout the world.

"Britain and America need each other. The recovery of Europe and the entire effort to preserve peace and freedom requires that our two countries stick together in the closest possible relationship. Short of that, nobody except the dictators in the Kremlin can win.

"Some partisan and reactionary voices have sought to place the blame for international monetary difficulties at the door of the British government because it is a labor government.

"The total falsity of this charge is recognized by even the British opponents of that government. It is authoritatively stated in England by conservatives that these difficulties are not due to anything that can properly be called Socialism. In fact, the opposition to the labor government have said that the situation in the coal industry and on the railroads would have been worse without nationalization. We believe that the British labor government has done and is doing a remarkably good job under adverse circumstances.

"Although the CIO and American labor generally do not share the socialist outlook of British labor, we recognize that the British economic system has developed under very different conditions and in a different environment than the American economy.

"Knowing how similar our aims are to those of the British trade unions, we are confident that they are carrying forward these ideals and goals in their own way by supporting the present labor government. It is noteworthy that those Americans who oppose further and adequate aid to Britain on the falacious ground that British troubles are due to Socialism, are the identical persons who also oppose President Truman's Fair Deal and the legislative program supported by American labor."

Balto Sun Signs

It took several years of bitter fighting, but the Baltimore Newspaper Guild, CIO, now has a contract with the Sunpapers, to run for one year from Sept. 4 and providing increases of at least $5 per week for 200 of the 225 employes covered.

The Sunpapers put up a stiff battle against Guild organization, and then against union recognition, dragging the Guild through all the delays permitted by the Taft-Hartley act, haggling over who was not in the "appropriate bargaining unit." And finally negotiations took six months.

The agreement provides a top minimum of $93 after five years' service; sick leave; severance pay up to 30 weeks after 14½ years; three weeks vacation after five years; and five double-time holidays. Management estimates the annual cost at $78,000.

GREAT BRITAIN'S present economic illness is due not only to her own trade policies, but to those of this country as well, Sen. Hubert Humphrey (D., Minn.) commented last week in a statement on current Anglo-American economic talks.

Because an impoverished Britain would be a liability to this country, Humphrey said, America should come to her aid immediately. Text of the statement follows in part:

Make no mistake about it. Britain is our one and only powerful ally. An insolvent and impoverished Britain will be a liability. A solvent, productive Britain can act as our outer fortress. A breakdown in Anglo-American relations at this time would be a victory for Joe Stalin second only to the conquering of all of Western Europe.

Those in America who are today sniping and destructively criticizing Britain and her policies are actually performing a service for international Communism and are for all practical purposes, fellow travelers.

This is no time for irresponsible, partisan poltical attacks. Recent statements by spokesmen for the Republican Party in the U. S. Senate indicate a blind doctrinaire obedience to slogans and economic prejudices, rather than a mature, realistic understanding of what we mean by democracy.

WE HAVE no right to impose our economic views or our economic system on our friends. The British government is a duly elected one responsible to its own citizens. It is a democratic one thoroughly committed to the preservation of civil liberties and to the expression of the majority will.

The choice in Europe, and particularly in Great Britain, is not between the National Association of Manufacturers and the Socialist Party. The choice is between a continent dominated and ruled by ruthless communism or a Western Europe striving to maintain the fundamentals of poltical democracy while it redirects and redefines its economic system to fit its own pattern.

Criticism of the British Labour Government and its domestic economic policies is not only irrelevant, but it is internationally hazardous. An eminent British conservative critic of the British labour government has stated categorically that:

"Britain's present difficulties are not due to anything that can properly be called socialism; they are not due, save in a minor degree, to policies of the labour government . . . and to make the present crisis the excuse for an anti-socialistic campaign will hinder rather than help towards its solution." This statement came from a recent issue of the "Economist," a responsible, respected conservative journal of economic opinion.

THE SEVERITY of the British crisis is similar in pattern to the economic crises facing other European countries. In a nutshell, it is this: She needs to import more than she can now export. We want to export more than we are willing to import. Britain has only two ways of getting dollars: either by exporting her goods to the dollar area, or by obtaining dollars in subsidies, grants or loans from the dollar area. The question is what are we willing to do about it.

I know that those who do the negotiating for the U. S. government understand the importance of further American assistance in this crisis. Her economic difficulties, if left unchecked, will be but a forerunner of a much more severe economic collapse in the North Atlantic area. This, by the way, is the same area that we have bound ourselves to by solemn treaty obligations.

These are our allies by the vote of our government. Britain is the keystone to our North Atlantic defense system. It is military stupidity and economic madness to permit the major power in our system of alliance to become imperilled because of a dollar crisis. In the event of war, we would not tolerate such a situation for a moment. In the cold war, to tolerate such a situation is but to reveal a political adolescence.

CIO Man Runs Race With Horse And Wins

Larry Anderson, CIO member in Flint, Mich., ran a race with a horse and won, but he's sort of peeved about the whole thing. It happened like this.

Anderson, recording secretary of a United Dairy Workers local, drives a milk wagon for a Flint dairy.

A woman motorist collided with his wagon and frightened the horse. The horse ran away, Anderson chased it and after quite a race finally caught it.

And the motorist? Why she didn't even wait to congratulate the winner.

On Newspaper Board

Representatives of several CIO and AFL unions have been elected to the board of directors of a new corporation formed to publish th Vermillion County Star at Danville, Ill. A campaign to raise $12,000 in capital is nearing its goal.

ACW's Salerno Says:

Italy Must Break Tradition To End Poverty

THE ITALIAN people are rich "in the world of the spirit," but efficient use of modern technology and natural resources must be undertaken to lift that nation from dismal poverty.

That was the conclusion reached by Joseph Salerno, a vice-president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers and former Massachusetts CIO president, who has just returned from a two-month visit to Europe.

"Italy's shortage of raw materials can only be overcome by chemistry and the manufacture of synthetic products," Salerno declared in a series of articles which have appeared in Boston newspapers.

"Italy must get its share of raw materials. It can turn its great waterfalls for electrical power. It must apply the American industrial know-how to free itself from the shackles of poverty."

Corporations, land-owners and unions in Italy must all break with past traditions if the country is to achieve living standards high enough to support its people, Salerno suggested.

He pointed out that 65% of the soil is owned by only 300,000 families, while "67% of the farm workers do not own enough land to plant a head of garlic, and 20% of the productive soil remains uncultivated because big monopoly land owners demand exorbitant rents from their tenants."

Italian Destitution: Men Await Handout

Italian capitalists, Salerno reported, "will not invest unless they are assured at least 50% profit. One hundred percent profit is considered a normal thing . . . Italian capitalism is feudalistic; it has no initiative; it is not self-reliant."

Italian unions, looking suspiciously at any form of cooperation with management, are Communist-dominated and their slogan is "Down with the Marshall Plan and the Atlantic Pact," Salerno said. "The split caused by the anti-Communist group so far has only caused minor desertions," he said.

Salerno declared that as a result of the union's official attitudes and employers' feudalism, production is low and costs are high. A weaver operates only one loom; in the U. S., a weaver operates from six to 12. An up-to-date shirt factory in Florence produces an average of four shirts per day per worker; in this country, the average is about 20, according to Salerno.

"The Italians have mastered the art of living, but not the art of machine production," Salerno concluded. As a result, unemployment is high; average wages are only half the amount needed for minimum standards; everybody blames the government for everything "even for the lack of rain"; and "they have more kinds of strikes than kinds of spaghetti."

Perhaps, Salerno suggested, Italy is looking backward when it should be looking to the future.

"In Italy, people breakfast with Julius Caesar, lunch with Leonardo Da Vinci, sup with Michaelangelo, and lull themselves into sleep in the glories of ancient Rome. The past is king."

Monkey Ward Again Ordered To Bargain With CIO Retail Union

REMEMBER the Montgomery Ward case? It was front page news all over the country five years ago when Chairman of the MW Board of Directors Sewell Avery was toted bodily out of the company's Chicago building by helmeted soldiers as the U. S. Government took over the concern.

He'd defiantly refused to obey all orders of the War Labor Board aimed to settle a dispute with the CIO's Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Employes.

That was back in April 1944, and by now most people have forgotten all about Avery and Monkey Ward's "strike against the government." But the fight is still going on, and the union is still stubbornly trying to get a contract covering the firm's Chicago employes.

AN NLRB trial examiner recently recommended that the giant mail order concern bargain collectively with the union's Local 20 in Chicago and reinstate with back pay two employes out of eight whom the union charged were fired for union activity.

Local 20 Pres. Henry B. Anders says he immediately will request Ward's to start negotiations. The union is not too hopeful of quick results, however, in view of the company's past record, and anticipates "that the findings of the trial examiner will be fought by Ward's, probably up to and including a Supreme Court ruling."

The case dates back to an NLRB-ordered election, held on Lincoln's birthday in 1942, which was won overwhelmingly by the CIO union. The vote was 2367 to 1245 for the union in the mail order division, and 129 to 13 in the retail division.

Avery balked at signing a contract in spite of the election, and he arrogantly defied the War Labor Board's order and twice ignored President Roosevelt's demand that he obey the law and negotiate with the union.

Finally public pressure forced him to retreat, but when the contract expired in December 1943, Avery refused to renew it, and again defied the WLB's directives. In April 1944, some 5000 Ward employes struck to force the company to comply, and President Roosevelt ordered the government to take over the company's operations on the basis that the business was essential to the maintenance of the war economy.

Avery refused to leave his office, and was carried out bodily by soldiers.

Still the company would not recognize the union, claiming that it no longer represented the present employes, and in May 1944 another NLRB election was held. The CIO union again won by both units by a total vote of 2440 to 1593.

IN DECEMBER 1944, the War Dept. seized various properties of the company throughout the country for further failure to comply with orders of the War Labor Board. These properties were returned Oct. 18, 1945, at the end of the war (not with Ward's but with Germany and Japan.)

The union, still trying to get a contract, conducted a one-week strike at the end of November 1945, against a number of Ward units, in protest against the company's refusal to bargain in good faith.

The company announced on April 16, 1947, that it would not recognize the union. It took until July 16, 1949, for the NLRB to hear the three cases against the company from which the latest decision stems.

DEFIANT—Chairman Sewell Avery of the board of directors of Montgomery Ward was carried from the firm's Chicago office in April, 1946, by two soldiers. He had defied a War Labor Board directive to reach an agreement with his employes and refused to cooperate with the Government after it had seized the Chicago office. The company continued its defiant attitude. Just recently it was ordered by the NLRB to bargain with its employes.

Norwegians Find:

Freedom Contrast In U. S. And USSR

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

WHAT GOES ON behind the Iron Curtain? You'll never know, if Russia has its way.

People like Paul Robeson come back, glowy-eyed about "wonderful" conditions over there. But, pressed for details, they speak vaguely of "freedom." Even they actually haven't been shown much. (Diplomatic circles say the Russians aren't completely trustful of Robeson, though he has been subservient enough to them.)

One thing you can be sure of. In Russia, if there were a man like Robeson, sharply critical of his own government, he would not be allowed to get a permit for a concert such as the one which led to the disgraceful Peekskill rioting.

A group of Norwegian workers recently visited both the United States and Russia. Their observations are deeply interesting. In the U. S., they were freely taken wherever they wished to go, and to a lot of places they hadn't thought of in advance. They were given complete information, statistics, etc. They visited with officials of such large unions as the Steelworkers, Auto Workers, Mine Workers, Clothing Workers, etc.

HERE'S THEIR conclusions after their U. S. visit:

"A visit to the United States gives one greater confidence in the ability of democracy to solve its problems.

"American isolationism is certainly not dead, but it has received a hard blow. The Marshall Plan was adopted and behind the plan stands an overwhelming majority of the American people. They have given it their support, because they believe that it will serve to strengthen democracy and to give Europe improved living conditions.

"The United States is willing today, even in peacetime, to enter into binding defense agreements and to give the guaranties and the support which may hinder the outbreak of a new war.

"The American trade union movement is one of the foremost champions of the international idea in the new world.

"The country is still wrestling with many and great problems. The country is still in the melting pot. But it is moving forward both culturally, socially and economically."

The report gave full credit to unions for the living standards of American workers. It lauded union gains, both in pay and in working conditions.

OF ITS VISIT to Russia, the Norwegian group said:

"The delegation did not have any intimate contact, either in talks or otherwise, with political conditions, whether domestic or foreign. On some occasions, the question was asked whether the delegation had seen any signs of aggressive war propaganda. The delegation saw no such things.

"But, there is a great fear of war, and it is expressed in many ways in the life of the community. The uniformed part of the population makes itself felt in the general picture; even pupils of war academies wear uniforms when they are 14-15 years old. In many factories, there is a prohibition against giving information which is otherwise usually given. Thus, the tractor factories in Stalingrad would not give a statement of their number of workers or their quantity of production.

"The isolation against the outer world is tight and very thorough. Foreign influence in art or science is discouraged. It is endeavored to prove that the Russians have achieved the great landmarks of progress in the various fields. The part played by the Western Allies in the Second World War is nearly left out of Russian histories.

"Connections with foreigners are regarded by the government with great suspicion. In the beginning of 1948 a law was enacted forbidding Russians to receive foreigners in their homes or to visit the homes of foreigners.

"The rate of work is most uneven. In certain places, performances of the highest degree could be seen. But, on the average, the performance of work is below the average performance in a number of Norwegian trades. That is one of the reasons for the—often fantastic—figures by which the so-called Stakanov workers have exceeded the general performance of work.

"Besides the military, the various branches of the police occupy a prominent position in the general picture.

AT ANOTHER place, the report said: "The delegation stayed for such a short time in the Soviet Union that it was unable to form any complete or exhaustive picture of the general standard of living.

"Much of the information which is generally asked for in other countries as indications of the standard of living, such as wage statistics and price indices or statistical tables in other fields, are non-existent or unavailable in the Soviet Union.

"The delegation visited only a small section of the European part. It is true that the delegation visited the two largest towns, but it did not see any part of the countryside at all."

So that's the "free" Russia.

Prepare to Fight For FEPC: The CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination decided at the meeting shown here to press for passage of the FEPC bill at this session of Congress. If no favorable action occurs, the committee decided, it will carry on an aggressive campaign prior to the next session. Pictured here are (l. to r.) seated, CIO Regional Dir. James J. Leary, Kansas City, Mo.; Intl. Rep. W. Richard Carter, Shipbuilding Workers; Pres. Willard Townsend of the Transport Service Employes, committee secretary; George L-P Weaver, committee director; William H. Oliver, chairman of the Auto Workers' Fair Practices Committee; standing, Harry Read, executive assistant to CIO Secy. Treas. Carey and Philip Weightman, CIO field representative. Several other committee members, including Carey, committee chairman, were not present when this picture was taken.

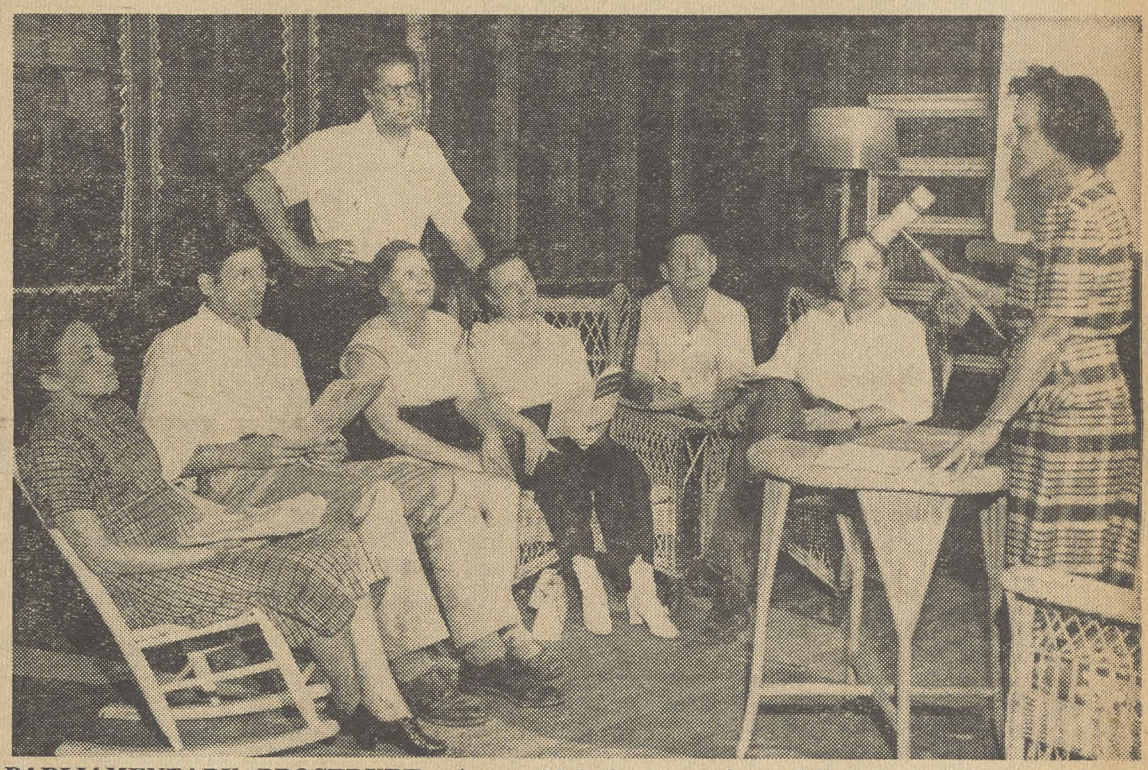
CIO Summer School Life Is Never Dull

THE PICTURES on this page were taken at two CIO regional Summer Schools—one for Missouri, Kansas and Southern Illinois; the other for Colorado.

They show just a few phases of the wide range of activities, which included instruction on parliamentary procedure, how to use a wire recorder, unions abroad, how to handle grievances, handicraft, PAC, labor history and economics.

NEW POSTER: CIO Education and Research Dir. Stanley Ruttenberg is pointing to a new poster displayed at the three-state school. The students, all members of Electrical Workers Local 1102, are (l. to r.) Homer Zoph, Mary Kemp and William Gavin. Ruttenberg taught a course in labor economics.

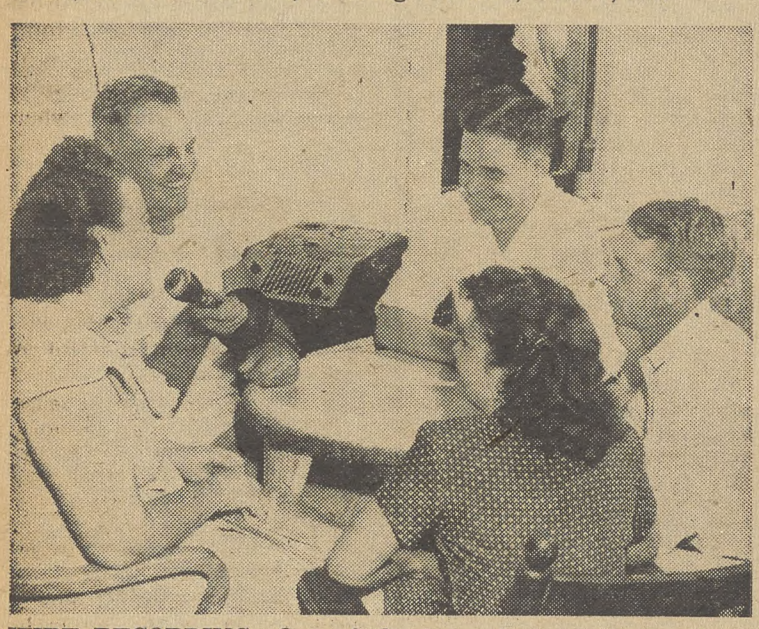
COLORADO SCHOOL: George Guernsey, associate CIO director of education (extreme right), gives instruction on getting out shop papers. Instruction also included writing newspaper releases about the school.



PARLIAMENTARY PROCEDURE: Agnes McMahon, member of the Communications Workers, with gavel in hand, shows how well she has learned her lesson on conducting a union meeting. The instructor, Joe Glazer, assistant education director of the Textile Workers, is standing.

UNIONS ABROAD: Second from the left is John Dvorak, member of a Vienna furniture workers' union, telling the students at Kimmswick about the lot of the workers in Austria. In the group are: Ray Davis, Auto Workers member, Kansas City; Guernsey; Dvorak; Agnes McMahon, members of the Communication Workers, St. Louis; CIO Regional Dir. Del Garst, St. Louis, and Rubie Daniel, Clothing Workers, Dexter, Mo.

CRAFT INSTRUCTION: Paul Swaity, in center, is showing students from the Clothing Workers and the Communications Workers unions how to make leather belts. Swaity was recreational director at the Kimmswick school.



WIRE RECORDING: One of the courses given at the three-state school near St. Louis was how to use a wire recording. Judging from the expressions this instruction was painless. Guernsey, who is holding the recorder's mouthpiece, apparently is a jovial teacher.

Monopoly Prober Says:

Price Cuts Wherever Possible Key to Jobs for All

ON HIS WAY to Washington to head the big, but unpublicized Congressional investigation of investment monopoly, Prof. Theodore Kreps, of Stanford Unversity, left a warning at Madison, Wis., to businessmen that if they continue the monopolistic adjustment of production to consumption by high prices, they will block America's goal of sustained full employment.

Kreps, who was economic adviser to the famed TNEC (Temporary Nat'l Economic Committee), spoke at Madison last week before the Central States Conference of the American Bankers Association, on the eve of taking over under Sen. Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D., Wyo.) the direction of an investigation for Congress that may even surpass the TNEC in importance.

O'Mahoney, as chairman of the Joint Congressional Economic Committee, has called back his old TNEC aide to direct the broad economic investigation ordered by Congress into investment capital and other factors creating booms and busts. O'Mahoney is picking up, in this investigation, where he left off with the TNEC 10 years ago.

IN HIS SPEECH, Dr. Kreps quoted at length from the recent book by Dr. Harold G. Moulton, of the Brookings Institution, to show that businessmen traditionally "hold production in leash," cutting it to the volume of current demand, instead of producing all the goods they can.

He quoted Dr. Moulton as saying that if the big corporations would reduce prices whenever technological progress permitted, it would exert "a stabilizing influence" on the economy.

"The question is," Dr. Kreps said, "will they? Or, instead, will they continue shrewdly to set the volume of new capacity and investment at the level where profits can be made a maximum? If so, private capital investment may continue to fall short of the target levels needed by the economic system as a whole to assure ample opportunity for high level employment without inflation."

Kreps added that if business continues to restrict production the economy will be robbed of the benefits that arise from competition, and productive capacity and effective demand will be kept "below that necessary for high-level employment opportunity."

"The crucial question here is," he said, "will the large oligopolies (monopolies composed of two or three big companies controlling a single industry) that dominate so large a segment of our economy not only preach but practice the fundamentals of the American system of free, private, competitive enterprise? At this stage the scientific observer can do little more than hope and wait."

Kreps did not mention any industry by name, but he might have been talking directly to the leaders of the steel industry who have refused to expand production to the extent necessary to maintain a full employment economy, and instead have held prices up to a level which has yielded the richest profits in history.

Kreps pointed to capital investment as "the most unstable factor" in our private enterprise economy, pointing out that its shrinkage had caused the 1929 depression. (It also caused the present recession.) He quoted Dr. Moulton as asserting that the key to the volume of capital investment was the volume of consumer demand rather than the factors cited by big business propagandists, such as high taxes or the fear of government interference.

KREPS SAID the biggest problem facing the Congressional investigators was how to use scientific knowledge to achieve steady economic expansion instead of waiting for the busts that always follow such booms as the one we have enjoyed during recent years. This problem, he said, involves not only maintaining consumer purchasing power, but also expansion of productive facilities sufficient to employ all available workers.

Dr. Kreps told the bankers that the problem of getting the right volume of investment into the right industries at the right time had not yet been solved. Pointing out that the control of such investment "is in the hands of a relatively small group of men," he said one of the chief purposes of the inquiry will be to find out what makes these men change their policies at the expense of the country.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Labor Day, 1949, is now history, and a great deal of interest has been shown by the people for Labor's program. The writer was in Ely and Duluth, Minn., over the Labor Day weekend. On Sunday, while in Ely, the writer, CIO Reg. Dir. Fullerton Fulton, Steelworkers Dir. Burkhammer addressed iron ore workers of the Mesabi Range, who voiced overwhelmingly to support the United Steelworkers in their just demands for wages and security. The message of the CIO was heartily received.

The writer, along with Directors Fulton and Burkhammer spoke to a large gathering in Duluth on Monday. The facts concerning the steel negotiations were presented to the gathering and they voiced full support to the Steelworker's position. Congressman John A. Blatnik was presented and he gave firm support to the laboring man in his pursuits for economic gain, and to labor in general.

When both Congressman Blatnik's and Senator Hubert Humphrey's names were mentioned they were loudly cheered. These men were elected to office largely because of the support of labor. The gathering listened to President Murray's Labor Day address which was broadcast over loudspeakers. They approved it heartily.

Two unfortunate deaths have occurred in the CIO family. Pres. Samuel Hogan, National Marine Engineer's Association, passed away. Brother Hogan was a man that was greatly respected and he was revered as a member of our CIO family. We of the CIO extend our profound regrets and sympathies to his family, and to the members of his union.

On Friday, Sept. 2, Secy.-Treas. Charles Lanning of the CIO Rubber Workers suffered a stroke while attending a meeting in the writer's office. He was rushed to a hospital but within two hours he passed away. To Mrs. Lanning and the Lanning family we of the CIO extend our profound sympathies for their great loss. The writer had known Brother Lanning for years, and knew his father well. His father was an active member of the United Mine Workers.

Time marches on. The rest of us must carry on, building our union stronger, activizing and educating our members, and maintaining adherence to, and unity on that basis.

ELECTION VICTORIES CIO Reg. Dir. Walter H. Harris reports that in an election held among the editorial employes, Gazette Publishing Co., Little Rock, Ark., the employes voted 17 for the CIO Newspaper Guild, 8 for no union. Sub-Regional Dir. W. A. Copeland of Tennessee was in charge of the drive and election.

CIO Reg. Dir. Michael Livoda reports that in a union shop election held at the Armour & Co., Denver, Col., the workers who are members of the UPWA-CIO Local No. 21, voted 498 for a union shop to 3 against. A great deal of credit is due to the Joint Council of the Packinghouse locals in Denver, and to Intl. Rep. Davochek for this victory.

RWDSU-CIO Dir. Joseph Romer announces that in an election at the J. Solotken Co., Inc., Indianapolis, Ind., the workers voted: RWDSU-CIO 51; AFL 1; no union 11.

The Screen Office and Professional Employes Guild, Local 109, UOPWA-CIO announces that by a vote of 311 to 177, the employes of RKO Pictures and the RKO Service Co., New York City authorized the SOPEG Local 109, to negotiate for a union shop, in an election conducted by the NLRB.

Pres. Thomas Andert of the CIO United Optical and Instrument Workers announces that in two NLRB elections held in Washington, D. C., the vote was as follows: Connecticut Optical Co., UOIW-CIO 6; no union 2; Homer Optical Co., UOIW-CIO 8; no union 2.

For Union Shop 53 to 1

Members of CIO United Brewery Workers have voted 5310 to 128 for a union shop in 12 New York breweries and beer distributing plants, in an NLRB election. Under the union shop clause all employes in the 12 plants must join the union within 30 days after employment and must remain members during the life of the contract. The union conducted a strike against the big brewers last spring lasting 82 days.

Deadline Given UE On Election

The CIO Electrical Workers has been given until Sept. 21 by the NLRB to file Taft-Hartley affidavits and financial statements to get on the ballot in a representation election at the Westinghouse Air Brake Co., Wilmerding, Pa.

UE Pres. Albert Fitzgerald recently announced that he would ask the union's Cleveland, O., convention, which begins Sept. 19, to approve the filing of affidavits.

The election at Westinghouse Air Brake Co. was ordered upon the petition of the AFL Pattern Makers League, which is seeking to carve a craft union out of the pattern makers at the plant.

Although the CIO union has held bargaining rights on a plant-wide basis since 1937, the T-H law permits craft unions to seek representation rights for small groups within the plant.

Geo. Bass Named URWA Secretary

The United Rubber Workers has announced the appointment of George Bass, president of Local 5, to fill the unexpired term of the union's general secretary-treasurer, Charles E. Lanning, who died unexpectedly Sept. 2.

The appointment of Bass, made by Pres. H. R. Lloyd, was unanimously approved by the union's executive board.

Mine-Mill Parley Denounces CIO

(See Page 6.)

EAGER FOR THE NEWS: Pittsburgh newsmen get the word from CIO and Steelworkers Pres. Philip Murray that the steel union's executive board and wage policy committee agreed to an 11-day stay in the strike which was scheduled to start Sept. 14. The union called on the steel companies to accept the fact-finding board's report as the basis of collective bargaining. The industry for the most part balked at the idea of accepting the board's recommendations. See Story on Page 3.

Fact Finders:

Man Shouldn't Be Cast Aside When Laid Up, Used Up

THERE was a time when the fate of a worker too old or too sick to work didn't concern anyone but himself and his family—if he had a family.

A man's role in the economy was to serve industry—and when, broken and aged before his time—he could no longer serve, it was the dump heap for him.

Nine days ago that inhuman concept became as obsolete as long-bloomered bathing suits.

That was the big victory for the CIO Steelworkers—and for all other workers, organized and unorganized—when the report of the President's fact-finding board in the steel industry was released.

In enunciating the principle of the employer's duty to provide for his workers' "depreciation," the board had nailed down a concept for which unions have been fighting for decades.

In a sense, the 80-page document submitted to the President by the three board members was two reports.

REPORT TO PRESIDENT: Members of the Steel Fact-Finding Board present their report to President Truman at the White House. From the left: David L. Cole, of Paterson, N. J.; President Truman (seated); Samuel I. Rosenman, New York and Dr. Carroll R. Daugherty of Northwestern University, chairman.

THE FIRST dealt with the union's request for a pay increase, the second with the union's social insurance and pension requests. The first was a cold, statistical, sometimes self-contradictory study. Seldom did its economic viewpoint differ from the industry's.

But the second section of the report, apparently the work of another panel member, displayed an acute awareness of human need and suffering. It recognized the obligation of an employer to care for his employes at least as well as his machines.

On pensions and social insurance: The board found that the steel industry had carefully provided for plant modernization, expansion and replacement of old machinery.

However, it noted, "the steel companies have, with some exceptions, overlooked the fact that the machines and plant on which the industry has prospered, and on which it must depend in the future, are not all made of metal or brick and mortar. They are also made of flesh and blood. And the human machines, like the inanimate machines, have a definite rate of depreciation.

"Of all our natural and national resources, our human resources are the most precious and useful, and should be most carefully hoarded and protected. These human machines need the same kind of treatment for depreciation and disability that the other machines are getting . . .

"Above all, we must remember that the human being has the dignity of man which he has a right to have preserved—he should not be cast aside when laid up temporarily or when used up permanently by a lifetime of labor."

STEELWORKERS' Pres. Philip Murray had said earlier that "the time has come for the industry to stop treating its machines better than its workers."

The board agreed.

Actually the report constituted a denunciation of the steel industry's lack of regard for its employes' welfare.

Of the three great basic industries in the country, only steel, it said, "has made no industry-wide move toward social security for its wage earners."

But what irritated the steel companies most was the board's unqualified opinion that pension and insurance plans were the responsibility of the employer, and should be financed entirely by him—not partially by the workers.

THIS ISSUE OF who would finance such programs has been a tender spot in steel negotiations since 1947. Because U. S. Steel held firm in its insistence that the workers and the corporation share equally in the financing, the union rejected an insurance plan offer last year. The same offer, made again this year, was also turned down.

Here's the board's opinion:

"The money spent by employers in providing social insurance and pensions is a legitimate normal business expense. It should be the concern of management to see to it that the workers in a plant have adequate protection against insecurity."

In its desperate fight against the non-contributory plans, the companies had argued before the board that they were concerned about preserving the dignity and self-reliance of the worker. Unless the worker helped finance such plans, he would become dependent on the employer and would lose these fine qualities, they reasoned.

But the board held otherwise.

"There is no evidence," it said, "that workers in industries where the employer pays all are any less dignified or self-reliant than other workers, or that their employers are more paternalistic. So long as the cost of the plan is integrated into the labor cost structure and has a bearing on the rates set in wage negotiations the worker will know that he is in fact paying for his own insurance."

IN THEIR PLEAS against the board's recommending a pension plan, the companies argued that the federal pension system under the Social Security Act relieved them of the responsibility. Besides, they predicted, the federal benefits were certain to be increased in the near future, making them more nearly adequate.

This, too, the board rejected.

"No thoughtful citizen," concluded the board, "interested in the human resources of our Nation, can expect labor to wait patiently by until government makes up its mind. Workers are entitled to security in the meantime—with the thought that, if government should finally decide to provide adequate security through a nationwide compulsory plan, changes in private plans could be made."

The monthly federal pension payment last year averaged $26 a month; $40 dollars a month for a retired couple.

TO DEMONSTRATE the inadequacy of such payments, the board pointed to the minimum standard budget for a retired couple in typical Eastern cities, estimated by the Social Security Administration and the Bureau of Labor Statistics. These figures show $143 a month to be the minimum—more than three times the average government pension for an aged couple, about twice the maximum under the law.

Even this budget of $143 is so inadequate as to be "un-American," the report said.

How, then, does this "inadequate" standard compare with the pension plan recommended by the panel?

It estimated that the recommended $120 a year per employe which the companies would put into the pension "kitty" could finance a monthly pension of about $70 a month. Added to the average federal old-age payments, a worker could expect to receive about $96 a month.

This is $47 below the "minimum budget," which the board itself termed "inadequate." But the giant steel companies balked at this, nevertheless.

ON WAGES: The union had based its argument for an immediate wage increase on several factors:

- The unprecedented profits of the industry; that is, ability to pay.
- The failure of the steelworkers to share appreciably in the big increases in productivity.
- The necessity for keeping workers' purchasing power up as high as possible in order to avert a depresion through ever-increasing demand for goods.
- Workers needed a wage boost to obtain a higher-than-minimum living standard.

In each instance, the board accepted the industry's viewpoint, differing occasionally on figures only.

Steel profits, it found, were not too high. This conclusion was reached after the panel decided to accept the companies' "reported" profit statements, rather than the "adjusted" figures.

The latter would have meant adding back into profits the extra depreciation funds, contingency reserves and other reserves not recognized as deductible for tax purposes by the Bureau of Internal Revenue. The union charged the industry with following such practices in order to make profits look smaller, thus subjecting themselves to less public criticism.

IN ACCEPTING the industry's profit figures, the board stated it was using the method "which Government agencies and the majority of accountants now accept as good accounting practice."

But the American Institute of Accountants rejects this method. An AIA bulletin published in December 1947 stated: "It has been suggested in some quarters that the problem be met by increasing depreciation charges against current income. The committee does not believe that this is a satisfactory solution at this time."

Robert R. Nathan pointed out in testimony before the board that the Dept. of Commerce recently revised upward its profit figures for 1946 by adding back in the special deductions made by the companies. These figures then closely approximated the union figures. When the Department gets around to publishing 1947 data, Nathan predicted, it will probably follow this practice again.

Of these two points, stressed by Nathan, the board made no mention. Instead, it accepted the industry profit figures without question.

As to the union's claim that workers had not shared appreciably in the rise in productivity, the board concluded the union's productivity estimates were too high. First, the board said, it couldn't accept the union's productivity estimates. Secondly, it said there was insufficient evidence to make any estimates. Thirdly, it believed that wage increases should be determined by the national productivity rate of increase, rather than that in a given industry. Thus, it said, if in one industry productivity rises faster than the nationwide rate, the difference should go to benefit the consumer in the form of lower prices.

This the board recommended the companies do. Earlier the union had stated it, too, believed price cuts more beneficial than wage boosts—but the steel industry had given no indication it intended to cut prices.

This, too, was ignored by the board.

Also ignored was the union's purchasing power theory, which is finding increasingly greater acceptance among economists. Instead, the board accepted without question the industry's argument that a wage increase would have to spell a price increase. And that a price boost would be inflationary.

Recommendations In Brief

Here are the President's fact-finding board's recommendations in the steel dispute:

ON WAGES: That there be no general wage increase at this time. If, however, the industry does not lower its prices, the union would be justified in seeking an increase later.

ON PENSIONS: That the industry pay 6c an hour per worker—$120 a year—to finance a pension plan. It is estimated this would buy pensions of about $70 a month. Added to federal old-age benefits, workers retiring at 65 would receive about $100 a month.

Because setting up a pension plan is so complicated, the board recommended that a joint union-management committee be appointed immediately to iron out the problems. Its report should be ready next April in time for 1950 negotiations.

ON INSURANCE: That the industry pay 4c an hour per worker—$80 a year—to finance an insurance program. It is estimated this amount could provide a one-year life insurance policy worth $4000; a disability policy worth $1250; hospitalization; sickness insurance and probably hospitalization for dependents.

Union Accepts Report, Steel Stalls

By GLORIA CAPLAN

NEARLY everybody approved the report but the steel industry.

The CIO Steelworkers, the press, the radio, public officials and most private citizens considered it a fair solution to the stalemate between the steel industry and the union.

But confronted with the prospect of spending 4c an hour immediately on an insurance plan for each of its employes and an additional 6c next year for pensions, the mighty U. S. Steel Corp. balked.

Whether there is to be a steel strike on Sept. 25—followed perhaps by strikes in auto and electric—depends on whether "Big Steel" reverses its stand.

The fact-finding board's recommendations had not given the union complete satisfaction either. It had rejected in entirety the CIO Steelworkers' strong case for a 1949 wage increase, had recommended less in pensions and insurance than the union wanted.

BUT AWARE OF the disrupting effect a steel strike would have on the entire economy, the union's executive board and wage policy committee agreed to accept the proposals as a bargaining basis.

Biggest feather in the union's hat was the board's espousal of the principle of the employers' responsibility for his workers' welfare—a principle for which unions have fought for many decades.

Flatly the board told the steel companies that they had lagged far behind other industries in providing for their employes' old age and such hazards as illness and death.

It went further: The board told the companies that the responsibility rested entirely with them; that they should set aside funds for "wear and tear" on their human machines just as carefully as they do for their inanimate machines.

The whole idea was repulsive to "Big Steel."

In its resolution accepting the board recommendations, the union's executive board and wage policy committee said: "The United Steelworkers of America expresses its profound regret that the steel industry board recommended against any wage increase at this time and reiterates its firm belief that the union's proposal for 12½c per hour increase in wages currently payable is completely justified and was amply supported by the evidence produced before the board.

"Nevertheless, in the interest of concluding a prompt settlement of the existing labor dispute in the basic steel industry and in recognition of the public interest in this dispute, the Intl. Executive Board and Intl. Policy Committee of the Steelworkers hereby authorizes the international officers to accept the recommendations . . . as a basis on which to conclude a settlement with the various companies in the steel industry."

IN ADDITION, the two groups agreed to extend the strike deadline 11 days—until 12:01 a.m., Sept. 25, as the President requested.

The press and public opinion were virtually unanimous in hailing the union's action. They were certain it meant a strike had been averted.

Two days later came a wire from U. S. Steel's Pres. Benjamin Fairless. The corporation, he told Murray, was willing to begin negotations. It was willing to "study" pensions and to discuss a social insurance program. Period. There was no acceptance of the board's recommendations.

"I now request that you promptly and plainly advise me whether your companies are now willing to accept the recommendations of the Steel Industry board as a basis on which to conclude a prompt settlement of the existing labor dispute. . .

"Upon receipt of your affirmative reply the respective representatives of the union and the companies can arrange promptly for a time and place of a joint collective bargaining conference.

Fairless remained adamant.

"I telegraphed you yesterday," he wired, "and I now confirm that we declined to accept your ultimatum which is both unfair and contrary to the assurance given to us in advance by the President of the United States that the recommendations of the board would not be binding upon either party."

MURRAY's demand that he accept the report as a basis for bargaining was "dictatorial," he charged.

Meanwhile, the other steel companies—except Jones & Laughlin—were following "Big Steel's signals. Jones & Laughlin alone accepted the report and indicated its willingness to begin bargaining immediately.

In Chicago, Inland Steel's Pres. Clarence Randall said he thought the worker "who is benefited should also share" in the costs of insurance and pension programs.

Hiland G. Batcheller, Allegheny Ludlum president, thought the noncontributory idea "definitely socialistic."

(The fact-find board had held that workers, after contributing the greatest part of their lives to the prosperity of industry, should in return be taken care of by industry in sickness and old age. Also, the board commented, the worker actually pays for such employer-financed plans himself, since the amount comes out of funds which might otherwise have gone to him in the form of immediate wage increases.)

U. S. Steel's refusal drew a second volley from Murray.

"By this statement," he said, "U. S. Steel and the rest of the industry is saying to the American people, 'the public be damned.'

"By this statement U. S. Steel Corp. and the rest of the industry are arrogantly manifesting a contemptuous disregard for its obligations to the nation and to our people."

He charged the corporation with attempting to push the union into a strike.

FEW PEOPLE outside the steel industry seemed to agree with Fairless that Murray and the board were attempting to "dictate" acceptance of the report.

The question centered around the union's phrase accepting the report "as a basis for negotiations"—and suggesting the industry do likewise.

Even Pres. Truman, questioned by a reporter about his interpretation, said emphatically he thought there was a definite difference between a demand that the report be accepted and a demand that it be accepted "as a basis for negotiations."

As the week following issuance of the report drew to a close, both sides were sitting firmly on opposite poles—and the union once again began strike preparations.

Meanwhile, Federal Mediation & Conciliation Dir. Cyrus Ching—whose intervention in July staved off a strike—stepped in hopefully again. He called both sides to a meeting in his Washington office this week.

Around the country, district Steelworkers directors were alerting their locals for a possible walkout.

$70,000-A-Year Man Fears Pension Loss

Carl A. Ilgenfritz is perfectly willing to head the government's Munitions Board at $14,000 a year, "as a public service," but he can't give up the $70,000 a year he gets as a vice-president of the U. S. Steel Corporation of Delaware.

Because if he did, he would lose his pension rights, he says.

His nomination has been approved by the Senate Armed Services Committee, 9 to 4, but a fight on confirmation seems certain in the Senate. Sen. Millard A Tydings (D Md.) sees nothing improper about the $70,000 plus the $14,000 because Ilgenfritz "would have nothing to do with awarding government contracts affecting his or any other firm."

Mine-Mill Should Talk

The Pittsburgh Press anticipated leftwing criticism over Steelworker. Pres. Murray's acceptance of the fact-finding board:

When Philip Murray announced the United Steelworkers' acceptance of the recommendations of the fact-finding board in the steel wage dispute, it was a foregone conclusion that he would be the target for criticism from leftwing unions of the CIO, of which he also is president.

The leftwingers performed exactly according to schedule. The Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers' convention in Chicago called on Mr. Murray to reject the recommendations and renew the drive for higher wages.

John Clark, president of the Smelter Workers, called the board's program "a puny, piddling, pension and welfare program."

On the same day (last Monday) a dispatch from Houghton, Mich., announced that the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers settled their labor dispute with a copper company with a reduction in pay for miners of 15 cents an hour.

Other Unions

CIO Auto Workers at Ford have already voted overwhelmingly to walk out if negotiations don't get somewhere. Chrysler employes have already voted to strike in a union poll, and are scheduled to take a state-conducted strike ballot soon.

CIO Electrical Workers, whose negotiations were recessed from the president's appointment of the board until after release of the report, are preparing to take a strike vote. Union negotiation committees recommended the count be taken Sept. 26—day after the steel union's strike deadline.

Iron Age Caught Wide-Eyed

Even the steel industry's official organ, Iron Age, was caught wide-eyed by U. S. Steel's—and subsequently the rest of the industry's—refusal to accept the fact-finding recommendations.

The magazine's editorial, dated Sept. 15, hailed the report as "must reading" and not "as bad as steel people expected."

Now, it said, the steel industry "does not have much to fight about—or at least not enough to plunge the country into a steel strike. . . . We don't believe there will be a strike."

Better get together, boys.

Report For Steel Alone

The fact-finding board's rejection of the steel union's wage demands should not be interpreted as a deathblow to the nationwide drive for 1949 raises, union observers have pointed out.

The recommendation was based largely on the relatively high position of steelworkers' pay in comparison with that of other workers.

Thus, it is pointed out, the report could not set a "pattern" for other unions in this regard, since other groups are not in a similar position.

For instance, the report showed a table giving postwar wage increases in 20 industries.

At the very bottom of the list sat the telephone industry, whose CIO Communications Workers are now seeking a wage boost.

The Steel Decision

The steel fact-finding board wrote into its report what we consider a very poor concept of the economic facts of life and a very fine concept of industry's responsibility for the welfare of the people it employs.

We believe now—as we did before the board made its report—that the steel industry is in an excellent position to grant a pay increase and that such an increase would stimulate our economy.

The fact that the board doesn't agree doesn't alter our position one whit.

Nobody, however, should let the "no wage increase" recommendation interfere with his or her appreciation of the board's position on social insurance and pensions. This was stated by the board as—

"Social insurance and pensions should be considered a part of normal business costs to take care of temporary and permanent depreciation in the human 'machine' in much the same way as provision is made for depreciation and insurance of plant and machinery. This obligation should be among the first charges on revenues."

And, the board added, "the plans should be paid for by the employers without contributions by the employes."

In several portions of the report the board pointed out that it should be the concern of management to see to it that workers have adequate protection against insecurity.

Important To Labor In the past, trade unions have obtained—and have failed to obtain—wage increases when they thought they were entitled to them, but never before has a governmental body gone quite so far in spelling out such a broad concept of management's responsibility for the health and security of workers.

The board deserves to be commended for not quibbling about the matter.

Here, in plain language, is what it said:

The steel industry should give the same kind of attention to the "depreciation" of its employes as to the depreciation of its machines and buildings.

This idea, of course, has been advocated for years by many trade unionists but it was never given such widespread public and governmental attention until the Steelworkers forced the issue.

It's Been Ruthless The great industrial system to which we often point with much pride has its drawbacks as well as its advantages. One of the more serious of the former is the manner in which many industries place more emphasis on the operation of its machines than on the welfare of its workers.

Too many management groups have shown ruthless disregard for what happens to workers when they become ill, are laid off or are retired because of their age.

Too many of them have taken the view that their responsibility ends when they sign checks in payment for work already done.

The steel fact-finders boldly challenged this old concept, thus going along with the Steelworkers and other CIO unions.

The steel industry, which has won no medals for its humanitarianism, surprised nobody when it announced it would not go along willingly with the board's recommendations.

Despite another "no" from an industry which seems capable of saying nothing else, the Steelworkers and other CIO unions are going to make a determined fight to translate the board's concept into reality—into contract clauses.

Commies Draw Their Battle Line

They Say They'll 'Stay In There And Fight' to 'Democratize' the CIO

By ALLAN L. SWIM

A RAVE AND rant session was held up in New York on Aug. 31 in an effort to rally support behind the ideological anti-CIO policy line.

At this meeting Philip Murray and his cohorts were given the old hammer, sickle and gutter treatment.

Abuse was heaped upon the CIO leadership and defiance was hurled at the "dictatorship" of the CIO Executive Board majority.

The Daily Worker line was peddled all over the place and character assassination was given full reign.

And—so help me—it was all done in the name of "democracy and autonomy in the CIO."

SECY. JOSEPH KEHOE of the American Communication Association keynoted the meeting by denouncing national CIO policy and by declaring:

". . . our purpose is to unite the CIO . . . and to stay in there and fight to do it."

This—and a resolution adopted by the group—scotched rumors that the lefties planned to "take a walk."

So the line is to stay in there and fight and see what happens at the CIO convention this fall.

This means, of course, that the smear campaign against Murray, CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey and other leaders of the CIO majority will be intensified.

And it means that a group which doesn't believe in or practice democracy—unless it suits their own ends—will do a lot of screaming about "lack of democracy in the CIO."

YOU COULD never learn this by reading Commie propaganda, but here is what the party liners want:

1. The right to help determine CIO policy and—at the same time—the right to ignore such policy when it is contrary to the party line.

2. The privilege of using the CIO name, prestige and facilities without accepting the responsibilities which such a privilege entails.

3. The type of "unity" which would permit the CP to use the CIO to fight policies which the CIO approves.

4. The kind of "autonomy" which would permit the lefties to substitute Communist party policies for CIO policies when it suited them.

5. The form of "democracy" in which majority rule is ignored, the convention mandates are disregarded and Executive Board decisions are openly violated.

They say they face a threat of being railroaded out of the organization merely because their political philosophy is different from that of the CIO leadership.

Yes, that's what they'd have you believe.

But that's not the issue at stake—and they know it.

The matter of personal political beliefs is involved only insofar as it contributes to the main issue—and this issue is:

Shall the Communists—or any other group—be permitted to use the CIO and its affiliates to carry out schemes to which a majority of CIO members object?

IF THE Republicans, Democrats, Socialists or Trotskyites attempted to take over the CIO and dictate its policies the Commies would scream to high heaven.

And yet they're screaming to high heaven because they, themselves, can't do what they'd object to others doing.

And they're screaming, "We must have democracy and autonomy in the CIO."

Ruttenberg To Advise UNESCO Parley

STANLEY RUTTENBERG, National CIO education and research director, left Washington last week by plan for Paris to attend the fourth session of the General Conference of UNESCO, as one of the special advisers to the U. S. Delegation.

The Paris conference opens today at UNESCO House, headquarters of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization.

Asst. Secy. of State George V. Allen heads the U. S. delegation. Other representatives named by President Truman are Milton S. Eisenhower, president of Kansas State College, who will be vice-chairman; Luther H. Evans, librarian of Congress; Reinhold Niebuhr, religious leader; and Miss Martha B. Lucas, president of Sweetbriar College of Virginia.

The U. S. delegation is prepared to review at Paris the progress made and the problems to be met in UNESCO's broad fields of education and cultural activities, which inculdes educational reconstruction of war-devastated countries, and exchange of students and other persons between countries.

They will take with them the story of developments in the UNESCO movement in the U. S., marked this year by the biennial General Conference at Cleveland, which drew 2,500 representatives of national organizations and committees.

Among the special advisers on the delegation in addition to Ruttenberg, are Ellis Arnall, former Georgia governor, now head of the Independent Motion Picture Producers; Earl J. McGrath, U. S. commissioner of education; Paul M. Gross, Duke University; Howard Hansen, composer, and William H. Hastie, governor of the Virgin Islands.

Press Association Elects Officers

Ruben Levin, staff writer for Labor newspaper, was elected president of Labor Press Association at the first meeting of the board of directors of the newly formed co-operative news service for trade union papers. Allan L. Swim, editor of CIO News, was elected vice president. Glen Slaughter, research director of Labor's League for Political Education (AFL), was chosen secretary-treasurer.

They were chosen by the directors, who were elected at the first membership meeting, preceding the directors' meeting. Named directors, in addition to those above, were:

Gordon Cole, editor of The Machinist; Max Danish, editor of Justice; Nathan Goldfinger, research director of the Paperworkers; Benjamin Haskel, editor of Textile Challenger; Alfred B. Herrington, editor of CWA News.

Also, Arthur G. MacDowell, assistant to the president, AFL Upholsterers' Intl. Union; Ward Melody, international representative, CIO Newspaper Guild; Harry Poole, international vice-president, AFL Meat Cutters & Butcher Workmen; Frank Powers, editor, Commercial Telegraphers journal; Paul Sifton, legislative representative, CIO Auto Workers; Vincent D. Sweeney, editor, Steel Labor.

He Double Crossed His Union Pals

IN THE LABOR movement today there is a fairly well known fellow —whom we shall call Joe—who always gets a bit suspicious when he finds a worker who's super-red hot for a strike.

His suspicion stems from an event which occurred back in his early organizing days —back in the days when strikes were used more often than now to form and solidify unions.

He admits he was a bit "green" then but—even so—he still gets a bit hot under the collar when he recalls one of the slickest little double-crossing acts he ever witnessed.

JOE HAD BEEN having considerable success setting up new unions in an Eastern state, and then he began running into troubles.

In the town in which he had started a membership drive, employers began firing their workers for union activity.

Joe promoted a couple of strikes against such employers, got the discharged men returned to work and obtained fairly good contracts.

Then he hit another snag. Two men were fired for advocating unionism at the place they worked.

Joe called the employes together in an effort to determine what they should do about the situation.

AFTER THE SESSION got under way, Joe explained that it had been necessary in several instances to call strikes to get men returned to their jobs and establish unions.

He explained that strikes are not picnics, that they occasionally last for weeks or months and that the men should seriously consider everything involved before walking out.

At this point a man in the crowd rose to his feet and delivered a rip-roaring pro-strike speech.

He said there was no other way to win union recognition and that without a union "we'll all continue to get kicked around."

He pulled out all of the oratorical stops and really turned on the steam.

Bringing his talk to a dramatic conclusion, he said he not only was willing to "hit the bricks" but was willing to make a good contribution to a strike fund.

Then he tossed $20 on Joe's table to start the fund.

AFTER CONSIDERABLE discussion the workers voted to go on strike the following morning and to immediately throw a picket line around the place at which they worked.

Joe gave them instructions for picketing and helped set up the necessary strike committees.

At 10 the following morning the workers walked out on their jobs and established a picket line.

Joe counted the pickets and was well satisfied with the number who had struck.

He was feeling as good about the situation as one can when there's a strike under way—and then it happened!

THE MAN WHO MADE the fiery pro-strike speech rushed through the picket line, entered the building and was at work a short time later.

When he left the building for lunch he was encountered by an angry Joe, who asked, "What the hell goes on here, you dirty scab?"

The reply was: "Well, you see, I'd been out of work for three months, couldn't find a job and was down to my last 20 bucks. I thought that was a cheap price to pay for a job." A. L. S.

THE EMPTY MOULD!

Women Lag Behind Men in British Unions

WOMEN ARE gaining ever greater confidence in their place in industry in Britain, but have good reasons for lagging behind men as trade unionists, according to Ellen McCullough of the British Transport and General Workers' Union.

"Women's active work in the running of trade unions has been limited," she says, "by the heavy social and domestic demands upon the free time of every working woman, married or single, which is much heavier than for a man of similar age and occupation.

"Thus membership on trade union committees and the holding of office in the union is a very real sacrifice for women. Indeed, in many cases it is virtually impossible."

IN AN ARTICLE on "Women and Britain's Trade Union Movement," Miss McCullough gives some facts about the distribution of women in the various industries and unions, and describes union efforts in the past and present to emphasize the "women's angle."

A million and a quarter women, about one-fifth of the total membership, now belong to unions affiliated to the British TUC, the highest figure reached since the boom year of 1920.

One quarter of these women are engaged in transport and distribution, a quarter are in textile and clothing manufacture, and about a quarter are in the engineering, light metal and allied trades. The remainder of the women trade unionists are employed as clerks and public servants, though there are some women in almost all unions. The few unions with no women members include the miners, railway engine-drivers, skilled and heavy metal workers, building trades craftsmen and printers. The plumbers' union has one intrepid woman plumber among its 50,000 members.

IN THE EARLY days of trade union organization in Britain, Miss McCullough says, an attempt was made to form separate unions for women, "but experience showed that greater social, economic and organizational advantages would be obtained by enrolling women in the same unions as men."

The National Federation of Women Workers thus become part of the General and Municipal Workers' Union—which still has the largest number of women members—and launched a struggle for free admission and equal recognition.

At present, unions with more women than men in their membership are the weavers, hosiery, garment and pottery workers, and the civil service clerks. The only union exclusively for women is the Women Public Health Officers' Association, a small group.

THE TRADES Union Congress, Miss McCullough says, has always recognized the importance of women in the movement, and reserves two places for them on the General Council. Three women have presided over the Council and over the annual Congress—Margaret Bondfield in 1923, Anne Laughlin in 1942, and Florence Hancock in 1947.

The TUC General Council has a Chief Woman Officer, Nancy Adams, and a Standing Committee for Women Workers. A comparatively new development is the establishment of Women's Advisory Committees attached to the local federation of trade union branches known as Trades Councils, counterpart to the CIO's Industrial Union Councils.

TO ENCOURAGE the activity of women in the unions the TUC also:

Publishes a "Women's Industrial News-Letter" for all unions and trade councils.

Arranges for special week-end schools and study courses especially for new women members.

Officially sponsors an annual conference for unions with a substantial number of women members.

Overtime Starts After 44 Hours in Britain

The British worker in manufacturing industries works an average of 45.3 hours a week, compared with an average workweek of 40 hours in the United States.

Overtime pay in Britain usually starts at 44 hours, with time and one-fourth for overtime. In he U. S. overtime customarily begins after 40 hours, and the rate is time and one-half.

Americans who have visited the United Kingdom under the sponsorship of the ECA, agree both off and on the record that the British factory workers toil as hard, if not harder than their American counterparts, due largely to less efficient machinery.

ECA Administrator Paul G. Hoffman has pointed out frequently that an American worker has six horsepower's worth of mechanical power behind him, to only three for the British worker.

Mine-Mill Flays Murray, CIO Policy

By BOB SENSER

THE CONVENTION of the Mine-Mill Union spent a whole week in Chicago sparing no terms in denouncing the CIO, Pres. Philip Murray, other officers and CIO policy.

Then the convention passed a resolution for "autonomy within CIO" and ordered its board to "take whatever steps are necessary to preserve our union's right of self-government, its properties, its funds, its jurisdiction and its 56-year tradition of rank and file control and democracy."

The debate on "staying" within CIO took place in executive session, with reporters barred. Officers told newsmen afterwards that no one had spoken in favor of a minority report which urged Mine-Mill to respect policies democratically arrived at by CIO. But, delegates coming out of the closed session rubbed their hands and said "boy, what a fight!"

The 45th convention of Mine-Mill had previously heard officer after officer and visitor after visitor assail CIO and Murray as crawling for management, selling out, playing with the KKK, etc.

The convention also heard Elizabeth Sasuly, the union's Washington representative, declare that the national CIO had joined reactionaries in a "sell-out" on Taft-Hartley repeal and civil rights.

Mrs. Sasuly, who also has the title of Washington representative for the CIO policy-hating Food-Tobacco Workers, said that CIO officials in Washington had engaged in "double talk" and fought only "sham battles" for good legislation.

Mrs. Sasuly is the wife of Richard Sasuly, correspondent and columnist for Federated Press. The CIO NEWS many months ago cancelled Federated Press service on the grounds that the FP spreads the Communist Party line.

The Mine-Mill convention was preceded by a special edition of The Union, its official organ, which spread 30 pages of misrepresentation, false information and accusations and the Communist Party line attack against CIO.

THE TONE for much of the convention was set in the "greetings" speech made by Grant Oakes, president of the Farm Equipment Workers.

He took hard verbal punches at the national CIO and its "controlling clique," which he said was composed of Murray, Walter Reuther and Emil Rieve.

"The CIO of a decade ago is gone," Oakes said. "The only thing the same about it is its name. The only unions carrying on the fighting tradition of the CIO's founders are unions against whom the controlling clique has declared war. The right-wing unions are coming closer and closer to becoming company unions."

Oakes charged that in the past year "the most disreputable anti-union and KKK elements, company stooges, and others of that stripe (were) taken into the bosom of the national CIO."

(Murray is a Catholic. Catholics are hated and persecuted by the KKK.)

Oakes added: "The Samsons of American labor have been shorn by the Delilahs of the CIO executive board with shears supplied by Wall street and the administration."

He said that the "once-great CIO" was now "tied like a tin can to the donkey of the Democratic party."

TAKING THE ball from Oakes, President Clark in his opening remarks said that the thought of recent CIO executive board meetings "makes me sick to my stomach."

"I am seriously considering," he continued, "whether I will ever sit at another one of those board meetings."

In his printed report Clark stated: "The fight for autonomy and rank-and-file democracy must take place inside the ranks of CIO. When we wage a fight to get the CIO back to its original policies we mean to wage it inside CIO where such a fight will get the support of the vast majority of CIO members."

Clark accused the Steelworkers of "contemptible hypocrisy," and said that the national CIO was "bent on the destruction" of Mine-Mill.

MINUTES later, Reid Robinson, international vice president, proposed a telegram be sent to Murray and the Steelworkers urging them to reject the Presidential fact-finders report, which was still being investigated in Pittsburgh. A delegate opposing the telegram urged:

"Let the Steelworkers handle their own affairs. This organization has got its hands full enough."

Robinson argued that the telegram was not meddling in Steelworkers' affairs, since the wages in steel affected Mine-Mill workers. The telegram was approved with only three or four dissents.

The old refrain was kept alive by another guest speaker, William Smith, vice president of the Farm Equipment Workers. Smith shouted that Philip Murray had "sold out his soul to the big monopolists," and that Murray and his lieutenants were trying to "company-unionize" the CIO.

Smith charged that the new national director of the CIO Organizing Committee (Operation Dixie) had recently announced that organizing in the South would henceforth be conducted "in conformity with Southern principles"—Jim Crowism.

He said that "Negroes are going to meet in one hall, and whites in another, according to this policy, which national CIO has not denied."

(George Baldanzi, new Operation Dixie head, never said that—nor did the late Van A. Bittner, his predecessor. They are the only two chairmen the drive has ever had.)

Smith said it was interesting to compare "the tremendous change" for the worse that has come about in Murray since the time when "the men around him were so-called Reds." The whole CIO, he continued, has "stepped backwards" in the past three years.

"I refuse to agree to any Jim Crowism, even if that is 'CIO policy,'" Smith said. "CIO policy is poisoned, and I refused to eat food that is poisoned even a little bit."

The choice before Mine-Mill, said Smith, is whether the delegates wanted "to be like snakes and crawl on your belly and sell out like Phil Murray did."

But his attacks on the CIO and Murray drew only scattered applause.

PIGEON-HEARTED

For reasons which were not made clear, the Mine-Mill Convention pigeonhold a message of greeting to Henry A. Wallace.

Here's how it happened:

A delegate proposed sending a telegram to the Progressive Party in New York on the occasion of a dinner given just for Henry. Four persons spoke vigorously against the motion, one stating he didn't want his union tied to the tail of any political party. The chairman referred the matter to a not-yet-appointed committee—which was equivalent to killing it, since the dinner was to be held that same night.

The Mine-Mill leadership backed Wallace last fall.

Committee Finds Britain's Labor Gov't. Non-Marxist

"THE SOCIAL and economic reforms instituted or contemplated by the Labor Government in Great Britain are grounded in the idealism to which the churches have long subscribed. British Socialism is not Marxian."

This is a finding of eighteen Americans who were members of a seminar that has just completed a study in that country under the auspices of the National Religion and Labor Foundation.

The members of the seminar came from ten different states, and were all churchmen, representing business, labor, agriculture, education, and the ministry.

The itinerary included visits to factories and farms, and conferences with industrialists, Members of Parliament, Government Ministers, trade union leaders, heads of the Cooperative Movement, and spokesmen for the Conservative Party. The search for facts and opinions also included hundreds of conversations with the rank and file in British life.

With reference to the present Government the seminar's report also pointed out that:

1. "The Labor Government does not desire to nationalize all business and industry. It regards the nationalization of about 20% as ideal. There is in Britain an economic system which is neither 'free enterprise' nor wholly state controlled—that it is nearer the former than the latter. As such it may possibly prove to be a bridge between the East and the West.

2. "There are about 100 members of Parliament, known as Christian Socialists, who have banded together for the expressed purpose of continuing (or reviving) the religious basis of the Socialist experiment. They consciously seek to apply the Christian ethic to the whole social order.

3. "While the Labor Government is keenly aware of the activities of the Communists, and while it strongly disapproves of Communist theory and tactics, it grants to Communists all the rights of any British citizen. Consequently, British Communists freely acknowledge their political affiliation.

4. "The popularity of the Labor Government increases as one descends the social scale. The ordinary worker generally approves of its actions, and he is especially enamored of the National Health Act."

The seminar found that church attendance does not exceed 10% of the population, and that church life in Britain has steadily declined in importance during the past fifty years.

However, it found that there are definite signs that the decline in influence has been arrested, largely through the energetic influence of individual ministers and churches that put less emphasis on church attendance and more on finding industrial workers in their unions or places of employment. "The social implications of the Christian Gospel are becoming more prominent," the sominar's report points out.

The Cooperative Movement in Great Britain has made rapid advances during the past fifty years, the study shows.

The members of the seminar are: Rev. George Beebe, Salem, Ohio; Prof. C. Milo Connick, Whittier, Calif.; Doris Dennison, Nashville, Tenn.; Glen Goble, labor representative, Chicago; Rev. Floyd Gotjen, Glassport, Pa.; Rev. Armand Guerrero, Chicago; T. H. McCosh, pharmacist, Gering, Neb.; Ted Miller, industrialist, Gering, Neb.; Rev. Ben Morris Ridpath, Joplin, Mo.; Rev. Henry Lee Robison, Blacksburg, Va.; James Robison, Blacksburg, Va.; Rev. Carl D. Soule, Chicago.

Also, Francis J. Stanger, Jr., attorney, Cedarville, N. J., Lloyd Stillwell, agriculturalist, Ridgeville, Indiana; Rev. Roger Turrell, Kenton, Ohio; Rev. Lloyd Watt, Gering, Neb.; Dr. Witherspoon Dodge, staff representative, National Religion and Labor Foundation, New Haven, Conn.; and Dr. Willard Uphaus, seminar director, and executive secretary of the Foundation.

"How-to-do-it" courses headlined the curriculum of the Fifth Annual Ohio CIO Council Summer School held at the Tar Hollow Group Camps, Chillicothe, Ohio. Pictured above are some of the more than 125 students who attended the school. This class on "How to Use a Mimeoscope" was conducted by Leland Beard, first vice-president of the CIO Glass Workers, who is in the center background bending over a student's shoulder examining his work. A number of CIO leaders, including Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, spoke at forum sessions at the school. All came away agreeing it was a great experience.

Drive For Iron Lung

The Erie, Pa., Industrial Union Council has voted $200 towards purchase of an iron lung for the municipal hospital.

Curran Wins Rules Fight At NMU Convention

By CONRAD WOLFSON

AFTER A PERIOD of delays caused by legal technicalities, the seventh biennial convention of the CIO Maritime Union was in full swing over the weekend. The convention will continue at least into this week.

Supporters of NMU Pres. Joseph Curran, saying they wished to save the union money by speeding up its work, moved several times in the first days for suspension of the rules, which requires a two-thirds vote. The move failed by a few votes each time.

(This parliamentary maneuvering may seem complicated to those outside of NMU. Here is how it works:

(Convention rules call for a two-thirds vote to suspend the rules of the previous convention, which still prevail until the present convention adopts new rules.

(When Curran and his backers tried to suspend the old rules, the opposition objected, saying that the method adopted by the former convention was more democratic and allowed longer and more thorough discussion.

(Curran called this contention fallacious and said that in his opinion the real aim of the minority was to disrupt the convention and keep it in session so long that the union treasury would be dissipated. He pointed out the NMU pays delegates lost pay. He said there were a number of Communists among the opposition).

Then, a vote came on the election of a Credentials Committee, under the old rules. Since the temporary Credentials Committee had approved tentatively only 360 of the approximately 600 delegates, only the 360 voted. Curran's forces won 10 of the 15 seats.

By the third day of the convention more than 585 delegates had been seated. Immediately, the vote on the rules committee was held and all 15 of the committee members elected were Curran backers.

THE NEW COMMITTEE swung into action, coming in with a recommendation that committees be reduced from 15 to 7—which the Curran forces had attempted to do on one of the motions setting aside the rules.

A second amendment, which was made from the floor, provided "that intimidation cease, as of now, and that the Rules Committee and other Convention delegates immediately act on this, and bring anyone caught up to the platform for action by the convention." The second amendment was the only one made from the floor which was passed.

A proposed amendment to the report to return to the 15-man committee setup, and a proposal to have the Honest Ballot Association count hand votes, and two other amendments met with defeat. The seven-man committee became the rule.

NMU Film

The delegates viewed the first showing of an all-NMU-made and the first full-length NMU documentary film, "TARGET: LABOR."

The film graphically illustrated the conditions under which labor suffered in the past, and showed that with Taft-Hartley on the books, a repetition of those days would not be too far in the future.

On hearing the mover of the the rules charge that certain delegates were practicing intimidation and discrimination, Curran vowed that upon being presented with specific instances, he would personally see that such alleged acts cease.

Michael Quill, President of the New York City CIO and of the Transport Workers, told the convention "CIO is proud of NMU in New York the same as National CIO is proud of the National NMU."

In a plea for complete unity of labor in the face of employer opposition, Quill warned that it "was hard to build up a union in the face of employer opposition, and it is easier to tear it apart," which, he declared "is what the shipowners would like, and what all other managements would like. We cannot mention too often the necessity for closing our ranks, the necessity for complete unity."

Terming the return of the NMU to its membership by the breaking of the Communist machine grip on it as a move "to put your house in order," Quill warned the delegates against "falling for the confusion of the lunatics of the left and of the lunatics of the right. Stand by labor! Stand by CIO! And the NMU will live forever."

Quill also urged support of the candidacy of PAC-supported former Gov. Herbert H. Lehman for Senator from New York.

He blasted Communist threats to nominate an opposition candidate so as to throw the election victory to Republican Sen. John Foster Dulles—who was appointed by Gov. Thomas E. Dewey to fill the vacancy created by the retirement of Sen. Robert Wagner.

Curran assured Quill that NMU would retain its "position of constructive action, where it affects the great mass of labor in this country." Curran asserted his belief that the convention would "write the finish to the last group that is trying to destroy our organization, the Communist Party."

FOLLOWING A report by the Temporary Credentials Committee, Curran challenged the right of three delegates from the Port of New York to be seated. Curran accused anti-administration forces of manipulation in that port in the addition of three names to the list of those who were elected delegates.

According to the shipping list in the port, Curran said, the port was only entitled to 14 delegates who had been legally elected. The other three, he charged, were illegally added after the election was over.

The three delegates were unseated by an overwhelming vote. Then came administration moves to put aside the regular order of business to introduce a special resolution.

The next day's session gave evidence of support for Curran when apparent attempts by the anti-administration forces to delay the convention's proceedings in the form of an appeal of a decision by the chair was beaten down by a vote of 334 to 176 in favor of the chair's ruling.

Curran warned that tactics by the anti-administration forces were "depriving the convention of the ability to continue its business."

There is no election of officers at the convention.

Boss One Day A Week Can't Vote --- NLRB

IF YOU ACT as a supervisor two days in five or only one in five for that matter—you're to be classed as a supervisor, for bargaining purposes.

That's the way the Natl. Labor Relations Board ruled the other day, and, as matters turned out, the union in the case benefited.

The decision was handed down in connection with an election on the question of revoking certification of the Intl. Union of Operating Engineers—AFL—at the Salem, Ill., gasoline plant of the Texas Company.

The board rejected the ballots of three employes who were labeled "supervisors" and accordingly were ruled ineligible to vote. As a result, the union retained certification by 31 to 30.

Two of the three employes whose votes were challenged worked in a supervisory capacity one day a week, the third was a boss two days a week.

NLRB members James J. Reynolds, Jr., Abe Murdock and J. Copeland Gray, constituting a majority, reasoned as follows:

"During the days when these three individuals occupy those respective positions, they exercise the privileges and responsibilities of supervisors. Because they regularly serve as supervisors for fixed and substantial periods during the course of their weekly employment, we believe that their interests are closely tied with management and conclude that they were ineligible to vote in the election."

Speaking as a minority of the board, NLRB members Paul Herzog and John M. Houston argued that the three employes could be presumed to have a community of interest with other workers rather than with management since they acted as supervisors less than half the time. Houston and Herzog said previous board decisions supported their view.

". . . and deliver us from all evil of injunctions . . ."

Press Rule Change Is Delayed

The Senate Rules Committee has delayed for two weeks action on the new rule governing admissions to the Congressional Press Galleries, but committee members forecast the rule would be approved at the committee's next meeting on Sept. 28, thus clearing the way for admission of Labor Press Association.

William S. White, chairman of the Standing Committee of Correspondents, which has recommended the new rule that would permit LPA to use the galleries, appeared at the committee's session last week to explain why the change is necessary. There was no indication of opposition to the proposal either within the committee or from outside.

Opposition to the new rule from within the press galleries seems to have largely disappeared, but friends of LPA are holding their fingers crossed until every last obstacle has been cleared.

Pamphlet Gives Pro, Con On Health Plan

The major points of view for and against national health insurance are presented handily in a pamphlet "How Shall We Pay for Health Care?" just published by the Public Affairs Committee. Federal Security Administrator Oscar Ewing explains the "why, what and how" of national health insurance, and Dr. George F. Lull, secretary of the American Medical Associations argues for voluntary health plans, and gives the AMA 12-point program.

A brief summary of four other legislative health proposals introduced in the 81st Congress are also given. Copies of the pamphlet are available at 20c each from the Public Affairs Committee, Inc., 22 East 38th St., New York 16, N. Y.

U. S. Effort To Settle Hawaii Strike Fails

THE U. S. government's effort to settle the five-month-old Hawaiian dock strike came to naught when Cyrus S. Ching, chief of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, called a halt to current talks.

Ching declared, "The parties remain so hopelessly far apart in their thinking that further mediation at this time would be of no avail." However, he said federal conciliators would be back if invited by either side.

During the talks, held in New York at Ching's request, Harry Bridges, president of the striking CIO Longshoremen's union, submitted nine proposals which were conveyed to the representatives of the struck Hawaiian stevedoring companies. The companies rejected all of them.

One of Bridges' proposals called for a presidential fact-finding board. Bridges also said the 2000 strikers would go back to work immediately if the employes would agree to arbitration by a panel selected by Ching. The employers have refused repeatedly to submit the dispute to arbitration.

Principal issue in the strike is wages. Originally, the ILWU demanded a 32 cent-an-hour boost to bring the pay of island dockers in line with west coast pay. The employers offered eight cents, then 12 cents. Finally they agreed to the 14 cents suggested by a fact-finding board named by the Governor of Hawaii.

The union first reduced its demand to 25 cents and during the talks conducted by Ching offered to accept 16 cents provided an additional 12 cents could be agreed to in advance to be paid when the new contract expires in about six months.

"All right! I'll marry you! Now please go away and let me work!"

Minn. CIO Proposes United Labor Action

THE MINNESOTA CIO convention, meeting at St. Paul, sent fraternal greetings to the Minnesota Federation of Labor convention in Duluth Sept. 19-21.

The delegates endorsed a resolution to investigate the possibilities of a labor-owned radio station. The convention also proposed formation of a united labor committee for political action.

The proposal for a radio station came from Robert L. Wishart, Minneapolis, chairman of the Hennepin County CIO Council.

Rep. Roy Wier, Minneapolis, Democratic-Farmer-Labor congressman, and a former AFL organizer, made the suggestion for approaching the AFL for joint political action.

A resolution advocating state ownership of iron ore resources was referred to the CIO Research Dept. for study.

IN A BRISTLING and uncompromising resolution that was adoped unanimously, the convention indorsed the demand of CIO Pres. Philip Murray that Communists and their fellow travelers resign or be removed from the Natl. CIO executive board.

A resolution charged "The fifth column agents of the Soviet Union, Communists and their fellow travelers, have—since the establishment of the CIO—attempted to gain control of the organization and its affiliated bodies by conspiracy, intrigue, lies, character assassination of CIO leaders, arbitrary expulsion of members of local unions, overruling of democratic elections, stacking conventions and in countless thousands other ways."

The resolution said, "The stigma attached to the CIO by the activities of the Communist party has resulted in untold numbers of working men and women refusing to join the CIO on the one hand and, on the other, many workers leaving the CIO to escape the tyrannical despotism exercised by the leaders of communist dominated international unions."

HERALDING Murray's statement that the coming Natl. CIO Convention will "unquestionably remove those board members who violate CIO policy," the resolution said, "We urge the officers and members of the Natl. CIO executive board to create an or ganization with which local unions and their members may affiliate when they rebel from disloyal leadership and are expelled from their unions because of their loyalty to CIO policy and principles, and for those who are denied, or are defrauded of, their democratic right to put into operation the CIO Board's recommendation that they retire those officers who violate CIO policy."

Glenn E. Peterson of Duluth was re-elected president unanimously and an attempt to build up opposition to Secy.-Treas. Rodney C. Jacobson collapsed.

The opposition move shrunk suddenly when Jacobson's denunciation of charges that he had aided, an alleged raid by the Optical and Instrument Workers on a United Public Workers local at Rochester, Minn., won him a rousing ovation.

Jacobson was re-elected without opposition. John Cashin of Duluth Steelworkers Local 1096 refusing to allow his name to be placed in nomination.

The convention adopted numerous resolutions, including reaffirming of determination to bring about Taft-Hartley repeal; supporting establishment of a Federal Welfare Dept. with full cabinet rank; demanding repeal of wartime excise taxes; greater control over public utilities and wider distribution of their profits through increased taxation; opposing "so-called loyalty oaths and inquisitions and purges" by the "employers or their governmental agents"; supporting Rep. John Blatnik's public works program to combat unemployment.

NOTABLE speakers included PAC's Tilford Dudley; Adolph Germer, who represented Murray; Reps. Wier and Eugene J. McCarthy.

The convention set into full motion the permanent state CIO Legislative Research Dept. earlier voted into being by the state executive board.

Ramsey County (St. Paul) CIO Council was host at an entertainment which followed the annual banquet.

200 Attend School

More than 200 CIO members attended classes at the FDR-CIO Labor Center, near Port Huron, Mich., as part of the sixth annual Michigan CIO Leadership Training Institutes held this summer.

Negotiators Propose UE Strike Vote

A recommendation that a strike vote be taken among the 200,000 employes of General Electric and Westinghouse was made last week by negotiating committees of the CIO Electrical Workers at meetings in New York.

The union, which is seeking a package increase that would amount to $500 a year per worker, charged the companies with showing "complete contempt" for the needs of their workers. Negotiations between the union and the companies began in June.

A statement issued by the union last week recommended that a joint meeting of GE and Westinghouse conference boards be held on Sept. 26 "for the purpose of considering, among other actions, the taking of a strike vote of the membership in support of their demands in order to compel the companies to bargain in good faith.

Mrs. F. D. Roosevelt Hits Bias in North

As far as racial discrimination goes, the North is "quite as bad" as the South, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt told a press conference. She told reporters she did not consider President Truman's civil rights program an excuse for race voilence.

Miners Given CIO Aid In Appealing Fines

ARTHUR J. Goldberg, General Counsel of the CIO, has announced that the CIO is joining the United Mine Workers of America in asking the Supreme Court of the United States to review the contempt sentence imposed last year by Judge Goldsborough of $1,400,000 on the Mine Workers and of $20,000 on UMWA Pres. John L. Lewis.

UMWA has filed an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States from the decision of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia affirming Judge Goldsborough. The CIO has filed a brief in the Supreme Court as amicus curiae in support of the Miners' appeal.

In this brief the CIO General Counsel said that the CIO joins the UMWA in asking the Supreme Court to review this decision "because of the great importance to all labor organizations" of the questions in the case.

The CIO's brief contended that Judge Goldsborough's contempt sentence was void and should be set aside because the 80-day injunction provision of the T-H Act, under which Judge Goldsborough's injunction order against the miners was issued, violates the Constitution of the United States by attempting to confer non-judicial powers upon the federal courts.

THE CIO further argued in its brief in the Supreme Court that UMWA did not cause the strike which occurred over the pension issue in the coal mines last year and that, therefore, Judge Goldsborough erred in ruling that the union and John L. Lewis were obligated to comply with the injunction order to stop a strike which they did not call.

The Mine Workers' appeal will be acted upon by the Supreme Court after it reconvenes in October. If it grants the appeal by allowing certiorari the case will be argued in the Supreme Court sometime this fall or winter.

(If a certiorari is granted, the Supreme Court will direct the Court of Appeals to send a certified copy of the proceedings for review.)

Prosperous U. S. Called Peace Need

HOW THE peace and stability of the world hangs on what happens in this country is the theme of a report entitled "Toward Building a Better America," just issued by the National Planning Association.

"The domestic market for the goods and services which our economy can so bountifully provide is capable of limitless expansion," states the report written by Frank Altschul, chairman of the NPA Committee on International Policy.

"Our task is to convert potential into effective demand. There is work in this country crying out to be done, not all of which an unaided capitalism can undertake . . .

"If a comprehensive plan for building a better America could be put into operation with full public support, unemployment would cease to be a problem, the fear of depression would vanish, and with a rising national income a greatly increased market would develop here not only for the products of our own factories and fields, but for countless articles of European manufacture and for the raw materials of the rest of the world."

In indorsing the report the NPA International Committee stated the belief that it "will increase public understanding of the need for positive and imaginative measures in its achievement."

Three CIO officials are among the 27 members of the committee. They are National CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, Michael Ross, director of the CIO's International Affairs Dept., and Solomon Barkin, research director, Textile Workers Union.

Va. Jim Crow Law Conviction Reversed

The Virginia Supreme Court at Staunton, in a unanimous ruling, has reversed the conviction of Norvell Lee, Olympic boxer and Howard University student. Lee refused to move to a segregated car on a Chesapeake & Ohio train near Clifton Forge, Sept. 14, 1948. He was convicted of violating Virginia's Jim Crow law and fined $25.

CIO Reg. Dir. George DeNucci reports that in a union shop election held by the NLRB at the Corrugated Box Co., Columbus, Ohio, the workers voted for the UPA-CIO 37 to 0. Brother Berkely Watterson was in charge of the election. In another union shop election held by the NLRB at the Nelsonville Foundry, Nelsonville, Ohio, the result was a 100% vote for the CIO Playthings & Novelty Workers. Rep. Ed. Rosenhahn was in charge of the election.

CIO Reg. Dir. Charles L. Cowl reports that in a union shop election held at the ABC Distributing Co., Tampa, Fla., the workers voted for the CIO Brewery Workers to represent them by a vote of 7 to 2.

CIO State Dir. Robert W. Starnes reports that in an election held at the Dixie Pine Products Co., Hattiesburg, Miss., the CIO Workers were victorious. The vote was as follows: eligible 144; GCCW-CIO 53; AFL Chemical Workers 47; void 3; challenged 1.

CIO Reg. Dir. Walter H. Harris reports that in an election conducted at the McCoy-Couch Furniture Co., Benton, Ark., the workers voted: UFWA-CIO 150; no union 99; void, 1; challenged 1. UFWA Intl. Rep. Walter L. Carson was in charge of the election.

CIO Field Rep. Ed K. Welsh reports that in an NLRB Election held at the Florida Agricultural Supply Co., Jacksonville, Fla., the workers voted in favor of the Transport Service Employes-CIO by a vote of 33 to 21 for no union.

The Inquirer unit of the Newspaper Guild-CIO of Philadelphia and Camden has voted 603 to 16 for the union shop. Management was perfectly willing to continue the union shop clause, in effect 10 years, but the Taft-Hartley act decreed that an election must be held. Ed Klein Unit Chairman was in charge.

The Screen Office & Professional Employes Guild, Local 109, UOPWA-CIO, reports that by a vote of 266 to 43 the office employes of the 20th Century-Fox Film Corp. and its International company, New York City, authorized the SOPEG, Local 109, to negotiate for a union shop in an election conducted by the NLRB.

Martin Gerber, Director, Region No. 9, UAW-CIO, reports that the Great Western Fuse Co., Newark, N. J., was brought under contract through voluntary recognition of UAW-CIO and the members of the Precision Machine and Electrical Workers Union (Independent), consisting of employes of the Kearfott Manufacturing Co., Newark, N. J., voted unanimously to affiliate with the UAW.

The four following NLRB elections have also been recently held in District No. 9: Metal Alloy & Specialties Co., Buffalo, N. Y., UAW-CIO 71; no union 9. Pottstown Plating Works, Pottstown, Pa., UAW-CIO 140; no union 2, Norge Appliance, Div. of Borg-Warner Corp., Easton, Pa., UAW-CIO 35; no union 5. Electro Dynamic Corp., Bayonne, N. J., UAW-CIO 127; no union 2.

Morris Pizer, President of the United Furniture Workers of America, reports that in an NLRB election at the Comfort Spring Corp., Baltimore, Md., the workers voted 112 for UFWA-CIO; 80 no union. Pizer also announces the following Union Shop elections:

F. E. Hausermann Co., Cleveland, Ohio, members of Local 450, UFWA, voted 414 to 12 for the union shop; Rockford Cabinet Division, Free Sewing Machine Co., Rockford, Ill., members of Local 707, UFWA-CIO, voted 225 to 23 for the union shop; Stickley Bros. Corp., Grand Rapids, Mich., members of Local 415 UFWA-CIO voted 88 to 3 for the union shop.

The writer attended the recent New York State Council Convention in Saratoga Springs, N. Y. where Pres. Louis Hollender ably presided. The delegates attending indorsed Mayor O'Dwyer for re-election and former Governor Herbert H. Lehman for election as U. S. Senator. They also voiced overwhelming support of CIO policy and resisted any and all attempts to deviate from this. The writer replied to the foul criticisms directed against President Murray and the CIO Executive Board, made by a group that met in New York City recently. This group made the foul attempt to connect the CIO with the Klu Klux Klan and other un-American groups. I might say that these blasts came from those, many of whom did not know what a union was until becoming a part of the CIO. These same persons seek peace with one hand and make cowardly attacks with the other hand. These attacks came while President Murray was in the midst of negotiations with the gigantic steel corporations.

There will be a meeting this week in Chicago of CWA-CIO, its affiliates, and the writer to make every effort to reorganize the telephone structure so that even better service can be given the telephone worker.

At this writing most of the steel corporations are rejecting the recommendations of the "fact-finding" board on pension and social insurance. This attitude prevails despite the unprecedented profits of the industry, which is noted for its "steel in lieu of soul" philosophy.

Kroll Pays Tribute To GOP Rep. Welch

CALIFORNIA'S Rep. Richard J. Welch—Republican who consistently championed labor's cause—died of a heart attack in Needles, Calif., aboard an east bound train.

The 80-year-old Congressman had served continually in the House for the past 23 years. He had both CIO and AFL support. Before his entrance into politics, he was a metal worker.

Among the Republicans he was a maverick. He supported Roosevelt's New Deal and Truman's Fair Deal with few deviations. He fought such anti-labor measures as the Hobbs and Taft-Hartley bills, voted against Republican efforts to kill price control and fought measures intended to weaken the U. S. Labor Dept.

Before his election to Congress, Welch served on the San Francisco, Calif., Board of Supervisors 10 years. He was a state senator for 12 years before that.

"The American people," commented CIO-PAC Dir. Jack Kroll, "have lost a great and good friend in the death of Rep. Welch. He was a Republican; he stood for the fine traditions of that party which stemmed from Pres. Lincoln and he had no part of the Republican Party which today finds its inspiration in the centers of big business."

REP. RICHARD WELCH

Date of a special election to fill the Congressional vacancy has not yet been set, but observers expected it to be Nov. 8, since a referendum is scheduled for that time.

$500 Rewards Are Offered In 2nd Peekskill Riot

CASH REWARDS of $500 in each case have been offered by the American Civil Liberties Union for information leading to the conviction of one or more persons guilty of inciting the mob attacks at the Paul Robeson concert in Peekskill, N. Y., Sept. 4.

One hundred and forty-five persons were injured in the attacks.

The ACLU also announced it would establish an independent committee of inquiry if Gov. Thomas E. Dewey failed to appoint one. ACLU Director Roger Baldwin called on Gov. Dewey to fix responsibility for what "appears not to be impartial policing" of mob interference at the concert.

The riot was the second one staged against Robeson's appearance. Baldwin stated that police protection was "glaringly absent" at the first riot which took place Aug. 27.

"As an agency wholly devoted to the principle of equal rights," declared the ACLU statement, "we feel an obligation to intervene in this most shocking of all incidents aroused by current anti-Communist hysteria."

Four Conventions Scheduled Today

This is a heavy week for CIO conventions. Four international unions are scheduled to open their annual parleys today. The United Rubber Workers meet in Toronto, Canada; the Amalgamated Lithographers, in St. Paul, Minn.; the United Electrical Workers, in Cleveland, Ohio, and the Stone & Allied Workers at Columbus, Ohio.

'You're An Executive' Game Hit

THE OLD custom of calling an office worker an "executive" and refusing to pay him oyertime had another setback, when Wages-Hour Administrator McComb announced proposed changes in the "executive" and "professional" and other such exemptions from the federal wage-hour law.

Production workers who've been upgraded to jobs as checkers, loaders, and inspectors also have been the victims of employers who call them "administrative" workers and refuse to pay them overtime.

The regulations, which affect 2,500,000 men and women, will change the salary level at which an employer can cut.

"Executive" employes are defined as those who spend at least 80% of their time in managerial functions. To be exempt from the overtime-after-40-hours regulation, an executive employe would have to earn at least $55 a week. Now, the cutoff of overtime begins with $30-a-week workers.

"ADMINISTRATIVE" employes are defined as those doing "office or nonmanual field work directly related to management policies or general business operations of employer or employer's customers" for at least 80% of their work time. The cutoff of overtime begins above $75 a week, instead of the present $200 a month salary.

A "professional" worker is described as a man or woman "having as his primary duty (a) work requiring knowledge of an advanced type in a field of science or learning, or (b) must perform original work in an artistic field," for at least 80% of the working time. Cutoff of overtime would begin at $75 a week instead of the present $200 a month.

The new regulations, which resulted from a CIO Electrical Workers' petition seeking higher cutoffs, are now subject to appeals by labor and management representatives for a 30-day period. At labor and management representatives for a 30-day period. At the end of this time, the Wage-Hour Administrator must decide whether to put them into effect, hold further hearings, or modify them.

Non-Red Affidavits

As of Sept. 1, the Natl. Labor Relations Board had on file the non-Communist affidavits of 84,466 officials of national and local unions, 5100 more than a month earlier and 6% more than a year ago.

There were 184 national and international unions and 9246 local unions in "full compliance" with the Taft-Hartley act as a result of the affidavits, the NLRB reported.

The affidavits along with financial reports must be filed annually by the officers of any union which wishes to be eligible to use NLRB facilities.

Of the 184 national and international unions in compliance, 99 were AFL, 34 were CIO and 51 were independent. Of the 9246 local unions, 5579 were AFL, 1952 were CIO and 1535 were independent.

Rutledge Dies, Only 2 Liberals On Bench

THE DEATH of Supreme Court Justice Wiley B. Rutledge in Maine saddened labor and liberals.

Rutledge's death, following closely on the death of Associate Justice Frank Murphy July 19, left only two liberals on the Supreme Court bench—Hugo L. Black and William O. Douglas.

U. S. Circuit Court Judge Sherman Minton of Chicago, Ill., has received the Presidential nomination. He is a former U. S. Senator from Indiana.

There was no question on where Rutledge stood. He usually was aligned with Black, Douglas and Murphy.

Among his famous dissents was his protest against a 1948 decision that John L. Lewis and his United Mine Workers were subject to injunction proceedings. A majority opinion he wrote in 1945 knocked out a Texas law requiring registration of union organizers.

Before his appointment to the highest court in 1943 Rutledge was on the U. S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, where he was placed by President Roosevelt after attracting attention by his liberal views as dean of the University of Iowa Law School.

On the appeals court he voted to convict the American Medical Association and the Medical Society of the District of Columbia of conspiring to violate the Sherman anti-trust act in their fight against the cooperative Group Health Association.

Justice Rutledge was 55 years old. He is survived by his wife, Annabel; a son, Neal, and two daughters, Mary Lou and Jean Anna.

A Justice In The Great Tradition

Sun Glasses Lead To Arrest Of Four In Cross Burning

A PAIR OF ordinary sun glasses found after a fiery cross was burned Aug. 10 in the front yard of a Negro family in Uniondale, Long Island, N. Y., plus the dogged search of a zealous detective, has led finally to the arrest of the four persons.

Detective Elmer Richardson traced the glasses through the manufacturer, the jobber, the wholesaler and a host of retailers, until he came to one store where the storekeeper remembered selling a few pairs.

Last week Richardson visited the home of George Cooper, 28-year-old chauffeur of Uniondale, who unsuspectingly admitted the glasses were his, police say.
